Senketsu had barely started shifting into his flight configuration when Ryuko suddenly found herself staring down several anti-vampire weapons, courtesy of the paladins rapidly moving to surround both her and Integra. The annoyed scowl on her face twisting angrily when one of the men attempted to grab her arm, she didn't even bother turning around before using that same arm to punch the offender hard enough to send him flipping backwards across the street. She couldn't believe these idiots thought they could take her down. Didn't they hear about her fight with that undead bastard? Shooting a harsh glare at Heinkel and Yumiko standing in the background, Ryuko prepared to deal with the rest of the paladins only to freeze when they aimed their weapons at Integra.

"Our orders are clear, Father Wolfe!" A nameless paladin declared while keeping his weapon trained on the forehead of a clearly unimpressed Integra, the anger simmering just beneath her eyes causing a bead of sweat to trickle down his cheek, "Sir Integra Hellsing is to be taken into custody and Ryuko Matoi dealt with!"

"Is that right?" Ryuko mockingly asked as she haphazardly spun the Scissor Blade around her wrist, the motion causing a couple of the paladins to involuntarily step away. While it would be extremely easy for her to take these idiots down, she needed to be careful in case one of them decided to shoot Integra. Fighting a pissed off Alucard was not something she wanted to do anytime soon.

Flexing her fingers around the Scissor Blade as a plan formed in her mind, Ryuko stiffened in surprise when loud gunshots echoed throughout the area and she felt several small objects impact her back. As Senketsu's multicolored eye narrowed angrily, Ryuko quirked an eyebrow and looked over her shoulder. Standing several meters behind her with blood trailing from the small cut on his cheek, the idiot she punched earlier stared at her in complete shock while wisps of smoke drifted upwards from the muzzle of his pistol. The corner of her mouth curling into a half-cocked grin when she noticed the deformed slugs on the ground, she turned back to the nervous paladins, "Heh... so what was that about killing me?"

Integra ignored the collective firepower aimed at her person as she tilted her head towards Ryuko. Her expression remaining stoic even as the pistol pressed against the small of her back started growing mildly uncomfortable, she adjusted the hem of her sleeve and asked, "I hate to impress upon you any further, Ryuko, but I think it's time we returned to headquarters. So if you don't mind..."

"Right!"

There was the soft sound of Ryuko's heel clicking against the asphalt before she vanished in a burst of motion too fast for anyone but Heinkel and Yumiko to follow. Reappearing on the other side of Integra a moment later with the Scissor Blade held out to the side, the teenager smirked when every single paladin suddenly found their weapon falling to pieces. Senketsu's armor glowing with a faint crimson light as she pirouetted around, Ryuko didn't hesitate before reaching out and grabbing the nearest paladin. Effortlessly hefting the much larger man into the air with only a single hand, she glared at Heinkel before shouting, "Alright, last chance! Tell your friends to back off!"

Yumiko grunted and twisted her upper body sideways in response to Ryuko's actions, one foot sliding backwards as she drew her blessed katana from its sheath. Her black hair waving in the autumn breeze as the surrounding conflagration caused the polished blade to shimmering with an ominous glow, Yumiko frowned before tearing away the white scarf wrapped around her neck. Fighting against Ryuko was the last thing she wanted to do. The teenager's innate strength and speed, bolstered even further by that Kamui wrapped around her body, meant any battle was a foregone conclusion. She would be cut to pieces in seconds, even accounting for Ryuko's amateurish swordsmanship.

Holding her katana horizontally in front of her body, Yumiko spent several seconds mulling over her options before addressing her partner, "Maxwell's behavior aside, we still have our orders. Sir Integra Hellsing must be taken into custody before Alucard returns."

"This doesn't feel right," Heinkel spat in response, her lips pulled into a grimace, before snapping her head upwards when she felt an unholy presence rapidly approaching.

A familiar but darkened spiritual energy washed over the nearby streets as a stream of glowing shadows tore through the night sky before slamming violently into the ground directly in front of Integra Hellsing. Her body materializing out of the encompassing darkness as the force of the impact sent the surrounding paladins flying away, save for the man still being held by a surprised Ryuko, Seras Victoria's crimson eyes narrowed upon spotting Heinkel Wolfe. The shadows composing her left arm writhing chaotically when Yumiko instinctively reacted to her arrival, the blessed katana snapping upwards, Seras didn't relax her stance as she addressed her superior, "My apologies, Sir Integra. I tried arriving as quickly as possible but something prevented me from finding you."

" Ryuko, do you see that?" Senketsu's multicolored eye widened as he recognized the writhing mass of darkness twisting through the air, the memories of their fight against Alucard causing the Kamui to ripple slightly around Ryuko's body, "Look at her arm. It's just like -"

"Yeah, it's the same shadow crap as the undead bastard!" Ryuko growled before unceremoniously throwing the paladin somehow still held in her grip over her shoulder.

Seras' eyes shifted when she heard Ryuko speak with her Kamui. It was only now, after forced to drink blood and become a true vampire, that she finally understood how the teenager could have fought and survived against her master. Life Fibers were truly ancient and nearly unfathomable creatures, possessing unnatural power and regeneration. She could see why Nudist Beach, even with all their advanced weaponry and specialized Anti-Life Fiber ammunition, would have difficulty defeating something like Ragyo Kiryuin.

"Are you all right, Sir Integra?" Doing her best not to stare at Ryuko as she examined Senketsu's form-fitting armor, Seras waited a few seconds before looking over her shoulder and asking, "Any injuries?"

"Nothing more than a few minor scrapes thanks to Ryuko's timely interference," Integra replied stoically, her expression hardening slightly as she realized what most likely happened at the manor, "How's the headquarters?"

"We were attacked by enemy soldiers led by a Sternritter. With Nudist Beach's assistance we managed to kill every last one of them. However..." Seras momentarily trailed off when she vividly remembered the carnage following in the wake of Zorin Blitz's rampage through the manor. Her blood red eyes dimming slightly as shattered remnants of the nightmares the Quincy dredged up passed along the periphery of her mind, Seras stared crestfallenly at the ground before adding, "The mansion has been destroyed. And Mr. Bernadotte... he is dead, sir."

"I see..."

Integra had known the moment Seras arrived that only the most desperate of situations, such as Millennium launching a full-scale assault on the manor, could have forced the former police girl to willingly drink the blood of a human being. Calmly reaching into her coat while observing Senketsu's single eye staring at the newly transformed Seras, she placed the unlit cigar between her lips and stated, "You drank from Mr. Bernadotte, didn't you? You've finally become a true vampire."

"Yes, I have!" Seras happily exclaimed with a forced smile on her face.

"So, it's come to this," Heinkel's tone contained a mixture of respect and mild astonishment as she slowly approached the newly transformed vampire.

It felt rather strange to see the once naïve and cowardly vampire, who fled in terror during their confrontation in Badrick, emit such a powerful unholy aura. But the shadows clinging to the tattered remains of her shoulder, wisps of darkness and corruption curling through the air around her body, was proof enough to the paladin that Seras Victoria had evolved into the same creature as her arrogant master. Her mouth twitching imperceptibly as she swiftly reaching into her cassock, pulling out a heavily customized pistol before aiming it squarely at Seras' forehead, Heinkel didn't flinch when she found several sharpened shadows hovering inches away from her throat.

"You've become a true creature of darkness, Seras Victoria," Heinkel begrudgingly complimented as she lowered her weapon and stepped away from Seras, "I suppose we'll have to update your kill on sight orders. But know this - I will be the one to finally put a bullet through your heart. Ending your unholy existence once and for all."

"I'm looking forward to it," Seras replied, a slightly unhinged expression adorning her face as the tension lessened, "It won't be anything like last time. I'm much stronger now."

"Hang on a second!"

Ryuko's heels rapidly clicked against the ground as she moved between Seras and Heinkel, the fact that the vampire basically confessed to devouring someone's soul pushed aside for the moment. Ignoring the slightly unnerving sensation of the shadows twisting through the air around her body, Ryuko stared into Seras' glowing eyes and asked, "You said you came from your headquarters, right? Then you must know what happened to Anderson!"

"I sensed Mr. Anderson's presence after the battle. He was greatly wounded but still alive," Seras answered, causing Ryuko to sigh in relief at the news. Confused when the teenager turned away and mumbled under her breath at Senketsu, her enhanced hearing picking out key phrases like 'still able to get answers from that bastard', Seras grumbled quietly before half-heartedly adding, "Mr. Mikisugi survived the battle as well."

"You're fucking kidding me!" Ryuko's glare intensified as she turned back to Seras and exclaimed, "That naked asshole's in the city?!"

It was bad enough having to deal with the pervert at Honnouji Academy, but at least she had been able to count on Ichigo backing her up whenever the naked bastard tried any of his stupid tricks. And then there was that little stunt he pulled at the end of the Great Culture and Sports Festival. No matter how many times he apologizing, or bribed Mako into doing it for him, she would never forgive the bastard for stopping her from saving Ururu.

The crimson undertone in her feathery hair momentarily brightening as she tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade, Ryuko took a second to calm down, "Did the bastard at least leave his pants on? Because if he's running around London naked I'm going to -"

Ryuko froze midsentence when she heard the unmistakable sound of faint laughter on the wind, a cold sensation momentarily creeping down her spine moments before an extremely dark but familiar spiritual energy washed over the city. As both Heinkel and Seras perked up and turned in surprise towards the Thames River, the former shocked at how quickly the vampire managed to return, Ryuko narrowed her eyes. There was no mistaking this presence. Not after what happened the night they arrived in London.

" Ryuko," Senketsu's multicolored eye quivered as he asked, "Do you feel that?"

Senketsu's armor crackling as she clenched her empty hand into a fist, Ryuko opened her mouth to speak but was surprised when Heinkel suddenly sprinted forward. Briefly watching the paladin effortlessly leap several stories into the air, her boots landing softly on the rooftop of the same building she crashed into just a few minutes earlier, Ryuko growled angrily as she flipped the Scissor Blade into a reverse grip, "Yeah, it looks like the undead bastard's back..."

---

...

---

An amused grin stretched across the Major's features as his arms fervently swept through the air in rhythm to the conflagration raging below, the screams of survivors mixing with the occasional explosion into a beautiful cacophony of music. This glorious night was the moment he had waited decades to witness. Despite the myriad of obstacles fate had deigned to place in their path, including garnering Ragyo Kiryuin's undivided attention, the Sternritter took pride in the knowledge that he would be one of the select few to watch His Majesty's plans come to fruition. Everything was nearly ready. The various actors were in position, ignorant of the fact that they were mere puppets to be discarded at His Majesty's whim.

All that was left was to wait for the curtains to rise over the final act.

The sudden stiffening of the late autumn wind was the only warning the Major felt before an intimately familiar and dark spiritual energy washed across the city. Slowly lowering his arms when the HMS Eagle emerged out of the thickening fog enveloping the Thames River, the once proud and majestic Invincible-Class VTOL aircraft carrier now little more than a dilapidated shell of its former self, the Major's yellow eyes shone with barely concealed anticipation as he pleasantly announced, "It would seem our guest of honor has finally arrived onto the stage."

"Hold still!"

Standing just a few feet away with an exasperated expression plastered on his face, the Doktor audibly growled when the Captain attempted to pull his bleeding forearm out of his grip for the fifth time in so many minutes. His brow creasing into a scowl when he was forced to circulate spiritual energy through his arteries just to keep the larger man from leaving, the Doktor shook his head as he began dressing the Captain's wound, "You know wounds from a weapon like the Scissor Blade will not regenerate. You'll get an infection if you don't let it heal properly!"

"Please, I seriously doubt our dear Captain can even get sick," Schrodinger's ears twitched playfully as he stood at attention next to the Major, gloved hands folded against the nape of his neck while pink eyes narrowed in thinly veiled amusement at the Doktor's angrily glare. The cat-like Quincy couldn't understand why the Doktor was so worried about the Captain's health. After all, the perpetually mute Sternritter hadn't gotten sick even once in his more than one thousand years of serving His Majesty. So the odds that he would get an infection, even from a wound caused by the Scissor Blade, were nonexistent.

"That's not the point!"

His fingers twitching as he angrily marched towards Schrodinger, any thoughts the Doktor had about punishing the disrespectful Sternritter were quickly forgotten when Quilge Opie appeared on the Deus Ex Machina in a burst of Hirenkyaku. Noticing the crimson splattered along the Quincy's left sleeve, tracing a path from his wrist all the way to the shoulder, the Doktor adjusted his specialized lenses as he leaned forward, "An injury? I didn't think the Vatican possessed anyone besides Heinkel Wolfe with enough power to wound someone of your stature."

"They don't," Quilge calmly replied with just the barest hints of disdain as he lazily swung his saber through the air before sheathing, the thick coating of blood splattering across the zeppelin.

Absentmindedly brushing a hand against the blood staining his sleeve, the action accomplishing little more than smearing the liquid deeper into the uniform, Quilge briefly took note of the Captain's wounded forearm as he walked towards the Major. Given that Ichigo Kurosaki was still fighting Bazz-B the last time he checked, it would be fair to assume that his comrade had sustained that injury while fighting Ryuko Matoi.

"Oh my," Quilge sighed when Ryuko Matoi's nauseating spiritual energy skyrocketed, undoubtedly a response to Alucard's arrival, "This is turning into quite the quandary, wouldn't you say?"

"And that is why we should be thankful to Alucard!"

The excitement permeating the Major's voice was nearly palpable as he firmly clasped his hands together. His thick glasses shining malevolently in the flickering light, the Sternritter stared out over the burning streets of London before continuing, "Trust is something that is easy to destroy but ever so hard to obtain. And thanks to his actions during that one fateful stormy night seven days ago, Alucard found himself bereft of both assistance and allies during his hour of need. I am speaking, of course, of Rip Van Winkle's usage of Heilig Königs Palisade. If either child had deigned to accompany Alucard, they would have easily torn through His Majesty's protection with complete ease, rendering our efforts at containing him all for naught."

"Rip Van Winkle accomplished her stated task to His Majesty's specifications," Quilge pointedly acknowledged, the corners of his mouth twisting into a displeased frown as he stared in the general direction of the Hellsing Manor. A disappointed sigh leaving his lips when he sensed Seras Victoria's distinct spiritual energy, Quilge raised a finger in front of his face and evenly added, "But the same cannot be said for Zorin. Her failure at killing Alucard's un-awakened progeny is most disconcerting."

"You should have seen it. Nudist Beach really brought out all the stops to kill her!"

A contemptuous smirk stretched across Schrodinger's face as the Sternritter tilted his head backwards, the memories of Zorin's pitiful final moments among the living still fresh in his mind, "They really didn't hold back! First there was Alexander Anderson, who possessed quite a lot of spiritual energy for a human. And then there was that amazing walking panzer with enough firepower to tear through Zorin's Blut Vene. She would have died before stepping through the front doors if not for her Vollständig."

"One mustn't underestimate the tenacity of those who have fought against a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin," the Major lightly chastised, completely deafened to Schrodinger's response as he watched Alucard swiftly leap from the battle-torn deck of the HMS Eagle.

Quilge felt only the barest shifting of spiritual energy when the Captain took a single step forward before vanishing in an extremely rapid burst of Hirenkyaku. His lips pursed into a tight grimace as he watched his comrade race across the rooftops below, the former captain of the Jagdarmee pulled his hat further onto his forehead and grimly stated, "Zorin's death complicates the Schatten Ausrufung. If Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi were to realize the true extent of our plans..."

"Ah! But they won't!"

Raising an arm into the air while the corners of his mouth twisted into a manic grin, the Major stared at his outstretched fingers before harshly clenching them into a fist, "For you see, I have ingrained into their minds a singular and memetic notion. A self-replicating thought, if you would. That idea, my dear comrades, is quite simple - insanity!"

"Most people, be they human, shinigami or Quincy, view insanity as something to be avoided at any cost! For how could a rational being hope to understand the mismatched firing of neurons within the mind of the insane? Such a thing is incomprehensible! And so in their deluded obliviousness they refuse to believe anything else! They cling to the narrow view of reality! So when I professed the desire for an endless war, an eternal conflict with blood running freely through the streets of London, our adversaries instantly believed that to be the truth! I was but a raving lunatic and His Majesty a madman! Nothing could be further from the truth!"

"I love war," the Major momentarily paused as he took a deep breath, the crisp autumn air burning his lungs. Holding both arms outstretched in front of his body, the Sternritter's grin imperceptibly fell as he continued, "But a war without meaning or motives? A war created simply for the sake of war? Such nonsense! A war must always have a purpose, even if said purpose is obscured behind fallacies and delusions! The eternal war Integra Hellsing and her allies believed I was planning, the endless conflict Alucard so eagerly anticipated, does not exist! For tonight is both the beginning and end of this glorious battle!"

Pressing a finger firmly against the receiver attached to his glasses when it blared to life, Quilge calmly listened to the slightly muffled voice on the other end of the connection before turning in amusement towards the Major, "Integra Hellsing, Seras Victoria and Ryuko Matoi have been spotted in close proximity to where Alucard landed. The soldats eagerly await your orders to engage the vampire."

"Engage? You mean sacrifice," Schrodinger mockingly scoffed as he sat down on the zeppelin, one hand lazily propping up his chin, "None of these pathetic excuses for soldiers will survive what is about to happen."

"And so it came to pass..."

The Major's grin widened when he sensed a disruption in the boundaries between dimensions, a shadow portal in the shape of a six-pointed cross phasing into existence a few inches above the zeppelin's patterned surface, "That those, who had once gathered before a painted line of spears, found themselves reunited before the real thing. On one side His Majesty's most loyal soldats, the five hundred and twenty one vampire soldiers of the Jahrtausendarmee.

On the other, two thousand nine hundred and forty three knights of the Roman Catholic Curia - the Ninth Airborne Mobile Crusade - led by a man whose mind has already fallen victim to Ragyo Kiryuin's dreadful control. And in the middle, we have England's Hellsing Organization with but three mighty soldiers still standing."

Holding his arms once more in the air as a man silently emerged from the shadow portal behind him, creeping darkness desperately clinging to his white uniform, the Major's yellow eyes gleamed wildly as he passionately continued unabated, "And last but certainly not the least we have our vaunted allies - Nudist Beach! An organization opposed to the tyranny of Life Fibers that through sheer coincidence has found themselves embroiled in this fateful battle. Five hardened members of this organization remain within the city, but the course of this war rests on the shoulders of two teenagers."

"Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi..." The Major's tone shifted as he mentioned the names of the two Life Fiber Hybrids, a sense of longing permeating his voice. Lowering his arms while pivoting around, the Major briefly glanced at the newest member of the Sternritter before turning towards the Doktor, "Two children with bodies woven completely out of Life Fibers, wielding weapons that can easily cut through our Blut Vene. Both are progeny of those directly touched by the Original Life Fiber, their very existence anathema against all of creation, and yet in their hands lay the keys to our salvation."

As the Major finished speaking and turned his attention back to the conflagration raging below, the Doktor took the opportunity to examine the new arrival. One gloved finger absentmindedly adjusted the focus on the side of his glasses, the Doktor's gaze rapidly crossed over the Sternritter's uniform before falling onto his white fingerless gloves, "It seems His Majesty completed the writing ritual ahead of schedule. How truly fascinating..."

"Doktor, you know it is quite rude to stare," the Major halfheartedly chastised, his attention focused on the thick and encompassing darkness beginning to wash across the city, "And here it comes! The final act of the Schatten Ausrufung is upon us. This is the night His Majesty has anticipated for over ninety years! The players are already on stage as the curtain rises over this Walpurgis Dawn!"

---

...

---

A bitter autumn wind coursed through the suddenly quiet streets as the paladin glared venomously at the crimson abomination waiting in the darkness. The creature's slightly amused expression, the subtly shifting shadows contorting around his boots, enough to cause her fingers to twitch of their own accord. Grey-green eyes narrowing as the whispered prayers and hushed mutterings from the surrounding crusaders echoed loudly in the early hour, the deathly silence following in the wake of the vampire's arrival causing the air to unnaturally still, Heinkel resisted the temptation to growl.

This didn't make any damn sense. Alucard shouldn't be here yet. Even with his entire repertoire of unholy and eldritch abilities, powered by the souls he used to sustain his unnatural and blasphemous existence, he shouldn't have been able to cross the Atlantic Ocean so damn quickly! All of their contingencies and worst-case scenarios had predicted the vampire's return requiring at least another thirty minutes. And in most circumstances the undead monster's earlier than anticipated arrival would have been bad enough. But to appear during the zenith of the Ninth Crusade's battle against Millennium and their Quincy superiors, right when most of the soldiers were gathered in one place?

It couldn't be a coincidence.

While Heinkel's mind tried to fathom the reasoning behind Alucard's sudden appearance on the battlefield, the vampire's mouth was stretched into a pleasant smile that contained just the barest hints of madness. He could feel the various energies suffusing the sky that burned so heavenly above the city, the familiar sensation in the deepest recesses of his darkened soul bringing back fond memories.

Both of those teenagers, those two interesting creatures that professed the inane notion that they still possessed their humanity, were still around. In the depths of his mind he could instinctively sense their Life Fibers, the alien creatures shining like a beacon in the darkness.

One of the children, the temperamental girl he fought that rainy night, was even standing next to his master. How amusing.

Grinning predatorily as blue-white spiritual energy quickly coalesced around the Captain's tightly clenched hands, the Sternritter's glaring stoically at him from underneath the white officer's cap, Alucard's entire body stiffened before he passionately shouted, "My lord and master, Integra Hellsing! Give me your orders!"

Situated in relative safety on the mostly intact rooftop of an old church as her servant's voice echoed across the night, Integra Hellsing gazed calmly at the scene unfolding below with a mildly detached expression. As individual strands of platinum blonde hair fell across her face, the light from the surrounding conflagration reflecting ominously off her glasses, she exhaled slowly before momentarily turning her attention towards the teenager standing several feet away. Armored fingers clenched tightly around the handle of the red Scissor Blade hanging limply at her side, the Kamui's multicolored eye shifting back and forth, Ryuko's face was set into an irritated scowl as she glowered at the vampire.

The leader of the Hellsing Organization understood quite well the teenager's frustration and annoyance, as misguided and pointless as it was, with her servant. After all, Ryuko's first encounter with Alucard hadn't been the most amiable. He had killed two members of Nudist Beach while injuring dozens of innocent bystanders before confronting her, resulting in a battle where she not only survived completely uninjured but also managed to inflict temporary wounds upon her servant. However, after Wolfe's departure she had given the teenager a single warning - no matter how angry she might be with her servant, despite any desires for revenge she still possessed, that she not leave her side.

"Alucard, take heed. Here are your orders."

Integra's authoritative tone resonated in the deathly quiet night as she addressed her servant. Sweeping an arm through the air while stepping towards the edge of the roof, the autumn wind causing her coat to billow around her body, the intense anger she felt making itself known as she continued, "Your silver gun shall turn the white army crimson. Your iron gun will stain the Quincy army scarlet. I would know my foes by the marks of red you leave upon their chests! Now search and destroy! SEARCH AND DESTROY! Run them down! Do not let any of them leave the island alive!"

An ominous wind blew through the streets as Alucard grinned at his master's words, "My master... it shall be done. As you command."

"Release Control Art Restriction - Zero!" Integra's tone didn't falter as she clenched her hand into a fist, "Announce your return! Say the words and release your full power! Now!"

The immediate silence that followed Integra's declaration was nearly deafening, the harsh and bitter wind blowing through the streets seeming to still as the full weight of her orders bore down upon her servant. Crimson eyes half-lidded as he exhaled slowly, Alucard drank in the nearly forgotten feeling of exaltation coursing through his blackened heart. He could feel the locks placed upon his powers by Abraham Van Hellsing, that epitome of a human who miraculously defeated him more than a century ago, slowly breaking apart, unraveling under his master's orders. As the seals woven into his gloves shone with a fierce blood red light that put the Wolfe and the Captain on edge, everything seemed to come to a crashing halt when pulse of vile spiritual energy tore its way out of his body.

With the singular exception of Heinkel none of the crusaders, trained to counter supernatural threats and monsters, were prepared for the unholy existence that was Alucard's true and unbridled power. Beads of sweat trickled down terrified and panicked faces when more than half of the gathered papal knights were violently driven onto their knees, shaking hands holding onto their weapons to keep themselves from collapsing entirely onto the blood-soaked street. On the other end of the spectrum, the undead soldiers were fairing exponentially worse. Their rudimentary ability to sense spiritual energy allowed them to glimpse Alucard's true power, the infinite darkness dwelling with the depths of the vampire's soul enough to make the battle-hardened soldiers take several fearful steps backwards.

Standing in the middle of all this with a passive expression on his face, the edges of Alucard's overcoat started dissolving away into flickering glowing shadows as he spoke, "I am the Bird of Hermes..."

Ryuko grumbled irritably under her breath as she glowered at the undead bastard, the unpleasant memories of their fight still fresh in her mind. She couldn't believe the vampire had this much power hidden up his sleeves. His strength had been completely unreal during their fight once he started getting serious, easily putting all of Nui Harime's psychotic power to shame. But this was an entirely different level of bad. The strange power radiating from Alucard was growing darker by the second and she had a sinking feeling in the pit of her stomach that things were only going to get worse.

God damn it! Just how much was this guy holding back against her?

Fingers strumming angrily against the handle of the Scissor Blade while her eyes stared at the barely noticeable shadows emerging from within Alucard's overcoat, Ryuko perked up in surprise when Senketsu suddenly shivered violently around her body, "Senketsu? What's wrong?"

" I don't know," Senketsu shuddered a second time as he replied, his multicolored eye narrowing apprehensively while goose bumps broke out across his armored form, "But my Life Fibers started quivering strangely the moment that woman finished speaking. Stay on your guard, Ryuko. I have a feeling something really bad is about to happen."

She had been through a lot of shit since transferring to Honnouji Academy and meeting Ichigo and Mako. From months of fighting Satsuki and her stupid nonsense, hunting down Nui Harime for what she did to her dad and dealing with her psychotic bitch of a mother, Ryuko thought she developed a relatively accurate sense of danger. But Alucard and his vampire bullshit threw all that out the window, "Bad, huh? Worse than what happened to Junketsu?"

" Worse than what happened to Junketsu."

"That's bad," Ryuko muttered quietly as she mulled over Senketsu's answer. The red undertone in her feathery hair glowing faintly as she propped the Scissor Blade on her shoulder, Ryuko kicked her heel against the side of the roof before smirking, "Don't worry, Senketsu. If that undead bastard tries anything, we'll just have to find a way to kick his ass!"

Senketsu sincerely hoped Ryuko was right and that his power would be enough to deal with Alucard. It was shameful that he couldn't even explain to her why he had suddenly started shivering. Growling under his metaphorical breath as he gave the vampire one final unblinking look, the Kamui turned his attention to his wearer and said, "I suppose we could even ask Ichigo and Mugetsu for help. But perhaps we could ask that woman next to us for information. After all, she is Alucard's master."

"Oh yeah..."

As Ryuko started turning towards Integra, determined to get some damn answers about her servant, she froze when the barest sense of something seriously wrong prickled at the edges of her mind. She would normally have just ignored it, chalking it down to whatever the vampire was doing, but the source of the feeling creeping slowly down her spine and causing Senketsu no small amount of discomfort wasn't coming from the bastard. Flipping the Scissor Blade around in her grip as she marched across the rooftop, her blue eyes momentarily locking with Integra's, Ryuko looked across the burning horizon before suddenly staggering back in shock when she found the source. The ship. That damned creepy ship the undead bastard arrived on.

"What the fuck?" Ryuko found herself nearly speechless when the Life Fibers composing her body reacted to whatever was on the ship, painting an extremely vivid and nightmarish image of something she couldn't even begin to understand. Angrily growling as she spun around and glared at Integra, her desire for answers growing by the second, she had barely managed to take a single step towards the woman before the undead bastard's voice echoed loudly in the quiet night and all hell broke loose.

"Here standeth the Bird of Hermes! EATING MY OWN WINGS!"

Heinkel's boots skidded along the ground as she hastily threw herself away from Alucard, the unholy miasma of vile energy erupting from his body sending shivers racing down her spine. The sheer intensity of the power radiating from the vampire was mindboggling, easily eclipsing anything she had ever felt. If they didn't find a way to kill him here and now, before he could reach the pinnacle of his strength, they might all be doomed. Cursing grimly as she flicked her wrists outwards, fingers expertly clasping around the familiar cold steel of her pistols as they slid out of her sleeves, the paladin's cassock fluttered violently around her body as she leaned sideways and unloaded both clips into the smirking vampire.

A sharp crackle echoed loudly in the darkness as a hailstorm of bullets exploded from the paladin's pistols in less time than it took her to blink. As the blessed rounds spun through the air and slammed into Alucard's grinning visage, blood and visceral spraying wildly as large chunks of his body simply evaporated into nothingness, the Captain grunted softly before deciding to make his move. Rushing forward using Hirenkyaku to bolster his speed, wisps of dust clung futilely to his overcoat as he stomped one foot against the ground and twisted his upper body. Fingers flexing tightly as he thrust his right arm towards Alucard, the Sternritter's stoic expression didn't waver as the spiritual energy surrounding his hand erupted forward and reduced what remained of the vampire's body into scraps of flesh and shadows.

As if reacting to some unseen signal, the soldiers still able to stand under the immensity of Alucard's power screamed loudly before rushing forward. The gathered crusaders, fear and terror evident in their eyes, raised shaking hands and fired everything they had at the amorphous mass of burning shadows. Hundreds of rounds pierced into the vampire's increasingly inhuman form, flesh quickly dissolving into writhing shadows under the deluge of bullets, while the undead soldiers rapidly sprinted towards Alucard, hands desperately reaching for the Seele Schneiders clasped on their belts.

"What the hell?"

Sneering when the slides of her pistols clicked empty, the last of her rounds buried somewhere within Alucard's monstrous form, Heinkel ignored the chill racing down her spine as another pulse of power rippled through the night. It felt as if the very air was growing heavier. Nothing in the Vatican's archives or the detailed memoirs confiscated from Jonathan Harker mentioned anything of this nature! Had they underestimated the true scope of the vampire's power or had he simply been holding back this entire time?

"Damn it!" Crossing her arms as she crouched and leapt upwards, fingers expertly reloading her pistols in the blink of an eye, the paladin landed on the edge of a nearby roof before growling, "It feels like Hell itself is erupting in the streets! Just what sort of monster is Alucard?"

"To make..." Alucard's voice warbled with an audibly strained tone while bullets continued tearing into his form, "Myself tame..."

Anxious shouts of 'cease fire' resounded through the night when the vampire's voice suddenly trailed off, his body enveloped in a thickening cloud of acrid smoke that made it nearly impossible for anyone to view the writhing mass of burning shadows. Sharing confused expressions when nothing happened for several frightful seconds, the undead soldiers winced when the receivers in their ears blared loudly before suddenly cutting off in a harsh and static-filled whine. Slowly backing away from the amorphous mass of shadow matter when it began growing in size, the blood-like substance threatening to spill forth and swallow them whole at any second, the soldiers tensed as every light within the city began flickering out one by one. The roaring flames that had previously turned the horizon a deep and menacing orange slowly faded away, leaving naught but a deep purple twilight.

"By all that is holy..." One crusader found his throat suddenly dry when he looked up into the sky and saw the pale white light of the full moon, the guiding beacon by which they had assaulted the heretic's capital, bleeding away into a deep and foreboding crimson. Forcibly looking away from the eldritch moon when his comrades began shouting in panic, a gasp leaving his mouth when hundreds of inhuman crimson eyes opened simultaneously amongst the shadows oozing towards them, he attempted to flee only for his body to fall apart in a spray of blood when dozens of impossibly sharp cards cut through his neck and limbs.

Fiery blood and twitching shadows clinging to their malformed bodies as they slowly emerged from the erupting mass of chaos, the white-clad forms of Tubalcain Alhambra and Rip Van Winkle were but a mockery of their former selves. The darkness composing Alucard's true form seemed to merge with the souls of the former Sternritter, warping and twisting their once human features into something that could only be called a caricature. As the thing that had once been Alhambra raised his only visible arm, a deep crimson glow covered the spiritual cards leaving his fingers as they spiraled through the air towards the armies.

"Fall back!"

The panicked order came across as little more than a terrified shout as the soldier leapt away from the vampire, his eyes widening when several X-Axis enhanced Heilig Pfeils pierced through his comrades before continuing unabated into the surrounding buildings. His boots rapidly stomping on the cobblestones when he managed to catch a glimpse of the way Rip Van Winkle's face was only half-formed, the entire left side of the former Sternritter's head replaced by the same sinewy darkness chasing him, the soldat pressed a finger against his ear and shouted, "Fall back to defensive position sigma! I repeat, fall _."

A choked gurgle cut off the soldat's desperate orders to retreat when a nodachi sliced into his neck, the polished blade severing his head in a violent spray of blood. Her sandaled foot touching down lightly onto the road, Alucard's shadowy mass replacing the entire right side of her body, the woman's long brown hair waved delicately as she effortlessly parried the Seele Schneider from another undead soldat. Adjusting her fingers around the sword as she spun around and bisected the Quincy, the symbol for the Third Division clearly visible on the back of her blood-soaked haori, the former shinigami captain's eyes were completely hollow as she walked through the rain of blood towards the retreating armies.

Ryuko's eyes stared in disbelief when the writhing shadows composing Alucard's body burst forth, the millions of souls and lives he'd absorbed over the centuries emerging as a tidal wave of death and suffering that quickly overwhelmed the soldiers below. This was the same bastard she thought she had a shot of beating? As she watched the blood and souls rush through the streets, killing anyone they came across, she came to a startling realization. She had thought her bitch of a mother and Nui Harime were bad, but how the hell could anyone defeat something like Alucard?

"This is the true face of the vampire Alucard."

Integra's cold tone, the nearly impassive tone in her voice as she answered Ryuko's unspoken question, easily reaching across the rooftop. Folding one hand within the pockets of her coat, the leader of the Hellsing Organization stared at the growing calamity below before continuing, "Blood is the currency of the soul, the medium by which life itself can be transferred. To drink blood is to take the essence of the soul into oneself. You understand the ramifications of this now, don't you Seras?"

A crestfallen expression momentarily crossed Seras' face as she stood up, the shadows composing her left arm settling slightly in the process, "Yes."

"I thought someone like you would understand such a concept... Ryuko."

Nearly a second passed in absolute silence before Ryuko whipped her head towards Integra, a furious expression burning in her eyes. Ignoring the incensed glare from the teenager as she gazed at the crimson moon hovering almost directly overhead, the stars slowly but surely winking out of existence, she sighed and looked over her shoulder. As the deluge of blood crashed through the streets, the screams and moans of the perpetually damned an unholy cacophony in her ears, Integra narrowed her eyes at Ryuko and explained, "After the Grand Couturier's unwarranted appearance I spoke with Olivier Armstrong. She explained to me the fundamental aspects of your Kamui. Including how it functions. It feeds of your blood, does it not? Your Kamui grants you incredible power, enough strength to fight a true vampire, in exchange for nothing more than devouring your very essence."

"What the hell did you just say?!"

Ryuko snarled angrily at what the woman was insinuating about Senketsu. Flipping the Scissor Blade deftly around her wrist until it was pointing directly at Integra, steam shot out of the ventilation grill on her upper back as she growled, "Are you comparing Senketsu to that undead asshole? Take a good look! I don't think Senketsu is going around eating everyone in sight!"

"Both Alucard and Seras reported that your Kamui is fully capable of speech and reason. That it somehow communicates with you," Integra's tone never wavered as she purposefully walked towards Ryuko, aware of Seras' worried expression as she stopped several inches away from the Scissor Blade and narrowed her eyes in suspicion, "But look at its brethren - the COVERS. They function by devouring humans, feeding off our blood like stuck pigs. Torn down to their barest essence, Life Fibers are no different than my servant."

"Why you..."

The biting curse about to leave her mouth was suddenly cut short when the building started shaking violently. Planting the Scissor Blade deeply into the rooftop for support when she nearly fell onto her ass, blue eyes noticing Integra was completely unaffected while Seras seemed to have perfect balance, Ryuko stiffened when she felt Senketsu shudder once more around her body, "Let me guess. That undead bastard's not quite done?"

" Yes," Senketsu's multicolored eye didn't pull away from the blood-like substance flowing through the streets, the moans from the damned causing his Life Fibers to subconsciously shudder. Grunting as a burst of steam shot out of the ventilation grill on Ryuko's back, the Kamui took a moment to compose himself before looking at his wearer and growling, "Stay focused, Ryuko. Even if that woman's telling the truth, and Alucard's on our side, whatever he's becoming is completely different than what we fought."

"Stop! It's impossible! How on earth could something like... like that exist?!"

Maxwell pressed his palms against the surface of the shatterproof glass as he stared in disbelief at the carnage running through the streets, violet eyes quivering as the unholy glowing substance. This was impossible! It didn't make any sense! None of the documents describing Alucard made any mention of this! The detailed journals written by those who fought the vampire described his ability to summon souls from within his body. But this... this defied reason. No, it went against nature itself. It spat on the very concept of life and death.

"Wallachia..."

The archbishop found his throat suddenly dry when dozens of heavily armored figures emerged from the shadowy mass, blood dripping down their bodies while hands clasped tightly around jagged spears and razor-sharp halberds. Even from this height, with the transfigured moon's crimson light bathing London in an eerie glow, he recognized the insignia on the undead army's breastplates. Staggering backwards, one hand placed against the podium while tens of thousands of damned souls materialized from the writhing chaos, Maxwell's voice came out as little more than a whisper, "By God... it's true. Y-You consumed them all! Your own soldiers and subjects! You devoured everything !"

"You... you..."

Words rapidly failed the archbishop as his back slammed against the glass with a dull thud. One hand holding tightly onto the podium as the built-in radio blared with the voices of an uncountable number of crusaders, the holy knights screaming for evacuation only to be cut off by the blasphemous bloody substance overtaking them, beads of sweat dripped down Maxwell's terrified face when a shrouded figure slowly emerged at the epicenter of the calamity. His mouth opened in a silent gasp as wisps of writhing darkness clung to the tattered cape clasped around the man's broad shoulders, the archbishop swallowed the lump in his throat before speaking loudly enough for the speakers to pick up, "You're a fiend! A monster! A devil! You... DRACULA!"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #31 - The Snow Day

Mugetsu sighed in deep satisfaction as she lounged lazily on the couch, her uniform stretched over the edge of the armrest. Ichigo's house was much better for a Kamui such as herself than that cramped and ugly room Satsuki gave him when he joined the Student Council. There was a lot more freedom to move around and relax, enjoying her daily ironing, without having her every actions closely watched by the Sewing Club. As she flipped over onto her back and yawned, white sleeves draped over her midsection, Mugetsu's multicolored eyes narrowed when a familiar presence hopped onto the couch, "What do you want?"

" We're doing a Kamui Tales!" Senketsu waved fervently at his fellow Kamui, "So get up!"

" No," Mugetsu growled in annoyance before flipping onto her side, one sleeve purposefully slapping Senketsu in his lapels, "All that fighting in England was exhausting. Even with Ichigo's delicious blood I still want to take a nice, long nap. Go bother Junketsu or something."

Grumbling while rubbing a sleeve against his lapels, Senketsu gave the uncaring Mugetsu one final scathing glare before hopping off the couch. Why did the task of getting Mugetsu to help with anything always fall on his sleeves? Everyone knew they didn't see collar to collar, which really frayed his threads. It didn't make sense. After all, in his humble opinion he was the most popular character in the story. So obviously the problem laid with his fellow Kamui and nothing he could have possibly done.

His multicolored eye staring at the pictures hanging on the wall as he left Ichigo's living room and headed towards the front door, Senketsu gave his best impression of a frown. If he wanted to find Junketsu and finish making the omake he would he need to complete the monumental task of opening the door. After nearly a minute of fumbling with the knob, lapels drooping at his lack of fingers, Senketsu grinned when he finally managed to open the door... only to find several inches of snow piled up against the house. Visibly deflating in defeat while a gust of bitter wind caused him to rustle, the Kamui stiffened in surprise when a firm hand gripped the back of his uniform and picked him off the ground.

"What the hell are you doing, Senketsu?" Ichigo flipped the Kamui around while slamming the front door shut with his other hand before the entire house froze over.

" I was trying to find Junketsu for the omake segment. I asked Mugetsu first... but... well..." Waving a sleeve in the general direction of the other Kamui, which earned him a faint growl from Mugetsu, Senketsu quickly changed topics and turned his attention back to Ichigo, "Where is Junketsu?"

"Satsuki brought her back to Kisuke's shop to check something out," Ichigo replied in a mildly annoyed tone as he walked into the living room with Senketsu in tow. Letting go of the Kamui as he collapsed into the chair opposite the couch, Mugetsu's eyes instantly zeroing in on the fact he was wearing other clothing, the teenager rubbed the back of his neck before sighing, "Why did you try going outside instead of asking Ryuko to take you?"

" Ryuko is currently sleeping in the spare bedroom right next to yours. It would have been rude to wake her up," Senketsu's neckerchief twitched as he motioned towards the stairs with his sleeve. Completely oblivious to Ichigo's annoyed reaction at his mentioning of the spare bedroom, otherwise known as Satsuki's new room, the Kamui hopped onto the other end of the couch from Mugetsu. It was really boring whenever Ryuko was wearing him. While he could surely find something to do - watch television, get ironed, annoy Mugetsu for everything she's done to him, get ironed - it just wasn't the same without Ryuko. Nobody else gave the perfect ironing, knew the secret to smoothing out all the creases in his threads with such expertise as Ryuko.

" So why are you bothering us?" Mugetsu's eyes focused intensely on the sweater Ichigo was wearing, a faint growl reverberating across the living room as thoughts of tearing apart the offending garment passed through her mind, "Go find a coat hanger or something and leave us alone."

" I need someone to help with the omake!" The Kamui angrily waved his sleeves at Mugetsu, sparks shooting between their multicolored eyes. Eventually turning away and huffing, Senketsu folded his sleeves and grumbled, "And I didn't want to ask Danketsu. Not after what she did last time..."

"Sorry, but Mugetsu can't help you with whatever... this... is," Ichigo really didn't care to find out what Kinue's Kamui did to Senketsu and frankly he would rather not know. Simply thinking about this pretend little game was giving him a headache. Sighing as he stood up, Ichigo looked out the window into the raging snowstorm before adding, "I just came to pick her up. The iron finished heating and - "

There was a rapid flash of movement as Mugetsu leapt off the couch before throwing herself across the living room. Crashing into her wearer with nearly enough force to knock him over, the Kamui excitedly wrapped her pants and sleeves around Ichigo while her eyes shimmered with joy. She had nearly forgotten about Ichigo's promise to iron her thanks to all of Senketsu's stupid and annoying comments. And to think she wanted to take a nap when something like this was waiting for her!

" Don't forget the back of my sleeves this time, Ichigo!" Mugetsu warned threateningly as Ichigo managed to untangle himself from her uniform. As the teenager walked towards the laundry room, the Kamui clinging tightly to his body, Mugetsu's voice slowly faded away, "And make sure the iron's at the right temperature. It was far too cold last..."

Senketsu sighed in depression when he found himself completely and utterly alone. As he hopped off the couch and began the long and slow climb upstairs, he couldn't suppress the jealousy he felt for Mugetsu. He would have loved to get ironed. It was one of the best parts of the day. His sleeves fumbling with the spare bedroom door once he reached the second floor, the Kamui was nearly bowled over when the door opened and Ryuko stepped out into the hallway.

"Senketsu? What are you doing out here?"

" Well... you were sleeping and I didn't want to bother you," the Kamui stumbled nervously over his words only to stiffen when Ryuko picked him up.

"Man, you look exhausted," Ryuko muttered, her blue eyes half-opened as a yawn tore its way out of her throat, "Have you been fighting with Mugetsu again?"

" She started it! "

"Well, it doesn't matter," Ryuko didn't bother listening to anything else her Kamui had to say as she shuffled back into Satsuki's room. Carefully draping Senketsu over the special hook her sister had installed for Junketsu, the Kamui perking up before relaxing in contentment, she collapsed onto the bed and muttered into the pillow, "It's a freaking snow day so I'm going to get as much sleep as possible..."

Death or Glory

I present to you Chapter 49 of To My Death I Fight . I do apologize for the large wait. We are ramping up towards the climax of this arc and everything needs to be just right. So if that takes a few more days... or a week... then so be it. This is my gift for you, my readers, and so it's going to be the best damn chapter I can possibly make it. With my beta reader's help of course. So enjoy the chapter and write a review if you can. There is exactly... one OC in this chapter. But they are not exactly new to the story. I actually first mentioned them quite a few chapters ago. But they shouldn't be too hard to spot. In fact, it should be fairly obvious who they are once they make their appearance.

Also, I rewrote the entire last section from Chapter 4 from scratch - it was the scene with Nui inviting herself into the back of Isshin's car. There were several large and outstanding issues with what I've written, mostly pertaining to how Isshin usually deals with a Grand Couturier wild encounter. I don't think actively threatening to kill her, and promising to do so, is something Isshin would normally say. Yeah... that was a plot hole I had to fix. So instead of a minor patch I just said 'screw it' and rewrote the whole thing. Over a year of practice with the Kill la Kill cast really helped me rewrite Nui Harime's personality and mannerisms much more accurately, especially when she still had her eye patch.

So I hope you enjoy this chapter. Remember that I have a tvtropes page for this story. You should go check it out sometimes and maybe add a thing or two.

---

...

---

Chapter 49 - Death or Glory

"What the hell?"

A frustrated expression crossed Batou's face as he slammed his foot against the brake. Jolting forward as the military jeep came to a screeching halt accompanied by the acrid smell of burning rubber, the nudist commander craned his head upwards and frowned at Maxwell's stammering declaration. What, did nobody in the Vatican ever realize that the most powerful vampire in the world was Dracula? It was hard to imagine that Iscariot, the organization whose sole purpose was destroying supernatural threats, never made that connection. All the undead asshole did was spell his name backwards.

"Damn it, some people are just morons," the nudist scoffed as he vaulted over the vehicle's door.

Ignoring the sound of his combat boots disturbing a puddle of what was most likely not water as he landed on the ground, Batou swept his grey eyes across the surrounding area and cursed angrily. He had thought the inhuman crap he witnessed in South American had been nasty. Paramilitary and other anti-government groups brutally executing captured civilians without a moment's hesitation. But this was just sickening. Corpses of men, women and children lined the road, unfortunate victims of the ongoing battle. Shaking his head in disgust at the brutality, the nudist's stomach dropped when he noticed several bodies looked like something had tried eating them.

These Quincy were some real sick bastards.

As he reached into the backseat of the jeep and picked up the M-15 Anti-Life Fiber Assault Rifle, the sound of someone landing on the opposite side of the vehicle not escaping him, Batou narrowed his eyes. There was something extremely wrong here. More wrong than the hundreds of corpses strewn throughout the area. Refusing to look over his shoulder at the blood-red moon hovering ominously in the night sky, the crimson orb bathing the darkened city in an eerie light that caused his skin to crawl, the nudist couldn't shake the feeling that someone was constantly watching him. But aside from the gunships and helicopters flying in formation overhead they hadn't found any sign of life. Had the Quincy actually managed to kill three million people in the half hour it took him to leave and come back?

"Ye feel that unfathomably evil power?"

The sound of tearing cloth and linen drew Batou's attention as Alexander Anderson finished bandaging the wounds sustained from his battle against Zorin Blitz. His damaged cassock fluttering in the bitter autumn wind as he slowly marched past the front of the jeep and down the road, green eyes staring in transfixed fury at the crimson moon that seemed to pierce his very soul, there was a slight shimmer when the former paladin flexed his wrists and summoned a pair of tailor bayonets, "The vampire has released his full power onto the world for the first time in over a century."

Batou tightened his grip on the assault rifle at that piece of information. His boots scraping against the asphalt when something unsettling on the wind caught his attention, a faint but growing humming causing the hairs on the back of his neck to stiffen, he ignored the way the surrounding shadows appeared to writhe and turned to Anderson, "Alright, what the hell does that mean?"

"It means that - "

The former paladin's explanation was prematurely cut off when the deeply unsettling humming filling the air abruptly transformed into an increasingly growing cacophony of hellish screams and gurgling moans. Calloused fingers reflexively tightening around the pair of tailor bayonets as he turned towards the source of the noise, Anderson's mouth pulled into an angry sneer when the ground itself began to shake. As he stared across the crimson-lit city, his fellow commander taking a few hesitate steps backwards when the rumbling continued growing louder, the former priest's eyes widened when a veritable deluge of blood and death came roaring out of adjacent streets several hundred feet away.

"Oh, hell no!"

It took Batou less than a second to fully understand the situation before he turned around and sprinted away from the approaching torrent of undeath. He would need to be a complete idiot to think his weapon could do anything to that thing. Alucard already demonstrated the unnerving ability to rapidly regenerate from their specialized Anti-Life Fiber needles. If he tried fighting back, throwing everything in his arsenal at that thing, he more or less guaranteed a fate worse than being eaten alive by a COVERS. Wisps of condensation escaping his mouth as he pushed his body harder, exhaustion starting to overwhelm the adrenaline pumping through his veins, Batou had less than a second to cover his eyes when Anderson spun around and swung his arms forward.

Dozens of tailor bayonets, connected by a length of tightly woven detonating cord, flew out of the seals on the former paladin's gloves before stabbing deeply into the asphalt directly in front of the undead familiars. Gnashing his teeth as he waited several tense seconds for the tormented souls to get within range, Anderson's finger depressed the trigger in his hand before shutting his eyes as the entire street was temporarily engulfed in an explosion large enough to send a cloud of multicolored smoke rising high into the crimson-tinted midnight skies.

Even as the intense heat from the explosion brushed against the back of his neck, the abrupt shift in air pressure causing his ears to pop, Batou didn't try stopping to see if Anderson's attack did the trick. He highly doubted it did so much as slow down the oncoming wave of familiars, which meant he needed to think of something and fast. Moving to higher ground was the only feasible option that didn't involve him sprouting wings or suddenly gaining superhuman speed. The only question was whether they could reach the rooftops before the horde of undead souls overwhelmed and swallowed them.

A sudden flickering of blue light in the distance, the brightness a sharp contrast to the surrounding darkness, caught the nudist commander's attention. His eyes widening as he quickly recognized the familiar tint of the pulsating coloration, Batou shouted at Anderson, "Incoming airlift! Raise your right arm!"

Moments before the deluge of familiars overwhelmed the nudists, blood dripping freely from the weapons poised inches from their backs, they were suddenly and harshly pulled off the ground when an armored hand clamped tightly around their wrists. The deep sapphire light bursting forth from his transformed lower body increasing in brilliance as he avoided the tortured souls attempting to latch onto him, Ichigo Kurosaki tightened his grip on his two passengers before twisting his body sideways and flying vertically upwards.

Glancing over his shoulder at the undead familiars flooding through the streets, their moans and screams mixing together into an unholy orchestra, Ichigo sighed in relief before flying towards the relative safety of the nearest rooftop. He didn't want to imagine what would have happened if he had been only a few seconds later. The lifeless bodies strewn throughout the city, their souls conspicuously absent, was bad enough.

Carefully releasing Batou and Anderson as he hovered several feet above the top of the building, shimmering blue stars briefly surrounded Ichigo as Mugetsu transformed back into her normal active configuration. The stiff autumn breeze causing his orange hair to shift slightly as Tournesol appeared in his hand, Ichigo silently grimaced for a few seconds before speaking in a depressed tone, "Sorry about that. Alucard's spiritual energy makes sensing anything difficult."

Pushing Ichigo's answer aside for the moment, Batou frowned as he slung the assault rifle over his shoulder and walked towards the edge of the roof. A light grunt leaving his mouth as he crouched onto one knee and observed the thousands of souls meandering with a purpose through the streets below, the nudist commander scratched his chin before cursing under his breath. It might have been a very long time since he taken any sort of history class but he sure as hell recognized some of the more detailed armors. If he was right, and he hoped to whatever God did exist that he wasn't, than things were actually worse than he first imagined.

"Alright," the nudist commander shook his head as he stood up and turned around, "What happened?"

Ichigo was momentarily silent as he stared at the ground with a troubled expression on his face. The failure to rescue anyone, to save innocent people from Millennium's vampirized forces or Alucard's indiscriminant slaughter, weighed heavily on his conscience, "One of the Sternritter from Honnouji Academy ambushed me. He said his mission was to stall me, to keep me away from Ryuko. I beat him... but then Iscariot came out of nowhere and opened fire. Their boss ordered them to attack everyone... including innocent people. And then Alucard arrived..."

Despite the viciousness of the Vatican's surprising betrayal, in paled in comparison to the moment when Alucard released his full spiritual energy. The disgusting and vile feeling of the vampire's power, that overwhelming darkness that spread across the city and made his Life Fibers quiver apprehensively, was on a completely different level from anything he ever experienced. It put the traces of fear he remembered from Ulquiorra's segunda etapa, which the espada used in order to show him true despair, in a new context. And then there were the souls. Millions of souls, consumed over nearly five hundred years, trapped in a cycle of torment and pain. Ichigo couldn't understand it. How could Alucard have been given free reign for so long?

Why hasn't the Captain-Commander already killed him?

" I can feel some of my Life Fibers still quivering, Ichigo."

Mugetsu lightly growled while shuddering in disgust around Ichigo's body as she vividly remembered the overwhelming dread coming from the HMS Eagle. There was something on the ship so powerful that it resonated with Ichigo and her Life Fibers from halfway across London, painting a nightmarish image in their minds. Even now, after all this time, her Life Fibers were still quivering in fear. Nui Harime's cold touch back at Honnouji Academy, when her perfectly manicured finger knowingly and curiously poked against one of the many banshi composing her form, had been horrible but Alucard's full power was at least ten times worse.

Craning her multicolored eyes upwards, the Kamui sighed mentally, "I'm starting to think Alucard might not be a vampire. His powers and abilities were never mentioned in that book Nudist Beach forced us to read. It would be wise to stay as far away from him as possible, Ichigo."

"So Iscariot stabbed us in the back?" Batou muttered, ignorant of the ongoing conversation, before shaking his head in annoyance, "That's just perfect..."

The nudist commander couldn't believe their bad luck. Trapped in the middle of war-torn London with Dracula's army of undead souls running rampant throughout the streets, killing and devouring anyone in their path, without any possibility of contacting headquarters in Osaka. And if Ichigo was telling the truth it appeared that the smug bastard in charge of the Vatican's operations went batshit insane and backstabbed the Hellsing Organization, which was an incredibly stupid thing to do. Batou knew from experience that it was only a matter of time before the vampire decided to personally deal with Iscariot.

At least his men were safe at the Hellsing Manor with Aikuro and the destroyed remains of the DTR Model Ray. Olivier was going to kill him when she found out.

"Ichigo, there's something you should know," Batou frowned as he walked towards the teenager, one hand adjusting the assault rifle strapped around his shoulder. Pointing his thumb at Anderson, the former paladin silent as he grimly watched the gunships firing upon Alucard's familiars, the nudist commander cleared his throat with a small cough, "According to Anderson, this entire battle is a damn smokescreen. Millennium's planning something big... and it involves Alucard."

The bitter autumn wind briefly picked up as Ichigo stared pensively at the ground, his eyes narrowed in contemplation. Whatever Millennium had planned for Alucard it couldn't be good. Even separated by several kilometers he could still detect the vampire's massive spiritual energy, his presence standing out like a beacon in the darkness and making him almost impossible to miss. Respectfully nodding at Batou for the information before turning around, fingers curling tightly around Tournesol's hilt when he sensed Ryuko's spiritual energy suddenly increase in power, Ichigo managed to take two steps before a familiar voice spoke up.

" What are you planning?"

Frowning at Mugetsu's question, Ichigo didn't break his stride as he answered, "I'm going to stop Alucard."

" Ryuko's synchronization with Senketsu during their fight against Alucard was nearly perfect. Almost equal to our own. Yet they still lost."

Mugetsu ignored the surprised reaction from the nudist commander as her multicolored eyes stared upwards at Ichigo in both concern and worry, "My power might be slightly greater than Senketsu's, Ichigo, but Alucard easily defeated Ryuko. Even with my superior speed, attempting to fight him is very risky."

"I know... but Alucard must have a weakness," Ichigo replied, his attention drawn to a series of explosions in the distance.

"Don't be an idiot, Ichigo," Batou growled as he reached out and gripped one of Mugetsu's pauldrons, his grey eyes narrowing at what he knew Ichigo must be thinking. The teenager was strong. Hell, he could probably kick the Grand Couturier's ass. But he wasn't about to let Ichigo fight someone that made a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin cautiously nervous. Isshin would kick his ass and kill him, in that order, if he found out, "You want to fight Alucard? All right then, what's your plan? The undead bastard already demonstrated that your Kamui don't possess the raw power necessary to put him down."

"You think I don't know that?!"

A burst of steam erupted from Mugetsu's ventilation grills before Ichigo turned around, easily pulling himself free of Batou's grip in the process. Clenching his free hand tightly into a fist as the tormented screams of Alucard's familiars faded into the background, the trapped souls flowing through the streets towards the remaining crusaders and vampirized soldiers, Ichigo glared at the nudist commander before stating, "Alucard's power is unreal. It's on an entirely different scale from anything I've ever felt. What do you think will happen to everyone if he isn't stopped? He'll devour their souls! He doesn't care if someone's innocent! Mugetsu's power might not be enough to defeat him... but like hell I'm just going to sit back and do nothing!"

For nearly half a minute Batou didn't say anything, instead choosing to watch the subtle movements of Mugetsu's eyes while he weighed his options. Grimacing when he heard Anderson's heavy footsteps slowly but methodically growing closer, the former paladin's face set in a nearly unreadable snarl, the nudist commander sighed deeply before reaching into one of his armored vest's many pockets, "Isshin's going to kick my ass. But we don't exactly have any other option. Here, take this."

Handing over the small device from his pocket, a local network radio receiver, Batou cautiously warned, "You were right about one thing, Ichigo. Alucard needs to be stopped before he devours all of London. But we can't forget about those Quincy bastards in Millennium. We still have no idea what they have planned for the undead bastard. For all we know they could be counting at you going after him."

Placing the radio device in his ear as he walked across the rooftop, Ichigo nodded appreciatively at Batou before turning to his Kamui, "Let's go, Mugetsu. Mugetsu Gufū!"

The nudist commander briefly squinted when Ichigo rocketed upwards into the night sky before changing trajectories, the intense blue light from his Kamui rapidly dwindling until it vanished into the darkness. As the eerily calm wind gently blew across the rooftops, the bitterness in the air helping to distract him from the feeling that he just made a monumentally stupid decision, Batou continued mulling over the single question that had been on the forefront of his mind since returning to London - stopping Alucard. He wasn't an idiot. Even if the vampire was technically working with them, or rather desiring nothing more than to slaughter a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin, he was still a walking nightmare. Taking him down in a standard fight would be difficult if not impossible.

An explosion, the close proximity enough to leave a sharp ringing in his ears, harshly tore Batou from his thoughts as one of the Vatican's helicopters crashed to the ground as nothing more than burning wreckage. His expression shifting into an angry frown as dozens of aircraft were destroyed in rapid succession, the nudist commander's eyes widened when one of the last remaining gunships attempted to retreat only for an invisible attack to effortlessly perforate through the armored exterior. He recognized that attack from the Great Culture and Sports Festival.

That was a Quincy's technique.

Grumbling as he turned towards Anderson, the former paladin's expression nearly unreadable, Batou sighed wearily, "I'm surprised you didn't try stopping Ichigo."

"I would like nothing more than to destroy his Kamui. It is a threat to humanity, a potential weapon ready to be worn by Ragyo Kiryuin and used against us. However..." Anderson's guttural voice trailed off when the remaining Vatican aircraft were destroyed, his attention focused on one helicopter in particular. Tightening his grip upon the pair of tailor bayonets as the helicopter crashed some distance away, he sneered, "I am willing to leave Ichigo alone for the moment. Now if ye'll excuse me..."

Batou frowned as the former paladin began walking away, "Where are you going?"

"Ichigo said Maxwell went insane with power. That it consumed him. But I don't buy it," Anderson ignored the deep-seated pain in his shoulder, the once white bandages stained red with his blood.

It may have been more than thirteen long years but he still remembered the Iscariot oaths and vows. All paladins were allowed free reign to attack and slaughter Protestants, provided that the heathens attempt to interfere with their sacred mission. The massacring of innocent people, admitted treachery and betrayal when faced with the Vatican's oldest enemy, was strictly forbidden. Grimacing as a lance of pain shot down his left arm, Anderson paused before half-looking over his shoulder, "Ye should head back to Aikuro. The General needs to know about the Quincy for when they inevitably stab us in the back."

Stalking purposefully across the rooftop once he finished speaking, his cassock billowing in the late autumn wind, Anderson was abruptly pulled to a stop when Batou reached out and grabbed his uninjured shoulder, "Look, I already know about your connection to Iscariot. But how the hell do you plan on getting over there?"

"I am more than capable of dealing with any damned souls that get in my way," Anderson growled in response as he pulled Batou's hand off his shoulder. Ignoring the darkened stain on his cassock, which was the result of aggravating his wounds, the former paladin ruefully added as he walked away, "Don't do anything foolish, Batou."

Before the nudist commander could process Anderson's hypocrisy, a look of confusion rapidly giving way to dawning realization, the former priest was already on the move. Rushing forward in an impressive burst of speed, the nudist's body was briefly silhouetted against the darkened crimson sky before he vanished into the surrounding shadows. Left completely alone on the rooftop, the faint screams and moans of Alucard's familiars the only sounds seemingly able to penetrate the encompassing shadows, Batou ran a hand down his face and sighed. Adjusting the assault rifle around his shoulder as he walked across the rooftop, the grey haired nudist found his attention drawn to the red and black checkerboard-patterned zeppelin passing overhead.

---

...

---

"That does it! Now I'm freaking PISSED!"

Streams of turbulent ruby energy exploded from Senketsu's ventilation grills as Ryuko blasted down the street, her blue eyes narrowing into a furious scowl when yet another one of Alucard's familiars emerged from the shadows and tried to blindside her. Goddamn it, she was getting sick and tired of the undead bastard's little helpers. They were really starting to piss her off. Easily avoiding the undead soldier's sword by twisting her body sideways, the blood-soaked weapon missing her neck before shattering against Senketsu's armor, Ryuko growled angrily before curling her hand into a fist and smashing it squarely into the familiar's face.

As the undead soul's head burst apart in a shower of blood, the concussive blast accompany her punch knocking back every familiar within thirty feet, Ryuko scoffed and continued rushing forward while ignoring the slight pang of guilt in her chest. There would always be time later to feel guilty about killing these guys. But right now she had far more important things to worry about - like beating the crap out of the shinigami bitch.

Violently cutting a path through the horde of screaming familiars as she wove her way down the street towards her opponent, one hundred feet rapidly dwindling to ten, Ryuko pushed herself harder when several crimson eyes appeared on the shadows composing the captain's white haori. Like hell she was just going to let the undead bastard come in and pull some stupid crap. Curling her fingers tightly around the Scissor Blade as she hefted it over her right shoulder, the surrounding shadows rapidly retreating from the crimson aura enveloping her body, Ryuko stared into the undead shinigami's soulless eyes before swinging downwards. There was no way in hell she was going to miss hitting the bitch at this range!

"God damn it!"

Digging her heels into the pavement when the captain vanished in a burst of shunpo, Ryuko snarled and twisted around. This was starting to get annoying. Every time she attacked the woman, the bitch used her stupid speed technique. It was bullshit! But there was a silver lining. She just needed to remember to thank the mute Quincy bastard when she kicked his ass. Stiffening when she heard the faint sound of footsteps directly behind her, Ryuko growled and raised the Scissor Blade just in time to block the nodachi aimed at her neck.

"Not this time, you bitch!"

A blast of spiritual energy erupted outwards as Ryuko countered the woman's ambush, multicolored sparks dancing through the air while the cracking pavement underneath her heels shattered. Her mouth twisting into a frustrated snarl as she pushed back against the captain's supernatural strength, the Scissor Blade quivering as it struggled tooth and nail for every inch of leeway, Ryuko still couldn't wrap her mind around how this stupid fight started. One second she's walking away from Integra Hellsing and Seras to look for Ichigo, ignoring the woman's stern warning in the process, only for the bitch to appear out of nowhere and kick her into the waiting clutches of the undead bastard's army.

It hadn't been nearly as difficult as she originally thought to free herself from the veritable flood of blood and death. Even with Senketsu complaining about how the rancid blood would never come out of his threads, escaping from the undead souls had been rather easy. But when she finally managed to break free, cutting apart hundreds of the undead bastard's familiars in the process, the shinigami bitch had tried pulling the same stunt a second damn time.

And it had almost worked.

"You know something? I think I'm starting to get the hang of this."

Ryuko's lips curled into a smug smirk as she slowly but surely began pushing back the undead captain's nodachi. Bead of sweat trickling down her face at the effort of overwhelming the shinigami's zanpakuto and supernatural strength, she flexed her fingers around the Scissor Blade and snorted, "Ichigo told me all about you shinigami. But there's not a chance in hell I'm going to lose to a samurai wannabe like you!"

There was an imperceptible shift in the captain's emotionless expression at the comment before the atmosphere suddenly doubled in weight. Abruptly twisting her wrist, the sudden motion breaking the surprised teenager's amateurish guard and sending her staggering backwards, the undead shinigami shift her foot and attempted to pierce Ryuko's heart only for the teenager to leap out of the way of her zanpakuto. Writhing darkness clinging to her haori like water as she deftly followed the teenager's movements, the captain spun around the Scissor Blade arcing towards her neck before smashing her foot into Ryuko's bare stomach.

A strangled gasp escaped Ryuko's throat at the strength behind the kick, blood and spittle flying from her mouth as she was sent careening down the street. Her back slamming against the ground as she crashed through several cars before finally managing to regain her balance, Ryuko stabbed the Scissor Blade into the street and winced at the phantom pain rippling through her body. All right, so maybe the bitch was stronger than she first thought. Maybe stronger than Nui Harime. But there was still one key difference between them - her current opponent didn't have freaking regeneration.

Scoffing as she staggered back onto her feet, Ryuko opened her mouth to speak only to freeze when the captain took a single step forward before disappearing in a burst of shunpo she couldn't even follow, "What the -"

Ryuko choked when she felt something slice through the side of her stomach, leaving a large and jagged wound in its wake. Stumbling forward before falling to one knee as a copious amount of blood sprayed through the air, the teenager angrily bit out a curse when she suddenly sensed the captain standing right behind her. Goddamn it, she didn't even see the bitch move! But as she leapt back onto her feet and twisted around, Scissor Blade carving towards the surprised shinigami's back, Ryuko couldn't help but wonder why the hell she hadn't already transformed into Senkou. That much extra power would have made kicking the captain's ass much easier.

"I finally got you!"

Shadowy blood dripped from the Scissor Blade's edge as the captain avoided the second strike and leapt away, the red stain growing across the back of her haori bringing a smug grin to Ryuko's face. She had finally hit the bitch! Spitting on the ground when she felt her own wound rapidly regenerating, skin and flesh knitting flawlessly back together in less than a second, Ryuko rubbed a hand against her face and scoffed, "What's the matter? Didn't that undead freak tell you I could heal?"

"Are you alright, Ryuko?"

Ryuko shrugged her shoulders when Senketsu's worried voice echoed in her mind. Holding the Scissor Blade against her waist, fingers curling tightly around the crimson weapon's curved handle, she glared at her opponent and viciously scowled, "I'm fine. But she's tough, I'll give her that!"

"From her appearance, this woman is most like one of the shinigami Ichigo told us about," the Kamui's multicolored eye remained fixated on the undead captain waiting patiently down the road, the darkness clinging to her haori sending a shiver through his Life Fibers, "Her strength and speed are far greater than any Goku Uniform. Ryuko... we should shift into Senkou before she has a chance to release her zanpakuto!"

When Ichigo explained the basic rundown of shinigami, aside from wearing clothing that went out of fashion centuries ago, he explained that each of them had a special sword called a zanpakuto. While she didn't bother paying attention to the more boring details, especially when Kisuke Urahara started talking, one thing that stuck in her mind was that zanpakuto had two transformations that granted shinigami crazy abilities like illusions and controlling millions of razor sharp flower petals. But Senketsu was right. She couldn't afford wasting any more time.

"I was thinking the exact same thing! So let's hit her hard and fast!" Ryuko swung her arm outwards and grinned maliciously, "Senketsu Sen -"

"Bakudo Number Sixty Three - Sajō Sabaku."

Dozens of shimmering golden chains materialized above the captain as she spoke for the first time since the fight began, her voice echoing with the same disturbing hollowness as her vampire master. Zanpakuto held aloft while she curled several fingers inwards before clenched her hand into a fist, the spiritual chains immediately responding by whipping through the air towards the surprised teenager, the undead shinigami remained silent as the fully incanted Bakudo bound Ryuko's arms against her upper body before proceeding to constrict around her neck and thighs.

"H-Hey!" Forced to let go of the Scissor Blade, the hardened Life Fiber weapon clattering against the street when the chains abruptly tightened, Ryuko struggled against her bindings before indignantly shouting, "What the hell is this?"

Briefly losing her balance and nearly falling onto her ass, courtesy of the golden chains making it rather hard to stand up, Ryuko sputtered out an annoyed curse while her arms flexed in an attempt to break the technique. Whatever the hell the chains are, she thought with growing irritation, they were anything but normal. Gritting her teeth as she shot a venomous glare at the shinigami, Ryuko's eyes widened when she noticed the woman silently reciting something under her breath, her right hand braced firmly against the opposite arm. So that was her plan! The bitch knew she couldn't beat her in a straight fight so she used this stupid technique to hold her down long enough to get in a cheap shot.

Like hell she was just going to stand around and let that happen!

The ruby undertone in her feathery hair brightening as she redoubled her efforts to escape, steam shooting out from her Kamui while minute cracks rapidly began appearing across the ephemeral chains constricting her upper body, Ryuko let out one final defiant shout before the bakudo shattered into its composite spiritual energy. Having just enough time to notice a look of surprise cross the captain's face before she grabbed the fallen Scissor Blade and sprinted away, Ryuko felt a tingling sensation radiate through her body before a torrential burst of electricity tore its way through the exact spot she had just been standing.

Slightly out of breath as she crouched behind an overturned car, the Scissor Blade stabbed deeply into the ground next to her, Ryuko waited for the last vestiges of the captain's attack to dissipate before grimacing, "Alright... so maybe I should I have used Senkou from the start."

"That was too close for comfort, Ryuko," Senketsu's multicolored eye narrowed when he felt Ryuko's heart pounding in her chest. The shinigami's last attack had come far too close to hitting them, the massive amount of energy contained within that lightning blast sending a shiver throughout his Life Fibers. He didn't want to imagine what would have happened if Ryuko hadn't managed to break that strange binding so quickly, "But it seems these shinigami possess abilities other than their zanpakuto."

"No kidding!" Ryuko growled while cautiously peeking out from behind her cover at the captain down the street, a bead of nervous sweat trickling down her cheek, "Ichigo didn't say anything about shinigami using freaking magic!"

Senketsu listened to his wearer vent her frustrations before something troubling came to his mind, "Ryuko, be extremely careful. We have no idea what other tricks this woman has hidden up her sleeves, especially with the possibility of at least sixty more techniques like those last two."

The grating sound of steel crumpling screeched loudly as Ryuko's hand crushed the front fender of the overturned vehicle, "Say what?!"

"Right before we were trapped by that rather... uncomfortable... technique I heard the woman say something strange," Senketsu cautiously explained while repressing the growing urge to shudder. The strange sensation of those glowing ropes against his Life Fibers was not something he would soon forget, "She referred to it by a number - sixty three."

Ryuko glowered in frustration, the unwanted news nearly enough to make her slam a fist against the ground, but quickly perked up and looked over her shoulder when she felt a very familiar sensation. Asphalt shattering as she leapt out from behind her cover moments before the overturned vehicle was pierced by a concentrated beam of electricity, Ryuko dragged her hand against the ground for balance before spinning around and growling. All right, that was it. If the bitch wanted to take potshots, then she needed to stop pulling her punches and hit back with Senketsu's full power. And thanks to the Quincy and the undead bastard, she didn't have to worry about any innocent people.

"I don't give a crap about how many freaking spells you have!"

Her defiant tone reverberated throughout the cramped streets as she noticed an orb of crimson energy rapidly coalescing around the undead shinigami's outstretched palm, the swirling flow of energy causing the woman's face to take on a sinister hue. A stubborn growl escaping her throat as she threw caution to the wind and rushed the captain completely undeterred by the technique's growing power, the ground buckling beneath her heels as blasts of ruby light burst from Senketsu's vents, Ryuko narrowed her eyes when the woman disappeared using shunpo right before the Scissor Blade could slice into her body.

"Because nothing's going to stop me..."

Pivoting around when she sensed the woman standing behind her, Ryuko hefted the Scissor Blade over her shoulder before angrily swinging it downwards against the incoming burst of crimson spiritual energy. A faint trace of a grin pulling on the corners of her mouth when the captain's attack slammed into the Scissor Blade with the force of a large truck before immediately deflecting to either side of her body, torrents of spiritual energy parting like water against the hardened Life Fiber weapon, Ryuko glared at the woman hovering in the air as a massive explosion lit up the surrounding area, "... from kicking your freaking ass!"

The ominous glow from the moon deepened at Ryuko's taunt before the captain began moving her arms. Brown hair waving in the wind as she gathered blue spiritual energy around her extended index fingers, flesh and clothing contorting as crimson eyes blinked into existence upon the writhing shadows composing her undead form, the shinigami's warbling tone echoed across the night, "Ye lord! Mask of blood and flesh, all creation, flutter of wings, ye who bears the name of Man! On the wall of blue flame, inscribe a twin lotus..."

"Oh no you don't!"

Ryuko wasn't about to stand around and let the bitch finish her little chant. Not this time. Feeling Senketsu tightening around her body as she shifted her grip on the Scissor Blade, the hardened Life Fiber weapon rapidly expanding into Decapitation Mode, she snarled and leapt straight towards the captain, "Like hell I'm going to let you finish - "

Time appeared to slow to an unbearable crawl when Ryuko blinked and suddenly found the captain hovering in front of her, white haori fluttering in the breeze while both hands were held inches from her stomach. Her eyes widening in shock as blue light and spiritual energy blended into a cacophony of destruction around the shinigami's hands, the teenager could not react before the woman thrust her arms forward.

"Sōren Sōkatsui."

A massive explosion tore through London as the spiritual energy contained within the high level Hado slammed into Ryuko, the unconstrained deluge of power sending the teenager screaming through the air while everything around her disintegrated into nothingness. Yet the undead captain's expression never wavered as she unsheathed her zanpakuto and gently landed back on the ground. Sandaled feet tapping lightly against the overturned pavement as she slowly stalked towards the fallen teenager, the writhing unholy darkness composing her body growing more prominent with every step, the woman's empty eyes widened when the smoke cleared, revealing a still conscious and incredibly pissed off Ryuko.

Despite the overwhelming power of an incanted Sōren Sōkatsui combined with the spiritual energy possessed by a captain belonging to the first generation of the Gotei 13 hitting her point blank in the stomach, Ryuko could remember several instances where she had felt worse. So what if her body was covered in cuts and bruises, blood rapidly being reabsorbed as her Life Fibers regenerated the damage. And sure, maybe Senketsu was complaining about the tears in his uniform that were already knitting back together good as new. The captain's attack may have taken them off guard, but it sure as hell beat getting her leg shot off by that undead bastard.

Her expression twisted into a defiant glare as she staggered back onto her feet, the extended Scissor Blade glowing faintly in her hands, Ryuko sneered and opened her mouth to curse at the captain only to pause when she felt something odd. She couldn't describe it but she felt, well not stronger, but more full of energy. It was strange. Barely two hours ago she had been exhausted and wishing she could just get some sleep. Now she felt perfectly fine. No, better than that. It didn't make any goddamn sense!

Reading his wearer's turbulent thoughts, Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a nod, "I feel it too, Ryuko. Her last attack damaged us, yes, but it also increased our energy. How odd..."

"You think so?" Ryuko tightened her grip around the Scissor Blade's extended handle as she watched the undead captain slowly raise her arms, pale crimson moonlight reflecting off the zanpakuto clasped firmly in her fingers, and scowled, "But there's no time to think about that now!"

Heels springing forward off the ground the moment she witnessed the captain vanish using shunpo, Ryuko roared passionately as she twisted her upper body and slammed the Scissor Blade against the visibly surprised shinigami's nodachi. Almost immediately an explosion of spiritual energy and twinkling multicolored stars rippled outwards through London, the surrounding darkness torn away as the two combatants viciously struggled to overpower each other. Gritting her teeth as the street behind the captain abruptly shattered, the pavement disintegrating when the power contained within Decapitation Mode was redirected around its intended target, Ryuko shifted her grip on the Scissor Blade before rushing forward, her arms blurring into motion as she furiously exchanged blows with the shinigami.

"Not! So! Freaking! Tough! ARE! YOU?!"

Her voice continuously growing in volume and reaching a crescendo when the captain's zanpakuto broke through her guard and sliced deeply into her neck, bloody spraying through the air before the wound quickly knitted back together, Ryuko snarled as she swung the Scissor Blade against the shinigami's nodachi with enough force to send her skidding backwards several feet. Rubbing a hand against the side of her neck as she angrily spat on the ground, Ryuko growled in annoyance. Damn it! This wasn't working!

"Shō."

A surprised gasp escaped Ryuko's mouth when the Hado collided directly with her stomach, hitting with enough force to push her down the street and away from the captain. Digging her heels into the road as she quickly recovered her balance, the corners of her lips twisting into an embarrassed sneer at being caught off guard, Ryuko froze in bewilderment when a thick black and red miasma of spiritual energy enveloped the captain's increasing shadowed form. Flexing her fingers around her nodachi as she slowly rotated it clockwise in front of her face, hundreds of crimson eyes emerging from the darkness spilling forth from her body, the undead shinigami's expression shifted malevolently as she uttered four simple words.

"Bankai: Rengoku no Kurushimi."

Ryuko couldn't help but take several involuntary steps backwards when an enormous construct of bones violently tore its way free of the ground directly behind the captain, writhing flames and burning shadows coalescing around the bankai as it stretched to its full height of more than one hundred feet. A bone-chilling groan echoing throughout the area when the spiritual construct held up its arms, a phantasmal nodachi wreathed in blue flames and a set of shadowy scales materializing in either clawed hand, the bankai remained still for several long seconds before its head slowly craned downwards at the teenager standing below.

"H-Holy crap..."

Senketsu nearly perfectly shared his wearer's shock at the situation, although he did not agree with her choice of vulgar language. Shivering around Ryuko's body when the bankai's spiritual energy abruptly darkened, he tore his multicolored eye away from the towering construct and stammered in bewilderment, "This is a bankai?"

"Goddamn it," Ryuko ignored the nervous pounding of her heart as she gripped the Scissor Blade. She could literally feel the power radiating from the bankai. It felt, no, was stronger than Junketsu when she took over Satsuki's body back in Karakura Town. Damn it, defeating the bankai would be extremely difficult but like hell was she just going to let the bitch or the undead bastard win.

"Heh... and I thought kicking her ass would be easy!"

A deep crimson aura enveloped Ryuko's body as she glared at the captain, the bead of nervous sweat dripping from her chin ignored. Raising her arm protectively in front of her face when the bankai stepped towards her, the impact shattering the ground, Ryuko narrowed her eyes and stubbornly declared, "This is going to be tough, Senketsu. But like hell will I let some undead bitch beat us! Let's do this! Senketsu Senkou!"

---

...

---

Consciousness returned painfully to Enrico Maxwell as he opened his eyes, the surrounding blur of colors coming back into focus accompanied by a lance of pain shooting through his skull. Several harsh coughs tearing their way from his throat as he gingerly touched the bleeding wound on his forehead, the archbishop grimaced before carefully pushing himself back onto his elbows. He just couldn't understand what happened. The last thing he remembered was witnessing that walking wasteland, that demon in the guise of a man, release the final restraints upon his power, inundating the entire city in his unholy presence, before something tore through the Ninth Crusade's airborne division.

The unrelenting sound of something scratching against the undamaged glass box tore the archbishop from his thoughts. Slowly craning his head upwards, Maxwell let out a strangled gasp at the nightmarish sight of Alucard's familiars converging upon his location. Eyes widening in shock as he fell backwards until he was pressed against the glass wall, terror and fear quickly succumbed to arrogance when he noticed the damned weren't able to get him. Laughing uncontrollably as bloodied fingers and rusted blades scrapped futilely against the box, Maxwell pointed a finger at the horde and exclaimed, "This is hardened tektite compound glass! Not a single one of you foul creatures will even be able to scratch it!"

"That is quite the remarkable boast..."

Maxwell's entire body stiffened at the unexpected response. Tearing his attention away from the shambling undead while twisting around until he was looking over his shoulder, the archbishop felt his blood freeze when he caught sight of a spectacled man calmly sitting on top of a nearby pile of debris. Bloodied fingers clenching tightly as the man slowly began clapping his hands, the incessant mocking sound grating on his nerves, the leader of Iscariot seethed as Quilge Opie leaned forward and smirked, "But it seems your words carry a hint of truth. Why, I don't think Alucard's familiars will be able to penetrate it."

"Y-You!"

The Sternritter's mocking and condescending tone grated relentlessly upon the archbishop's already heavily frayed nerves. Ignoring the pain radiating up his arm as he smashed a fist against the glass barrier, Maxwell furiously gnashed his teeth and shouted, "Quincy! What have you done? What is your BASTARD of a king planning?"

"That is quite the interesting question," Quilge's smirk faded as he calmly adjusted his spectacles, the light from the crimson moon reflecting off the opaque lenses and making them shimmer with a sinister hue. Shaking his head while slowly unsheathing the ornate saber strapped to his waist, the Sternritter's tone contained a dangerous edge as he continued, "But I'm afraid that silence is golden. It would be rather inappropriate if strange ears were to rudely overhear our conversation."

"What are you talking about, you swine?" Maxwell glared impotently at the Quincy with all the hatred he could muster, "What is your heretical king trying to - "

A brief shimmer of blue-white light shone from the Sternritter's saber before a single Heilig Pfeil pierced straight through the tektite glass a few inches from the archbishop's visibly stunned expression. His eyes widening in utter shock when an explosion tore through the night behind him, the wet sensation trailing down his cheek all but forgotten, Maxwell could only watch helplessly as cracks rapidly spread across the glass box before it shattered. Wisps of smoke rising from his weapon as he casually observed the countless undead familiars swarming the newly vulnerable archbishop, Quilge took the time to smooth out a crease in his sleeve before responding.

"Unfortunately your usefulness to His Majesty has ended."

Lazily swinging his saber through the air before sheathing it with an audible click, the Sternritter raised a single finger in front of his mouth as he watched Alucard's familiars drag the archbishop kicking and screaming into the street. It was truly pitiful witnessing the leader of Iscariot behaving in such an ugly and dreadful manner, doubly so considering the man's previously arrogant and barbaric behavior. Nevertheless, it was clear from the Daten that Maxwell's usefulness against Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs had reached its limit. His inability to resist the influence of the Life Fibers wrapped around his neck meant he was a liability to His Majesty, which was quite shameful. The Vatican's resources and artifacts could have been useful in countering that dreadful woman's power.

The wind briefly picking up as nearly a dozen spears perforated Maxwell's body from every direction, the man's bloodied face frozen in an expression of pure agony, Quilge turned to leave only to quickly pause. It was very faint, nearly undetectable, but there was a noticeable disturbance in the ambient spiritual energy. Eyes narrowing beneath his spectacles as he glanced over his shoulder, the corners of his mouth curled upwards when he spotted several rather powerful grenades rapidly falling towards him.

"Oh?"

Flickering out of existence using Hirenkyaku right before the starch grenades bounced off the ground and exploded, Quilge reappeared standing on the edge of a nearby rooftop while calmly brushing a strand of hair from his face. He had to give his ambusher credit for planning such a well-timed attack. Any lesser member of His Majesty's army would have most likely been caught in the fiery inferno.

But he was anything but a simple soldier.

His mouth slowly curling into a shadowed grin when he heard the unmistakable sound of someone rushing across the rooftop directly towards him, Quilge deftly unsheathed his saber before twisting around and easily parrying away the two tailor bayonets aimed at his heart and throat. Sparks of blue energy dancing through the air when he was forced to adjust his footing to prevent an incensed Alexander Anderson's third strike from stabbing through his eye, Quilge locked gazes with the former paladin and stated, "You are quite the dangerous man, Alexander Anderson."

Unperturbed by the furious expression on the nudist commander's face as he fired a single Heilig Pfeil from the edge of his saber, forcing Anderson to leap backwards to avoid getting hit by the spiritual attack, Quilge frowned when he noticed a tear on the sleeve of his uniform. It seemed he had underestimated his opponent's strength to some extent, but he wasn't about to make the same mistake twice. Using two fingers to push his glasses up the bridge of his nose, the Sternritzer turned his attention back to the nudist before raising a hand into the air and exclaiming, "How truly extraordinary!"

Not even His Majesty's Sternritter can escape from Zorin's Täuschung Kaskade without activating Vollständig. Yet you managed to do so through sheer force of will! A remarkable feat, if I may say so myself."

"Bite yer tongue, foul Quincy!"

"Yer false words fall upon deaf ears," Anderson refused to listen to Quilge as he flexed his wrists. Flipping the two bayonets into a reverse grip, he glared venomously at the Quincy and seethed, "For I am a servant of a higher power, set upon the world to cleanse it of monsters and abominations alike."

The battle-torn cassock fluttered around the nudist commander's body as he crossed his arms over his chest, the sinister crimson light from the full moon reflecting ominously off the bayonets clasped tightly in his hands, "So laugh yer annoying laugh, Quincy, for yer plans are already in tatters. The General knows about yer betrayal this night. Ye and yer king will not be able to step foot in Japan without facing the full might of Nudist Beach. But I vow to make sure ye don't live to see that day!"

"Oh my..."

A thoughtful frown pulled at the corners of Quilge's mouth. It was abundantly clear from Anderson's passionate threat against his life that the man was at least partially aware of the Schatten Ausrufung, including His Majesty's plans surrounding Alucard. The only question plaguing the Sternritter's mind was how it came about. Could the nudist commander have somehow read Zorin's mind when she used Täuschung Kaskade? If so, that remarkable and seemingly impossible feat made Anderson a rather dangerous man. In any other instance he would immediately kill the nudist. However, any sort of overreaction on his part might lead to consequences down the line, especially if the man only possessed partial knowledge of their plans.

"Far be it for me to deny the validity of your threat..."

Deliberately trailing off while slowly raising his saber, strands of blue-white spiritual energy branching outwards from the weapon's guard into a facsimile of a bow, Quilge swept his free hand through the air before adding, "But your chances of defeating me are rather slim, wouldn't you agree? You no longer have your associate's grand panzer. The Wild Geese are all but destroyed, thanks to Zorin's efforts. And Seras Victoria is at her master's side. As someone acquainted with Ragyo Kiryuin's plans for humanity, sure you can - "

Quilge paused when half a dozen bayonets launched across the rooftop from the former paladin's outstretched hands. Firing an equal number of Heilig Pfeil from his saber, the arrows intercepting and shattering the incoming projectiles, the Sternritter brushed off his shoulder before continuing in a dangerous tone of voice, "His Majesty has expressed displeasure at the Jahrtausendarmee being forced to fight our allies in Nudist Beach. However, anything that threatens the success of the Schatten Ausrufung must be dealt with promptly. So there is certainly nothing stopping you from attacking me a third time, Alexander Anderson. Other than, of course, falling dead before you can take three steps..."

A tense silence covered the rooftop when it appeared that Anderson would take the Sternritter up on his challenge, freshly summoned tailor bayonets appearing within his fingers in a flash of light. Seething angrily from between clenched teeth as he relaxed his shoulders, the nudist commander allowed his arms to fall listlessly at his side before growling, "Tell me, Quincy . What are ye planning for Alucard?"

"That is a most interesting question."

The corners of Quilge's mouth twisted into a perplexed frown while he sheathed his saber with a small but audible click. Humming as he adjusted his spectacles, the Sternritter turned his back to the nudist commander and added, "You are truly a dangerous man, Alexander Anderson. However! I am afraid my lips are sealed. Silence is golden, after all..."

Vanishing in a burst of nearly silent Hirenkyaku, Quilge barely left before a bayonet sliced through the air and pierced into the roof where he had just been standing. Fingers clenched around his remaining bayonet while growling in frustration, Anderson did not say a single word as he turned his attention towards the street below. A tailor bayonet appearing in his hand as he sprinted across the rooftop before leaping off the side, the nudist commander ignored both the cold bitterness of the late autumn night as well as the constant groans coming from the undead souls below. He knew anytime before this night, before he knew what the Quincy were actually capable of doing, he would have launched himself at Quilge without a moment's hesitation. But his battle against Zorin Blitz at the Hellsing Manor demonstrated what would have happened.

He might have lasted a minute, maybe even two, but the end result would undoubtedly be death.

His boots smashed through the heads of two familiars as he crashed to the ground, crushing their skulls in a spray of blood while alerting the rest of the undead. Spinning around one familiar's attempt to skewer him on the edge of a rusted halberd, Anderson's hands flashed outwards before he began viciously and methodically cutting a large swath through the gathered ranks of undead. Bayonets severing limbs and heads with contemptuous ease, black metal steadily becoming stained with the blood of his enemies, the former paladin's mind remained singularly focused when he found himself facing an armored knight. Ducking underneath the knight's sword before reciprocating by stabbing his bayonets through his open mouth, Anderson grimaced when he came to a halt several feet from the fallen body of Enrico Maxwell.

"This was no way for yer life to end, Maxwell..."

Anderson's tone was full of bitterness and self-loathing as he reached down and tore away the intricate stole wrapped around the archbishop's neck. Clenching his fingers when he felt a familiar tingling in his hand, he swung his arm upwards before cutting the offensive garment to shreds. His eyes narrowing in anger while strands of glowing red Life Fibers floated gently through the air around him, the alien threads visible for only a few seconds before fading away into nothingness, the nudist commander shook his head before kneeling down in front of Maxwell's body. Reaching out and closing the archbishop's unseeing eyes, Anderson muttered a somber pray before venomously declaring, "But I vow to make that monster pay for what she did to ye."

The autumn wind briefly causing his cassock to flutter outwards as he stood back up, Anderson did not turn around when he heard the recognizable sound of a gun cocking behind his head, "I see ye have grown into a formidable woman... Heinkel."

An incomprehensibly long second passed in nearly absolute silence as Heinkel Wolfe kept her customized pistol trained on the back of Anderson's head. Her eyes flickering sideways to Maxwell's limp corpse, the artificial madness plaguing his mind having left him in death, she bit her lower lip before turning her attention back to Anderson and scoffing, "I heard every single word you just said."

"Then ye know Maxwell was not to blame for his actions," Anderson flexed his wrists as he slowly turned around, the tailor bayonets clasped in his hands returning to the seals etched onto his gloves. Seeing the once awkward teenager, who didn't possess the confidence to assert herself without Yumiko's support, had not only developed into a woman but was also Iscariot's finest paladin filled the nudist with both pride and sorrow, "He was being controlled by Life Fibers. The threads were woven throughout his stole, controlling his body like a blasted puppet. In all likelihood he succumbed to their tainted power long before the onset of the battle. If I arrived sooner I could have saved him..."

Heinkel kept her pistol stubbornly locked on the nudist commander even while her expression somewhat softened. Maxwell's sudden and inexplicable bout of madness and insanity, which she initially assumed had resulted from allowing his newfound power to corrupt his mind, had caught the Iscariot expeditionary force off guard. Knowing that their leader had not been in his right state of mind came as a small comfort. But that did not change a damn thing about what she was going to do with Anderson.

"You may have been right about Ragyo Kiryuin being an abomination," Heinkel's mouth twisted into a furious snarl as she stepped closer to Anderson, the muzzle of her pistol aimed squarely between the nudist's eyes, "But you're still a goddamn murderer, Anderson! Did you think the Vatican would forgive you just because you were telling the truth? More than a dozen cardinals died by your damned hands!"

Anderson's expression didn't waver at the accusation, "Ye have every right to kill me for what I've done. My soul is forever stained with the blood of the innocent, cast down by my own hands in a fit of unthinking madness. I fully expect to receive punishment for my crimes, to face the judgment of God and ask for the forgiveness I do not deserve. But I'm afraid that can wait, for there are far more serious matters to deal with at the moment."

It took less than a second for Heinkel to understand what Anderson was implying - Alucard. Despite the overwhelming and nightmarish powers of his army of familiars, the darkness enveloping the city casting the moon in a sinister crimson glow, she knew this was a once in a lifetime opportunity. For the first time in more than a century Alucard was vulnerable to normal anti-vampire weapons. By unleashing the legions of tortured souls trapped within his body, the vampire could finally be slain, forever ridding the world of one of the most evil creatures to ever exist.

Breathing deeply through clenched teeth when something the nudist commander previously stated caught her attention, Heinkel slowly lowered her pistol away from Anderson's face and scowled, "What do you know, Anderson?"

"This entire battle, this rampant slaughter of the innocent, is all one giant smokescreen," Anderson's head whipped to the left when he felt an enormous wave of spiritual energy pulse across London. Even while surrounded by the encroaching darkness there was no mistaking the underlying corruption pervading the energy. It was far too similar to Alucard's power to be anything besides the vampire. But the nudist commander could not shake the feeling of how the dwindling energy reminded him of the shinigami back in Karakura Town.

Suppressing the urge to grimace as a lance of pain radiated from his injured shoulder, Anderson turned back towards Heinkel before gruffly adding, "Everything these Quincy have done, every barbaric act and murder, deals with whatever they're planning for Alucard."

The paladin's mind churned at the implications of what the Quincy could want with Alucard. Vatican reports and documents dating back to World War II showed the vampire and the Hellsing butler fighting against the Nazis in Poland, preventing a very familiar First Lieutenant from creating an army of vampirized soldiers. But the Jahrtausendarmee's exposure as an organization of Quincy hidden in the shadows threw all of that into doubt. The ongoing battle proved that well enough. However, a single disturbing thought continued tingling on the edge of her mind. If Iscariot had been mistaken about Millennium's aspirations for the last sixty years, then what else could they have been wrong about?

Scowling as she twisted away from the nudist commander, Heinkel raised a hand to her ear and announced, "This is Father Wolfe to all surviving paladins. The Ninth Crusade is lost. Maxwell is dead. All paladins unable to bear arms against the undead and Quincy are to fall back to the surrounding countryside and await further orders."

"... are you saying, Heinkel?" Yumiko's Takagi's perplexed question was lost in a sea of static before she asked, "What happened to Maxwell?"

Heinkel momentarily paused as she mulled over the question before calmly replying, "The stole gifted to him by His Holiness had been tainted with Life Fibers. Maxwell's mind was twisted until he was little more than a puppet for Ragyo Kiryuin. According to Anderson, it is likely Maxwell was compromised before arriving in London."

"You found Alexander Anderson!?"

Yumiko's eyes widened while she wrenched her katana free from one of the few vampirized soldiers fortunate enough to escape Alucard's initial rampage. Allowing the corpse to fall limply to the ground as she turned towards her fellow paladins, the variously injured men and women equally shocked at the news about Anderson, Yumiko tightened her grip around her weapon's hilt at the silence coming through the radio, "What are our orders?"

"I'm taking the fight to Alucard," Heinkel ignored the moans and gurgles as she stoically gazed upon the horde of undead souls marching their way towards her, "For the first time in living memory the vampire is in a form that renders him vulnerable to our holy weapons. With the last of his demonic restraints lifted, he has become mortal."

Snorting lightly under her breath when she glimpsed Anderson retreating into the shadows, the nudist's form briefly visible against the crimson moonlight as he effortlessly scaled the side of a building, Heinkel curled her hand into a fist and growled, "Those willing to lay their lives on the line for God, to charge headfirst against the forces of Hell, are to rendezvous one kilometer east of my current location. It's time we ended this once and for all..."

---

...

---

Ichigo's hair whipped around his face as he sped through the skies above London, the surrounding darkness retreating from the twin bursts of blue energy erupting from his transformed legs. Reflexively tightening his grip around Tournesol as he banked sharply to the left and looked down into the darkened streets, the moonlight bathing the shadows in an unnatural crimson pallor, Ichigo frowned when Mugetsu's voice came across loud and clear over the rushing wind, "We're getting close, Ichigo."

"Yeah, I know."

Sensing Alucard's spiritual energy wasn't nearly as difficult as he originally thought. Even across the hundreds of square kilometers composing London the vampire's presence stood out like a bright beacon in the darkness. It almost felt like the bastard was taunting everyone capable of detecting spiritual energy to come directly to his location. But while something like that was worrying enough on its own, Ichigo felt a cold chill creep down his spine for a very different reason.

Alucard seemed far too weak .

It was likely that anyone that survived long enough to witness the overbearing sensation of death and terror that followed in the wake of Alucard releasing his final restraints thought that they were experiencing the vampire's full power. But Ichigo knew that wasn't close to the truth. While the vampire might have unlocked every seal on his power, releasing all the souls he devoured over the centuries under his direct control, it wasn't anywhere close to the strength he possessed during his fight against Ryuko. There was no doubt about it - the vampire was actively suppressing his spiritual energy.

"Damn," Ichigo felt Mugetsu's multicolored eyes swivel towards him and scowled, "The bastard's holding back."

" Holding back?" Confusion laced the Kamui's voice as she stared incredulously at her wearer, "Why would someone like him hold back? Do you think he knows we're coming?"

"I'm not sure," Ichigo didn't know if Alucard could detect spiritual energy like a shinigami. However, he knew the bastard was capable of sensing the Life Fibers woven inside his and Ryuko's bodies. If he managed to track them down when they first arrived in London, hunting them through the rain and lightning, it was more than likely that the vampire would sense him coming from a mile away. But Ichigo refused to let something as trivial as that dissuade him. There was too much at stake to worry about Alucard luring him into a trap.

If he wanted any chance of stopping the vampire before he devoured every soul in London, then he needed to move hard and fast.

" Hmm..." Mugetsu hummed as she turned her unblinking eyes away from Alucard and towards the checkerboard-patterned zeppelin in the distance. A faint growling reverberating through her threads as she sensed several Quincy on board the airship, she huffed and asked, "Are you still planning on fighting Alucard?"

"We might only get one shot at taking him down," Ichigo felt some of Mugetsu's emotions bleed across their connection as the sapphire energy bursting from her twin jets suddenly increased in intensity. He knew enough about Alucard's history, thanks to Yoruichi and Anderson, to realize that the millions of souls trapped in his body was the key to the vampire's power, "If we hit him with a Getsuga Tenshou before he can release his full power, it might be enough to beat him."

Mugetsu frowned in worry at Ichigo's determination before giving the Kamui equivalent of a nod, "Understood! My speed far surpasses anything Senketsu can achieve. Just don't do anything stupid, Ichigo."

"Don't worry, Mugetsu. I know what - "

A massive burst of spiritual energy exploding across the city caused Ichigo to stop midsentence as every muscle in his body stiffened in shock. Twisting around as he abruptly stopped somewhere over the Thames River, the sudden change in momentum causing Mugetsu to briefly complain, Ichigo's eyes widened in astonishment when he focused his senses on the source of the spiritual energy. There was no mistaking it. That was a bankai . But he didn't recognize the captain's spiritual energy in the slightest. While he was curious about the captain's identity, a more important question troubled the former substitute shinigami. How did the Soul Society manage to send a captain to London without anyone, least of all him, noticing?

"Wait... what the hell?"

Ichigo frowned in confusion as the bankai's spiritual energy settled down, allowing him to sense Ryuko practically standing on top of the captain. Hovering in silence when a burst of red light exploded upwards into the midnight sky as Ryuko shifted into Senkou, Ichigo felt his frustration and confusion at the situation growing. It was obvious Ryuko was fighting against the captain and their bankai. But that didn't make any sense. If the Soul Society sent a captain to London, it had to be either to take out Alucard or deal with Millennium and the Quincy. They had the same goals, damn it! So why...

The eerie wind weaving through the darkened city suddenly cut off as Ichigo realized there was something off about the captain. With the initial surprise of seeing the bankai wearing off, he finally managed to get a clear picture of the captain's spiritual energy. And what he sensed was startling. Now he understood why Ryuko seemed so determined to fight the captain. Their power felt just like Alucard's- a seemingly bottomless chasm of darkness lurking just underneath the skin.

Yoruichi had been right. The bastard actually devoured a captain.

Completely ignorant of her wearer's thoughts, Mugetsu's armor briefly rippled around Ichigo's body at the familiar vileness underlying the captain's spiritual energy. That sensation wasn't something she would ever forget. Not after the vampire blew several holes through her pristine uniform. Narrowing her eyes at the strange construct towering over the skyline, she turned to Ichigo and asked, "What is that thing, Ichigo?"

Ichigo blinked at the question before replying, "It's a bankai."

" A bankai?"

Mugetsu was well aware of the term. Her creator and Ichigo had gone into great detail about shinigami and their zanpakuto after retreating from Honnouji Academy in the wake of the Great Culture and Sports Festival. But she never thought she would witness one with her own eyes. She could feel her Life Fibers quivering under the enormous power radiating from the bankai. It was simply incredible that shinigami were capable of matching Ichigo and her full power... and Mugetsu did not like that one bit.

" It seems a lot bigger than what you told me your bankai looked like, Ichigo."

"Well, mine was a little different..."

" This shinigami feels a lot stronger than that annoying Quincy we fought," Mugetsu's eyes narrowed hatefully as she remembered their earlier fight against Bazz-B, the burns and scorch marks his flames created still fresh in her mind. Growling when the enormous bankai suddenly lurched forward faster than she thought possible only for a massive explosion of ruby energy to drive it backwards, the Kamui watched Ryuko temporarily retreat from the construct before bluntly stating, "Humph. Senketsu might actually have difficulty beating something that powerful."

Ichigo tightly clenched his hand into a fist at Mugetsu's comment before twisting around and flying at full speed towards the imposing bankai in the distance, all thoughts of stopping Alucard forgotten, "Ryuko is strong but fighting a bankai isn't something that can be decided by strength alone. There's no telling what abilities the captain's zanpakuto has."

" While I don't have a problem helping Senketsu, if only to show I'm the better Kamui, I feel a strange quivering in my threads," Mugetsu gazed down into the darkened streets as a stray thought passed through her mind, "Alucard absorbs souls by drinking blood, right?"

Ichigo tilted his head around to face one of Mugetsu's eyes, "The bastard tried to pull that stunt against Ryuko, remember?"

" I know," Mugetsu was silent for a moment before adding, "But I can't help but feel we're forgetting something important."

Pulling his attention away from his Kamui when he felt something flicker against the edges of his senses, Ichigo turned back over his shoulder and asked, "Important? Like what?"

" Well..." Mugetsu's multicolored eyes swiveled around on her wings until she was staring at Ichigo, "Alucard's been sent on several missions against Quincy, right? Including one just a few hours ago. So what happened to them?"

A look of startling realization crossing his face at Mugetsu's question, Ichigo barely managed to sense the slight explosion of spiritual energy in the distance before a circular hole was torn clean through his torso. Two pairs of eyes simultaneously widening at the unexpected wound while the abrupt shift in momentum caused him to lurch forward with thick streams of blood spraying through the air, Ichigo had just enough time to wonder what was happening before another dozen similar attacks pierced his body from every conceivable angle and direction. Grimacing when his right leg was severed just above the knee, the limb quickly dispersing into blue Life Fibers, he rapidly descended through the air as he lost his balance before harshly slamming onto a roof.

"Damn it!"

Cursing at the phantom pain as he stabbed Tournesol into the mostly shattered roof and slowly pushed himself back onto his feet, Ichigo didn't bother looking at his already regenerated leg. As his wounds rapidly healed, the circular holes perforating both his body and Mugetsu's armor flawlessly knitting back together, he craned his head upwards and scowled, "What the hell hit us?!"

" I don't know," Mugetsu's normally passive tone carried a hint of anger. She was having difficulty understanding what happened. One second Ichigo was flying towards Ryuko and the next something managed to bypass her uniform, one of the toughest armors on the planet, and tear a hole in his body, "But we should be careful, Ichigo. There's no telling - "

The Kamui's cautious warning quickly devolved into surprised stammering when hundreds of what looked like playing cards suddenly materialized out of nothingness just beyond the edges of the building. Gripping Tournesol tightly with both hands while protectively raising the blade in front of his body when the cards briefly shimmered before they rapidly began rotating in a sphere around them, Ichigo felt a bead of cold sweat trickle down his forehead when he noticed the barrier cleanly slicing through the rooftop.

And it was slowly growing closer.

So this was their plan all along. Whoever he was fighting must have already known his Life Fibers would easily be able to regenerate all the damage from their first attack. They were probably hoping something like this would be enough to overwhelm his regeneration and kill him. But Ichigo wasn't exactly keen on letting that happen. His inability to feel pain and regeneration aside, allowing someone to slice his body to ribbons was at the very bottom of things he wanted to try out before dying.

"Mugetsu Zangetsu!"

Sweeping Tournesol through the air while Mugetsu shifted into her advanced configuration accompanied by a burst of blue stars, Ichigo took a moment to steady his breathing before calmly placing a hand over his right wrist. His eyes narrowing in determination when a thick layer of turbulent energy instantly enveloped the hardened Life Fiber weapon, a pulse of power repelling the shadows as his Life Fibers further synchronized with Mugetsu's, Ichigo bent his knees before vanishing in a burst of speed towards the encroaching whirlwind of razor sharp cards.

Gritting his teeth when the several tears appeared on Mugetsu's armor, Ichigo swung Tournesol vertically downwards through the air while shouting, "Getsuga Tenshou!"

A crescent of sapphire light erupted outwards into the surrounding midnight skies as the massive amount of energy contained within Tournesol exploded against the swirling tide of razor sharp cards. For just a moment the technique appeared to resist Ichigo's attack, the hardened Life Fiber weapon shaking as it slowly pushed forward, before something audibly shattered and everything began disintegrating. The thousands of microscopic blades composing the Getsuga Tenshou simultaneously struck at every card within range, tearing them apart in a wave of power before detonating and completely shattering the technique.

"Alright... now where did he go?"

Ichigo scowled as he stared across the darkened landscape. Whoever ambushed him was good... but not good enough to deal with Mugetsu's power. It had taken a little more effort than he anticipated but their Getsuga Tenshou easily destroyed the technique. Half-listening to his Kamui comment on the burning remnants of cards falling like confetti through the air, Ichigo stiffened when he felt a powerful spiritual energy suddenly appear behind him. Eyes widening upon seeing a man dressed similarly to Bazz-B standing on the opposite end of the roof loudly snap his fingers, Ichigo barely had time to notice the ground shaking before a veritable storm of card tore upwards through the building beneath his feet.

Tendrils of darkness spread out from beneath Tubalcain Alhambra as the former Sternritter reached up and gripped his fedora moments before an intense burst of wind tore across the roof. Glowing eyes staring into the thick plume of smoke while the shadows replacing his left leg below the knee writhed chaotically, the undead Quincy's emotionless façade twisted into an annoyed frown when the dust cleared, exposing a mostly unscathed Ichigo.

"I get it now."

The sound of footsteps echoed softly across the roof as Ichigo emerged from the dissipating smoke looking little worse for wear, the only sign of Alhambra's vicious attack being the glowing cuts and abrasions covering Mugetsu's armor that were already knitting back together. Frowning thoughtfully while listening to his Kamui express her annoyance and hatred of the Quincy for daring to damage her uniform, Ichigo propped Tournesol against his shoulder and continued, "I'm going to take a wild guess. Alucard absorbed your soul after you lost to the bastard, didn't he? It's why your spiritual energy feels almost like his... and how your cards cut through Mugetsu."

Ichigo quickly removed Tournesol from his shoulder when Alhambra's posture suddenly shifted and he swept his arms forward, sending a maelstrom of cards spiraling through the air towards him. A faint sapphire light covering the hardened Life Fiber weapon as it became little more than a blur, slicing through each and every one of the Sternritter's cards, Ichigo's tone didn't waver as he added, "You Quincy don't deal well with Life Fibers... but Alucard doesn't have that problem."

A brief disturbance in the surrounding spiritual energy caused Ichigo to stiffen before he instinctively twisted his body sideways, the all-penetrating bullet aimed at the junction of his neck missing him by only a few inches. Twin jets of blue energy violently blasting from Mugetsu's armor as he watched the attack continue through the building across the street, he shifted his balance before rapidly rushing across the roof towards Alhambra. That last sneak attack confirmed his growing suspicions. He was fighting against not one but two undead Quincy, which complicated everything. He needed to defeat this guy before his friend took another potshot or worse - decided to team up against him.

Using Mugetsu's superior speed to easily overwhelm Alhambra's efforts to evade his attack, Ichigo swung Tournesol at the former Sternritter's arm only to frown in mild confusion when he felt the blade momentarily meet with heavy resistance. Choosing not to follow the undead Quincy when he retreated using Hirenkyaku, droplets of shadowed blood dripping onto the roof, Ichigo turned around and stared at the bleeding gash on Alhambra's arm before commenting, "So... you can use Blut Vene."

Thanks to the mysterious and baffling friendship between his old man and Uryu's dad, which only came to light after the Great Culture and Sports Festival, Ichigo had a pretty good understanding of most Quincy abilities. While most of the techniques used by Bazz-B and the rest of the Sternritter still didn't make a lot of sense, especially when compared to what Uryu bragged he could do, Ichigo grimaced as he recognized the brief resistance he felt before Tournesol cut into Alhambra's arm. There was no question about it - thanks to Alucard the Sternritter's Blut Vene worked against Life Fibers.

That was going to make things a little difficult.

" Ichigo..." Mugetsu's tone was tense as she narrowed her eyes in annoyance at the undead Quincy hovering above them. Although the Kamui still had the strong urge to shudder in disgust at the writhing shadows composing Alhambra's form, her full attention was completely focused on how he was floating in the air, "How is he floating?"

"It's something most Quincy and shinigami can do," Ichigo explained offhandedly, his attention firmly locked on Alhambra.

" Could we do something like that?"

The innocuous question momentarily threw Ichigo off balance. Why hadn't he tried air walking while wearing Mugetsu? It hadn't been all that difficult to learn back when he was a shinigami. Kisuke's torture disguised as training had made damn sure of that. He certainly had enough spiritual energy to relearn the technique. The only question was whether the same principles applied since his body was made entirely of Life Fibers. And, to be perfectly honest, he was annoyingly frustrating having to fight opponents that could float. While Mugetsu's flight configuration could cover large distances faster than shunpo and Hirenkyaku, it wasn't all that useful when fighting someone that could simply stand in the air.

"I don't see why not," Ichigo scowled when Rip Van Winkle slowly emerged from the shadows in front of him, a faint smirk pulling at the edges of her mouth as she stood opposite of Alhambra on the roof. Tightening his grip around Tournesol as he was forced to split his attention between the undead Quincy, Ichigo narrowed his eyes and warned, "Get ready, Mugetsu. It looks like Ryuko and Senketsu will have to wait just a little longer..."

---

...

---

"Damn it!"

A small burst of superheated steam erupted from Senketsu's ventilation grills as Ryuko sat with her back pressed firmly against the partially destroyed dividing wall, her chest steadily rising and falling with every frustrated breath. Blue eyes sweeping angrily across the most destroyed office while her fingers expertly reached for the transformed Scissor Blade lying on the glass-covered marble tiles next to her leg, Ryuko waited until the hardened Life Fiber weapon was firmly in her grip before cursing under her breath. Five minutes. Five whole freaking minutes! She fought the captain and her stupidly broken bankai for five minutes before things went to hell. God damn it! That stupid Hat-and-Clogs wasn't kidding when he said a shinigami's bankai was their ultimate trump card.

Normally she wouldn't care if someone released the 'absolute pinnacle of their strength' besides wondering how to use Senketsu's power to kick their ass. There were enough of those morons back at Honnouji Academy. But how the hell was she supposed to fight something that can turn anything into ash just by freaking looking at it?

Ryuko grimaced before smashing her fist against the ground hard enough that her knuckles left a visible indent in the marble tiles. The Scissor Blade gripped tightly in her hand as she cautiously leaned out from behind the wall, the line of shattered windows across the office bathing everything a deep crimson light, Ryuko narrowed her eyes when she saw the fiery visage of the captain's bankai only a few streets away. Quickly ducking back behind the wall when the skeletal giant's head shifted subtly in the darkness, the teenager waited several seconds before letting out an angry snort.

There was not a chance in hell she was going to allow the stupid bankai to get another good look at her. Watching her arm literally disintegrate into ash was not something she wanted to experience a second time. Even if it didn't hurt and her Life Fibers regenerated the damage just as quickly, having something like that happen against was not at the top of her list.

Pushing herself into a kneeling position while her high heels scrapped against the floor, Ryuko felt the ruby undertone in her hair brighten as she turned towards Senketsu's single eye and grumbled, "Alright, so maybe attacking that thing head on wasn't such a good idea. But what else was I supposed to do?"

Senketsu stared unblinkingly at Ryuko for several seconds before replying, "I warned you it was a bad idea attacking the captain without a plan, Ryuko."

"I'm sorry, alright?"

Ryuko hastily turned away from her Kamui in mild embarrassment when she felt his worry and concern bleeding across their synchronized connection. She should have known better than to ignore Senketsu's sensible warning and attack the bankai like a damn idiot. Had she learned nothing from Honnouji Academy and fighting the undead bastard? She didn't even make it halfway to the bankai before an unsettling blood-red light shone from its empty eye sockets and most of her right arm, besides the Scissor Blade, exploded into a fine mist of ash. If not for her inherently strong regeneration and Senketsu instinctively shifting into Shippu before the bankai could attack a second time she might have been killed.

Running a hand through her dual-toned hair as the stiff autumn wind caused goose bumps to break out across her exposed stomach, Ryuko glowered thoughtfully before the corners of her mouth curled into a smug grin, "Heh... but I think I figured out the secret of her bankai. It can't do shit if it can't see us!"

" Yes, I noticed that as well," Senketsu gave his best impression of an excited node as his multicolored eye swiveled away from the bankai and towards Ryuko, "We should be fine as long as we avoid the bankai's gaze. Still... we should be extremely careful. We don't know what other abilities it might have."

"It's already freaking overpowered!" Ryuko shouted angrily while waving her right arm through the air, "What else does it need to do? It already turns everything it sees into ash!"

" I'm not so sure about that," Senketsu could feel his wearer's annoyance and confusion bleed across their connection as he briefly paused before continuing, "It was brief, but when the bankai attacked I noticed an intense heat coming from inside your right arm. Instead of simply turning everything it sees into ash, I think the bankai actually causes whatever it looks at to ignite and burn until nothing remains but ash."

Ryuko grumbled under her breath at Senketsu's answer. Knowing how the bankai turned her arm into ash was great and all, but it didn't get her any closer to coming up with a plan to beat it. And as much as she wanted to retreat and get reinforcements, preferably Ichigo since he already dealt with shit like this, Ryuko knew that was out of the question. There would be no telling what sort of evil or sadistic bullshit the undead captain would pull if she tried running away. Not to mention Ichigo had own problems. It had been brief, nearly forgotten after watching her arm dissolve into a fine cloud of ash, but she felt Ichigo and Mugetsu fighting at least two Quincy.

Dragging him into her fight wouldn't help anyone.

The shattered glass covering the floor crackled loudly under Ryuko's heels as she stabbed the Scissor Blade into the ground and stood up. One hand gripping the wall as she chanced another glance at the bankai in the distance, Ryuko huffed angrily before narrowing her eyes and scowling, "So the bitch thinks her bankai is unstoppable, right? Fine! Let's see how she feels after we hit it with Niban Genkai!"

Senketsu immediately felt a worrisome chill course through his threads at that declaration, an act that wasn't missed by his wearer, "Ryuko, do you remember what happened the last time we tried using Niban Genkai?"

"Yeah... but thanks to the vampire bastard and Millennium there aren't any people left to get hurt," Ryuko tightly clenched her free hand into a fist upon remembering all the millions of people lying dead throughout the city, "Besides, I don't think we have much of - "

Whatever Ryuko was about to say died on the tip of her tongue when everything around them simply disintegrated . In the split second it took the teenager to understand what the hell was happening the building began loudly collapsing as several floors and thousands of pounds of concrete and steel sublimed directly into ash, the air instantly growing thick under a cloud of the superheated material. Gritting her teeth as she rushed forward and nearly lost her balance, courtesy of both the collapsing building and the captain's bankai causing part of her left leg to evaporate, Ryuko vaulted over what was left of a table before leaping through one of the broken windows and out into the night.

For a moment she could feel nothing besides the superheated ash enveloping her body, the normally lethal boiling temperatures not so much as uncomfortable against her skin, before she left the expanding cloud of ash and slammed into the bitterly cold autumn night. Her breath coming out in visible wisps as she continued freefalling towards the ground, bursts of ruby light shimmering from within the parts of her body that were simply gone, Ryuko mentally shifted Senketsu into Shippu before twisting around and blasting vertically down the street away from the collapsing building.

"What the hell?"

Ryuko's bewildered exclamation could clearly be heard despite the fact nearly half of her throat had been caught within the bankai's effects. Banking sharply to the left while ignoring the sensation of her Life Fibers flawlessly knitting together the normally lethal wounds, Ryuko glared in the direction she knew the bankai was waiting and snarled, "It didn't even freaking see us!"

" It might have known where we were all along," Senketsu couldn't help but briefly ripple around Ryuko's body at the unsettling sensation of feeling parts of his uniform disintegrate only to quickly regenerate a few seconds later, "We weren't exactly subtle when we crashed into the building, Ryuko."

"I didn't exactly have many options!"

Sparks danced off the edge of the Scissor Blade as Ryuko flew close enough to the ground for the weapon to scrape against the asphalt. Her face twisting into an annoyed scowl as she abruptly leaned backwards and came to a quick stop, the street melting slightly under the constant deluge of energy erupting from her transformed legs, Ryuko turned around towards the bankai hidden just beyond the roofline and spat, "Fine! If the bitch wants to play dirty than I guess we'll just have to take her out instead!"

" Ryuko..."

"I already know what you're going to say, Senketsu," Ryuko growled lightly under her breath as she felt, rather than heard, the Kamui's growing concern for her safety through their synchronized connection. Fingers tightening around the Scissor Blade as she easily hefted the transformed weapon into the air, a deep crimson aura flickering around her body, Ryuko stared straight into Senketsu's multicolored eye and declared, "Do you remember what Yoruichi told us about the undead bastard? I don't think this bitch has been alive for a long freaking time. So as far as I'm concerned we're just finishing the - "

Ryuko gasped indignantly when she felt something suddenly clasp around Senketsu's wing and awkwardly pull her towards the ground. Growling furiously as she was slammed face-first into the pavement, a brief shimmer of ruby light surrounding her body as Senketsu automatically shifted out of Shippu, Ryuko spat on the ground before angrily pushing herself back onto her feet. All these surprise attacks and blatantly bullshit abilities were really starting to piss her off! Senketsu's heels clicking softly as she glanced around the suspiciously deserted street, the faint droning sound pressing against her ears ignored in favor of finding whoever attacked her, Ryuko never noticed the shadows rippling under her feet. Blue eyes widened when the darkness erupted upwards, thick trails of blood sprayed through the air as writhing maws of solidified darkness pierced Senketsu's armor and latched onto her arms and legs.

"Hey! Get the hell off of me!"

As the seconds passed it rapidly dawned on the teenager that despite her best efforts, and Senketsu's power, she wouldn't be able to tear her way free from the eldritch familiars biting deeply into her body. Thinking quickly when she noticed the writhing shadows growing thicker, the crimson hue of the full moon dimming as oozing streams of darkness flowed forth from the surrounding buildings, Ryuko flipped the Scissor Blade around and attempted to sever the shadows entrapping her right arm. When that failed to work, the unholy substance parting like water as the hardened Life Fiber weapon cut through it, she cursed loudly and profusely before redoubling her efforts to escape.

" Ryuko!" Several bursts of steam erupted from Senketsu's ventilation grills as the Kamui desperately tried to help Ryuko escape, his armor fearfully rippling at the vile shadows, "I can't break free!"

"There's no way I'm getting caught by that bastard a second time!" Memories of her recent unpleasant journey into the heart of Alucard's undead army flashed through Ryuko's mind as a turbulent ruby aura exploded from her body, "So screw that! Senketsu Senkou!"

For a brief moment it appeared as if the increased strength from Senkou would be enough to tear apart the surrounding darkness. Blood and visceral violently spraying through the air as she tore her ensnared left arm free, brilliant ruby light shining from the jagged wound before it quickly knitted back together, Ryuko reached over and tightly clenched her fingers around the familiar latched onto her other arm only to pause when she felt a chill race down her spine. Jets of steam escaping from Senketsu in quick succession as she gazed upwards, every muscle in Ryuko's body froze when she noticed hundreds of familiar eyes imposing themselves upon the miasma of darkness oozing down the surrounding buildings.

"You've got to be kidding me..."

Shocked eyes widening when the low droning in the background devolved into a full-blown cacophony of the damned, Ryuko could only scream as her body quickly began dissolving into ash.

---

...

---

"God damn it..."

Heinkel Wolfe ignored the pain rampaging through her heavily burnt right arm as the last masked demon faded away into oblivion. Breathing heavily while blistered fingers twitched around her pistol, the paladin grimaced as she looked at the damaged flesh underneath the tattered remains of her sleeve. It was surprising that her regeneration couldn't easily repair the damage sustained in her battle against the vampire. But that was the least of her concerns. She was lucky the larvatum diabolus's aim had been so terrible.

Several more inches to the left and that blasphemous emerald blast would have taken her arm off entirely.

Roughly tearing away the remains of her sleeve, the burn fabric flaking apart in her fingers, Heinkel stiffened and glanced over her shoulder when she heard Yumiko shouting loudly in her native tongue. Her straw-blond hair rustling in the wind while she watched her friend carve a path of destruction through the undead ranks while the rest of the paladins stood unyielding against the relentless tide of familiars, she tensely exhaled through clenched teeth before turning her full ire upon the vampire standing before her.

Even in the darkness she could still make out the amused and sadistic grin stretched across his pale face.

"You stand before me... I'm impressed."

Shadows clung viciously to the ancient vampire's overcoat as he gazed passionately at the paladin from his perch upon the pile of metal and shattered concrete, blood pooling around his boots from innumerable impaled corpses. Leaning forward when Heinkel made no move to confront him, to continue their dance until only one of them remained, Alucard placed a hand over his heart and mockingly asked, "What's wrong, Iscariot? Your goal is nearly within reach. Don't tell me that pathetic creature wore you down. Your arm is only damaged, muscle and sinew still intact."

The vampire's manic smirk widened as he briefly paused, hints of insanity tearing at the edges of his face, before his crimson eyes widened, "Are you going to give up... to die like a dog... when victory is so near at hand?"

"... shut the hell up, vampire."

Heinkel scowled angrily at the vampire as the pistol in her right hand, the metal cracked and warped from the previous battle, slipped from her fingers and clattered to the ground. She wasn't Alucard's damn entertainment. Her only mission was to bring about an end to the vampire's eternal reign of terror and bloodshed, to destroy Alucard when he was at his most vulnerable. Reaching into her cassock while Alucard's condescending grin grew even wider, Heinkel narrowed her eyes and sneered, "You are a plague! A blight that will never cease consuming souls until there is nothing left! If you are not destroyed then all of humanity is doomed! I am prepared to do whatever it takes to see you destroyed, vampire!"

A deafening silence blanketed the city as the paladin extracted a thin wood box from her cassock, glowing blue seals etched onto every visible surface. His amused grin transforming into a disgusted frown at the energy radiating from within the confines of the box, Alucard's voice grew progressively more sinister as his eyes narrowed, "What is that ?"

The sudden shift of the vampire's tone threw the paladin off balance. Standing firm while the darkness surrounding Alucard grew thicker, shadows expanding along the ground while a crimson aura enveloped his body, Heinkel ignored the increasing heaviness of the air. Her fingers clenching into the box as she raised it above her head, the seals rapidly unraveling, her face twisted into a grimace before she smashed the box against her knee and grasped the obtained once contained within.

"It's been centuries since I've seen one of those things..." Alucard stared at the artifact clenched within Wolfe's fingers with an expression of absolute loathing, "The Nail of Helena."

The hatred and disgust in the vampire's voice drew the undivided attention of those still fighting when the unrelenting flood of undead familiars dissolved into shadows. Ignoring the other humans muttering incessantly in the background as he stared at the Nail of Helena held foolishly in Wolfe's hand, Alucard scoffed derisively, "The Shroud of Turin... the Holy Grail... the Lance of Longinus... should I assume you are threatening to use the last of the so-called holy artifacts of Rome against me?"

So it seemed even an unrepentant monster like Alucard could sense the power of miracle permeating the holy artifact. Nervous fingers curled tightly around the Nail of Helena as she pointed the artifact at her heart, Heinkel glared into the ancient vampire's widening eyes before exclaiming, "Yumiko! Retreat as far away from here as possible! I don't want you -"

"Wolfe, stop it!"

Alucard's desperate plea caught Heinkel by surprise, causing her to involuntarily relax her grip on the Nail of Helena, "Do you know what that thing will do to you? I have witnessed firsthand what happens to those that use such things in the name of God! You'll become nothing more than an unthinking monster! Devoid of humanity and reason! Don't succumb to power! Retain your humanity! Even if by some miracle that thing allows you to defeat me... will it be worth it... if you become nothing more than a monster in the end?"

A solemn wind blew through the deserted streets as the vampire king's expression fell, the manic look in his eyes fading away alongside the crimson aura, "This fated battle between us... would you really push it this far... into the realms beyond mortality? A monster such as myself... a pathetic creature of such weakness that I could not bear the weight of a human life... who threw away his very soul for power... if I am to ever be defeated, it must be by a human! Don't do it, Wolfe. Don't become a monster... a monster like me..."

For a moment Heinkel truly considered listening to the vampire's strangely desperate pleas before steeling her nerves, "I wish I could have defeated you with my own two hands... but it's become clear that no matter how hard I try, I'll never be able to kill you. Do not think this is about power, vampire. I am fully aware of what this artifact will do to me... of what it will transform my body into... but I am a member of Iscariot! It is our sacred duty to lay down our lives for the sake of God! To rid the world of heathens and monsters! If the price to save humanity is to become a monster... then so be it."

Ignoring Alucard's final attempt to dissuade her from her current path, Heinkel breathed deeply and prepared to plunge the Nail of Helena into her heart only to be forcibly prevented when a bayonet pierced straight through her hand. Blood dripping onto the ground as the sudden shock caused her to let go of the nail, the holy artifact clattering twice before rolling to a stop, Heinkel's eyes widened in disbelief when Alexander Anderson landed in front of her. Grunting as she pulled out the bayonet, the wound hissing shut, she opened her mouth to speak only for the former paladin to turn around and punch her square in the jaw.

"Yer still the same idiot girl as always! Never thinking about the damned consequences when ye go off and do something foolish!"

Carefully picking up the discarded Nail of Helena as Heinkel staggered backwards with blood spewing from her mouth, Anderson took one look at the holy artifact before throwing it away. He couldn't believe the damn girl was foolish enough to even attempt using such a thing. The holy artifacts of Rome weren't toys! Green eyes narrowing furiously as he turned his back on the highly intrigued Alucard, Anderson's voice was dangerously stoic when he spoke, "The vampire was right about one thing - only a human can kill a monster."

"I've spent years fighting against a terrible monster... tracking her minions and servants in order to slaughter them. But never did I give into the temptation to use the abhorrent power of Life Fibers," Anderson angrily bared his teeth as he reached out and grabbed the still recovering Heinkel by the front of her cassock, "Ragyo Kiryuin and that blonde demon are far worse monsters than Alucard! So what stupid reason do ye have for throwing away yer humanity?!"

Heinkel stammered at the older man's words before regaining her composure and shouting back, "God damn it, Anderson! What the hell are you doing here?!"

"Alexander Anderson..."

The pressure relentlessly pressing down upon their shoulders vanished as the vampire stared at the nudist commander, his deathly pale face twisting into an expression of amusement and deranged respect, "You are quite the remarkable man. Any ordinary human would have long succumbed to such debilitating wounds... their flesh bleeding out within minutes."

Anderson growled at the vampire's unwanted praise. Two tailor bayonets flashing into existence within his hands as he harshly released Heinkel's cassock and turned around, he narrowed his eyes at Alucard and exclaimed, "I don't care for yer damn praise, vampire. But tell me something - how many shinigami did ye devour?"

Faint laughter broke the silence that followed Anderson's question as Alucard slowly descended the pile of rubble, his boots echoing with each deliberate step he took towards the two humans. Baring his teeth slightly in amusement at the rapidly changing situation, the vampire's face was hidden in shadows when he finally stopped chuckling and answered, "Only one... but she was the strongest out of those three fools four hundred years ago. But captain or not, shinigami are nothing more than spirits in the guise of humans... pathetic monsters attempting to replicate humanity. They could never have hoped to kill a monster such as myself."

"However..." Alucard tauntingly trailed off when he stepped onto the street, the shadows warping around his body before he continued in an amused tone, "That particular captain's bankai was quite interesting. A powerful ability meant to utterly crush and destroy one's enemies. It should be amusing to see how that monster girl deals with such lethality..."

The wind gusting through the streets suddenly picked up as Anderson's eyes widened in realization at the vampire's comment. Chuckling when he noticed the bayonets in the nudist commander's hands shaking out of anger, Alucard's grin grew increasingly deranged as he stomped to a halt, "Do you intend to fight me, Alexander Anderson? With such debilitating wounds it's only a matter of time before you bleed out and die. Do you foolishly believe that a human such as yourself... a normal man possessing neither regeneration or special abilities... has any hope of defeating a monster in your present condition?"

"I don't think I will defeat ye vampire..." Anderson's tone brooked no arguments as he crossed the tailor bayonets in front of his body, "I know it."

A surprised gasp escaped the vampire's mouth, lips curling into a mirthful grin as anticipation coursed through his black heart. The certainty in which Anderson believed he possessed the ability to kill him momentarily startled the vampire. For several seconds silence reigned across the street, the monotonous lack of noise broken only by a faint muttering and scoff from Heinkel as she pulled out her remaining pistol, before Alucard threw his head backwards and began laughing madly. Yes! This was it! His fangs glistening in the moonlight as he leaned forward, the sound of his psychotic laughter causing the two humans to tense, the vampire king manically exclaimed, "YES! You are a man worthy of respect, Alexander Anderson! A pinnacle of humanity that reminds me of that man from one hundred years ago! So come! Fight alongside your protégé... your successor... and attempt to pierce my heart with your bayonets!"

The sound of rapid footsteps immediately followed Alucard's insane proclamation before Yumiko landed into a tight crouch on Anderson's right, her dark eyes staring furiously at the vampire while she flicked blood off her katana. Shifting her attention momentarily to the nudist commander, the paladin scoffed and growled, "Don't think this changes a damn thing, Anderson. Once we deal with Alucard I'm taking you back to the Vatican."

The former paladin nodded at Yumiko before grimacing, "Once the vampire and Ragyo Kiryuin are destroyed... their bodies buried deep beneath the earth... I will gladly surrender to ye and face judgment for my crimes."

"God damn it," Heinkel cursed lightly as she removed her damaged glasses, the lenses badly cracked and frame bent. Never in her wildest dreams did the notion of fighting alongside Anderson, one of the worst traitors in the Vatican's history, cross her mind, "Can you even fight in your condition, Anderson?"

"I've fought far worse than vampires for over a decade in worse condition," Anderson replied, his eyes narrowed when the darkness composing Alucard's true form shifted. Clenching his fingers tightly around the tailor bayonets, the former paladin loudly exclaimed, "A few wounds won't slow me down! Now get ready - he's coming!"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales [Alternate Weave #1 - Ryuko]

Ryuko knew something was seriously messed up when she opened her eyes just seconds before harshly slamming into the ground. Biting back a string of curses as she picked herself off the ground, the taste of copper momentarily filling her mouth, Ryuko rubbed a hand against the back of her neck and growled, "What the hell just happened?"

"Are you all right, Ryuko?"

Senketsu's comforting voice reverberating inside her mind instantly snapped Ryuko out of her confused stupor. The last thing she could remember before smashing face-first into the ground was that bitch's bankai somehow sneaking up on them, which didn't make any sense. How could something over one hundred feet tall sneak up on anything? Growling as she pushed that thought to the back of her mind and looked around for the captain, all but certain the shinigami would try another cheap trick, Ryuko's eyes widened in astonishment upon noticing she wasn't in London but Osaka.

And it was still on freaking fire.

"What the hell? How did we get to Osaka?" Ryuko whipped her head back and forth in confusion, the noticeable absence of the Scissor Blade not a priority at the moment, "Where's that shinigami bitch?!"

" What are you talking about, Ryuko?"

Senketsu felt worry course through his threads about Ryuko. Her behavior after regaining consciousness was different yet he couldn't detect any issues with her body. Both her blood pressure and heart rate were perfectly normal. In fact, there was absolutely nothing wrong with her - no injuries or anything. Swiveling his multicolored eye towards Ryuko's face, the Kamui asked, "And what's a shinigami?"

The honesty of her Kamui's question threw Ryuko off balance, causing the teenager to involuntarily raise her voice, "What are you talking about? We were just fighting her a minute ago! You literally just warned me about her bankai's ability to turn shit into ash... including my freaking arm!"

" I do not recall saying such a thing," Senketsu was almost certain Ryuko was suffering from a concussion. Tightening protective around her body, a hint of confusion bleeding across their connection at the lack of any head injuries, the Kamui gave his best impression of a frown before adding, "Furthermore, such an ability would undoubtedly be lethal. If we had been hit but such an attack, you would still be missing your arm."

"Hold on! Don't tell me you - "

The intimately familiar echo of a high heel clicking arrogantly against the ground cut Ryuko off before she could finish the question. A cold feeling coursing through her body as she slowly turned around, several large and violent explosions dotting the fiery inferno of a landscape, Ryuko felt her breath hitch when she saw Satsuki standing directly behind her with Junketsu in her activated configuration, "Satsuki?"

"It is clear from your confusion that you finally grasp the futility of your actions, Matoi," Satsuki's condescending voice pierced through the crackling conflagration as she continued marching towards Ryuko, Bakuzan clasped tightly in her right hand, "But even so, you shall meet your end here in Osaka!"

As Satsuki slowly strutted across the desolate landscape, completely confident in her assured victory over those that would defy her, the only thoughts passing through Ryuko's mind were about what the hell was happening. Her sister's behavior didn't make any sense! It was almost as if she went back in time to when Satsuki was still a total bitch! But cliché shit like that only happens in bad movies and books. Mouth twisting into a snarling frown when she noticed Bakuzan in Satsuki's hand, which she was pretty damn sure was shattered by Ragyo, she bit her lower lip and growled, "Is that right? But I have a question for you, Satsuki! Where's Ichigo?"

Satsuki's brow creased into a suspicious frown at Matoi's behavior. The Ryuko Matoi she knew, that she was molding into the perfect weapon to use against her mother, was prone to fits of childish anger and rage. Allowing her emotions to dictate her actions instead of tempering her mind. Yet the teenager standing before her seemed more annoyed by some inane trivial nonsense than their ongoing battle, when not two minutes ago Matoi had rudely proclaimed the notion of defeating her. Flexing her fingers around Bakuzan's hilt as she raised the blade to her shoulder, Satsuki's voice remained perfectly stoic, "Your words fall on deaf ears, Matoi. The name Ichigo means nothing to me!"

Heels exploding off the ground as she rushed forward with Bakuzan slicing dangerously through the air, Satsuki's focused eyes widened in disbelief when Matoi appeared to casually lean out of her blade's path. That was impossible. Even with her increased synchronization, brought about by the Grand Couturier's actions and the Tri-City Schools Raid Trip, there was no explanation for Matoi's new speed and reaction time. It brought everything Inumuta gathered about Senketsu's capabilities into question. Gritting her teeth at the implications of such knowledge, Satsuki attempted to follow through with a strike to the solar plexus only for Matoi to nonchalantly dodge it at the very last second.

It was almost as if she were fighting against the Grand Couturier.

"Damn it! This doesn't make any sense!"

Ryuko's already worsening scowl deepened as she continued avoiding her sister's attacks, the black hardened Life Fiber weapon passing inches away from her body. Since when was Satsuki this damn slow? Increasingly frustrated by the situation, Ryuko reached out and harshly grabbed her sister's wrist before shouting, "I'm not going to ask again. Where the hell are Ichigo and Mugetsu?"

"Still you persist with this nonsense?" Satsuki demanded as she ripped her arm free of Matoi's grasp, an act that required a tremendous amount of strength. Ignoring the slight tingle of pain in wrist, the muscles undoubtedly bruised despite Junketsu's defensive capabilities, she pointed Bakuzan at her opponent's throat and sneered, "And what is this... Mugetsu? Is that the name of yet another Kamui created by your late father?"

That settled it. Something was seriously messed up. There was no way Satsuki wouldn't remember they had the same dad. Her sister's mind was like a steel trap. She never forgot a damn thing. Her hands tightly clenching into fists as realization dawned upon her, Ryuko didn't bother moving out of the way when Satsuki rushed forward and slammed Bakuzan's hilt squarely into her bare stomach. Barely flinching as the accompanying release of power exploded through the ruins behind her, Ryuko's eyes were cast in shadow as she swung her arm forward and punched Satsuki squarely in the face.

A twinge of guilt tore at her heart when she saw her sister stagger backwards, blood spewing from her mouth. Damn it, was she really that much stronger than this Satsuki? A love tap like that would have barely even fazed the sister she knew. Steeling her nerves as she walked towards the recovering Student Council President, Ryuko snorted derisively and folded her arms, "I get it now. So let me just get this off my chest - this whole freaking plan of yours ain't going to work!"

Satsuki wiped away the trail of blood leaking from the corner of her mouth before responding, "Do you believe you possess the ability to best me, Matoi? I may not know how your power increased in such a short amount of time but it will not be enough to derail my ambitions!"

Ryuko didn't bother waiting for Satsuki to make the next move before she stepped forward and promptly vanished in a burst of speed. Reappearing not a second later already standing several inches away from her sister, she scoffed angrily before reaching out and once more grabbing Satsuki's wrist, "Stopping you is damn important but that's not what I meant! So listen up, Satsuki Kiryuin, because I'm only going to say this once! Your stupid academy is not nearly enough to take down that rainbow bitch!"

A cold chill raced down Satsuki's spine at the comment, "How do you _."

"Know about your dear old mom?" Ryuko let go of Satsuki's arm and stepped backwards, "Does it really matter?"

"I suppose not," the tension draining from her body when Matoi showed no further indications of hostility, Satsuki ignored Gamagori's worried exclamations in the background as she sheathed Bakuzan, "You seem quite sure of yourself, Matoi. Therefore let us assume that you speak the truth, that your words carry validity. How would you deal with my mother if she were, in fact, the person you so callously claim her to be?"

As Ryuko opened her mouth she was blindsided when Mako slid into view right next to her, a familiar red blade hugged tightly against her chest, "Um... Ryuko? You dropped this."

Awkwardly but sincerely thanking Mako for returning the Scissor Blade, her friend happy at being able to help, Ryuko nearly fell onto her ass when everything began shaking before a massive explosion rocked the city. Pivoting around when a pink figure came soaring out of the ruins accompanied by a burst of explosions, she glared at Nonon Jakuzure as the pink haired girl cheerfully saluted Satsuki, "And that is that! I destroyed the Nudist Beach as per your orders, Lady Satsuki!"

And that was another checkmark on her growing list of things that proved she was somehow in an alternate, crazy universe. There was not a chance in hell Jakuzure would have stood a chance against the Nudist Beach she knew, especially when led by Olivier Armstrong who could destroy a Three-Star Goku Uniform with her bare hands. Not to mention Jakuzure was in her Symphony Regalia Mark II, which Ryuko clearly remembered Ichigo nearly destroyed while that nudist bastard went after Senketsu.

"At last we have delivered the deathblow to the fools who dared oppose us! And with Nudist Beach destroyed the objective of our raid trip has been accomplished!"

A brilliant backdrop of pure white light enveloped Satsuki as she calmly leapt upwards and onto the back of a waiting helicopter. Ignoring the blood still oozing from the corner of her mouth, the young Kiryuin locked gazes with Ryuko before sneering, "I'm still waiting for your answer, Mato!"

"I'm not going to beat around the bush with some vague answer bullshit!" Ryuko pointed the Scissor Blade at her sister and exclaimed, "Your bitch of a mother has Life Fibers woven inside her freaking body! You won't be able to kill her with just Bakuzan!"

For a brief second a genuinely surprised and slightly fearful expression crossed Satsuki's face before it was quickly extinguished, "I have no idea what you are talking about but it would be wise to keep your pathetic delusions to yourself, Mato. And do not let your new found power go to your head. For the next time we meet shall be our last!"

Ryuko was silent as Satsuki and her forces retreated from Osaka, her face a mask of stoicism. As the last traces of Honnouji Academy vanished into the surrounding conflagration, she collapsed onto her knees and cursed loudly to the heavens, "God... fucking... damn it!"

Mako clasped her hands against her cheeks in shock at Ryuko's choice of language, "Oh my gosh! Did Lady Satsuki hurt you, Ryuko?"

"Mako!"

Desperately grabbing her friend's shoulders, Ryuko's voice cracked as she asked, "Does the name Ichigo ring a bell?"

"Hmm... nope!" Closing her eyes as she answered, Mako missed the crestfallen expression on Ryuko's face, "Why? Are they someone important?"

Senketsu's worried voice echoing in the recesses of her mind when she noticed Mikisugi and Tsumugu, both men naked as the day they were born, Ryuko could barely muster up the energy to whisper as the full weight of her situation became apparent, "Yeah... he was pretty damn important..."

Zu der Nacht des Krieges

I do apologize for how long this chapter took. More than two months... that's how long it's been since Chapter 49 was posted. But given that this chapter is a rather pivotal moment for my story (it's also my 50 chapter!) I wanted to make sure it was perfect. This is the climax of the Hellsing Arc, where everything comes together. A lot of your theories, some of which you PM'd me, were wrong. Some of you were correct, so please accept a heartfelt congratulations for guessing correctly.

So I really don't have anything else to say besides acknowledging that this is Chapter 50... posted on the eve of To My Death I Fight's second anniversary. So I want to thank all of you, my faithful readers, who've continued reading this story over the course of its evolution. Now, some of the earlier chapters were a bit... rough... but as my writing's improved I've gone back and fixed them. Applying what I've learned and making them better. The entirety of Chapter 11 is a rather good example. Most of it was rewritten, the quality brought up several orders of magnitude.

But enough about that! You came here to read the chapter. So I hope you enjoy it!

---

...

---

Chapter 50 - Zu der Nacht des Krieges

Hushed voices filled the Deus Ex Machina's command center as soldats, some beginning to sweat profusely, constantly relayed data to their superiors. With Zorin Blitz's advanced battalion obliterated, the London force decimated and Alucard's familiars rampaging through the city, the data able to be gathered was severely limited. In less than an hour what had been an assured victory had turned into a massacre. As explosions continued echoed in the background, causing the zeppelin to momentarily list sideways, the Major stared at the wall of screens stretching before him and smiled in complete satisfaction.

"This night is simply full of surprises."

The stout Sternritter's yellow eyes gleamed with dark exhilaration when the familiar visage of Alexander Anderson suddenly appeared on the screens. Watching in veiled amusement as the nudist commander prevented Heinkel Wolfe from using the Nail of Helena against Alucard, the vampire's expressions cycling through a myriad of emotions, the Major leaned backwards and pondered the situation. It would seem he had grossly underestimated the man's tenacity and determination. Alexander Anderson was quite the spanner in the works. He had anticipated with great excitement Heinkel Wolfe using one of the Vatican's many artifacts to even the playing field against the vampire. Turning her flesh and blood into that of a monster.

But for a man like Alexander Anderson to directly confront Alucard while injured, slipping through the vampire's innumerable army of undead souls to prevent someone seeking his death from using a dangerous artifact? The irony of the situation brought an excited smile to the Major's face. Everything he had planned, decades of constant backbreaking work to achieve His Majesty's vision, had been thrown to the side. Scattered like leaves in the wind from a single man's actions!

Yet it made no difference to the Schatten Ausrufung.

Calmly drinking his tea while a soldat updated him on the newest daten transmitted from the battlefield, the vampirized soldier nearly out of breath by the time he finished, the Major didn't react when the secured doors to the command center slammed open and a bloodied Bazz-B angrily marched into the room.

"Oh dear..." the Doktor's pleased expression vanished as he turned away from the live feed displayed on the monitor. His trained eyes quickly deducing the extent of the Sternritter's injuries, he shook his head and sighed, "It would appear you took His Majesty's orders to delay Ichigo Kurosaki a bit too literally."

The condescending tone in the Doktor's voice, the way his fellow Quincy shook his head in disappointment, irritated the hell out of Bazz-B. Rudely brushing aside the blonde haired man when he attempted to examine his injuries more carefully, the pain from aggravating his wounds worth seeing the annoyed expression on the Doktor's face, Bazz-B frowned and stomped to a halt when he found the Captain barring his path. He should have expected the mute bastard doing something like this. Narrowing his eyes when the Sternritter didn't say anything, Bazz-B looked at the bandages wrapped around the Captain's left arm and grinned, "Heh... was Ryuko Matoi too much for you, Hans?"

Hans Günsche, otherwise known as the Captain, pulled his officer's cap further down over his eyes before responding with a flurry of hand signs. Scoffing at the silent man's sarcastic answer, Bazz-B didn't say anything as he stormed around the Sternritter. There was just no point in arguing with the guy. His mouth twisting into a frustrated sneer when his attention was drawn to the live feed of Alucard laughing insanely on the screens in front of him, Bazz-B spat and turned to the Major, "I don't know why you're watching this crap. They don't stand a chance against that monster."

"One mustn't deny the tenacity, the sheer determination to win at any personal cost, that our friend in Nudist Beach possesses."

The image of a grinning Alucard disappeared when the Major pressed a button on the remote in his hand. Sweeping an arm through the air when the shadowed silhouette of Alexander Anderson and the two paladins from Iscariot took the vampire's place, the stout Sternritter grinned proudly, "Years of resisting the tyrannical rule of Ragyo Kiryuin, of countering that illustrious woman's desire to cover the world in Life Fibers, have ingrained in Alexander Anderson's mind a singular notion. To destroy... to utterly decimate... any threat to humanity no matter the cost!"

Clenching his hand tightly into a fist as the events unfolding within the ruins of downtown London continued along their unexpected path, the Major's grin widened even as Bazz-B frowned, "A truly laudable goal. One worthy of admiration! Yet it is virtually impossible to kill Alucard! Greater beings have tried and failed, fallen at the might of that pathetic being rampaging below. But watching these humans struggle to overcome that indomitable monster, pushing tirelessly against the threads of fate to achieve victory in an otherwise hopeless battle? My pulse quickens in anticipation just imagining it!"

Bazz-B couldn't help but scoff at the Major's grandiose speech. Cocking his head slightly to the side as his attention was fully drawn to the battle erupting across the wall of monitors in front of him, the Sternritter frowned in confusion. He couldn't understand what the hell was going on. Alucard was supposed to be an all-powerful monster on the same level of His Majesty. Someone that scared even a bitch like Ragyo Kiryuin. So how were these humans fighting the bastard on relatively equal grounds? It didn't make any damn sense!

As he snorted in annoyance at the smug expression on the Major's face, Bazz-B's attempt to retort was cut off when one of the vampirized soldiers turned away from their station and shouted, "Sir! We're picking up a massive spiritual energy! Its speed is nearly eighty kilometers per hour and is heading directly towards us!"

A curious silence fell across the room as the video on the wall of monitors shifted from Alucard to a darkened figure soaring through the skies over London. It was incredibly obvious to the Sternritter what, or rather who, was flying towards them. With Integra Hellsing's arms tightly gripping her shoulders for support while tendrils of fiery shadows writhed through the air, Seras Victoria's crimson eyes shone ominously in the darkness right before she vanished off camera.

"At her current speed she will intercept the Deus Ex Machina's course in just over four minutes! What are your orders, sir?!"

"Orders, you say?"

There was no mistaking the veiled amusement in the Major's voice, "We will do nothing . The fraulein and her pet shall board without opposition. Do not bother trying to stop them."

It warmed the Sternritter's heart to witness everything falling neatly into position. And all it took to draw Integra Hellsing's complete and undivided attention away from Alucard was nothing more than a simple aerial bombardment of their location. A pointless strike against such targets but nevertheless effective at achieving results. While it had cost the Deus Ex Machina the last of her armaments, rendering them vulnerable to counterattack, it was well worth the cost. There was just one small thing to consider.

"Oh dear... it would seem our guests are intent on making quite a mess of things," the Major's yellow eyes were visible behind his glasses as he leaned backwards in the chair, the cup of tea slowly cooling at his side forgotten, "Perhaps we should consider, Doktor, preparing to shift operations?"

"Yes, of course."

The Doktor nervously bit his finger hard enough to stain the glove crimson as he replied. Even with assistance it would take an exorbitant amount of time cataloging and transferring every last piece of daten within his laboratory. Under the best conditions it would take nearly half an hour to complete the process, which didn't take into account the undead monster currently approaching them. Not to mention the arduous and dangerous process of unsealing SHI, which he could not do on his own!

"But I'm afraid such strict conditions will require that I prioritize specific daten," the Doktor's mouth twisted into a displeased grimace at the mere thought of having to leave even a single piece of the research he spent nearly a century collecting behind. It was unthinkable to a man of science such as himself! Yet there was no other viable course of action. Sighing dejectedly at the situation, the Doktor adjusted his multi-lensed spectacles as he turned to leave, "Also... it will be impossible for me to unravel the seals around SHI and prepare it for transport."

"I shall go with you."

The articulated voice of Walter C. Dornez drew the Doktor's attention when the newly ascended Sternritter slowly emerged from the shadows, the abrupt shift in lighting causing his monocle to shimmer as he calmly adjusted his white fingerless gloves, "The seals require the input of one of His Majesty's Sternritter, do they not? Therefore you will require my aid in preparing to transport SHI back to the Silbern."

"HA! What a load of bull!"

Intense blue flames licked the ground around Bazz-B's feet while his mocking laughter filled the chamber, "Do you think anyone here believes that excuse?! You just want to go with the Doc because you're afraid of meeting your old 'master!'"

Bazz-B quickly stopped laughing when several razor sharp wires composed of spiritual energy materialized around his throat. The flames emerging from his body growing in intensity at the unprovoked attack from a fellow Sternritter, Bazz-B scoffed and reluctantly relaxed his guard when Walter flexed his fingers and dismissed the threads, "Integra Hellsing is not my master. My loyalty lies with His Majesty and no other. It would be wise to remember that... Bazzard Black."

The blue flames surrounding Bazz-B writhed at the condescending expression on Walter's face before dying down once the Sternritter left the room with the Doktor. It pissed him off that the bastard acted so high and mighty just because His Majesty decided to award him for seventy years of undercover service. Frowning in thought when he noticed Hans shaking his head, Bazz-B was about to ask the mute bastard what the hell he was suggesting when the Major stood up and proudly stared at the wall of monitors.

"Gentlemen... it would seem our work is nearly complete."

There was no mistaking the pride in the Major's voice as he spoke, his yellow eyes enraptured with the climatic battle raging in the ruined city below, "The stage is set... the pieces are in place... and Alucard remains blissfully unaware. The memories he stole from our comrades useless! I do believe congratulations are in order. Your role in the Schatten Ausrufung, of distracting those two children, has guaranteed our success! Now... I must insist that you both leave before Integra Hellsing and her pet arrive."

"I am the fraulein's sole objective, the archenemy that she must destroy at all costs!"

With a dramatic flourish gesture the Major turned his back on the image of Alucard and exclaimed, "The antithesis to her organization, representing everything she stands against. She believes with every last fiber of her soul that my death is the solution to her problem. Anything that threatens to get in her way will be ripped apart by her pet! Torn to shreds by that monster in the guise of a young woman!"

The Captain's stoic expression briefly shifted at the Major's passionate declaration. Pulling the white officer's cap firmly over his eyes while communicating rapidly via sign language with his other hand, he remained completely silent when his fellow Sternritter chuckled in response, "Your assistance is most appreciated, Hans, but we must not underestimate Seras Victoria at any cost! We are no longer dealing with a vampire holding onto the dissolving threads of her humanity, clinging to that which she will never recover! Nonsense! This is a creature far more dangerous to us than either Ryuko Matoi or Ichigo Kurosaki!"

His glasses shimmering opaquely as he pressed a button on the remote in his hand, the live feed on the screens instantly shifting to a combination of Ichigo and Ryuko's current fights against Alucard's familiars, the Major grinned, "These children, whose existences border on the edge of madness, possess bodies and weaponry that render our techniques useless. We would not stand a chance against either of them if they were so inclined... yet that is their weakness! For all their power they are unable to take a life! How disgustingly ironic! That those touched by that filthy creature... their bodies composed of naught but Life Fibers... value the existence of a human life to such an extent!

"Seras Victoria... on the other hand... does not have that problem."

Clasping his hands against the small of his back when blaring sirens filled the command center, a soldier frantically warning him that Integra Hellsing and Seras Victoria were thirty seconds away, the Major chuckled and turned to Bazz-B, "She possesses the necessary drive to slaughter us! To rip our bodies apart and devour our souls! We can look no further than our fallen comrade for proof of Seras Victoria's power! For within her twisted souls rests a piece of Alucard's very essence, a power so dark and inhuman that Zorin could not hope to win! Attempting to stop such a creature would be an exercise in futility."

As Hans nodded and turned to leave, Bazz-B snorting under his breath before following him a few seconds later, the Major sat back down and smirked. It always filled his heart when everything fell into place. Of course, one could never account for every variable. But it was far too late for Integra Hellsing or her pet vampire to stop the Schatten Ausrufung. For the Walpurgis Dawn was nearly upon them and nothing, not even his death, could stop it.

---

...

---

Ryuko Matoi panted heavily as she knelt in the middle of the street, beads of sweat freely trickling down her face. Glaring venomously at the bankai looming just beyond the skyline, she angrily spat on the ground before reaching for the Scissor Blade impaled next to her foot.

"God damn it!"

Ignoring the crimson light shining from within the depths of her body as her left hand finished knitting back together, Ryuko experimentally flexed her newly woven fingers into a fist and seethed angrily. This captain was a real pain in the ass! Nothing she tried against the bitch freaking worked! Her high heels sliding against the cracked asphalt as she slowly stood back on her feet, Ryuko spat to the side and sneered, "You got any ideas, Senketsu? Because we're going to freaking die if we don't figure out a way to beat that thing!"

"Calm down, Ryuko. Getting angry causes your blood to taste exceptionally sour," Senketsu ignored the resulting indignant curse from his wearer as he narrowed his single eye and glanced upwards, "But I'm afraid I don't have any ideas. This bankai is completely different from anything we've ever faced. More importantly, I can sense from your heart rate and blood pressure that you are growing tired and exhausted."

"Gee, thanks for the help!" Ryuko scoffed irritably at her Kamui's response, "But it's not like I wanted to get into a freaking fight at two in the morning!"

While forced to fight in the early hours of the morning was one of the reasons she wanted nothing more than to pound the shinigami's face into a bloody pulp, it wasn't why she was so freaking pissed. No, the main source of her growing anger was that she couldn't hide from the bitch's stupid bankai. Every time she tried to lay low and figure out a way to beat the thing, the undead bastard sent his shadow creatures to pin her down and let the captain get in a free shot. It was annoying as hell! Pursing her lips into a tight grimace as she reined in her irritation, the ruby undertone in her hair dimming in the process, Ryuko took a deep breath and steeled her nerves.

She couldn't keep running forever. And hiding was out of the question. Whether she liked it or not, and she really didn't like it, she needed to attack the captain directly. Which meant willingly throwing herself against that overpowered thing. Just one thing bothered her.

There was no question in her mind that the captain's bankai was overpowered. That was the only word Ryuko felt that accurately described something that turned everything into ash with only a glance. At the beginning of this stupid fight that thing needed only to make eye contact for a single second to dissolve whatever unlucky part of her body and Senketsu it locked onto before their regeneration fixed the damage. But something changed. She didn't know if it was because the bitch never fought someone that could recover after having half their body turned into ash or not, but the last couple of attacks had been rather pathetic.

" We should move, Ryuko."

Blinking when Senketsu's concerned voice derailed her train of thought, Ryuko looked into her Kamui's single eye as he warned, "The longer we stay here the more likely Alucard will send his familiars after us."

"Don't remind me."

Ryuko didn't show the slightest trace of strain as she hefted the Scissor Blade onto her shoulder, the transformed hardened Life Fiber weapon resting between her neck and Senketsu's armor. While beating the crap out of the captain was her number one priority at the moment she couldn't forget about the undead bastard. He was up to something. She could literally feel it. So the sooner she kicked the bitch's ass, the quicker she could meet up with Ichigo and take down the vampire once and for all.

As the sound of her heels clicking lightly against the pavement echoed off the nearby buildings, disturbing the deathly silence and causing the encompassing darkness to ripple, Ryuko carefully glanced around before leaning over and whispering, "Hey Senketsu, did you notice the bankai getting weaker?"

That question caused the Kamui to quickly divert his attention towards his wearer, "Yes... I noticed something odd after our last escape."

Ryuko subconsciously flexed her newly regenerated hand at Senketsu's comment. She didn't want to think about the second time the undead bastard pinned them down. Feeling his familiars tearing into her body while the shinigami took potshots was not something she enjoyed. A fierce grin breaking out across her face when an idea came to mind, Ryuko pulled the Scissor Blade off her shoulder and chuckled, "Heh... I figured it out, Senketsu. This stupid bankai is probably a one shot deal! Which means soon it won't be strong enough to stop us from destroying it!"

Senketsu's multicolored eye narrowed while an uneasy sensation rippled through his threads. Weakened or not, directly attacking the captain's bankai was dangerous. The only reason Ryuko hadn't yet died was because of her innate Life Fiber regeneration. And even that seemed to be gradually slowing down. It was foolish to charge headfirst against something so strong without a strategy. Yet despite his reservations the Kamui could feel Ryuko's determination bleeding across the synchronized connection, her desire to win overriding the fear causing her fingers to shake.

She believed their combined power was enough to defeat the shinigami. And with everything on the line, from Ichigo and Mugetsu to the innocent people still trapped in the city, the Kamui couldn't help but feel the same way.

" Very well then!" Senketsu shouted passionately as a burst of steam escaping from his form, "Let's show this thing our true power, Ryuko!"

A vicious smirk stretched across Ryuko's face as she bent her knees and leapt straight into the air, the force from her ascent shattering the surrounding landscape. Pushing off the edge of a rooftop with her heel right before a burst of crimson light enveloped her body, Senketsu seamlessly shifting into Shippu without a word, Ryuko tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade when the bankai turned around and unleashed an unearthly groan. So this thing was already waiting for her, huh? Well, that's just what she wanted! Spinning tightly through the air as thin trails of superheated ash sublimed directly from her body, Ryuko twisted sideways and angled down into a nearby street before chuckling.

"It looks like I was right, Senketsu," Ryuko ignored the not-so-subtle crimson glow from her Life Fibers as the eldritch threads repaired the relatively minor damage to her body, flesh and armor knitting back to perfection in a matter of seconds, "That thing really is getting weaker!"

Frowning as she quickly banked sideways almost enough for Senketsu's wing to scrape against the building to her left when the skeletal colossus's burning nodachi suddenly cleaved through the air, the phantasmal weapon crumpling the building behind her in a titanic explosion of fire and darkness, Ryuko looked over her shoulder and snarled. Like hell she would let something like that stop her! Grimacing in determination as she blasted upwards into the darkness of the night, trails of burning ash leaving her body as she continued flying higher and higher into the sky, Ryuko took a deep breath before shifting from Shippu into Senkou, the noises from the ruined city fading as she raised the Scissor Blade over her head.

Within seconds a vibrant crimson aura surrounded her body as the Life Fiber weapon was enveloped in a turbulent maelstrom of energy, the black and red lines covering the blade glowing brightly. Clenching her fingers tightly around the Scissor Blade as both her and Senketsu's Life Fibers synchronized with the weapon, the blade vanishing beneath the intense energy surrounding it, Ryuko shouted over the rushing wind, "Hey bitch! I've got something for you! NIBAN GENKAI!"

A burst of superheated steam blasted out of Senketsu's ventilation grills as Ryuko swung the Scissor Blade and everything simply vanished in crimson light.

Her eyes nearly forced shut as the chaotic energy enveloping the Scissor Blade temporarily turned night into day, bathing nearly half the city in a brilliant red light, Ryuko didn't react when gravity reasserted its unrelenting authority. Breathing heavily as the maelstrom of power flickered and quickly faded away, allowing her to view the nearly half a kilometer long trench cutting through the heart of London, Ryuko grimaced and refused to think about anyone that might have been trapped waiting for help that would never come.

This was why she had been so nervous about using Niban Genkai against the captain, especially with the Scissor Blade in Decapitation Mode. If it weren't for Ichigo's dad deflecting the technique with his freakish strength back in Karakura Town a lot of people could have died. Innocent people. Maybe even some of her friends. All because she had been too stupid to stop for a moment and think about the consequences of using something so obviously dangerous in the middle of a city. But thanks to the vampire bastard she didn't have to worry about any innocent people getting caught in the crossfire.

She hoped.

Grimacing tiredly as she freefell towards the earth, Senketsu shifting out of Senkou in a flash of crimson stars, Ryuko's eyes widened in shock when the charred visage of the bankai emerged from smoke. For a nightmarishly long second she watched as the skeletal construct reached towards her with its boney fingers, an unholy light blazing in its empty eyes, only for it to disintegrate feet from her body. Sighing in relief while Senketsu's concerned voice echoed within her mind, Ryuko never noticed the rapidly approaching ground before she crashed into it headfirst.

"Alright... that wasn't the best landing..."

Ryuko groaned as she opened her eyes. She hadn't expected Niban Genkai to use nearly all of her remaining energy. It painfully brought to mind the first time she used the technique against Sanageyama back at Honnouji Academy. But then again, she had pushed all of Senketsu's power into that attack just to make sure the bitch didn't survive. If she learned one thing from Satsuki's school it was that overkill was only a matter of perspective. Leaning on the Scissor Blade for support as she slowly picked herself off the ground and grimly saw the trail of destruction caused by her technique, Ryuko tried to take a step forward only to stumble when a wave of exhaustion hit her Damn it! She hadn't felt this tired since fighting Junketsu! Constantly regenerating must have really taken a toll on her body!

"It looks like that did the trick, Senketsu," Ryuko's mouth curled into a tired but proud grin as she watched the last trace of the bankai disintegrate, "I guess even a freaking shinigami couldn't do squat against our power!"

" Yes... but I feel lightheaded, Ryuko. The world won't stop spinning," Senketsu's multicolored eye swiveled dizzily around, "I think I might need more of your blood."

Ryuko gave a mocking snort at her Kamui's impetuous tone, "Hey, I thought you didn't need much blood anymore?"

" That is correct. However using Niban Genkai used up most of the blood stored in my threads."

Senketsu's eye narrowed in thought as he drank Ryuko's blood, the nourishing liquid filling his threads with energy. It was strange absorbing Ryuko's blood like this, especially when the initial donation from the Seki Tekko was usually more than enough to sustain him for hours, "I should be fine in a few minutes. But more importantly, that was rather reckless. You should be more cautious in the future, Ryuko."

"It's not like you were coming up with anything better."

Ryuko rolled her eyes and sighed when Senketsu bristled at the lighthearted comment. Giving her partner a reassuring smile while apologizing, Ryuko turned away from the smoke-filled trench and frowned. She could have sworn she felt Ichigo and Mugetsu's energy, which probably meant they were wrapping things up. Rubbing the back of her neck while stifling a yawn, the exhaustion plaguing her body already fading, any thoughts she had about tracking down Ichigo were brought to a violent halt when a bloodstained nodachi was thrust through her heart, skewering her from back to front.

"What... the... hell?"

Blood trailed down Ryuko's stomach in thick rivulets as she limply collapsed to her knees, a breathless gasp leaving her mouth as she stared at the zanpakuto impaled through her body with shaking eyes. When did the bitch get behind her? How the hell did she survive? Coughing harshly as she looked over her shoulder into the captain's dead and soulless eyes, the lower half of her body replaced with fiery darkness that constantly writhed and shifted, Ryuko lurched forward when the shinigami twisted her zanpakuto. Flecks of blood leaving her mouth when the captain began slowly removing her nodachi, Ryuko's expression of agony suddenly vanished as she reached up and grasped the blade stabbed through her heart.

"Did you forget?"

Ryuko ignored the zanpakuto cutting deeply into her fingers as she grinned, "I ain't exactly a normal human!"

A burst of crimson light pierced through the night as Ryuko twisted her impaled body around and swung the Scissor Blade. For a brief moment a look of genuine surprise crossed the undead captain's face at the sudden attack before her trained muscles automatically reacted. Fingers letting go of the zanpakuto impaled through the teenager while her knees tensed in preparation to use shunpo, the shinigami was caught off guard when the hardened Life Fiber weapon transformed mid-swing, extending back into Decapitation Mode and severing her head in one fell swoop. Blood oozing onto the ground as the captain's body dissipated into tendrils of fiery darkness while the nodachi stabbed through her heart slowly shattered like glass, Ryuko bit her lower lip and coughed.

"Freaking bitch!"

Collapsing onto her back with a dull thud as the copious amount of blood coating the surrounding street transformed into Life Fibers, returning to her body while the normally lethal wound on her chest knitted shut slower than usual, Ryuko watched the last traces of the captain's zanpakuto vanish before grinning. She did it. She finally freaking did it! She kicked the ass of someone strong as hell without relying on anybody else. No Ichigo or Ururu save her at the last minute. She did it all by herself! The only way this moment could have been even better was if she didn't feel like she was just run over by a truck.

"Damn it..." Panting heavily as Senketsu returned to his normal uniform, Ryuko stared at the crimson moon hovering in the sky, "I can't move."

" T-The world is spinning again, Ryuko."

Senketsu's multicolored eye swiveled around dizzily before closing. Fighting the captain must have taken more out of him than he originally thought if Ryuko's nourishing blood was no longer helping. Even they couldn't keep regenerating forever. His lapels and sleeves fluttering briefly as he tried mustering the energy to move only to fail, Senketsu quickly gave up and sighed tiredly, "I-I don't think I'll be able to transform anymore..."

The Scissor Blade slipped from Ryuko's fingers as she listened to Senketsu. She really wanted to kick the vampire bastard's ass, maybe break into that stupid zeppelin along the way, but she had literally nothing left. It was taking everything she had to not fall unconscious. Closing her eyes as the bitter autumn wind caressed her face, Senketsu apologizing for being unable to help her, Ryuko sighed in exhaustion. She didn't like it but right now she had to leave it to Ichigo and Mugetsu to finish the fight.

She just hoped nothing bad happened to them.

---

...

---

Pieces of loose asphalt stung harshly against Yumiko Takagi's bruised face as she violently stabbed her katana into the middle of the street.

Her strained fingers reflexively tightening around the hilt of the reinforced blessed weapon as it punctured through the asphalt like water, the repugnant smell of burning rubber filling the air as her boots scrapped against the ground, the paladin ignored the pain radiating up her legs when she finally managed to arrest her momentum. She couldn't remember the last time she felt this exhausted. Every muscle in her body screamed in protest. But she refused to let the vampire survive the night. Narrowed eyes glaring from within the shadows of her black hair, a thin trail of blood oozing down her face, Yumiko gnashed her teeth before blasting back down the street.

Tucking the faintly shimmering katana firmly against her waist as she approached the waiting Alucard, his tattered cape billowing in the bitter wind while his antediluvian broadsword reflected the crimson light from the full moon, Yumiko waited until she saw the amused glint in the undead creature's eyes before suddenly pivoting sharply on one foot. With a sharp metallic ringing reminiscent of cold steel her tightly coiled right arm exploded forth like a spring, flickers of blue light lagging behind the blessed weapon as it carved through the air faster than the speed of sound.

For a brief moment Yumiko was certain she finally managed to overwhelm Alucard's defense. But when her blade was less than an inch from his body, the supernaturally sharp edge poised to slice between the plates of his armor, she stiffened when he suddenly dispersed into shadows.

"What the hell?"

Yumiko was snapped back to reality when an increasingly familiar chill raced down her spine. Throwing herself forward right before Alucard's broadsword brutally cleaved her body in half from shoulder to hip, one hand planted firmly against the pavement as she spun around mid-flip, she barely glimpsed the burst of energy exploding from the vampire's weapon when it slammed into the ground before she was sent flying backwards through the air. Darkness tinting the edges of her vision as she painfully bounced several times off the ground before rolling to a stop, Yumiko's eyes widened when she staggered back onto her feet only to witness Alucard descending rapidly through the air, his face twisted into an expression of sadistic insanity as he swung his weapon at her neck.

The bitter wind tearing through the city lessened as the paladin realized avoiding Alucard's strike would be impossible, which left her with only one course of action. Off hand braced firmly against the sharpened blade of her katana as she raised it above her head, Yumiko tensed when the vampire's sword smashed into her weapon with enough force to nearly shatter the pavement underneath her feet.

From the moment her blade clashed against the vampire's in a shower of sparks it took every last scrap of willpower Yumiko possessed to not grimace at the pain radiating down her left arm. Forcing the excruciating pain to the back of her mind while she struggled against Alucard's advantageous strength, katana visibly shaking as her muscles screamed in protest, she gritted her teeth before abruptly pulling away. Immediately twisting to the side as her guard collapsed, Yumiko bent her knees and leapt backwards before Alucard's broadsword could carve into her body.

"Your skill is quite formidable, Iscariot."

Alucard's heavily accented voiced betrayed his growing admiration for the paladin as her labored breathing was replaced with stubborn determination. It was truly magnificent to find such a worthy adversary on this most meaningful of nights. Brutally pulling his broadsword out of the ground in a shower of debris while his mouth curled into an approving smirk at the intensity of the paladin's expression, Alucard did not hesitate as he rushed forward to once again meet the human in battle. Their blades clashing until only one was left standing!

He wasn't even halfway before the rapid stomping of boots against the ground drew his attention.

Crimson eyes narrowing while he shifted his weight forward, Alucard nimbly spun around the tailor bayonets clasped within Alexander Anderson's hands. The pavement crumpling underneath his boots as he avoiding the nudist's second attack before proceeding to counter with a thrust to the heart, the vampire's expression grew increasingly exhilarated when the human detonated a smoke grenade, vanishing into the expanding mist and barely avoiding getting skewered.

"Impressive, Alexander Anderson."

Respect permeated the vampire's words as the acrid smoke left in Anderson's tactical retreat covered the surrounding area in a thick cloud that made it nearly impossible to see. Any normal opponent would have been handicapped by such limiting visibility, blind to the paladin subtly maneuvering on his right in preparation for an attack, but to Alucard it might as well have not even existed. Easily tracking the injured nudist commander beyond the edges of the smoke, the vampire waited until Yumiko was nearly upon him before abruptly spinning around, parrying the paladin's katana with enough force to send her crashing into the side of a building.

Dispersing the already thinning cloud of smoke with another swing of his blade, Alucard's eyes narrowed when he glanced upwards and saw Alexander Anderson silhouetted against the full moon. It was a bold but impressive feat to use one's allies in such a manner. Sparks dancing through the air as he raised his broadsword and blocked the nudist's attack with a single hand, Anderson's face twisted into an expression of righteous fury as he desperately tried to overwhelm him, Alucard chuckled maliciously when the former paladin kicked off his chest plate and landed several feet away.

"You are a worthy adversary," Alucard's body was enveloped by shadows as he loomed over the nudist commander, his eyes twin pinpricks of light in the darkness, "So come! Come Alexander Anderson! Try and pierce my heart with your bayonets!"

Anderson staggered backwards and spat out a wad of bloody saliva, the motion aggravating his cracked ribs. He couldn't die, not when a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin still walked the earth, "I'm not foolish enough to fall for yer taunts, vampire. But ye can rest assured that ye shall perish by my hands."

His expression darkening in morbid curiosity at the nudist commander's threat, the conviction in Anderson's voice at odds with the way he was subtly attempting to slowly back away from him, Alucard's train of thought was broken when he heard the barely audible clicking of a subsonic priming detonator. Eyes widening when he cast his gaze downwards and saw a circular metallic device attached to the front of his armor, a piercing red light pulsing rapidly upon its curved exterior, the vampire grimaced in annoyance when the Detergent Mine exploded in a massive inferno of multicolored flames.

---

...

---

Integra Hellsing's stride did not falter as she marched through the bleak corridors of the Deus Ex Machina with a single purpose in mind. Tightening her grip upon the sheathed sword in her left hand when several muffled explosions rippled through the airship the leader of the Hellsing Organization paused when her foot accidentally kicked the prone body of one of Millennium's vampirized soldats. Someone or something had killed the soldier before they arrived. An annoyed snort leaving her lips as she callously rolled the corpse over with the heel of her boot, Integra narrowed her eyes in disgust when she saw the state of the body.

The corpse, or rather what was left of it, was nothing more than a half-dissolved mass of flesh, thickly congealed blood pooled across the floor while the soldier's bones were nothing more than a liquefied organic sludge that caused her nose to wrinkle. Biting down on her cigar as she knelt and tore off the soldat's goggles and gasmask, accidentally peeling away the skin around his eyes in the process, Integra contemplated the expression of pure agony on what remained of the Quincy's face.

"These men died fairly recently."

Wiping her hand against the corpse's sleeve before standing back up, Integra stared at the dozen or so vampirized soldats splayed throughout the corridor. Each and every one of them appeared to have suffered the same cause of death. Taking a long drag from her cigar as she half-turned to face Seras, the recently ascended vampire's crimson eyes gazing pensively at the corpse in front of her, she exhaled a puff of smoke and stated, "I'd estimate these men died within the last ten minutes. And that death must have been excruciatingly painful."

Seras clenched her hand into a fist and snarled angrily, "It serves them right after everything they've done!"

Not finding anything at fault in her servant's passionate declaration, Integra turned her attention back to the various corpses and narrowed her eyes, "A most fitting end for cowardly and pathetic mockeries of men. Yet something troubles me. Seras... these soldiers did not fall in battle. Which begs the question of what killed them."

"It's master..."

Seras couldn't help but gasp when the strange sensation of familiarity emanating from the undead corpses gave way to realization. Suddenly everything made sense. Her crimson eyes glowing brightly from within the shadows created by her bangs of platinum blonde hair, the vampire snapped her head upwards and spat, "These men... Quincy... have master's power running through their veins. But it's like poison to them. Master's power is destroying them from the inside out. Eating away at their very soul until nothing remains. What's the point of becoming a damn vampire if you end up melting in the end?!"

"Not everyone is worthy of receiving His Majesty's gift. Some lesser souls must unfortunately make due with what's available around the house."

The intercoms built into the corridor whined momentarily before the Major continued speaking in the same jovial tone, "It's so good to hear your lovely voice again, fraulein. I hope my invitation wasn't too disrespectful. I didn't quite know how a woman of your stature would respond. So I decided to go with something a little... flashy . Sorry about that..."

Integra sneered at the smug arrogance permeating every single word spewing from the Major's mouth. That he had the audacity and gall to claim the concentrated artillery strike fired from his airship, which nearly killed her if not for Seras, was a personal invitation left no doubt in her mind about his sanity, "You insane, cowardly swine..."

"Yet here you are, searching for me much like the moth is drawn to the proverbial flame!"

Completely at ease despite Integra Hellsing and her pet vampire stalking through the Deus Ex Machina with only a single goal in their minds - his complete and utter destruction - the Major leaned back in his chair and chuckled deeply when an explosion caused the command center to briefly shake, "But let us get back on topic. You were professing curiosity about the rather abysmal state of the soldats lying dead at your feet. Why their very souls have been scattered like dust on the wind. The answer, my dear fraulein, is quite simple. They were nothing but experiments! Failed attempts at combining the spiritual essence of the creature you call Alucard with that of a Quincy! Unfortunately the procedure inevitably results in a rather gruesome death for the test subject."

Integra's face scrunched in barely repressed annoyance as she was forced to listen to the Major's barbaric nonsense. Allowing Seras to take point when the corridor suddenly turned to the left, she calmly stepped over the half-dissolved corpse of yet another soldat before removing the cigar from her mouth and scoffing, "Experimenting on your own men? You truly are an insane little man, Quincy."

"I can assure you that I am of quite sound mind."

A deranged smirk adorned the Major's face as he animatedly clenched a single hand into a fist, "Those soldats lying dead at your feet were nothing more than pawns ! Used only to be discarded upon the completion of their task. All one thousand vampirized soldats of the Jahrtausendarmee were created for a single purpose - the slaughter of every living soul within London only to fall before the combined might of the Hellsing Organization and Vatican! Your little pet surviving Zorin's assault was not anticipated but such failures happen to even the best commanders from time to time."

With a nearly contemptuous flick of her wrist Integra tossed the half-smoked cigar to the ground when the corridor abruptly split in two. Translating the sign bolted to the wall in front of her from German into English, her eyes drawn to the Quincy Zeichen etched above it, she snorted and turned to the right before bluntly asking the Major, "Since you love to hear yourself speak, Quincy, perhaps you can say something relevant. Who is your leader, the man you refer to as your king? What is he planning?"

Another bout of smug laughter echoed throughout the nearly empty corridors as the Major passionately responded, "His Majesty is a man who detests meaningless conflicts. Why, the very thought of a protracted battle fills his heart with despair!"

Seras seethed at the Major's hypocritical answer. Hearing that fat bastard of a Quincy not only insult the men and women lying dead in the streets of London but also Mr. Bernadotte and the Wild Geese made her want to tear him apart limb from bloody limb. But before she could say anything the Sternritter jovially added, "I look forward to finally meeting you in person, fraulein. Auf Wiedersehen!"

A screech of feedback echoed irritatingly over the intercoms as the Major bid them a temporary farewell before the connection was completely severed. Her glasses glowing opaquely in what little ambient light existed in the corridor, Integra's fingers tightened around the sheathed blade in her left hand as she quickened her pace. The actions of the Quincy and his associates were beyond reprehension. How Nudist Beach could have allied with such an organization, even against a monster like Ragyo Kiryuin, bothered her but for the moment her focus was on the task at hand - ending the Major's pathetic existence.

It was the distant rhythmic sound of heavy boots steadily tapping against the floor that pulled Integra from her thoughts. Coming to a halt herself as Seras stepped protectively in front of her body, the vampire's crimson eyes piercing through the darkness while the shadows extruding from her shoulder morphed into a facsimile of an arm, the leader of the Hellsing Organization narrowed her gaze when a very familiar figure slowly came into sight.

"Go on ahead, Master Integra."

Seras could barely contain the anger building rapidly within her soul when the Captain came to a halt several meters away from them, his white Sternritter uniform standing in sharp contrast with the bleak colors of the corridor. When Integra incredulously protested her decision, the vampire clenched her hand into a fist and stepped forward. Even with the blood-soaked bandages wrapped around his left arm, the Captain's power was as clear as day. This Quincy was far stronger than the bitch that killed Mr. Bernadotte, "Find that Quincy and kill him! Every word that spews from his mouth infuriates me! Make him pay for everything he's done!"

The silence that followed Seras' declaration continued for several seconds before Integra smirked and placed one of her last remaining cigars between her teeth. Savoring the familiar taste of tobacco before lighting the cigar, she opened her mouth to wish her servant the best of luck when something odd caused her to pause. With the edges of his overcoat fluttering around his body, the Captain slowly shook his head at the two women before stepping to the side and leaning against the wall with his arms folded.

"So the attack dog didn't come to play after all..."

Integra scowled when the Sternritter slowly blinked at the insult before raising his arm and pointing down the hallway, his expression never changing. Biting down on her cigar as she scoffed and marched around Seras, who had yet to take her eyes off the Captain, she exhaled a cloud of smoke before sneering, "I see... very well then. Leave him be, Seras. But if he should attempt anything... don't hesitate to destroy him."

---

...

---

A ragged cough tore its way free from Alexander Anderson's lungs as the nudist commander returned from his brief foray into unconsciousness.

That was the last time he ignored the standard Nudist Bleach safety procedures when dealing with high-impact explosives. He should have damn well known better than detonating a Detergent Mine when he wasn't at least one hundred feet away. Fifty feet if you were behind cover. Cursing angrily at his stupidity Anderson snarled and slowly staggered back onto his feet, the sharp ringing reverberating in his ears already tapering off. It would be a cold day in hell before he let a little explosion kill him. Not before sending both the vampire and the abomination of woman to their justly deserved fates in whatever damnation existed for their kind. The fingers on his left hand sporadically twitching due to the pain radiating from his injured shoulder, Anderson clenched his jaw and stared in annoyance at the inferno roaring a few dozen feet down the street.

"Is everything ready?"

With nary a sound Heinkel Wolfe emerged from the surrounding darkness, her tattered cassock fluttering gently as she landed next to the nudist commander with her pistol trained on the crackling flames. Her mouth twisted into a grimace, Heinkel narrowed her eyes and scowled, "It would have been helpful if you explained how the hell they worked, Anderson! I only managed to anchor one of the verdammt things!"

"They're not that hard to operate," Anderson scoffed under his breath. Nudist Beach technology was incredibly intuitive and easy to both learn and operate. It had to be if they were to have any chance of standing against a monster the likes of Ragyo Kiryuin and her personal execution squad. Spitting out a wad of bloody saliva, he twisted around and exclaimed, "So what are ye still doing here?! Go anchor the other one before - "

"HA! HA! HA!"

Bouts of manic laughter emanated from within the roaring inferno when a dark and foreboding wind swept out of nowhere, dispelling the flames and sending cold chills racing down Anderson and Heinkel's spines. Slowly clapping his hands in a mocking gesture as he emerged from the remaining smoke completely unscathed, red overcoat forming out of shadows when he rapidly shifted back to his familiar vampiric form, Alucard grinned at the nudist's infuriated expression. This was turning out to be a most interesting battle. Despite his best efforts it seemed he continued to underestimate

Alexander Anderson's ingenuity. To place an explosive upon his body not only without being detected but also in a manner that didn't draw attention? Risking life and limb simply to destroy him?

Excellent...

"I haven't felt this excited in ages !" Alucard chuckled darkly as he tilted his head slightly to the side, fang-filled mouth twisting menacingly in the night, "That was a most interesting display of tactics, Alexander Anderson. Any other monster would have been killed in an instant. Their flesh torn from bone! So congratulations! You have my full attention..."

Wisps of darkness flickered around Alucard's overcoat as he stood amongst the fading embers, daring the two humans to make the first move. His expression turning sadistic when a new pair of bayonets emerged from within Anderson's sleeves while Wolfe expertly placed another clip in her remaining pistol, the vampire grinned viciously as the shadows around his body writhed. Continuing to laugh psychotically as the Jackal and Casull slid fluidly into his outstretched hands, Alucard did not hesitate to snap his arms forward and open fire on the humans.

Anderson was already in motion before Alucard even raised his arms. Throwing himself sideways upon recognizing the shimmer of steel in the vampire's hands, the nudist ducked his head down as the building behind him disintegrated under a hail of high-caliber gunfire. A pained grunt involuntarily leaving his mouth when he landed on his injured shoulder behind the burnt remains of an overturned truck while pieces of concrete and rubble rained downwards, he gnashed his teeth and grimaced when the front of the vehicle, engine block and all, exploded. Blown apart by a single shot from the Jackal.

Which missed him by several feet.

The nudist didn't believe for a second that the vampire missed. There was not a chance in hell that the monster that demonstrated the ability to behead a moving target from over three hundred feet away would actually miss hitting him, which meant the abomination was up to something. Mentally cursing as he rolled onto his back, rounds from the Casull constantly piercing through the carriage of the truck before continuing on through the building to his right, Anderson reached into one of his cassock's many pockets and frowned when he pulled out the last strand of detonation cord. Damn it! He barely had enough left for a single bayonet!

"That's just perfect..."

Pieces of shrapnel burned lightly against his cassock as he carefully wrapped the last detonation cord around his bayonet. Narrowing his eyes in concentration when the vampire fired another round from the Jackal, vaporizing part of the truck and the building behind him, Anderson subtly moved towards the rear end of the overturned truck only for his head to snap upwards when several shots pierced through the night. His free hand clenching into a fist when Heinkel exploded out of an adjoining alley with her pistol firing, the nudist commander felt his heart skip a beat when the abomination returned fire.

This was his chance!

Leaping back onto his feet before vaulting over the truck with the single tailor bayonet held tightly between his fingers, Anderson flexed his wrist and prepared to throw the weapon at the vampire only to stumble when intense pain wracked his body. Blood spewing from his mouth with every cough as the strain of battling an abomination against nature aggravated his injuries, the nudist commander ignored the pain and snapped his arm forward with all his remaining strength. Gnashing his teeth when the quivering in his arm caused the weapon to miss the vampire by several inches before detonating in a large explosion down the street, Anderson panted heavily from exhaustion as he landed on the ground.

"It looks like your wounds have finally started catching up with you... Alexander Anderson."

Derisive mockery dripped from the vampire's mouth as he turned his full attention back to the nudist commander. Leaning forward slightly while folding one arm against his back, he grinned excitedly at the furious expression on Anderson's face, "So what are you going to do? Will you give up? To die like a dog when your goal is nearly within reach? Or will you continue fighting until the bitter end... your body broken and shattered beyond all recognition!"

Anderson spat out blood while two new bayonets appeared in his hands, "Ye think I'm going to give up, vampire? I will not stop until ye lay dead at my feet!"

The vampire's eyes imperceptibly widened at Anderson's passionate declaration. Despite the wounds bleeding his life's blood upon the ground the human simply refused to surrender and die. Any normal man would have already succumbed to such debilitating injuries long ago, perishing like a dog in the streets, yet Alexander Anderson possessed the drive to keep fighting until the bitter end. To stand and fight until the last traces of life left his body. Such perseverance from one of his enemies excited the vampire down to the deepest recesses of his twisted and corrupted soul.

It was the barely audible fluttering of cloth descending through the autumn night that caused Alucard's expression to twist sadistically. He had been growing weary of waiting for the paladin to stop playing dead. Deftly twisting his body sideways while turning around, his eyes momentarily locking with Yumiko's as her blessed katana arced through the air towards the base of his neck, Alucard chuckled while raising the Casull before unloading several rounds into the woman. His smirk quickly vanishing upon realizing he only managed to shoot the paladin's outer garments, the vampire tore his attention away from the bullet-ridden nun robes as his right arm exploded into finely cut chunks of flesh and bone.

" What?"

Her upper body clad in a form-fitting long-sleeved black shirt as she landed in a soft crouch behind the vampire with her blessed katana held tightly at her waist, Yumiko snarled and ignored both the pain from her left arm and the copious amount of blood spraying through the air. Furiously narrowing her eyes while spinning around on her heel, she took advantage of Alucard's momentarily injured condition to drive her weapon directly towards his heart.

---

...

---

Integra Hellsing's coat fluttered gently around her body as the blast-proof doors of the Deus Ex Machina's command center opened with a hiss of pressurized air. Almost immediately she was forced to scrunch her nose in disgust at the pervading scent of decaying flesh. Strewn throughout the chamber with some still in their seats were the half-dissolved corpses of soldiers, their expressions betraying the painful agony that had been their death. Her boots stomping against the metal plating of the floor as she marched forward, the stylized Quincy Zeichen on the ground briefly drawing her notice, she came to a stop alongside Seras when her eyes fell upon the chair facing the wall of screens on the opposite side of the chamber.

Strutting forward while Seras narrowed her eyes in preparation for whatever may come, the writhing darkness emerging from the severed stump of her left shoulder twisting back into a clawed facsimile of an arm, the leader of the Hellsing Organization reached into her coat and snarled, "Show yourself!"

"Ah... it's so good to finally meet you in the flesh, fraulein."

A half-cocked smirk was plastered upon the Major's face as the chair slowly spun around with a metallic whine. His expression growing increasingly amused at the twin looks of rage and hatred, he leaned backwards and sighed, "I've been expecting you for quite some time."

The sound of gunshots echoed throughout the chamber as Integra removed the Sig-Sauer pistol from the holster hidden within her trench coat and opened fire on the Quincy. She did not care about whatever garbage the man had to say. All that mattered was ending his pathetic excuse for a life before he dragged them all through the mud. Snarling when she noticed that the Sternritter was completely unaffected by the bullets, she narrowed her eyes when the last round in the clip ricocheted off his face, exposing a briefly visible dark pattern on his skin.

"Blut Vene..." Integra spat out the vile words while releasing the empty clip from her pistol, causing the Quincy to chuckle lightly.

"This is quite correct," the Major casually swept several bullet casings off his uniform while his yellow eyes narrowed mirthfully, "However I'm afraid it will require something with a bit more firepower to pierce the blut His Majesty bestowed upon me."

"Is that right?" Integra holstered her pistol and took a step backwards, "Seras... kill him."

"Right!"

The Major watched with veiled amusement as the shadows emerging from the vampire's left shoulder twisted and contorted. His expression remaining unchanged when the darkness suddenly tore into the floor, steel plating and wiring breaking under the force, his eyes lit up in surprise when the vampire literally pulled one of the airship's eighty-eight millimeter cannons from the storage bay below. The corners of his mouth tightening into a smirk as he leaned forward, yellow eyes focused on the shadows controlling the weapon like a well-trained orchestra, the Major did not move an inch when Seras fired the weapon.

Hands politely folded across his lap as the shell spiraled through the air towards him accompanied by an explosive blast of noise, the Major chuckled lowly when a translucent barrier spun into existence feet away from his body. The leather in his chair crackling as he watched the shell literally disintegrate against the spiritual shield, brass dissolving away before his very eyes, the Sternritter noticed the shocked expression on his guests' faces and raised a finger, "Oh... my apologies. I should have warned you about the barrier."

Integra stared as the barrier cutting halfway through the chamber, pulses of light shimmering across its faintly blue surface, "Barrier?"

"I'm sure you're aware of the technique my late comrade Tubalcain Alhambra used against Alucard," the Major absorbed the look of shock on the vampire's face before reaching for the remote on the nearby table. Raising it over his shoulder before clicking one of the buttons, causing the wall of screens to burst into life and show part of the battle between Alucard and Alhambra, he cocked his head slightly to the side and grinned, "This, however, is nothing like that! It is as different as night is from day! It is the culmination of nearly a century of experimentation, the result of the esteemed Doktor mixing Alucard's essence with that of a Quincy and shinigami's!"

A loud thump echoed throughout the chamber as Seras angrily shouted and fired the flak cannon a second time only for the shell to dissolve once more upon making contact with the barrier. Raising his hand in a placating gesture at the infuriated vampire, the Sternritter jovially added, "I'm afraid this barrier is quite impenetrable, impervious to all but a select few beings. However it does possess a singular weakness. Due to the contrasting spiritual energy woven throughout its structure it is rather unstable. Thus in approximately fifteen minutes it will shatter, allowing you to kill me to your heart's content!"

Integra clenched the sheathed blade in her hand at the Sternritter's words while Seras unceremoniously dropped the flak cannon onto the ground, the metal plating buckling under the weight of the weapon. Marching forward until she was standing only a few inches from the barrier, she bit the inside of her cheek and scoffed, "What are you planning, Quincy? What is the point of telling us the weakness of your technique?"

"Because I am in possession of certain knowledge. Information that I believe you will be quite interested in hearing," the Major smirked at Integra's furious expression before turning around halfway in his chair and pressing another button on the remote. As the images on the screens shifted to the currently ongoing battle between Yumiko and Alucard, the vampire transformed back into his original form, he briefly watched the paladin desperately struggle against the ancient vampire's monstrous strength before leaning backwards and mirthfully asking, "Have you ever wondered about the magnificent existence that is Alucard? What sort of eldritch creature the vampire truly is?"

An explosion rocked the zeppelin, causing the lights to temporarily flicker, before Integra scoffed in disgust, "Such an inane question."

The smirk adorning the Major's face widened as he turned away from the battle raging on the screen, "It is common knowledge that Alucard is a vampire... much like our friends in Nudist Beach know that Ragyo Kiryuin is a Life Fiber Hybrid. But such titles are meaningless! Proverbial garbage that carries no weight! Completely and utterly useless in the grand scheme of things! What I wish to know is rather simple - whether you are aware of Alucard's true position upon the corrupted hierarchy that governs the world!"

As the Major finished speaking Integra was forced to narrow her eyes when every screen in the chamber exploded into brilliant light, the Wandenreich's sensors and cameras rendered temporarily useless as the Detergent Mine placed upon Alucard by Alexander Anderson detonated. Clapping his hands together in genuine appreciation at the display of raw power by the nudist commander, the Major's face was shadowed in various shades of white and black as he enthusiastically announced, "It would seem our mutual friend from Nudist Beach is putting up quite the impressive fight. The paladins from Iscariot are quite strong but they lack the instinct, the determination to win at all costs against an unimaginable monster, that Alexander Anderson obtained after years of fighting against Ragyo Kiryuin. But it seems they are still putting up a greater challenge against the vampire than the shinigami from four hundred years ago."

Integra stared at the Sternritter with absolute contempt, "I'm well aware of the Soul Society's attempt to kill Alucard. They sent three of their captains after my servant but he proved too strong. Two were killed during the battle while the third was devoured. Who if I'm not mistaken is the shinigami currently fighting Ryuko Matoi. And in the aftermath the Soul Society deemed Alucard the most dangerous supernatural creature in existence."

"A most succinct assumption... but incorrect, fraulein."

The Major smiled at the surprised expression on Integra's face while the intense light on the screens faded showing Alucard in his normal form. Ignoring the shadows writhing around Seras as the Harkonnen visibly shook, the vampire's restraint at killing him barely kept in check, he raised a hand into the air before curling his fingers into a fist, "Alucard is quite the dangerous adversary but he is not the most dangerous. That title belongs to the creature masquerading as a human being... the illustrious emissary of the being known as the Original Life Fiber! I am speaking, of course, about Ragyo Kiryuin. The woman who betrayed the world!"

A tense silence permeated the room for several seconds after the Sternritter's declaration, broken only by the occasional explosion. Both hands clasped across his chest while the Deus Ex Machina momentarily struggled to remain airborne, the Major's glasses shimmered as he asked, "Tell me... do you believe the puppet that arrived at Parliament, that pale facsimile of a monster, possessed Ragyo Kiryuin's full strength?"

"No," Integra forced her voice to remain detached while she mentally counted the seconds until the barrier dissolved, "I've seen Ragyo Kiryuin's capabilities. Nudist Beach was quite forthcoming about what happened at Honnouji Academy."

"Ragyo Kiryuin is a woman who has only fought seriously twice in her existence," the Major's smug voice echoed slightly around the chamber as he cocked his head to the side, "But a battle against Alucard? Both monsters giving their all in order to wipe the other from existence? I'm afraid such an engagement would leave most of London in ruins. Crushed under the overwhelming power of two creatures that defy human logic! And when the dust settles, exposing the lifeless corpses of those unfortunately caught in the whirlwind, both vampire and Life Fiber beast will both still be standing."

"How pathetic."

There was no hiding the derision in Integra's voice. Ignoring the live feed of Yumiko severing Alucard's arm in a flash of motion, blood spraying through the air, she stared into the Major's soulless eyes and sneered, "Is that it, Quincy? Sixty years of planning... countless millions killed... all so that you and that cowardly king you follow can have a shot at killing Alucard."

"When did I ever say I wanted to kill Alucard?"

Integra stiffened in shock at the sheer inanity of the question, "What?!"

The Major's chair creaked softly as he gripped the armrests and slowly stood up. Marching forward until his face was nearly pressed against the barrier opposite of Integra, his yellow eyes shimmered with barely repressed glee, "The purpose of this glorious night... the Schatten Ausrufung... was never to kill Alucard. Such a feat lies beyond even the unfathomable power of His Majesty. The objective of the Schatten Ausrufung has always been to force Alucard into a situation where the release of his full power was the only logical choice! That has not changed! But I'm sorry to say the tragic events that transpired on October 21st has caused His Majesty to add a second act..."

A bead of sweat trickled down Integra's face at the date, "You don't mean..."

"All of this..." the Major accentuated each syllable with a dramatic sweeping of his arm, "... was to limit Ragyo Kiryuin's power! To force her into the light by slaughtering all three million, one hundred and fifteen thousand, eight hundred and seventy five inhabitants of London!"

---

...

---

Thick streams of blood oozed onto the ground when Alucard twisted sideways a moment before Yumiko's katana pierced his heart, the blade instead puncturing through his right lung from back to front. Gurgling as his flesh began burning from contact with the blessed weapon, visceral darkness evaporating out of the wound, the vampire lurched forward before his expression shifted. Bloody lips stretching into a fang-filled grin before his form suddenly dispersed into darkness, his entire body vanishing in a flourish of shadows, Alucard's insane laughter filled the air as the bewildered paladin took a cautious step backwards.

"Impressive, Iscariot..."

Alucard's voice echoed from the very shadows covering the city as he reappeared some distance down the street. The dozens of misshapen crimson eyes blinking across the surface of the writhing darkness swiveling as he fully reformed himself, the vampire ignored the torrents of blood spilling from his wounds and stared at the swordswoman, "Your speed is quite remarkable. That substitution caught me off guard. It's rather impressive for something that can only be used once..."

The faint sounds of battle carried over the bitter wind winding through the streets as the vampire trailed off, copious amounts of blood dripping from both his ragged stump of an arm and destroyed lung. Yet the anger on the swordswoman's face continued to amuse him. From the way she held her weapon, blade shaking under her grip, the paladin seemed ready to correct her mistake. Such bravado filled his twisted heart with anticipation. But it was nothing more than empty bluster. Her left arm was fractured from their earlier exchange, which meant every movement had to be causing her intense pain.

He couldn't wait to see how she would overcome such a debilitating injury.

"You've been quiet, Wolfe. Surely you don't think the battle's over?"

Alucard couldn't suppress the mocking grin stretching across his face when Heinkel appeared behind him, mouth pulled into a contemptuous scowl as she pointed her pistol directly at his head. Did she think the mere threat of a bullet would be enough to stop him? How insulting. Stepping callously in the blood pooling throughout the street as he deliberately turned away from the swordswoman, Alucard chuckled at Wolfe before adding, "Do you believe the insignificant loss of an ARM means anything? That this battle could possibly be decided without one of us dying?"

The vampire's condescending laughter echoed loudly through the night as darkness burst forth from his body. Dozens of inhuman crimson eyes blinked into existence across his body as shadows spewed from the bloody stump of a shoulder before coalescing into an arm. Smirking at the shock and fury etched upon Wolfe's face when he stepped forward, the pools of blood covering the street streaming into his body, Alucard held the newly reconstructed hand in front of his face and grinned, "Even in this state my regeneration remains as strong as ever! You've blown your greatest chance to kill me, Iscariot!"

Yumiko ignored the slight trembling of her left hand and snarled, "My next strike won't miss your neck, vampire!"

There was a momentary silence following her declaration before Alucard turned around, his attention focused fully upon the injured Anderson to the paladin's left, "How does it feel, Alexander Anderson, to know that all your efforts were for naught? That you risked life and limb only for your partner to flinch away at the very last second! It must be disappointing to know that the renowned paladins of Iscariot have fallen so far..."

"Shut yer mouth, vampire!"

Spittle flew through the air when Anderson suddenly interrupted the vampire's speech, crimson moonlight shimmering across the surface of the tailor bayonets as he crossed them in front of his body. His expression unchanging despite the nudist commander's unsubtle threat, Alucard laughed arrogantly as fiery shadows slowly oozed from the darkness composing his body before exclaiming, "The truth hurts, doesn't it Anderson? If it weren't for your arrival Wolfe would have cast aside her humanity for a scrap of miracle! Becoming little more than a monster devoid of both intelligence and reason! The antithesis of humanity! And this swordswoman... at the first sign of danger she flinches away! Cowering at the prospect of dying in battle!"

"And how does any of that matter?"

Anderson briefly coughed as he stared into the dark pits of corruption that were Alucard's soulless eyes before growling, "A true warrior of Iscariot does whatever it takes to destroy a threat to humanity. It does not matter if it's a vampire, hollow, Quincy or Life Fiber abomination. They fight until the bitter end, until their blood flows in rivers upon the ground. But ye cannot expect children to overcome their instincts."

Ignoring the slight tensing from the two paladins at his last comment, Anderson spat a wad of blood onto the ground and sneered, "It takes years of fighting against monsters before ye can repress that overwhelming fear of death! I have spent decades slaughtering monsters that could devour my very soul! Death does not frighten me, vampire! But for all their power, neither Heinkel nor Yumiko has ever struggled against monsters that could tear them asunder! They have never fought against an abomination so dark and vile that the afterlife flees in its presence!"

"So speak your lies, vampire," Anderson grimaced at the pain radiating down his left arm before gnashing his teeth and finishing, "Because these children will be the ones that finally end yer existence once and for all!"

The barest trace of a pleased smirk appeared on Alucard's face at the human's passionate declaration. Alexander Anderson was truly a remarkable man to instill such confidence in his allies. To encounter such an opponent upon such a night, when his very existence was on the line, filled his heart with exhilaration. Shadows covering his face when he sensed Wolfe shift her aim towards his heart, the vampire momentarily stiffened before he reared his head backwards and laughed. As the humans shared tense looks of confusion at his sudden shift in personality, they were caught completely off guard when an enormous eruption of crimson spiritual energy exploded in the distance. Sharpened fangs glistening in the multicolored light as a fierce wind tore through the streets courtesy of Ryuko's Niban Genkai, Alucard continued laughing at the monster girl's energy.

She truly was an interesting creature...

"Verdammt!"

Heinkel stared over her shoulder in astonishment at the crimson energy spiking upwards into the moonlit sky, "What the hell was that?"

"HA! HA! HA! That monster girl continues to surprise me!"

Alucard's mouth twisted into a condescending smirk at the way the three humans tensed at his mentioning of the creature calling herself Ryuko Matoi. There was no question that the girl was powerful, perhaps even stronger than the boy fighting the two Quincy he devoured. But it was pathetic the way the monster girl still claimed to be clinging onto the remnants of her humanity. The progeny of Ragyo Kiryuin, that monster in the guise of a woman, could not be anything less than such a monster themselves. The very notion that creatures such as they still professed their humanity was a grave insult to those who truly possessed the right to make that claim. Ryuko Matoi was a monster in the truest sense.

"Life Fibers are truly fascinating. No matter how much you wound these creatures... whether it be tearing out their heart or turning them into dust... the Life Fibers inside their bodies will always regenerate the damage," Alucard's footsteps echoed against the pavement as he slowly stalked towards Wolfe, his voice continuously growing louder, "That monster girl and her Kamui accomplished a feat I deemed all but impossible! They destroyed that shinigami's bankai with a single swing of her blade! There isn't a doubt in my mind - she is truly the daughter of that one of a kind monster, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

An overwhelming pulse of spiritual energy exploded from the vampire's body as he finished shouting, his overcoat dissipating into shadows and leaving him clad in a full-body black straightjacket. His mouth stretched into an insane and bloody grin when Anderson's two bayonets screamed through the air towards his heart, Alucard deftly twisted counterclockwise around the projectiles before rushing straight at Wolfe. Wisps of shadows clinging to his arm as he cocked it back, darkness wrapped around his fingers as they straightened to a sharp point, the vampire couldn't restrain his expression of pleasure when his attack missed Wolfe and instead pierced through the building behind her.

"Scheiße!"

Heinkel ignored the new hole in her already tattered cassock as she frantically leapt backwards, determined to put as much distance between herself and the crazed vampire. Sneering lightly while pieces of mortar and concrete rained upon the ground from the vampire's attack, she snapped her arm upwards and took a moment to steady her aim before firing directly at Alucard's black heart.

Blood sprayed across the ground as the blessed rounds tore through the vampire's undead flesh. Snarling when she witnessed Alucard moving in such a way that her bullets hit every part of his body except his heart and neck, Heinkel didn't stop firing until the clicking of an empty clip drew her full attention. Eyes widening when the Casull and Jackal appeared in the vampire's hands, she didn't hesitate before leaping through the broken window of the restaurant to her left, rolling across the glass-covered floor seconds before a deluge of armor-piercing rounds shot through the air.

"Damn it... Maxwell was right," Heinkel grunted when her back slammed against a table. Grumbling lightly in annoyance when a pitcher of cold water rolled off the table, soaking her head and shoulders in the process, the paladin placed a new clip in her pistol and sneered, "I should have gone for the larger magazine."

Heinkel scoffed as she cautiously stood back on her feet. Ignoring the streams of water dripping from her chin onto the floor when Yumiko went flying past the restaurant's shattered windows, katana held tightly against her waist, she shook her head at the explosion that followed her partner's attack against the vampire. Something was wrong here. The abilities Alucard possessed nearly half an hour ago weren't nearly this powerful, which meant the vampire was growing stronger the longer the battle continued. She needed to find a way to kill the vampire before he became too powerful to destroy.

As she moved to help Yumiko against the vampire Heinkel stiffened when Anderson sprinted through her line of sight a few seconds later. The fingers on her left hand subconsciously reaching towards the pocket of her cassock at the look in the nudist's head, she watched the nudist vanish to the left before scoffing, "This better damn well work, Anderson."

---

...

---

The Major watched with detached aplomb as he allowed the full weight of the revelation to sink into Integra Hellsing's mind. It was quite obvious from the unsubtle clenching of her hand, the grinding of her teeth in anger, that she viewed his words with the same mixture of revulsion and hatred reserved for only the most evil of men in the world. Men who would gladly sell out humanity for nothing more than fun and profit. Yet that could not be further from the truth.

"One should not underestimate the deviousness... the intelligence... of Ragyo Kiryuin."

Lowering his arm as he broke the tense silence following his previous revelation, the Major's mouth curled into an amused smirk when a wavering aura of spiritual energy surrounded the vampire. From the expression of rage permeating her inhumanly glowing crimson eyes it would seem she didn't quite like what he was saying. A faint chuckle escaping his lips as he turned away from the women, hands clasped tightly behind his back, the Sternritzer stared at the screens illuminating half the chamber before pleasantly continuing, "Ever since the events that transpired at Honnouji Academy she has stayed within her daughter's former bastion, protected by a barrier that neither His Majesty nor Alucard can penetrate! But she is not staying idle, fraulein. With each passing day she mentally orders that thing to weave thousands of new COVERS! Every hour that she draws breath allows the Grand Couturiers to place the final touches upon the garment that would envelop the world in Life Fibers!"

"How would I accelerate Kiske Urahara's research into destroying the barrier? What method could I use to pierce through the protective veil surrounding her? These were among the questions that plagued my every waking moment. And do you know what method, what course of action, I devised to take down that illustrious woman?"

His white uniformed fluttering slightly when he abruptly twisted around towards the two women, the Major held a clenched fist in front of his face and smugly sneered, "Nothing! Not one thing! There is nothing that can be done to destroy the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier before Ragyo Kiryuin begins the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet!"

"That's foolish coming from you, Quincy," Integra's voice contained more than a hint of derision as she glared contemptuously at the Major, "Nothing is impenetrable. Even the most impregnable barriers eventually shatter. But you and that coward you call a king didn't even bother trying."

"His Majesty is not a man to leave anything to chance. Even if there existed the slightest possibility his power could penetrate the barrier surrounding Honnouji Academy he wouldn't be in any condition to stop Ragyo Kiryuin," an ominous shimmer of artificial light reflected off the Major's thick glasses as he calmly turned his back on Integra Hellsing and her pet vampire. Once more grabbing the remote from his chair and pressing a button, he sighed contently when the screens shifted from a laughing Alucard to a map of the world, "Which is the reason we decided to force her hand."

Integra gasped in dawning horror when her gaze was drawn to the flickering number at the top of the screens, "You didn't..."

"By slaughtering every living soul in London I have tipped the scales in Ragyo Kiryuin's favor! I have granted her the one thing she required to begin her masterstroke - the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet! And by doing so... limited the forces she is able to bring onto the battlefield!"

"For you see... despite Ragyo Kiryuin's vaunted intelligence it is her sole desire, that ephemeral goal she has worked endlessly towards making a reality these past twenty years, that shall be her downfall," there was barely a moment's pause in the Sternritter's speech before he dramatically swept one arm through the air and passionately exclaimed, "She will be so enraptured that her grand plan can finally commence that she will throw caution to the wind! So devoted is she to that thing beneath her manor that she will leave the protection of her bastion to carry out its unholy will! By giving her exactly what she wants I have granted Nudist Beach the chance to defeat her! To cast her down into the dust!"

A cold feeling coursed down Integra's spine at the passion behind the Quincy's words. Something about the phrasing of his answer, the way he spoke, bothered her tremendously and yet she could not understand what it was, "How do you know all this?"

His mouth curling into a pleased smile as he walked back to his chair, the Major sat down and folded his hands together before answering, "Because, fraulein, we leaked the outcome of this little skirmish to Revocs nearly ninety minutes ago."

Several rapid bursts of light emanated from the oscillating barrier when Integra angrily snapped her arm upwards and emptied her Sig-Sauer's full clip at the Major, each bullet aimed at the Quincy's forehead, "You despicable, vile Quincy! You and your coward of a king are truly the lowest of the low! Soulless men who would throw humanity to the dogs for some ill-conceived plot to take down Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"... Oh? Cowards, are we? The lowest of the low?"

A slight frown momentary adorned the Major features before he smirked and raised a hand into the air, "Tell me, fraulein, as you stand here due in no small part to the support of your pet vampire... what does that make you ? Those that died tonight were nothing more than casualties of His Majesty's glorious will ! Victims of the eternal struggle between humans and monsters! I do not deny what I did! You, on the other hand, did so... much... worse . I killed over three million people. But it was YOU that unleashed Alucard upon them!"

"How dare you claim Alucard would lay a finger on my countrymen!" Integra angrily retorted while subtly aware of the way Seras was tensing next to her, "I gave him strict orders to deal with all assaulting forces - both Quincy and the Vatican. He would never dare go against my instructions!"

"You are thinking far too literally, Integra Hellsing," the Major leaned forward in his chair moments before an enormous explosion rocked the zeppelin, causing the aircraft to visibly shake under the intense deluge of wind, "What you should have considered from the very start was what Alucard would do at night's end. You know better than anyone how Alucard sustains his unholy power. So tell me - what do you think will happen to the blood of three million souls laying about London? He will absorb them! Sentencing them to an eternity of painful agony! And you have the nerve to question my morality?"

The corners of the Sternritter's mouth pulled into a pleased smirk as the Deus Ex Machina slowly stabilized from the power unleashed by Ryuko Matoi. Already he could see dawning realization in both Integra Hellsing and her pet vampire's eyes. It would seem they indeed failed to comprehend, to understand beyond more than a cursory glance, the sinister power of the creature known as Alucard. Even the vampire's sole protégé, the only other being since his first steps in undeath that fully embraced the same eldritch power, appeared perturbed by the news.

"But I'm afraid I'm not here to debate the question of morality," the Sternritter mused, folding his hands together and leaning backwards in the chair, "For as we speak Ragyo Kiryuin is undoubtedly leading the attack against those opposing her plans - the trained soldiers of Nudist Beach, the spiritually aware inhabitants of Karakura Town, shinigami or otherwise, but most importantly Isshin Kurosaki. The only man on earth that possesses the ability to defeat the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin once and for all!"

---

...

---

"I see your injuries haven't slowed you down at all, Iscariot!"

Alucard's accented voice betrayed the exhilaration coursing through his veins when the swordswoman parried his onslaught without fail, showers of sparks illuminating the darkened streets as her blade clashed multiple times against his own weapon. The corner of his mouth curling into a half-smirk when he was forced to twist sideways to avoid Yumiko's sudden counterattack, her sword coming precariously close to piercing his throat, Alucard's smirk widened when a wet sensation trailed down his cheek, a small rivulet of blood oozing from the freshly opened wound. It would seem Alexander Anderson's speech bolstered the swordswoman's spirits, eliminating the last traces of doubt in her mind.

"Yes..."

Wisps of burning shadows flickered from the edges of the vampire's tattered cloak as he leapt backwards to avoid Yumiko's continued assault, blue trails of light arcing inches behind the katana in her hands. The confident smirk stretching across his face growing when the paladin darted forward faster than he anticipated and slammed her weapon against his sword with enough force to send a metallic echo reverberating through the hollow streets, Alucard's eyes widened in unparalleled excitement at the way her arms trembled, "Despite your wounds you continue to challenge me! To drive your blade through my heart!"

Dark torrents of spiritual energy burst from Alucard's broadsword following his exuberant proclamation. Gripping the handle of his blade tightly with both hands as he swung against Yumiko's katana with enough power to send her skidding several meters backwards, her guard momentarily broken from the sheer strength behind the strike, the vampire was stopped from pressing the advantage when several smoke bombs detonated at his feet. Ah... so it seemed Alexander Anderson finally decided to strike. His smirk widening in amusement right before he vanished into shadows, avoiding the bayonets poised to pierce through the separation in his armor's plating, Alucard could not help but laugh excitedly upon rematerializing in the air above the nudist commander.

With his crimson eyes glowing ominously in the shadows he swung his blade downwards at the former paladin, intent on vertically cleaving the man in half. As thick fissures rippled down the heavily damaged street, causing dust and smoke to rise upwards into the night, Alucard felt his pulse quicken at the lack of blood and visceral coating the ground. Anderson had actually managed to avoid the attack. In his grievously wounded state no less. Despite his weakening condition, which continued growing worse by the minute, the man somehow tracked his movements and avoided the attack.

Excellent .

"You continue to impress me, Alexander Anderson," Alucard commented, dust clinging to the broadsword as he pulled it out of the ground. Turning his attention to the swordswoman and nudist commander standing quite some distance away, their labored breathing audible to his ears, the vampire's mouth slowly curled into a sly smirk, "I was under the impression that a man of your stature would be above such dishonorable tactics."

Anderson's breath came out in nearly ragged pants, a thin trail of blood oozing from his hairline, as his boots scrapped to a halt against the pavement. The numbness slowly spreading throughout his body was growing worse. He was already having difficulty feeling his fingers. Soon, perhaps in only a few minutes, the loss of sensation will travel the rest of the way up his arm, ending at the wound he received from the Quincy. Once he finished dealing with the vampire, sending his blackened soul to the pits of hell and denying that cowardly king of the Quincy whatever he was planning, he would seek medical attention.

He almost smirked at the notion of Orihime Inoue using her miraculous powers to heal his wounds.

The trembling plaguing his fingers vanished at the vampire's word, "A monster has no right to talk about honor. I am a commander of Nudist Beach, a sworn member of the bulwark standing firm against Ragyo Kiryuin and her eldritch ilk."

"With that being said..." Anderson's voice trailed off as he slowly crossed the tailor bayonets in front of his body, "Let us have a fair and cowardly battle."

Standing several feet to the right of the former paladin, fingers subconsciously tightening around the blessed katana, Yumiko felt a shiver ripple down her spine. She hadn't heard that phrase for over three years. Not since that fiend personally visited Harobaro House.

At the Kobe Orphanage, before Ragyo Kiryuin's monstrous actions twisted him into a murderer, Anderson had constantly regaled them with stories of his exploits in Iscariot. He went into great detail about the various abominations he'd slain throughout the years, ranging from masked creatures to eldritch monsters residing in the darkest corners of reality that could drive men insane with but a glance. Although he'd heavily sanitized his stories to prevent the younger children from having nightmares there was one important tenet Anderson drove into their minds. An idea a few of her fellow orphans took to heart more than others.

There was no such thing as honorable combat.

It was a fallacy. A well-wrapped lie created by men who had never stood on the front lines against the monsters relentlessly seeking to destroy humanity. The only point of battle was making sure you were the only one standing at the end. Even if that meant stabbing your opponent when his back was turned or using an equally cowardly tactic, as long as you didn't betray your comrades or endangered innocent lives everything was fair game.

"Follow my lead, Anderson," Yumiko scoffed while sliding her right foot backwards, darkened eyes glaring venomously at the vampire, "You know how many centuries the Vatican has waited to kill Alucard!"

Anderson nodded in acknowledgement at Yumiko before turning his undivided attention onto the waiting vampire. He knew better than perhaps anyone how long the Catholic Church has striven to kill the undead monster, to wipe the soul-devouring abomination off the face of the earth. At one time he would have gladly allowed Yumiko to strike the finishing blow against the vampire. But this was no time for such courtesies against a monster like Alucard. Especially since he was all but certain Ragyo Kiryuin was waiting in the wings.

"Well said..."

An aura of constantly flickering darkness surrounded Alucard as he tightly gripped his broadsword with both hands and raised it skyward, the ancient blade shimmering in the crimson moonlight. Yes... it was here, in this dead and forsaken city, where the heavy weight of his past will finally shatter under his rapidly oncoming future. Not even that man a century ago filled his black heart with such exhilaration. He could feel it down in the depths of his expansive soul - these humans would be the ones who finally granted him that which he sought after for all this time.

"Now..." the vampire's voice deepened as he swept his arm outwards, mouth twisted into an amused smirk, "... allow me to return the favor!"

The former paladin barely had a moment to register the meaning behind Alucard's words before spiritual energy exploded from the vampire, disintegrating the ground beneath his feet in burning darkness. Hunched over slightly as he struggled to remain upright under the heavy but intangible weight pressing down upon his shoulders, Anderson's eyes widened when the vampire took a single deliberate step forward before promptly vanishing. Instinctively throwing himself to the side less than a second before Alucard's blade crashed into the spot he'd just been standing, sending up an eruption of dirt and pulverized asphalt into the air, the nudist commander quickly leapt back onto his feet and summoned two new bayonets into his clenched hands.

It was greatly concerning that something like Alucard, who was capable of subsuming an entire city with naught but their own power, could have missed. But that was not what truly bothered Anderson at the moment. He was effectively blind in the wake of the vampire's attack, the dust floating in the air burning his throat and causing his vision to blur. It would be the perfect opportunity for the vampire to kill him. So for Alucard to forego taking the initiative, especially when he was already halfway to death's door, could mean only one thing.

He wasn't the vampire's target.

Alucard's expression betrayed the overwhelming insanity lingering just beneath the surface when he emerged from the smokescreen enveloping the nudist commander, wisps of dust clinging to his tattered cloak. His crimson eyes narrowing when he noticed the swordswoman was only a few feet away, her blessed blade gleaming brightly in the crimson moonlight as she thrust it straight towards his heart, the vampire waited until the weapon was nearly pressed against his chest before vanishing in a flourish of shadows. Grinning madly when he reappeared behind the paladin, darkness wafting from his broadsword as he tightly gripped it with a single hand, Alucard didn't hesitate before swinging it towards Yumiko's neck.

A metallic screeching echoed loudly through the streets, shattering whatever windows still remained intact, when Alucard found his broadsword halted by the swordswoman's hastily raised blade. Surprise turning into adulation at the paladin's quick reaction to his attack, the vampire chuckled and pushed down upon her faintly glowing blade with just a little more power and shattered it.

Shards of specially forged metal shimmered brightly in the crimson moonlight around a heavily shocked Yumiko before the darkness wrapped around Alucard's broadsword exploded inches from her body. Violently launched backwards through the air by the overwhelming force of the spiritual explosion, parts of her uniform torn while burning wounds covered her arms, she was saved from slamming into the ground when Anderson threw himself into her path. Bayonets lying forgotten upon the street as he protectively wrapped his arms around the unconscious paladin, boots skidding dozens of meters before sliding to a halt, he stared melancholically at Yumiko's current condition.

"Damn it..."

Anderson seethed out a rare curse as he gently laid Yumiko down upon the ground before quickly checking her pulse. It was strong and steady, which meant she wasn't suffering from any unseen injuries. His breath growing increasingly ragged as he struggled back onto his feet, beads of sweat trickling down his face, Anderson ignored the blood still oozing from his injured shoulder and turned around. Despite the nearly complete numbness throughout his left arm, any residual feelings he might have lost under the pain, he still managed to flex his fingers and summon a new pair of tailor bayonets. But it was nothing more than a feint. He no longer had the strength necessary to engage the vampire in combat.

Which meant the outcome of this battle rested entirely upon Heinkel doing what needed to be done.

"You still wish to fight?"

Alucard couldn't help but proudly smirk at the exhausted nudist commander's determination to continue fighting despite the growing odds. It was obvious the man could barely stand under his own power. Any normal human would have long succumbed to such debilitating wounds. Their minds unable to resist the tantalizing embrace of death. Yet this man refused to surrender, to lay down his arms and die like a dog. Yes... Alexander Anderson was a man worthy of respect! A paragon of humanity whose iron will never once faltered during this long and arduous battle.

"Or perhaps you are waiting upon Wolfe?"

There it was - the subtle stiffening of Anderson's shoulders upon his mentioning of the missing paladin. It was arrogant of the humans to believe he would not notice one of them was absent for nearly half the battle. And while Wolfe's constant vanishing acts had greatly piqued his interest, the point of their plan eluded him. What purpose would a surprise attack be at this point when the swordswoman was lying unconscious on the ground, her body nearly broken, and Anderson was barely able to stand?

"Yes... your plan was dependent on Wolfe doing something. Was it not?"

The vampire's antiquated armor clanked softly with every step as he slowly marched towards Anderson, broadsword held lazily to his side. Crimson eyes narrowing slightly in veiled interest while faint screams could be heard on the horizon, Alucard's cloak billowed ominously as he added, "Perhaps she is still waiting for a signal? Go ahead, Anderson. Muster up your last dredges of energy and summon her! Make your final stand!"

Anderson's expression remained completely passive as the darkness enveloping the edges of his vision receded. He refused to give the vampire what he wanted. Deliberately glancing at the surrounding buildings, which undoubtedly garnered the vampire's attention, his breathing steadied as he replied in a polite tone, "Yer offer is tempting, vampire. So allow me to respond with two pieces of information. One - do not presume ye have the power to order me around. I would rather die than listen to the filth that spews from yer mouth."

An amused expression pulled at the edges of Alucard's mouth, "And the second?"

"Two..." the nudist commander's tattered cassock fluttered lightly in the breeze as the barest trace of a smirk appeared on his face, "... fighting ye to the death was never the plan."

Alucard's eyes narrowed at Anderson's threat before something on the edge of his vision caught his attention. Dawning realization cross his features when he spotted a strange device anchored upon the building directly to his right, clawed metallic talons digging sharply into the concrete, the vampire's already pleased smirk grew rapturously at the ingenuity of his opponents before the Anti-Life Fiber Laser Tripwires Mark 2.9 on either side of the street sensed an obstruction blocking their connection. In the following instant an intense beam of blue light burst from the devices and Alucard, who was standing between them, vanished, vaporized under temperatures far in excess of the sun's surface.

Fingers tightly clenching his furiously bleeding shoulder as he cautiously watched what remained of the legendary vampire blow away in the breeze, Anderson sighed in relief when it became apparent Alucard was not coming back. Heh... the abomination actually fell for their trap without any provocation. For a moment he had been convinced the vampire wouldn't trigger the weapon, that all of their effort had been for naught. But there was no point worrying about hypothetical situations. The plan had gone off without a hitch.

Even in the paranoid depths of his mind Anderson didn't see Alucard regenerating from nothing .

"Anderson!"

The nudist commander was pulled from his thoughts when Heinkel Wolfe shouted out his name before leaping from the second floor of a nearby building. Landing in a crouch only a few feet away from Anderson, boots crunching against shattered glass, the paladin grunted as she stood up and looked at the now-smoking devices with newfound respect. These were standard issue Nudist Beach weaponry? She didn't think even Iscariot, who had access to the billions of dollars locked away in the Vatican's coffers, could develop such devastating technology. If they did, she was damn sure Maxwell would have arrogantly flaunted such designs in front of Integra Hellsing.

Looking away when the device spontaneously exploded in a shower of blinding sparks, the acrid smell of burning chemicals faintly reminding her of laundry, Heinkel stiffened when she saw Yumiko lying unconscious on the ground with burns covering most of her upper body. Verdammt! She spent too much time setting up Anderson's weapons and allowed the vampire to nearly kill her partner. It was fortunate for Anderson the plan worked otherwise she would have killed the man herself, Alucard be damned.

"God damn it, Anderson," Heinkel rushed over to the former paladin when he knees suddenly buckled from exhaustion. Managing to catch Anderson right before he could collapse to the ground, she wrapped his good arm around her shoulders and scoffed, "Just what the hell kind of weapon was that?"

"Nudist Beach technology at its finest."

The bayonets in Anderson's hands clattered against the pavement as the last of his strength left him. Breathing heavily as he reluctantly relied upon Heinkel for support, he frowned before grunting, "The Anti-Life Fiber Laser Tripwire Mark 2.9. Designed by Aikuro to emit a Calcium Hypochlorite beam, disintegrating anything in their path. The name might be a mouthful but they get the job done..."

Anderson paused and spat out some more blood. He didn't mention that Aikuro's invention had a few kinks that needed to be worked out. While violently exploding in a flash of light after a single use was the most noticeable defect, a far more serious limitation was that the beam was quite narrow. Which meant the target would need to stand in a very specific place for the weapon to work. And experience has demonstrated that Ragyo Kiryuin was anything but stupid. Monster or not, she would never walk into such an obvious trap.

With more strength than a man in his condition should be capable of achieving Anderson pulled his arm away from Heinkel's shoulders, his footsteps momentarily faltering before he managed to regain his balance. Cutting off the paladin's protests with nothing more than a slight scowl, upon which she nodded and quickly went to check on Yumiko, he turned away and glowered at what little ash remained on the street. It was strange. Although not a trace remained of the vampire's terrible presence, the constant sense of subdued dread gone, the unnatural darkness plaguing the city, including the crimson moon in the sky, remained. Perhaps they were simply effects that would dissipate over time, slowly dissipating until things returned to relative normalcy.

"Ye needn't worry about Yumiko," Anderson didn't need to turn around to know Heinkel's concern over her fallen friend, "She was merely caught upon the edge of an explosion. Her wounds aren't nearly as severe as they appear."

Heinkel didn't acknowledge Anderson's comment as she knelt next to Yumiko and carefully examined her friend's injuries, the copious burns covering the swordswoman's chest and arms rather concerning. Sighing in relief when she didn't find anything worse than several broken bones and second-degree burns, which are easily treatable by the Vatican's medical division, she ran a hand through her straw-blonde hair while suppressing an exhausted yawn. Now wasn't the time for rest. Alucard might have finally been destroyed after more than five centuries of terror but there were still a few things they needed to address.

But before any of that they needed to deal with the Quincy.

"Destroying the Quincy will be difficult, Anderson," Heinkel reluctantly confessed while turning towards the nudist, "And there's still the matter of what happened to Maxwell..."

Anderson briefly stiffened before replying, "Ryuko and Ichigo are more than powerful enough to deal with the Quincy."

It was fortunate he witnessed Integra Hellsing's departure alongside her other pet vampire after the Quincy's aerial bombardment leveled several city blocks. While the children might be powerful thanks to the unholy Life Fibers composing their bodies and Kamui, they refused to kill. Integra Hellsing, on the other hand, possessed no such moral compunctions. She would order her vampires to slaughter the Quincy, violently massacring their entire army, without the slightest hint of hesitation. With any luck she's already butchered that Sternritzer and begun helping Ichigo and Ryuko finish off the rest of the Jahrtausendarmee.

"As for Maxwell... for the time being we should consider the Vatican lost," Anderson ignored Heinkel's astonishment to his supposedly blasphemous statement as he slowly marched forward. Coughing up blood while his vision briefly swam, he clenched his teeth tightly and continued, "The only way to safely liberate those who have been enslaved by Life Fibers is to kill the one responsible for ensnaring their minds. We need to eliminate the very source of the corruption."

Heinkel's straw-blonde hair shifted slightly in the breeze as she contemplated the former paladin's words. It seemed her initial assumptions in the wake of Maxwell's inglorious death were correct after all. The only way to save those controlled by Life Fibers, whose bodies have become nothing more than puppets dancing on strings, was to kill Ragyo Kiryuin. But with Maxwell gone she was now the highest-ranking officer in Iscariot aside from Father Renaldo. It fell upon her shoulders to gather those that survived the battle and bring the fight directly to Revocs.

Grimacing at the notion of fighting yet another eldritch abomination, one much worse than Alucard in some regards, she silently reached into her cassock when she noticed Anderson walking away, "I'm sorry, Anderson, but I can't let you leave."

As the former paladin turned slightly and looked over his shoulder, gaze steady and defiant despite his deteriorating condition, Heinkel sighed and rubbed the bridge of her nose. Did he actually think she would drag him back to the Vatican in chains now of all times? Grumbling angrily into the palm of her hand while hastily removing a cell phone from the depths of her cassock, the casing slightly dented from the battle but still useable, she huffed, "Verdammt! Don't be so damn stubborn, Anderson! You're literally dying! At least let Iscariot's medical division look at your wounds!"

Anderson's frown lessened as he wiped a hand against his bloody mouth, "There's a GPS chip woven into my collar. And it shouldn't be long before Aikuro's done informing Olivier about the Quincy. Once he's finished, we'll rendezvous with Batou and the children before heading back to Karakura Town."

Heinkel arched a single eyebrow in confusion, "Karakura Town?"

"There's a young woman that possesses quite the unique ability," Anderson momentarily paused at the memory of Orihime Inoue's true abilities, which he personally observed in the aftermath of the Great Culture and Sports Festival. Healing the wounds from during his scuffle with Armstrong was one thing, but regenerating the gaping wound in Satsuki Kiryuin's abdomen in seconds was entirely different, "She can heal even the most grievous of injuries, flesh knitting back together in seconds. Now grab Yumiko and follow me.

Bethnal Green is only a few blocks from here. Let's just hope someone managed to force Aikuro to wear pants."

Heinkel's eyes widened in disbelief when Anderson scoffed under his breath and began marching away, his boots crunching against the scattered debris. She didn't think people were even capable of possessing such miraculous powers. Frowning in thought as she carefully wrapped an arm underneath Yumiko's neck, the paladin carefully picked her partner off the ground before asking, "Hang on, Anderson. What is this girl's -"

The rest of her question died as nothing more than a strangled gasp when an enormous burst of dense spiritual energy exploded throughout the city. Nearly brought to her knees by the eruption of power while Anderson was forced to stab a bayonet into the ground for support, Heinkel grimaced as she struggled to stand under the phantasmal weight pressing down on every inch of her body. As beads of sweat dripped freely down her face, muscles quivering under the increasing pressure, she could only watch in abject horror as shadows swirled out of nothing, mind completely blank when the writhing darkness rapidly coalesced into a familiar form.

Reappearing in the middle of the street with a single ominous step, darkness clinging to his tattered cloak, Alucard's face twisted into a disappointed scowl, "It seems your trump card did not work, Alexander Anderson."

The permeating silence that followed his declaration, the expressions of utter disbelief etched upon Anderson and Wolfe's faces at his continuing survival, caused the vampire to gaze suspiciously at the humans. Did the failings of a single weapon completely destroy their motivation to bring about his demise? Instead of staring in confusion they should be charging forward! Intent on resuming the battle! Sneering contemptuously at the notion that his nemeses were unable to grant him the one thing he desired above all else, that their strength was still not enough, Alucard narrowed his eyes before vanishing in a burst of speed, crimson moonlight reflecting off his broadsword as he rushed towards Anderson without abandon.

In the blink of an eye the vampire easily tore through the nudist commander's hastily constructed defenses, the man's token resistance shattering into shards of metal under the intense assault. Shadows dancing across the ground as he relentlessly pressed forward while the broken remains of Anderson's bayonet rained downwards around him, Alucard could not help but feel cheated. Where was the agility the nudist displayed only a few minutes ago? Even in his wounded state the man had been able to dodge his attacks with impunity. Yet now he faltered under such a trivial strike?

A hiss of annoyance escaped from between Alucard's lips at the answer. With an arm tucked inside the billowing folds of his tattered cloak while he angrily shifted one foot outwards, the vampire did not hesitate in the slightest when he thrust forward and impaled his opponent upon his tarnished blade.

"ANDERSON!"

"Your weapon did not work," Alucard's voice was strained as he watched the life quickly drain from Anderson, Wolfe's shouting fading into the background. There was an emptiness building within his soul, a sensation colder than the touch of death. The man dying upon his weapon had been a worthy adversary, someone possessing the willpower to fight until the bitter end without compromising his humanity.

"Do you understand, Anderson? Iscariot?!"

The vampire's frustration was made apparent when he ignobly pulled his weapon from Anderson's body, the nudist lurching before limply collapsing onto the street. With his mouth twisting into a sneer at the hollow victory, the notion that even a man such as Alexander Anderson could not kill him, Alucard turned his gaze towards Wolfe only to find the paladin aiming her pistol at his heart, an expression of pure rage etched onto her face.

His form wavering as he slowly marched towards the paladin, antiquated armor bleeding into shadows until he was once more in his normal state, Alucard quirked a single eyebrow at Wolfe's determination. Boots echoing loudly while the Casull and Jackal slid into his waiting hands, the vampire's tone shifted when he spoke, "How interesting. Even after watching Anderson bleed to death, impaled upon my blade, you still wish to fight me, Wolfe?"

For several seconds Alucard's full attention was solely focused upon Wolfe's weapon aimed squarely at his heart. It would take little more than a simple squeeze of her finger to send the blessed round into his body. Yet she stayed her hand, refraining herself from attacking. He couldn't understand her reasoning, the logic behind such an insane choice. Frowning at Wolfe's strange behavior, the late autumn wind blowing through the street causing his overcoat to rustle slightly, Alucard narrowed his eyes when he noticed an extremely subtle shift in the paladin's expression. Quickly becoming aware of a presence rising behind him, weapons snapping upwards to deal with the threat, the vampire gasped in genuine surprise when an intimately familiar nail was thrust straight into his heart.

"Go to... Hell ye... undead... bastard..."

Blood spewed from the gaping hole in Anderson's chest as he weakly collapsed backwards onto the ground, fingers slowly slipping away from the holy artifact. As darkness tinted the edges of his vision, the sound of Alucard's demented voice distant and faint, the former paladin began chuckling. Although he was dying, his life slipping further away with every passing second, the nudist managed to get the last laugh. With his final breaths, he made sure the children would be safe from the vampire.

The Nail of Helena was perhaps the most dangerous artifact in the Vatican's possession, obtained through methods and rites nobody quite remembered. In the hands of the righteous it was a weapon of last resort. Only to be used in the direst of circumstances, when all other options had failed. But in the wrong hands, if something like Ragyo Kiryuin's servant were waiting in the shadows, it would undoubtedly lead to humanity's destruction. There would be no telling what a foul abomination like that woman could achieve with it.

Which is why he had snuck back in the midst of the battle and recovered it.

He'd originally planned to give the artifact to Kisuke Urahara upon their return to Karakura Town. Maxwell's ultimate fate was far more than a tragedy. It was proof positive that the Vatican had been compromised to its highest levels. His Holiness and the conclave subsumed by Life Fibers. And since Heinkel had willingly broken the seal placed upon the Nail of Helena, returning it to Section III would be the same as directly handing it to Ragyo Kiryuin, an unacceptable risk. However, it was Alucard's recovery from nothingness that inspired him to come up with a different use for it instead.

Perhaps it was fitting that a monstrous weapon be used to defeat a monstrous existence like Alucard.

"One... down..." Anderson's voice was barely above a whisper as the light faded from his eyes, "Two... to... go..."

Seething angrily at the fallen nudist commander, frustration and contempt building upon his face, Alucard snarled as he gripped the artifact lodged firmly in his heart. Fangs grinding against each other as he removed it in a shower of visceral and blood, the thing continuing to emit its detestable spiritual energy the entire time, the vampire stared at the nail in confusion before shattering it out of existence. Alexander Anderson's effort, the culmination of his indomitable human will condensed into one final unpredictable strike, should have killed him. The nail's power should have burned his body from the inside out, rendering him nothing more than an empty husk. Yet it had been just as ineffective as a wooden stake - futile and useless.

"You... you FOOL!"

An unmistakably human agony permeated Alucard's voice as he stood angrily over Anderson's body, crimson eyes burning with barely controlled rage, "Even with the Nail of Helena you couldn't kill me! You achieved NOTHING! All of this was completely POINTLESS! All of your planning led to nothing more than an early death, Alexander Anderson!"

---

...

---

"And thus the tale of Alexander Anderson comes to its inevitable end..."

The conniving smirk never left the Major's face as he watched the nudist commander perish. Turning away from the screens when the battle moved onto the final act, the disappointed look upon Alucard's face sickening, he chuckled at Integra Hellsing's shifting expression before continuing, "Even after throwing everything he possessed at the vampire, pulling out plan after plan, the concept of victory eluded him! Forever out of his reach! For he was merely human... and no human could ever hope to destroy a monster like Alucard!"

A series of cascading explosions in the distance physically shook the Deus Ex Machina moments after the Sternritter dramatically finished speaking, the aircraft immediately listing to the right as it began losing altitude. Hands clasped tightly behind his back as he turned away from the woman and her pet vampire, the dozens of empty monitoring stations throughout the command center displaying countless errors and warnings, the Major dramatically held his arms outwards and declared, "But such power! One cannot help but stand in awe at the power of such a marvelous weapon! The pinnacle of human technology clashing against a creature so inhuman that his mere presence disrupts the barrier between life and death! And yet... it failed. Do you know why, fraulein?"

Integra Hellsing tried to ignore the image of Alexander Anderson's broken body displayed upon the screens. While troubling, the nudist had been an unfortunate casualty of Alucard's orders to purge London of invading forces. She did not understand why he'd eagerly thrown himself headfirst against her servant, especially after nearly dying against a Quincy back at the manor. Yet Anderson had shown no hesitation in rushing into battle alongside those paladins from Iscariot the moment he returned to the city.

"I'm through playing this little game."

A few strands of platinum blonde hair fell in front of Integra's eyes as she angrily stepped forward, the previous train of thought pushed to the back of her mind for the moment. It was obvious the Major was stalling. Yet his reason for doing so eluded her. The only ones who could possibly benefit from such a tactic were Seras and herself. Narrowing her eyes while standing only inches from the barrier, the spiritual energy faintly reflecting her image, Integra tightened her grip around the sheathed sword in her hand and barked at the Quincy, "In less than six minutes this barrier will fall, and with it your life. Your stalling is pointless, Quincy."

"Oh, I wouldn't call it stalling..."

Chuckling in amusement at Integra's responding snarl, the Major's glasses shone opaquely as he raised a single hand into the air, "Stalling would imply I had an ulterior motive. That there is another plan in the wings, waiting for the right moment to strike! Let me assure you that I have no such thing! My only purpose at this point is to tell you everything you need to know about the Schatten Ausrufung. So sit back and relax, fraulein. After all, you have the best seat in the house for when the sun dawns upon Alucard for the final time!"

"With that said..."

The Sternritzer trailed off when most of the command center was suddenly cast into darkness, shards of broken glass raining down around them as a surge of electricity shattered more than half of the light fixtures. Brushing some debris from his sleeve before calmly turning off the blaring alarm with a simple click of the remote, the Major clapped his hands together before finishing, "... let us talk about Alucard ."

Fully aware of how the constantly writhing shadows emanating from the vampire's left shoulder twisted at his words, contorting angrily in response to their host's emotional state, he chuckled before sweeping an arm through the air, "During that moment when he seemed defeated... when his corporeal form vanished into dust... you were concerned! Shocked! And why wouldn't you be? Witnessing one of the most powerful beings in all of existence, your vaunted family servant, disintegrate into nothingness would render even a hardened soldier speechless! Yet that girl standing to your right wasn't worried in the slightest..."

Seras stiffened when the Quincy shifted the focus of the conversation onto her shoulders before clenching her remaining hand and answering, "It's hard to explain, Master Integra. But when Master disappeared I felt in the depths of my soul that he was unharmed. That Mister Anderson's weapon failed to kill him."

"Such an interesting conundrum. How could Seras Victoria have known Alucard did not perish?"

Arrogance dripped from the Major's every word as he pointed a finger at Integra and exclaimed, "The answer is simple, fraulein! She and Alucard are cast from the same mold! Two beings linked to the same source!"

With the press of a single button the wall of screens flashed before shifting to Alucard standing injured but victorious over Heinkel Wolfe, the paladin gasping for breath while blood streamed down her face. Sweeping his arms outwards, yellow eyes shimmering with manic glee, the Sternritter stared directly into Integra's eyes before continuing, "It is insufficient to call these beings vampires ! By consuming both blood and soul they increase their power! Growing stronger with every fallen opponent!"

Integra refrained herself from shooting the barrier as she angrily spat, "What is the point of all this?"

"The point, you say?"

The Quincy's smug laughter reverberated throughout the chamber as he sat back down, hands folded neatly across his chest, "The point, my dear fraulein, is that when Seras Victoria absorbed a single soul, her power nearly doubled! Enabling her to overwhelm Zorin Blitz's Vollständig through nothing more than brute force! Just one soul placed her upon the same pedestal as His Majesty's greatest soldiers! So tell me..."

An unnatural silence enveloped the entire chamber when the Major leaned forward and asked, "Why is it that Alucard, whose body still contains over one million souls, appears to be fighting at the level of a mere human ?"

---

...

---

"Stand and fight, Wolfe!"

The Casull and Jackal quivered in Alucard's fingers as the vampire loomed over the heavily injured paladin, his body silhouetted in shadows against the crimson moon hovering lazily in the darkened sky. A strangled snarl tearing its way out of his throat when Wolfe showed no desire to stand, seemingly content to continue kneeling at his feet, Alucard released his weapons into the surrounding darkness before harshly grabbing the paladin's cassock. Furiously pulling Wolfe back onto her feet, the vampire growled, "Will you let a few broken bones and a punctured lung stop you from fighting? Do you intend to die like a dog, praying to God for another scrap of miracle, or will you stand on your feet once more?!"

With a contemptuous sneer the vampire released his grip upon the paladin. His face immediately twisting in disappointment when Wolfe staggered backwards before barely managing to regain her balance, blood dripping from the corner of her mouth, Alucard clenched his teeth when he noticed the pistol held limply in the paladin's heavily burnt fingers. How dare she admit defeat! Her injuries were NOTHING compared to the brutality inflicted upon Anderson! She had yet to be skewered upon a sword, her organs increasingly failing with each passing second! Anderson might have foolishly thrown away his life but he never stopped fighting until his very last breath!

And Wolfe had the audacity to barely stand upon her feet after suffering the mere loss of an arm?

"What are you waiting for?!"

Leaning forward while holding a hand directly over his heart, Alucard's crimson eyes shone brightly in the darkness, "Your greatest chance is at hand! Gather your strength and raise your arm! Regain your conviction, Wolfe, and send a bullet through my heart! Hurry! Do it!"

An expression of unbridled frustration etched itself upon the vampire's face when nearly a full minute passed with Wolfe doing little more than weakly glaring at him. The corners of his mouth twisted into a snarl when she started retching pathetically upon the ground, blood and spittle spewing forth with very ragged breath, Alucard furiously grabbed her cassock once more before bitterly shouting, "Anderson is DEAD! Slain by my VERY HANDS! Iscariot lies scattered in pieces across London! Do you intend to stand around and do nothing, Wolfe? Take vengeance for your fallen comrades! Or do you wish for their souls to become twisted until they're little more than unthinking monsters?"

Heinkel briefly managed to focus at the vampire's last remark, "Why the hell... does it matter... to something like you... vampire ?"

Shadows flickered across the darkened landscape as Alucard's eyes widened in disbelief, Wolfe's confused response causing his anger and frustration to slowly bleed away until there remained nothing but a cold emptiness. Fingers momentarily tightening around the paladin's cassock before he abruptly released her from his grasp, the sudden lack of support nearly causing her to collapse to the ground, conflicting emotions crossed the vampire's face as he melancholically asked, "Wolfe, will you allow this duel... this dance of ours... to end when victory was so nearly within reach? Don't give up. Don't succumb to death when that which you sought for so long stands before you..."

An eternity of time seemed to pass as the vampire waited for Wolfe to recover her strength and step forward, to push herself beyond the point of human limitations and gain the power necessary to finally destroy him. Briefly relieved when the paladin appeared to regain some of her determination, shoulders tensing and eyes refocusing, Alucard's expression quickly twisted in fury when the pistol in Wolfe's hands clattered loudly against the ground.

"Y-You..."

Nauseating waves of spiritual energy oozed from Alucard's body as the true significance of the paladin's actions sunk into his mind. For a brief moment in his eternal existence, when the weight of his immortality had begun pressing down upon his soul once more, he'd thought that humanity had finally produced a warrior with the conviction and willpower to end his torment. Not since that fateful dawn over a hundred years ago, when that man and his associates bested him, had he'd seen even a glimmer of such a human. When he encountered Wolfe and Anderson in rapid succession, both possessing the quantities he respected in abundance, the vampire thought the day he'd awaited for so long was fast approaching.

"You've FAILED, Wolfe!"

Alucard's voice reverberated loudly as he seethed at the paladin, shadows rising from the hem of his overcoat, "YOUR GREATEST CHANCE IS GONE! Vanished like the morning dew upon dawn's approach! You will never be able to kill me! To end my existence once and for all!"

With an animalistic sneer the vampire turned away from Wolfe, unwilling to look upon the human that shattered his long-awaited hopes. As he angrily marched away from the broken woman, the surrounding shadows growing thicker with every footstep, Alucard took solace in the singular notion that Wolfe and Anderson had come closer than even that man did to achieving the impossible. In barely a century humanity managed to produce warriors capable of fighting him at his strongest, to stand before his might without faltering. It was only a matter of time, perhaps even decades, before another group of humans rose to challenge him once again.

Perhaps they would succeed where their predecessors failed.

Trudging slowly through the streets, his boots stepping through blood and visceral dripping from the hundreds of impaled vampirized soldats and crusaders, Alucard's mind focused upon those two children. They had defeated his most powerful souls, inadvertently destroying a large portion of his familiars in the process. The monster girl had utterly destroyed the shinigami's bankai with nothing more than an overpowered variation of the interesting technique she used against him all those nights ago. And the boy, his foolish words still ringing in his ears, had eviscerated the Quincy, his blade vertically bisecting the Sternritter before she could even scream.

An ominous wind tore through the destroyed city as Alucard stomped to a halt in the middle of a blood-soaked intersection. Letting out a deep sigh while slowly raising his right hand, the intricate seal etched upon the back of his glove glowing with a disturbing crimson light, the vampire's solemn voice echoed through the darkness as rivulets of blood slowly began flowing through the streets towards him.

"Now... I shall fulfill the last of your orders, my Master..."

---

...

---

"How disappointing..."

Quilge Opie frowned thoughtfully while slowly lowering the pair of binoculars. Brushing several strands of hair away from his eyes when the biting autumn wind gusting through the belfry suddenly increased, the Sternritter calmly adjusted his spectacles and sighed, "I find myself rather upset with your death, Alexander Anderson. Now far be it for me to hand out criticism, but I assumed a man such as yourself had enough common sense to avoid fighting a monster like Alucard."

Although Nudist Beach's continued military presence within London had come as a surprise to the Jahrtausendarmee, forcing His Majesty to activate several contingencies created for such an unlikely event, Anderson's willingness to engage Alucard made perfect sense. Thanks to Zorin's Täuschung Kaskade backfiring in the most spectacular way imaginable, the nudist commander had gained access to what little information his fellow Sternritter knew about the Schatten Ausrufung's objective. If Anderson had indeed learned enough about the Schatten Ausrufung to piece everything together, his question about Alucard gave credibility to that assumption, dealing with him would have been rather annoying.

His Majesty had been quite specific in his orders - they were not to harm nor kill anyone from Nudist Beach. If he had dealt with the risk posed by Anderson in his usual fashion, any short-term benefits would have been outweighed by the consequences. The knowledge that a Quincy killed the former paladin would have undoubtedly filtered back to Japan. Which would have gained the unwanted attention of Isshin Kurosaki, a man equally as dangerous as Ragyo Kiryuin.

"But you have my sincerest apologies for dying at the hands of such a brutal and atrocious creature..."

The Sternritter trailed off when the repugnant aroma permeating the city suddenly intensified, the smell of decaying flesh almost enough to make even a hardened soldier like himself queasy. His mouth pursed tightly in disgust at the rivers of the blood gushing through the streets, the foul liquid carrying the souls of over three million humans, Quilge turned around while doing his best to ignore Alucard's feeding habits. But before he could head back inside the belfry the Quincy paused when a curious pinprick of crimson light suddenly flickered in the distance. The putrid smell of rotten blood all but forgotten as he raised the binoculars towards the source, he saw to his surprise Ryuko Matoi flying above the city in her Kamui, the garment's nauseating power still detectable despite its weakened condition.

It would seem the extensive Daten gathered on the teenager was woefully antiquated. But considering how quickly Life Fibers were able to evolve in response to stress and dangerous stimuli, such as fighting Alucard for example, he should have expected as much. In any case, Quilge needed to inform His Majesty about this new development upon returning to the Silbern.

Ryuko Matoi should not have been strong enough to defeat that captain.

"Things are proceeding rather smoothly, aren't they?"

Quilge found the binoculars harshly torn from his grasp when Schrodinger emerged from the shadows at his side, the cat-like Quincy grinning mischievously as he tauntingly held the stolen object in front of his face. Not reacting in the slightest when his compatriot laughed before marching to the edge of the belfry, his ears twitching every few seconds as he stared through the binoculars at Ryuko Matoi, Quilge found his attention drawn to the spiritual wings hovering just over Schrodinger's shoulders, the ephemeral appendages flickering every few seconds. How peculiar. He could have sworn Schrodinger hadn't been in Vollständig but a moment ago.

"Let us not get ahead of ourselves."

Carefully smoothing out a rather persistent crease on his sleeve, Quilge took a moment to adjust his spectacles before calmly lecturing, "Although the Schatten Ausrufung is rapidly nearing completion, we mustn't forget that His Majesty cannot predict the actions of creatures like Life Fiber Hybrids."

"I already knew that," Schrodinger interrupted, mildly annoyed when Ryuko vanished from view, "Besides, at this point what could possibly go wrong?"

Quilge couldn't help but frown at his fellow Quincy's particular choice of words, "Ryuko Matoi might have exhausted most of her strength but Ichigo Kurosaki is an entirely different matter. Even after fighting both Bazz-B and our reanimated colleagues he still poses a threat. So it would be wise to remain silent and keep such tempting statements to yourself. We wouldn't want Ichigo to miraculously stumbling upon our location..."

"Ugh!"

The cat-like Sternritter sighed childishly and ran a hand down his face when Quilge continued talking about things he really didn't care about in the slightest. Now that Anderson was dead it was virtually impossible for anyone to stop His Majesty's plans. So why should he worry about Ichigo managing to track his spiritual energy? He was probably too busy trying to find his girlfriend after killing Alhambra and Rip Van Winkle. Besides, it wasn't like anyone could sense him when he wanted to remain hidden. Well, except for -

One of Schrodinger's ears began twitching when he accidentally reminded himself on the single creature that proved capable of doing just that. An annoyed growl leaving his throat as Nui Harime's laughter echoed in his mind like nails on a chalkboard, he huffed before tossing the binoculars over his shoulder. Scratching his cheek in boredom, uncaring of Quilge's responding comment, Schrodinger quickly perked in excitement when the overwhelming spiritual energy enveloping London suddenly shifted, "Heh... it looks like it's almost time!"

Quirking an eyebrow at the excitement in Schrodinger's voice, Quilge frowned when the short-wave radio built into his glasses flared to life accompanied by a burst of static. Pressing a finger against his ear as the voice on the other end informed him that the last preparations were complete, he waited until the connection was severed before clapping his hands and jovially exclaiming, "You are indeed correct! Both Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki are outside the range of interference while Integra Hellsing and Seras Victoria are busy speaking with the Major! The fate of the Schatten Ausrufung rests entirely upon your shoulders! But I must say, you're rather excited about this..."

"Of course! Why wouldn't I be?"

Schrodinger's mouth twisted into a deranged caricature of a smile when a spiritual knife formed between his fingers. Taking a second to marvel at the weapon, the edge sharp enough to cut through flesh and bone, the Sternritzer chuckled darkly and widened his eyes, "After all, this is the only reason His Majesty created me."

---

...

---

The faint whirring of dying machinery lightly echoed throughout the Deus Ex Machina's command center as the Major watched the seemingly infinite rivers of blood gush across the cracked screens. Slowly turning around just as the monitors cycled to Alucard, the vampire's form contorting into an inhuman shape, he motioned politely at the two women patiently standing upon the other side of the barrier, "You must be quite curious about the true purpose of the Schatten Ausrufung. Deny it all you want, fraulein, but I can see the thirst in your eyes. You are craving to know about our plans."

Seemingly content with the responding silence from the young woman, her venomous gaze attempting to bore a hole through his skull, he chuckled lightly and continued, "It all starts with Alucard's

most frightening characteristic - his insatiable appetite for human souls. Taking what was once theirs and making it his own."

A series of explosions rippled throughout the aircraft when one of the engines burst into flames. His increasingly elated expression remaining completely unchanged as klaxons blared in the background, the Major clapped his hands and grinned at the woman, "Alucard grows stronger with every soul. And over the course of centuries, through both conflict and wars, he has become one of the most powerful beings in existence, capable of fighting against the likes of Ragyo Kiryuin. However, this seemingly invincible technique possesses a singular weakness..."

"You're referring to his regeneration."

Even though she was internally boiling with rage, the desire to eviscerate the Quincy growing stronger with every passing second, Integra Hellsing made a considerable effort to keep her voice perfectly level. She would not allow this deranged madman the pleasure. Glaring venomously at the Sternritzer hiding like a coward on the other side of the barrier, her mind counting down the seconds until the damnable wall shattered, she narrowed her eyes and derisively scoffed, "Do not take me for a fool, Quincy. I am fully aware of what you refer to as my servant's weakness. But you must truly be insane if you think you can destroy all of Alucard's familiars."

"It would seem you are not quite as well informed as you believe, fraulein."

The Major leaned forward just enough for the ambient lighting to reflect ominously off his glasses, "Alucard's regeneration has nothing to do with his familiars..."

Ah... and there was what he had waited so long to witness. The expression of unadulterated shock spreading across Integra Hellsing's features, the way her pet vampire stiffened while her mind tried making sense of his words. Dramatically clutching both hands tightly in front of his face, the Major's ecstatic voice was full of passion when he finally continued, "For over four hundred years Alucard has been playing the world for a fool! Convincing humanity that he possesses several weaknesses! That a human can defeat him! Utter nonsense! It is a charade played against both victim and perpetrator! Alucard's familiars are nothing more than fuel for his unholy power!"

An ear-wrenching screech punctuated the Major's words as the Deus Ex Machina scraped against several buildings, the impact cutting a jagged gash in the aircraft before it managed to regain some altitude. Turning around while the command center continued to shake, a simple press of the remote shifting the images on the screens to Alucard, the Major stared at the solemn expression etched onto the vampire's face and smirked, "Every time Alucard sacrifices a soul he loses access to its stolen power. And therein lies the inherent beauty of his weakness, my dear fraulein. But in normal circumstances such knowledge is useless! For what are a few dozen souls compared to over a million? Even if one possessed a power akin to that of a god, it would be impossible to destroy every single one of Alucard's familiars!"

Integra did not miss the emphasis the Quincy put upon his words, "So your plan was to force my hand? To give the order for Alucard to remove the last of his restraints?"

"By ordering Alucard to slaughter your enemies, granting him the authority to do whatever he wished, you exposed his weakness to the world," the Sternritzer's smirk widened when Integra furiously gnashed her teeth, the realization that she played into his hands breaking through her last bastions of self-control. His attention momentarily drawn to Seras Victoria as a miasma of spiritual energy radiated from her body, the aura threatening to swallow his very soul, he spread his arms outwards and announced, "And for that I thank you! For your actions led to Alucard's three most powerful souls falling upon the battlefield!"

A reverberating eruption of power echoed throughout the chamber as Seras Victoria, growing sick and tired of the Major, vanished in a burst of speed before slamming her clawed left hand against the barrier. Her mouth twisting into an angry sneer upon failing to break through the technique, the mere contact enough to cause the darkness composing the facsimile of a limb to evaporate. Seras growled at the smirk on the Quincy's face. She couldn't stand hearing his damnable voice any longer! She didn't care if he was telling the truth or not about Master. All that mattered was making him pay for every life he took!

"That's enough, Seras..."

The Sternritter couldn't help but watch in veiled amusement when Integra Hellsing managed to bring her servant to heel with only three words. Calmly reaching into the pocket of his uniform as the vampire's anger dissipated, her missing arm rapidly regenerating from tendrils of darkness, the Major's glasses shimmered opaquely when he pulled out the remote and pressed a button, causing Alucard to flicker before shifting into two new images. On the right was Ichigo flying through the skies over London, a conflicted expression clearly visible on his face, while on the left Ryuko sat with her back against a rooftop, her chest rising and falling with exhaustion.

"Those children might have bested Alucard's greatest soldiers but I'm afraid the vampire is still far too powerful to defeat."

Folding his hands together as he sat down, the chair creaking under his weight, the Major tilted his head slightly to the side before continuing, "Even with the decimation of his army, reduced to a mere third of its former glory, defeating Alucard is impossible! He is not some wild beast or Hollow, a simple creature that functions solely upon instinct! For Alucard is able to see through his familiars, allowing him to witness the destruction of his army! Alucard... learns... from his mistakes! Rendering the most powerful attacks ineffective after but a single strike! This insurmountable challenge has kept me awake for many nights. For how would one go about defeating such an inhuman monster?"

Without saying another word the Sternritter leaned backwards in the chair and pressed another button on the remote. Hands clasped across his chest when Schrodinger appeared on the wall of screens behind him, the cat-like Quincy grinning madly while holding a spiritual knife against his throat, the Major showed no outward reaction when his compatriot suddenly sliced into his own flesh. Faintly amused by the horrified gasp that emanated from the vampire when Schrodinger severed his own head, blood spraying through the air while his body collapsed like a puppet without strings, he chuckled quietly and turned his attention to Integra Hellsing.

For in just a few moments the real show would begin.

The moment Schrodinger's headless corpse vanished underneath the chaotic darkness and shadows, the blue-white light of his Vollständig disappearing as the Quincy was subsumed by the ocean of blood, an unnatural sensation pulsed across London. Beginning as nothing more than a flickering spot only a few inches in diameter, the roiling liquid surrounding the Sternritter's final descent grew increasingly transparent before fading completely out of existence.

"You..." Integra's voice nearly failed as she watched the corruption the corruption spreading through the ruined city, her eyes widening in abject horror, "What have you done?!"

"It all starts with a Sternritter named Schrodinger..."

Purposely ignoring the world-shattering events transpiring across the screens at his back, the Major shrugged his shoulders before continuing, "Every Sternritter in His Majesty's army must prove themselves worthy of the position. Some soldats prove themselves upon the battlefield. Others possess a certain degree of skill or talent. His Majesty considers all possible criteria. However, Schrodinger was none of those things! For unlike you and I, he was not born but created ! Crafted from His Majesty's very soul! He was a homunculus in the guise of a Quincy! For a normal soul could never withstand the glorious power that is "The Uncertainary!"

Snarling impotently as she watched the corruption reach her servant, hundreds of eyes rapidly blinking into existence upon his form, Integra growled, "The Uncertainary?"

"You sound confused, fraulein. Surely you don't need me to spell it out for you..."

The Major leaned backwards as he patiently waited for Integra Hellsing's rather brilliant mind to piece together the overarching scope of his words. Smirking when realization finally dawned upon his adversary, the anger and frustration quickly replaced by horror, he sighed in contentment before continuing, "Schrodinger lived in a superposition between 'existence and nonexistence.' He was the paradoxical cat! Both everywhere and nowhere! For as long as he retained his sense of self... his individuality... Schrodinger's soul would reject reality, reverting to a previous state upon death! A most glorious power... but it is only in Vollständig that 'The Uncertainary' reaches its logical evolution!"

"MASTER!"

The loud snap of the Major's fingers reverberated ominously across the command center as Seras Victoria watched her master stumble forward, waves of darkness oozing forth from his body. Staring proudly at the end result of decades of planning, the countless sacrifices made by His Majesty over the years finally bearing fruit, the Sternritzer smirked maliciously and chuckled, "Reality is nothing more than an illusion, callously thrown away upon our deaths. Schrodinger's Vollständig takes this singular notion to the extreme, twisting the focus of 'The Uncertainary' from himself onto others. Alucard's existence might be immutable, an unchanging variable of the world, but his familiars are a different story. By throwing his dying essence into the mouth of the beast, Schrodinger has infected the vampire with a quantum paradox!"

"And that, my dear fraulein, was the purpose of the Schatten Ausrufung!"

Dramatically throwing his arms outwards as he stood up, a muffled explosion causing the room to violently shake, the Major's eyes gleamed with a sadistic glint, "In a single motion I have rendered all of Alucard's familiars nonexistent! Destroying all the power he has stolen over the centuries! For the first time in four hundred years, since those shinigami failed to slay him, the vampire is at his weakest! For only a brief instant in time Alucard is himself !"

Integra's boiling anger slowly settled into disturbed confusion when Alucard stopped flickering, the hundreds of crimson eyes protruding from the writhing darkness swiveling around before vanishing. Watching as her servant knelt upon the ground, his breath ragged but otherwise fine, she ignored the cold feeling seeping through her soul and asked, "Why are you telling me all this?"

"Because telling you about the Schatten Ausrufung was my part of the plan..."

The Major chuckled as the shadows on the screens twisted, a form slowly rising from the darkness, "Every Sternritzer that took part in the Schatten Ausrufung had a specific role. But it was only Zorin Blitz who failed to achieve her objective - killing Seras Victoria. My role, on the other hand, was to tell you everything, from beginning to end. Making sure you did not possess even the slightest chance of stopping him."

Integra could feel her fingers going numb as she stared at the shadows on the screens, "Him?"

Smugly grinning at the young woman, the Major swept an arm through the air and answered, "Why... His Majesty of course..."

---

...

---

"Ha... ha... such interesting abilities..."

Alucard's fingers clawed at the pavement as he tore apart what little remained of Schrodinger's flickering soul, the Quincy's powers and memories vanishing upon the cessation of his existence. Beads of sweat trickling down his pale face as he knelt upon the ground, an extremely rare feeling of exhaustion permeating every fiber of his being, the vampire could not remember the last time he felt this weak. Not even his battle against that man weakened him to such an extent. It brought an amused grin to his face to think that a lowly Quincy could achieve what no one else managed in his five centuries of undeath - the destruction of his familiars.

"But your plan was a complete failure, Major! I'm still alive!"

Laughing wildly at his perceived victory over the Sternritter, Alucard's mouth stretched into a psychotic smirk as he slowly pushed himself back onto his feet. Darkness reforming the rest of his body as he stared at the Deus Ex Machina in the distance, torrents of smoke gushing from the falling aircraft, he reared his head back and exclaimed, "Was erasing me from existence your plan all along? It was a good effort... but you Quincy could never hope to defeat me!"

The mere thought of confronting the Major, ripping the smug Quincy limb from limb before gorging on the man's blood, excited Alucard and caused the darkness flickering along the edges of his overcoat to grow more prominent. Yet upon closer inspection he could sense both his Master and Seras in close proximity to the Quincy. Yes, that would work. Allowing them to slaughter that man would be the ultimate insult, denying the Sternritter the pleasure of dying at his hands. And besides, with nearly every soul in London erased from the face of existence his strength was at its minimum. But from what scattered memories still remained, he knew the Vatican had a few hundred men stationed across the Strait of Dover.

Excellent... the Quincy's efforts had left him quite famished...

As he turned his attention towards the crusaders waiting to the south, their fear and apprehension already reaching across the vast waters separating them, Alucard stopped after only a single step when an enormous pillar of spiritual energy exploded upwards only a few blocks away. Eyes narrowed at the familiar feeling of the energy, the symbol adorning the top of the column causing the corners of his mouth to curl upwards, he silently watched as dozens of heilig pfeil shot through the air towards him. Grinning as the arrows rapidly surrounded his location, merging together in thick ethereal constructs, Alucard chuckled lightly and examined his new 'prison.'

"How amusing..."

Snapping his arm upwards, the Jackal appearing in a burst of shadows, Alucard frowned when the bullet ricocheted off the barrier without causing damage. It appeared the Major still had a few more tricks up his sleeve. Whichever Quincy created this prison was rather skilled, in his current state it would take him almost a minute to tear through it. But that would have to wait. After all, there were more pressing matters to deal with for the moment.

"I was starting to wonder when you would show up. Your little soldiers had such fond memories of you... Yhwach."

The vampire's mocking tone died upon the dawn breeze as a figure stepped forth from the darkness that had once been his own. Shadows dripping like water from his white double-breasted trench coat, the disinterested look in his eyes never changing, the Quincy King beheld the vampire standing before him with caution. Even with his power diminished to such an extent, his vast army of familiars torn away by Schrodinger's valiant sacrifice, the undead being was not someone to be underestimated. Alucard's battle against Ryuko Matoi was proof enough of the dark power lurking within his soul.

"Such an audacious name," Alucard's arm snapped towards the Quincy King without hesitation, his crimson eyes narrowing as he mockingly asked, "Do you claim to be a god?"

Yhwach ignored the vampire's question as he glanced at the spiritual prison surrounding their location. It appeared Quilge managed to accomplish his part of the Schatten Ausrufung without issue. That was good. It always burdened his heart when one of his Sternritter failed to accomplish what should have been a trivial task. He had expected more discipline from Zorin Blitz, one of his original Sternritter. And while the data she managed to obtain on Nudist Beach's military capabilities alleviated some of his disappointment, it did not change the fact that she still failed to kill Seras Victoria.

Coming to a halt when Alucard raised his weapon, Yhwach pointed at the vampire and asked, "And just what do you intend to do with that?"

Without any further warnings the Jackal abruptly shattered like glass, shards of burning metal shimmering through the air. His face contorting into a frustrated sneer, the vampire angrily tossed aside the destroyed remains of his weapon as a thick miasma of spiritual energy exploded from his body. Emerging from the raging torrent of power shifted once more into his original appearance, shadowy flames enveloping the broadsword in his hand, Alucard scowled when Yhwach smirked.

"Impressive... to think you still possessed this much power."

Holding out his right hand as he backhandedly complimented the vampire, the Quincy King's tone never faltered when five spheres of concentrated spiritual energy formed above the tips of his fingers. As the energy merged together and formed a Quincy Zeichen, Yhwach grinned and calmly stated, "Farewell... Prince of Wallachia. Schatten Ausrufung."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales [Alternate Weave #2 - Blumenkranz]

"Well now..." Ragyo smirked as the COVERS descended over Honnouji Academy, thin strands of Life Fibers weaving through the air towards the humans, "What shall I do first?"

As she thoughtfully strummed her fingers against the inside of her wrist, several promising ideas coming to mind, the Kiryuin matriarch sighed in mild irritation when she felt a rather familiar annoyance perched on the highest corners of Satsuki's academy. C'est la vie... some people just never seemed to learn their lessons. With an almost casual indifference Ragyo leaned sideways and allowed the spiritual bullet to shoot harmlessly past her head. Ignoring the subsequent destruction and devastation as the spiraling bullet pierced through the wall of the stadium and out into Honnou City, the Kiryuin matriarch looked over her shoulder and grinned. Yes... she knew exactly what to do first.

Effortlessly catching a second bullet as she turned around, Ragyo chuckled at the shock etched upon the Sternritter's face when she gently squeezed her fingers and shattered it, "C'est ca... I think I will start with you, Quincy."

Lille Barro stiffened at Ragyo Kiryuin's threat, the words reaching his ears even across the vast distance between them, before quickly regaining his composure. Gripping the stock of his rifle while leaping backwards through the air using Hirenkyaku, all pretense of hiding gone, the Sternritter frowned when the woman took a single step towards him before promptly vanishing in a burst of speed. This was troubling. While the ease with which he could sense the woman's repugnant Life Fibers gave him a slight advantage, it would be extremely difficult to counter even a straightforward attack.

"And just where do you think you're going?"

The amused voice nearly whispering into his ear caused the Sternritter's single eye to widen in shock. Glancing over his shoulder at the woman standing directly behind him, the glow from her hair growing increasingly brilliant, Lille Barro grimaced before instinctively twisting sideways, his attention drawn to the rainbow Needle Blade arcing through the air. What was going on? He hadn't sensed her Life Fibers before she appeared behind him. In fact, he still couldn't sense them.

Faint streams of blue energy clinging to his feet when he vaulted over the rainbow Needle Blade, a pained hiss leaving his mouth when the weapon suddenly shifted directions and cut deeply into his shoulder, Lille Barro used the split second it took Ragyo Kiryuin to recoil her arm to retreat. He couldn't afford to fight the woman in direct combat. Even as the leader of His Majesty's Schutzstaffel, his power superior to any shinigami's, fighting such a monstrous opponent was suicidal. He needed to stall for time, force Ragyo Kiryuin to chase him across Honnou Town long enough for Isshin Kurosaki to -

"Still running away?"

Spittle spewed from Lille Barro's mouth when he found a fist lodged deeply in his abdomen, Ragyo Kiryuin having closed the distance between them in the blink of an eye. Gasping in pain when the woman's other hand reach forward and grabbed the front of his uniform, the corners of her mouth curling into a sadistic smirk, the Sternritter lurched forward as she thrust the Needle Blade straight into his heart, "I-Impossible..."

"Impossible, you say?"

Ragyo chuckled maliciously at the dying terror in the dark skinned Quincy's eye, "I'm afraid you'll find that nothing is impossible, Quincy. You tried your best but it just wasn't good enough. So please be sure to give my regards to your leader when you meet him... in the deepest bowels of hell..."

"This is the third time... that I have been forced to open both eyes..."

The Kiryuin matriarch's eyes subtly widened in genuine surprise as the Sternritter began phasing around the Needle Blade. Now this was an unexpected development. She never knew Quincy possessed such abilities. Well... that woman hadn't used anything of the sort seventeen years ago. Carefully observing the way Lille Barro's body stitched itself back together once he pulled free of her weapon, Ragyo lowered her arm and mused, "Your technique is interesting, Quincy, but I simply don't have the time to wonder about such things..."

Her arm blurring into motion as she swung the Needle Blade at the Quincy's neck, intent on beheading the insufferable man and ending this charade of a fight, Ragyo frowned in mild irritation when the attack simply phased through his body. How dreadful... she didn't have the time to deal with something as annoying as intangibility. Sighing wistfully as she turned towards the deceptively calm Sternritter, Ragyo folded one arm under her bosom when Lille Barro began speaking, "It is only with both eyes open that I am able to use the true power of the X-Axis. However, His Majesty has forbidden the Sternritter from using their full power. It would be dangerous to use such things in close proximity of our allies..."

The nonplussed expression on Ragyo's face didn't falter in the slightest when the tattoo surrounding the Quincy's left eye transformed into a pentacle of light. Quirking an eyebrow at the power radiating from the man, the Kiryuin matriarch absentmindedly fixed a strand of silver hair as Lille Barro angrily shouted, "But I am His Majesty's greatest creation! That a creature like you has the nerve to injure me is unforgivable!"

Ragyo couldn't help but sigh in annoyance when the Sternritter was surrounded by an enormous torrent of energy. At the rate things were progressing Isshin would arrive in Karakura Town, deal with her assassin and make it back by the time she was finished. And she hated wasting time, especially when someone simply didn't know when to give up. Her maroon eyes narrowed as she raised a single finger, rainbow light rapidly gathering just above the perfectly manicured fingernail, Ragyo asked, "Do you expect me to just let you trans- "

The rest of her question would go unsaid when several circular holes pierced through her body, the suddenness of the unexpected attack managing to catch the Kiryuin matriarch fully off guard. Staring at the wound penetrating through her heart as it rapidly wove itself shut, the radiance of her Life Fibers vanishing in moments, any traces of humor that remained on Ragyo's face disappeared when Lille Barro emerged wearing the ugliest piece of clothing she had ever seen. Covering nearly every inch of his body in a white robe, which actually made Satsuki's Goku Uniforms seem like Kamui in comparison, she looked at the four sets of wings around the Sternritter before resting a hand against her cheek and sighing.

"Tacky as it may be... I cannot deny that your new form is quite powerful. However..."

Ragyo purposely trailed off as she raised the Needle Blade and blocked Lille Barro's second salvo, the beams of unblockable light briefly clashing for dominance against the hardened Life Fiber weapon before deflecting upwards into the afternoon sky. Wisps of rainbow smoke drifting off the unique blade as she strutted towards the Quincy, the rainbow glow of her silver hair growing brighter with every step, she purposely flashed her opponent a condescending smirk before vanishing in a burst of speed once more.

"I already told you..." Lille Barro's voice echoed slightly when Ragyo appeared above him, the Needle Blade arcing towards his recently healed shoulder, "In this state I cannot be -"

A fountain of blood gushed from the Quincy's shoulder as the Life Fiber blade cut deeply into his body without any issues. As he teleported several dozen meters away in shock, his eyes wide at the notion that he could still be injured even in Vollständig, Ragyo dismissed the Needle Blade in a flash of rainbow light before raising her left hand, "The simple fact of the matter is that you're a Quincy . And as much as I would love to continue this amusing... fight... I am a rather busy woman..."

Lille Barro didn't wait for his opponent to finish speaking before attempting to teleport away, fear and animalistic panic overriding his higher reasoning, only for several rainbow Life Fibers to wind their way through the air from Ragyo's extended fingers. Gasping when the threads tightened painfully around his body, thin rivulets of blood oozing down his robe as they cut into his skin, the Sternritter had just enough time to realize his opponent was gone before his head exploded into a fine red mist.

"With that out of the way..."

Gracefully lowering her hand as she walked away from the Quincy, blood raining through the air as his headless corpse fell towards the ground far below, Ragyo pursed her mouth in thought when she couldn't sense the Grand Couturier. It would appear fighting her other daughters was too much for dearest Nui, especially with Twin Life Fiber Entanglement fully in effect. Not to mention that with Hououmaru lying unconscious somewhere in the stands, her raiment torn to pieces, Satsuki and Ichigo were free to assist the other Quincy and their allies against Xcution. Or at least they would be... if they weren't currently staring upwards in disbelief. Normally the look of suppressed fear and apprehension in her daughter's eyes would bring a smile to her face.

Unfortunately she wasn't quite finished with a rather persistent problem.

"This is starting to grow stale, Quincy."

The sight of Lille Barro's monstrous form nearly caused Ragyo to roll her eyes in disgust. His head, which she could have sworn was sprayed across the ground below as a fine mist, had regenerated into something resembling a cross between an owl and a man. The tacky robe he once wore now resembled armor, covering every facet of his body only to stop at his elongated neck. Did he think turning into such an ugly form would change anything? It was pathetic watching the Quincy desperately clinging to the delusional notion that he stood a chance against her. Clicking a heel against the air as she turned around, an expression of annoyance on her face, Ragyo didn't display any reaction when the Quincy started shouting.

"Did you believe this fight to be over? Did you think you truly killed me?!"

Sparks of light gathered upon Lille Barro's long fingers as his head twisted back and forth, misshapen eyes blinking strangely at the abomination before him. It was inconceivable that a monster such as Ragyo Kiryuin forced him into using his full power, "I am an envoy of God! A monstrous demon like you could never hope to defeat me!"

A tense silence permeated the battlefield in the moments immediately following the Quincy's passionate declaration before Ragyo threw her head backwards and laughed, "You... an envoy of god ?! La vie est drôle! I don't know what's more pathetic. Your delusional notion of grandeur or the imagination your leader possesses to think such a form is even remotely intimidating!"

The corners of her mouth twisting in amusement when the Sternritter responded with the emotional maturity of a child and swung his arm downwards, a thin beam of energy erupting from his fingers, Ragyo closed her eyes and chuckled smugly before deflecting the 'unstoppable' technique with the palm of her hand. Silver hair whipping around her face when the Quincy's attack slammed into Honnou City before exploding, the Kiryuin matriarch decided it was time to end this farce of a battle. It had been initially amusing to watch the Quincy desperately attempt to survive, fear and panic slowly dawning upon him, but she was a rather busy woman.

And wasting time against such a pathetic creature was not on her schedule.

Maroon eyes narrowing in subtle annoyance when the man... or rather creature... declared her actions to be a 'grave sin' and curled a hand in front of his mouth, the action summoning an intricate facsimile of a trumpet over his head, Ragyo loudly clicked her heel against the air before raising a single finger, "Lumière Divine."

There was no rapid building of spiritual energy or sudden feeling of foreboding in the atmosphere. In the single moment it took Lille Barro's inhuman eyes to blink in confusion at the foreign words, his hand tightening in preparation to fire the Trompette, the energy condensed just above Ragyo Kiryuin's perfectly manicured finger exploded forward in a cacophony of rainbow light. His beak-like mouth shouting a curse at the woman before he was enveloped by the technique, the nauseous energy filling him with never-ending pain, the Sternritter couldn't even scream before his body exploded into shards of shimmering light.

"How drôle..."

Ragyo didn't lower her arm even after Sternritter's body disintegrated into shards of light, rainbow energy continuing to erupt from her extended finger for several more seconds. The man's inability to die had been rather irritating. So instead of severing his head or cutting his body into pieces she decided on a more pragmatic approach - erasing him from the face of the earth. After all, it was hard to regenerate when there was nothing left.

"Now then..."

With her first step the Kiryuin matriarch disappeared in a burst of speed, descending hundreds of feet to the ground before anyone noticed she was gone. Her heels clicking against the stairs of the stadium as she took another step, dozens of COVERS falling into line behind her, Ragyo's maroon eyes swiveled sideways towards Yukio Hans Vorarlberna. Smirking at the terrified look upon his opponent's face, the utter evisceration of her compatriot having momentarily paralyzed the Quincy, she chuckled when Ichigo and Satsuki landed in front of her in twin bursts of light.

"I certainly won't dampen your enthusiasm if you two wish to fight me."

Ragyo rested a hand against her cheek when the teenager's responded to her comment by raising their blades. Mentally ordering the surrounding COVERS to leave, the thought of the Life Fibers beings getting destroyed rather displeasing, she let out an exaggerated sigh before holding out her hand and summoning the Needle Blade, "But as that Quincy so helpfully demonstrated, you'll find defeating me quite the insurmountable goal."

Don't Let the Sun Go Down On

So here is the long awaited conclusion to the Hellsing Arc. I know it's been a long time but I worked diligently to make sure this chapter was written to the best of my ability, which is a never-ending process. Just compare my earlier chapters to the last 15 or so! I strive to constantly give you the best story/writing possible. So if that requires a week or two delay because some part of the chapter, a piece of dialogue for instance, wasn't working, than so be it. But anyway, I hope you enjoy this chapter as much as I enjoyed writing it. Because writing the conclusion to such a long and tense arc was immensely satisfying.

Anyway... next chapter (52 for those of you keeping count) begins the long awaited, and highly anticipated, Karakura Invasion Arc. I went through roughly ten names before settling on that. And yes, I know it sounds similar to the Karakura Raid Trip but it's an accurate title.

Enjoy!

La vie est drôle...

---

...

---

Chapter 51 - Don't Let the Sun Go Down On Me

"I have finished releasing the kirchenlied around SHI. It is ready to be transported upon your discretion."

Walter C. Dornez spoke with a slightly strained tone as the spiritual runes etched into the air surrounding his fingers dissipated. Frowning briefly when the Doktor continued to ignore his presence, the man's attention completely focused on some random papers strewn across his desk, the Sternritter turned towards the laboratory's exist before dryly commenting, "I shall be departing for the Silbern momentarily. Please make sure to turn off the lights before you leave."

The Doktor snorted derisively at the Sternritter's pathetic attempt to hold a conversation as he continued stuffing several important documents on his research into the briefcase on the desk. He didn't have time to waste talking to an inferior mind! It did not matter that Walter was one of His Majesty's chosen Sternritter, able to eviscerate him with nothing more than a twitch of his finger. Any Neanderthal could fight. But it took a genius to push the boundaries of science to their limits! In the entirety of the Wandenreich there were only two other Quincy that could comprehend even the most basic tenants of his research, let alone hold an intelligent discussion about it, and the former butler was not one of them.

Frowning slightly when Walter finally left his laboratory, the blissful sound of the door slamming shut bringing peace of mind, the Doktor blatantly ignored the explosions rocking the Deus Ex Machina to focus on something exponentially more important, "Now... where did I put my findings on vampirization decay correlations? Ah! There they are..."

As he removed a thick journal from the bookshelf over his desk, dozens of hastily written bookmarks sticking out from between slightly creased pages, the Quincy momentarily stared at the culmination of years of research before tossing it into the briefcase. This wasn't the time for sentimentality. As much as he wanted to spend countless hours reading through the hundreds of trials involving the effects of Alucard's spiritual energy on soldats, including the average length of time before their souls decayed, he still needed to properly prepare SHI for transport, a task easier said than done even with the kirchenlied released.

Resisting the nervous impulse to bite his finger, the Doktor snapped the briefcase shut when an intimately familiar spiritual energy enveloped London. His mood abruptly changing in response to the newly arrived presence, the Quincy adjusted his multi-lensed spectacles before politely musing, "Oh? It seems His Majesty has finally arrived."

However, despite his tone the Doktor's shoulders nevertheless slumped dejectedly at the missed opportunity. What he would have done to personally witness Alucard's full power, to observe and collect countless quantities of daten about the ancient vampire. The knowledge would have been enough to push the boundaries of science and spiritual studies into a new golden age! Yet such thoughts were mere fantasy. For a Quincy of his strength would be utterly crushed beneath the clashing spiritual energies, his soul shattered into nothingness by powers far beyond anything he could imagine. But as a scientist it was his job to figure out the impossible! Especially when challenged with such dangerous conditions!

But alas, asking Quilge would have to wait until after returning to the Silbern.

After mentally reminding himself to follow through on such important inquiries when he had the time, the Doktor callously removed his bloodstained gloves as he marched across the laboratory. One can never be too careful when dealing with something like SHI. It might be contained within specially designed soul-synthesized glass, sealed with dozens of His Majesty's finest techniques, but it was still eternally bound to Alucard. A single drop of blood would be enough to not only shatter the chamber but lead to several other consequences he would rather not face.

Not to mention how Alucard would react if the seals containing SHI's spiritual energy failed. He would not allow a single moment of utter stupidity to jeopardize everything that His Majesty worked to accomplish! Pressing his thumb against the keypad built into the wall next to the container, the custom-built device emitting an electronic ping when it recognized his spiritual energy, the Doktor grimaced as the chamber opened with a pressurized hiss. There was not much time. He needed to start right away on sending -

A loud thump from outside the laboratory, but more specifically the single window to his left, cut off the Quincy's train of thought.

Instinctively twisting away from SHI as the sudden noise, spiritual particles rapidly coalescing around his left hand into a compound bow, the Doktor frowned in confusion as he held the bowstring taut. Any being that could successfully infiltrate the Deus Ex Machina had to be incredibly dangerous, a threat of the highest order. Yet he could not sense any spiritual energy. There was neither the nauseous sensation of Life Fibers nor the terrifying aura of Alucard and his progeny, which begged the question of who, or rather what, had managed to sneak onto the airship without being detected.

Given his admittedly inferior fighting capabilities, the wise decision would be asking Walter to deal with the potential threat. As a Sternritter he was more than capable of dealing with anything aside from Life Fibers. But what if this was nothing more than a false alarm or the assailant used his moment of distraction to take him by surprise?

"Verdammt..."

Cursing at his unfortunate luck, the Doktor swallowed the nervous lump in his throat while cautiously walking towards the window. Fingers tightening around the spiritual weapon as he quickly flipped the switch to open the metallic shutter, a bead of sweat trickling down the side of his face, the Quincy didn't have to wait long before he was finally able to glimpse what was outside. And it was enough for his mouth to drop in complete and utter shock.

Perched on the exterior of the Deus Ex Machina with an equally confused look in his eyes, one hand holding onto the already unlocked window, Batou stared at the Doktor for several seconds before his face stretched into a wide grin, "Hi!"

"Gah!"

That single gasp of disbelief was all the Doktor managed to say before the nudist commander's fist slammed into his nose, cartilage shattering in a spray of blood under the surprising amount of force. Staggering backwards as his spiritual weapon dissipated into its composite energy, the Quincy's hand slipped against his desk before he collapsed unconscious onto the floor.

"Damn... I can't believe that actually worked."

Batou ignored the flaring pain in his fingers as he quickly pulled himself through the window. That Quincy's blut had been something. It almost felt like he punched a rather stubborn wall... or got roped into another one of Armstrong's friendly spars. Grunting lightly as he landed in the room, one hand reaching towards the tailor knife strapped to his leg, the nudist commander stared at the Doktor's unconscious form before giving the man an unceremonious kick to the abdomen. Just to make sure he wasn't faking, of course. You could never be too careful with Quincy, especially when they've proven themselves capable of fighting after tanking a full salvo from the DTR Model Ray.

"Huh... out cold after only one punch. I'm guessing you're one of those scientist types.."

Callously flipping the Doktor onto his stomach, uncaring of the blood pooling beneath the man's face, Batou briefly shook his sore fingers before reaching into the satchel strapped to the small of his back. As he pulled out a length of black wire and began tying the scientist's hands together, weaving the thread in such a way that the man wouldn't be able to move a finger, the nudist commander couldn't help but appreciate his luck. Out of all the Quincy, he stumbled upon the only one he could actually beat in a fight. Chuckling at the irony as he double-checked the Doktor's condition... just to make sure the man was still unconscious... Batou's eyes narrowed when something rather obvious caught his attention.

"What the hell?"

There was something disturbingly off-putting about the way the desiccated corpse was bound and gagged. The nudist commander had seen his fair share of strange shit throughout his life, most of it while working for Ragyo Kiryuin, but this caused a shiver to race down his spine. While there was no question that it was creepy as hell, the way the shadows appeared to writhe around its contorted limbs reminded Batou of a certain other vampire. Reaching for the M-15 Anti-Life Fiber Assault Rifle strapped to his back as he cautiously approached the open container, the silence permeating the laboratory ringing in his ears, the nudist commander stiffened at the words etched on the steel plate above the corpse.

"MINA HARKER"

"THE SHI"

Batou liked to consider himself well versed in the finer arts of philosophy and religion. But it was his vested interest in classical literature that caused him to break out in a cold sweat upon reading the name. This thing was Mina Harker from Bram Stoker's novel, which raised a lot of disturbing questions. While Alucard's existence suggested the book was more of a historical biography instead of a work of fiction, several things didn't add up. For starts, how did the Quincy get their hands on her remains? She must have still been a vampire after Alucard was defeated. And considering Seras Victoria was stronger than Satsuki Kiryuin's Elite Four before drinking Pip's blood, it begged the question of how she died.

How long had the Quincy been planning this?

"I don't suppose you're going to wake up and brag about your master plan?"

Sighing when the Doktor didn't answer the question, on account of still being unconscious, Batou scratched his chin and grimaced. He couldn't allow Mina Harker's corpse to remain under Quincy control. Aside from denying them access to something so insanely terrifying, not to mention powerful, he had a strong feeling that it was the source of those vampirized soldiers they fought earlier. Letting Millennium keep her corpse was just begging for trouble in the future. Luckily there was a rather obvious solution to this problem.

In a matter of seconds every explosive and Anti-Life Fiber armament in his satchel was strewn across the floor. Five pounds in total, which was everything he managed to grab before leaving the safe house. After he finished assembling the crude improvised device, and giving it a quick once-over to make sure it wouldn't literally blow up in his face, Batou stuck it directly onto SHI's chest and set the timer. In less than five minutes the laboratory would go up in flames. And he didn't want to stick around for the fireworks.

"Humph... and Anderson claims I'm paranoid."

Frowning as he grabbed the satchel and hurried towards the window, Batou paused when he remembered the Doktor lying unconscious on the floor. Thanks to all the commotion he'd nearly forgotten Olivier's orders to capture a Quincy. Great... carrying the guy down was going to be a pain in the ass. He should have set the damn timer for ten minutes. Groaning at the new inconvenience, the nudist commander sighed and hefted the Doktor onto his shoulder. After making sure his prisoner was still out cold, mostly by jabbing him in the stomach a second time, Batou turned to leave only to notice a briefcase on the nearby desk.

That could come in handy.

Marching towards the open window with both prisoner and briefcase in tow, the nudist commander looked at the rapidly approaching London skyline and groaned, "Damn it, I'm too old for this parkour crap."

---

...

---

Yhwach grimaced as his boots ground against the air for purchase, faint traces of spiritual energy still clinging to the ornate sword in his hand.

Glancing in mild consternation at the thin line of crimson rapidly staining his sleeve, the Quincy King flexed his fingers and frowned. It appeared the daten on Alucard's strength was slightly inaccurate, an annoyance he would need to personally address upon his return to the Silbern. Reddish-brown eyes narrowing when parts of the vampire's form dissolved into fiery darkness, the shadows collecting around the undead being's feet before surging forward in a tidal wave that obscured the blood-red moon, the Quincy King showed not a hint of concern as he calmly held out a hand.

"Kirchenlied: Sankt Schild."

A countless number of interlocking pillars, each bearing a Quincy Zeichen, shimmered into existence at Yhwach's command. Holding his hand parallel to the ground when Alucard's darkness violently slammed into the barrier, the impact sending a massive shockwave scattering across the ruined city, the Quincy King's brief moment of elation was cut short when he noticed cracks of dark light slowly spreading across the spiritual barricade. Several glowing ribbons of roman-numerals stretching from his fingers as he bolstered the technique to counteract the corrosive nature of Alucard's power, his eyes imperceptibly widened upon realizing they were feeding on his energy.

Callously clenching his fist, the Quincy King severed his link to the Kirchenlied: Sankt Schild and allowed the technique to shatter. Retreating backwards when the shadows abruptly shifted into dozens of fanged maws, each bearing the same soul-devouring ability of the Baskerville Hound, Yhwach calmly observed the familiars instinctively giving pursuit before flaring his spiritual energy. The look of complete apathy never leaving his eyes when the beasts began dissolving under the force of his presence, the living darkness composing their misshapen forms evaporating into nothingness, the Quincy King grimaced when he felt something flickering in the shadows.

That was quicker than anticipated.

Soul-crushing darkness exploded over the ruined streets of London as Yhwach parried Alucard's broadsword away from his neck only to be caught off guard by the unstable spiritual energy circulating around the weapon. Acrid smoke clinging to his body as he used Hirenkyaku to escape the attack, most of his cloak destroyed but otherwise uninjured, the Quincy King frowned when Alucard leapt from the smoke, broadsword hefted over his head while his laughter echoed in the darkness. Narrowing his eyes while slowly raising his own blade in preparation for the attack, Yhwach couldn't help but notice something was wrong. Superior strength or not, the vampire should have been smart enough to avoid such a predictable attack.

So why would he try it a second time?

It was only when the broadsword touched his blade and kept going that the Quincy King understood the vampire's logic. Instinctively using Hirenkyaku to bolster his movement as he leapt away from the phantasmal weapon, Yhwach's face creased in mild disdain at the thin line of crimson cutting diagonally across his chest. He should have anticipated the vampire would be able to shift his weapon into a non-physical state.

"You look surprised, Quincy King."

Alucard tightened his grip upon the broadsword as it finished reforming, darkness solidifying into flawless metal, "Did you believe even with your servant's help you could best me in combat? ME?! Even now I am still your equal... no, your better... Yhwach!"

"Surprised?"

A hint of amusement filled the emperor's voice as he stood at his full height, the vampire's arrogant boasting about his power bringing a cold but calculating smirk to his face, "No... I am not surprised. In fact, I expected no less from you, Prince of Wallachia. It would be foolish to believe you would not use everything at your disposal against me. Therefore, I must once more give thanks to Schrodinger. For without his noble sacrifice, defeating you would have been nearly impossible!"

His smirk turning increasingly sinister as he raised a finger towards the vampire, Yhwach gave no indication of his next action before a veritable deluge of Heilig Pfeil exploded from the extended digit. It made no difference if Alucard's physical strength proved slightly superior to his own. Such notions were meaningless, for he fully expected the vampire to dodge the barrage. Individually the Heilig Pfeil were not strong enough to harm the vampire, but the sheer number of arrows possessed the capacity to momentarily overwhelm his inhuman regeneration and leaving him briefly vulnerable.

What he did not expect was for the vampire to madly rush him, shadows pulsing from his broadsword as it cleaved through the barrage of holy arrows.

Yhwach's expression shifted into an annoyed grimace at the sight. He had hoped to defeat the vampire without resorting to such tactics but it seemed it was necessary to step things up a bit. Removing the tattered remains of his cloak while reaching for the sword at his waist, the Quincy King opened his mouth only to be cut off when an armored hand clasped firmly around his face.

"Is this the extent of your power, Quincy King?"

Alucard snarled in disappointment as he adjusted his grip and sent Yhwach rocketing towards the ground, the impact and subsequent explosion releasing a large cloud of smoke. This was the Quincy King, whose spiritual essence placed him upon the same pedestal as the Captain Commander of the Thirteen Court Guard Squads? The centuries-old vampire couldn't help but scoff at such a notion. His power might surpass those two Sternritzer and Ragyo Kiryuin's COVERS Clone, but he found it hard to believe this was the same man who nearly conquered the Soul Society one thousand years ago.

The pavement audibly shattered when the vampire landed near the Quincy King, who was still holding a hand against his face. Shadows evaporating from his broadsword as he slowly stalked towards his downed opponent, Alucard sneered derisively before boasting, "Do you believe I was not aware of your true power? From the very start I understood the source of your strength! But such tricks will not work on me! You shall never gain my power, Yhwach!"

"I am fully aware I cannot make your power my own."

A throaty chuckle echoed loudly through the streets as Yhwach lowered his hand, a sadistic expression on his face, "But tell me something, Prince of Wallachia. Just how many times have we crossed blades?"

Alucard did not bother thinking about the question. The moment he saw the victorious expression on the Quincy King's face he lurched forward, fully intent on killing the man before he could enact whatever he was planning. But when he stomped to a halt several feet from the crouching emperor, hand stabbing through the air towards his opponent's ancient heart, the vampire suddenly found himself unable to move, every muscle in his body unresponsive. Surprised crimson eyes widening at the Quincy Zeichen encircling his body, shimmering tendrils of dark light shackling his limbs, Alucard snarled impotently, "What is this?"

"This is the true Schatten Ausrufung."

The surrounding shadows contorted ominously as the Quincy King pressed a hand against the ground and resumed his full stature, all pretenses of being injured gone. An increasingly pleased expression etched across his features as he watched the ephemeral shadows slowly rising from beneath the bound vampire, the darkness wrapping around his paralyzed limbs, Yhwach disregarded his adversary's soul-crushing glare. It was fortunate Alucard was never aware of the Schatten Ausrufung's final requirement, for such damning knowledge would have rendered the technique impotent. Even in his current condition, stripped of his unholy source of power, it would have been difficult to defeat the vampire if he had been aware of such things.

Calmly raising a hand over his shoulder when he detected Quilge Opie land on a nearby building, the gesture informing the Sternritter his presence was not required, Yhwach stared at the ensnared vampire before speaking, "You disappoint me, Prince of Wallachia."

"Four hundred years ago you consumed one of the original captains of the Gotei 13, granting you all that was needed to destroy the Soul Society Yet you stayed your hand. Content to let them simply fear your power. To always wonder when you would attack."

Yhwach's tone gradually shifted as he addressed the vampire, derision slowly permeating his every word, "You are content to remain nothing more than a false servant, a lapdog to an organization blind to the world at large. At the peak of your power you were a creature to be feared, a being I would have never dared assault. The unfathomable strength of your soul was respectable, but such respect died once you obtained the foolish desire of perishing at the hands of humanity."

"Is that what you think?"

Mocking laughter punctuated the question as Alucard finished listening to the Quincy King, the menacing grin on his face widening with each passing second. His form rippling when the shadows lurched upwards, a black leather straight jacket replacing antiquated armor, the vampire's eyes widened madly as he continued, "Did you figure that out all on your own? Perhaps you spent the last century spying on me, desperately searching for a weakness that did not exist. Or maybe it has something to do with your special little eyes..."

"I see..."

The bound vampire's insinuation caused Yhwach's mouth to crinkle in slight annoyance, "When I sent Tubalcain Alhambra and Rip Van Winkle against you, I anticipated you would assimilate their memories. It was foolish to believe a creature of your power would not notice the small shard of my spirit buried within their souls."

"That's quite the interesting theory... but I'm afraid you're wrong."

Despite the shadows wrapped tightly around his shoulders, causing him to lurch forward, Alucard's menacing grin never faltered. Even as the ground beneath his feet liquefied, pools of restless darkness inexorably pulling him downwards, the vampire continued laughing, "It was your homunculus... that artificial Quincy... that told me everything about your special eyes! They are indeed powerful, something truly befitting a divine monster. But do your followers know about its weakness? That's why you started this little game! Sacrificing your pawns without the slightest hint of regret! It's because those vaunted eyes of yours cannot see me!"

The faintest trace of a frown etched itself upon the Quincy King's features before vanishing just as quickly. Calmly turning around and marching away from the bound vampire as the shadows increased their pace, pulling Alucard further into the ground with each passing second, he paused after several steps before looking over his shoulder, "You are indeed one of the few beings my eyes cannot see, Prince of Wallachia. However, know that I defeated you without opening my eyes. For despite the unpredictable nature of both you and those Life Fiber children, I have achieved victory on this Walpurgis Dawn. Everything that was yours shall be mine."

"HA! HA! HA! Is that right?!"

Only the vampire's face still remained uncovered as he grinned sadistically at the Quincy King, "Well then... I look forward to seeing how things play out, Yhwach. It should prove to be quite entertaining watching your empire crumble! Brought down by those children! Because when I get free I will hunt you down... and tear out your heart with my own hands!"

Alucard's unrelenting laughter was harshly severed when he was pulled completely into the darkness, the Quincy Zeichen sealing his movements briefly flashing with a brilliant white light before vanishing. Stoically staring down the empty street as the crimson moon hovering lazily overhead returned to its usual pallor, the nightmarish atmosphere permeating every inch of London slowly lifting, Yhwach dismissed the vampire's threat from his mind without a second thought. Did the vampire believe he had not taken precautions to prevent such a scenario?

"Quilge," Yhwach did not need to raise his voice to gain his subordinate's attention. He was quite aware the Sternritzer could hear his every word, "Order the Jahrtausendarmee to fall back to the Silbern. We're done - "

An intense explosion of sapphire light immediately followed by Quilge's signature technique shattering harshly cut off the Quincy King before he could finish giving the order. Eyes widening in interest when something soared through the darkened heavens before crashing into the street in front of him, the powerful impact splintering the pavement and sending up a large column of smoke and dust, Yhwach's mouth curled into a smirk as the sensation of Life Fibers assaulted his senses. Of course Quilge's jail failed so miserably. It could never have hindered someone like them.

And he had truly hoped to depart for the Silbern peacefully and without further bloodshed.

"You dealt with my former subordinates quite ruthlessly... Ichigo Kurosaki."

Jets of superheated steam erupted from Mugetsu's ventilation grills as Ichigo silently swung Tournesol in front of his body, the accompanying pulse of sapphire energy dispersing the residual smoke. The top half of his face silhouetted in darkness as he glared angrily at the man who ordered millions of innocent people killed, Mugetsu tightening around his body in response to his fluctuating emotions, Ichigo did not say a word as he calmly raised his weapon, aware of the growing sense of familiarity in the back of his mind.

---

...

---

"You've become rather sullen, fraulein."

Small bursts of glowing sparks cascaded downwards through the Deus Ex Machina's command center as the already faint lighting abruptly died, leaving the broken wall of screens as the only source of illumination. Yellow eyes narrowing slightly in amusement while the corners of his mouth twisted into an increasingly conceited smirk, the Major calmly pressed a single button on the remote in his hand, dismissing the image of Ichigo Kurosaki standing before His Majesty in a flash of static. There was really no point in continuing to watch such an interesting confrontation. After all, the results were already set in stone. Alucard was captured and there was nothing the youth or his marvelous Kamui could do to stop them.

"Perhaps Alucard's defeat has left you momentarily speechless, unable to articulate the thoughts running rampant through your disbelieving mind?"

The stout Sternritter's shoulders shook as he lightly chuckled at his own rhetorical question. He, of course, already knew the answer. But watching Integra Hellsing's expressions shift between seething anger and tranquil fury was quite worth the trouble. Sighing wistfully as he slowly stood back on his feet, the intensity of the young vampire's furious glare causing the hair on the back of his neck to stiffen, he swept a hand through the air before commenting, "But I'm afraid I won't be around to hear your answer. The curtain has fallen upon the stage and the actors are preparing to leave the theater. So please accept my sincerest appreciation, my dear fraulein. For this Walpurgis Dawn could never have happened without your wonderful performance!"

"You think you can just leave ?!"

Seras Victoria's voice reverberated loudly across the darkened room, the fiery shadows mimicking her missing arm writhing angrily with every word, "Once this damned barrier falls I'm going to tear you apart! You'll pay for everyone you murdered!"

Despite the cold fury coursing through her veins, thoughts of ordering Seras to leave the Major alive long enough to drown in a pool of his own blood becoming more tolerable by the second, Integra's well-trained mind latched onto the peculiarities of her servant's remark. Something wasn't right . She had mentally counted down every second until the Sternritter's barrier was supposed to shatter, give or take several minutes. Yet that time has passed without so much as a crack upon its translucent surface. Which could only mean one thing.

"It's been over twenty minutes, Quincy ."

Integra's expression twisted in disgust as she venomously spat the word, the mere utterance of the title seeming to stain her very soul, "When did you intend to announce that you lied about your technique's stability? Or did the thought simply slip your mind?"

"I consider myself a man of my word, fraulein. And as such, I absolutely detest the concept of lying in any form. So you can rest assured that without further sustenance His Majesty's barrier will shatter in just under fifteen minutes."

The Sternritter punctuated his disarming response by tightly clenching his raised hand into a fist, yellow eyes gleaming mischievously as Integra's confused expression rapidly shifted into bitter realization. Ah... it was wonderful to see she understood the absolute truth behind his words, "After all, one can always delay such an event by feeding their spiritual energy through special conduits built into the floor. Granted, such an invention undoubtedly would require a large sacrifice of energy, which only a Sternritter such as myself could provide."

"Now please allow me to apologize for my earlier rudeness."

The reactions from Integra Hellsing and her pet vampire to his abrupt changing of the subject, confusion subconsciously dawning upon their faces, greatly amused the Major. Walking forward as the young leader of the Hellsing Organization grimaced, the dim lighting enveloping the command center causing his glasses to glow opaquely, the Sternritter clapped his hands together before announcing, "For you see, the tragic fate of your loyal butler has left me in a rather joyous mood."

"What?"

Integra's chest constricted painfully at the Quincy's admission, her breath rapidly hitching in her throat and causing her fingers to grow numb. Chuckling lowly at the woman's fearful expression, the Major held out his arms and sadistically grinned, "After my dear colleague introduced himself to the lovely Ryuko Matoi, taking her on a scenic tour of London, I took the opportunity to greet my old adversary."

"Where is Walter?!"

Marching towards the impervious barrier, fingers tightly gripping the sword in her hand, Integra snarled, "What the hell did you do to him?!"

"I did not lay a finger on your precious butler," the Quincy leaned forward as he answered, a combination of mirth of mock outrage evident upon his smirking façade, "But that wasn't the answer you were looking for, was it? So allow me to skip the unnecessary details. The man known as Walter C. Dornez, former vampire hunter and butler of the Hellsing estate, is dead! Ground into dust beneath His Majesty's grand will! For he was nothing more than an insect, unworthy of my respect!"

"You, on the other hand, are an adversary worthy of some modicum of respect..."

The Major's smirk momentarily widened before he promptly turned away from the two women. Subtly impressed when he didn't hear the standard clashing of spiritual energy, Seras Victoria having obviously learned her lesson from her first attempts to shatter the barrier, he clasped his hands behind his back and explained, "There is something special about your soul... perhaps an innate strength of character or iron will born from experience... that gained the undying loyalty of a creature such as Alucard. He could have broken free of the seals placed upon his soul whenever he wished, slaughtering his way out of London! Yet he remained your devoted servant, following your orders without question! The ability to not only command such a monster, but gain his absolute loyalty as well, is deserving of a gift! Therefore, Integra Hellsing, I shall bestow upon you my true name! Would you care to hear it?"

The sheer inanity of the Sternritter's question threw Integra off balance, "Your name?"

"Have you ever wondered why I'm called the Major?"

Faint loathing permeated the Quincy's voice as he stared at the empty wall of screens, his body silhouetted against the encroaching darkness, "The rank of 'Major' was given to me by those Nazi fools! A meaningless title from a worthless organization! Yet I cannot deny that it worked out to His Majesty's benefit. For there is a certain form of freedom in concealing one's name. In hiding one's true identity behind the shroud of anonymity. A notion of... opportunity... one might be so bold as to say. But with the Schatten Ausrufung complete I can finally discard that disgusting moniker!"

With an exaggerated flourishing motion, the Major turned around and bowed deeply, "I am Montana Max, Sternritter M and Captain of the Jahrtausendarmee! It's a pleasure to finally make your acquaintance."

A miasma of shadowy energy enveloped Seras as the vampire furiously glared at the Major with as much hatred as she could muster. She vividly remembered Zorin Blitz taunting her with an eerily similar phrase. 'The Illusionary,' the bitch called herself, right before dredging up every nightmare and terrifying memory from her childhood, "What the hell does that mean?!"

"As my dear comrade Quilge would say - silence is golden. And besides, it would be unsporting to spoil the surprise."

Darkness oozed from the Sternritter's white uniform, the unnatural blackness taking on a silhouette of his form, as he chuckled mirthfully, yellow eyes gleaming with barely contained anticipation. Bowing once more as the shadows completely surrounded his body, the Major cheerfully added, "And with that, I bid you a fond auf wiedersehen."

"Oh no you don't!"

Tendrils of burning shadows tore through the atmosphere as Seras burst into motion the instant the barrier shattered, her rapid departure powerful enough to crumple the steel plating underneath her feet. What currently functioned as her left arm wrapping around the previously discarded eighty-eight millimeter cannon along the way, crimson eyes burning brightly at repaying the Quincy for all the pain he caused, Seras snarled when she fired the weapon only for the shell to pass through nothing but empty space. Clawed fingers digging into the floor as she spun around while skidding to a halt, the sudden rush of cold autumn air from the new hole in the side of the room rustling her platinum blonde hair, the vampire's mood rapidly soured when she tried sensing for the Major's presence only to find absolutely nothing.

He was gone. And she let him escape.

Slamming her hand into the ground hard enough to puncture the steel plating, Seras shouted, "Damn it!"

"Calm down, Seras."

Integra's resigned tone instantly drew her servant's undivided attention as she slowly marched through the shattered remains of the barrier, shards of spiritual energy crunching loudly with every step. An annoyed frown marring her features as anger rapidly succumbed to general frustration and trepidation, the Sternritter's departing words weighing heavily upon her mind, she stared thoughtfully at the ground before continuing, "It's obvious the Quincy planned this confrontation long before our arrival. Nothing else explains his knowledge of our tactics and manpower. They set a trap and like a fool I walked into it without a second thought."

"He didn't expect to see me," Seras sharply corrected, an ear-wrenching crash echoing throughout the command center as she harshly dropped the cannon onto the ground.

A pregnant silence filled the darkened room as Integra frowned in thought. There was no logic or strategic reason behind the Quincy sending someone to kill Seras, who until only an hour ago possessed merely above average strength and speed for a vampire. That they wasted considerable manpower and resources on such a mission suggested there was something about her servant, and by proxy Alucard, the Quincy feared.

And then there was Walter...

"It pains me to admit it, but we must press forward without Alucard... or Walter."

Integra stubbornly refused to believe the nonsense that spewed from the Major's mouth about Walter. The sadistic pleasure the Sternritter displayed when he mentioned the fate of her butler was suspicious but the abrupt way he brought up the subject felt artificial, almost as if he was deflecting her attention away from an entirely different matter. And until she saw her oldest friend's corpse with her own eyes, once Seras or Alucard enthusiastically eviscerated the one responsible, she would refrain from preparing the standard Hellsing funeral.

"The Quincy and their damned king might have won this battle but stopping Ragyo Kiryuin cannot wait!"

The pallor of the full moon filtered through the jagged hole in the command center as Integra turned to Seras, renewed determination filling her voice, "Rest assured, they will pay for everything they've done. But we must put aside thoughts of revenge and focus on the task at hand! It will not matter if we destroy the Quincy down to the last man if that monster of a woman succeeds in feeding humanity to Life Fibers!"

Seras smiled in appreciation at her master's orders, the gnawing guilt she felt at allowing the Quincy to escape slowly abating. However, the relatively peaceful moment was violently shattered when a series of cascading explosions rippled through the Deus Ex Machina, the scale of which caused the ridged airship to lurch forward while descending rapidly towards the burning streets below.

"Master!"

Reacting instinctively when the floor abruptly tilted sideways, metal plating and electronics raining dangerously through the air around them, Seras reached out and grabbed Integra's outstretched hand just before she lost her balance. Shadows twisting protectively around her master as the vampire bent her knees and jumped, the angle of ascent taking them through the jagged hole in the side of the command center, Seras narrowed her eyes upon noticing the flames engulfing the zeppelin's exterior. Momentarily frowning at the barely noticeable heat before the shadows comprising her left arm clawed outward and easily dispelled the nearby conflagration, she tightened her grip around her master's coat before spinning around and disappearing into the darkness of the predawn twilight.

---

...

---

"Are you the Quincy's leader?"

Muffled explosions tore across the ruined landscape that was London as Ichigo calmly addressed the Quincy King. Silhouetted against the full moon beginning to descend lazily to the west, the shimmering sapphire light from Mugetsu's Life Fibers clashing vibrantly with the encompassing white pallor, the teenager's voice lacked any inflection beyond tranquil rage as he stared at the man directly responsible for the surrounding death and destruction.

Yhwach's amused smirk shifted into a thoughtful frown as he ignored the question, his attention focused on Mugetsu's barely dirtied appearance, "How strange. I did not foresee you defeating my former subordinates so easily."

Ichigo narrowed his eyes at the comment, "What are you talking about?"

"I'm certain you noticed the composition of their spiritual energies."

The Quincy King subtly noted the possessive narrowing of Mugetsu's multicolored eyes when he stepped closer to her wearer, the Kamui's armored form rippling slightly in response to the motion. Unconcerned when Ichigo threateningly raised Tournesol, the hardened Life Fiber blade gleaming with a deep blue shimmer in the moonlight, Yhwach held out an arm before continuing, "They were nothing more than extensions of Alucard's will, their souls twisted until they could no longer be considered Quincy. By devouring their souls, Alucard should have removed their weakness to Life Fiber, allowing their abilities to possess full effectiveness. Destroying them should have required significant effort, comparable to Ryuko Matoi's battle against the first captain of the Gotei 13's Third Division."

A gust of wind whipped through the empty streets, rustling Ichigo's hair as he scowled, "Are you surprised I defeated them?"

"No... I anticipated their destruction. If not by your hands, than either Ryuko Matoi's or Iscariot's."

Yhwach's callous dismissal concerning the fate of his former Sternritter conflicted with the thoughtful frown etched along the contours of his face. Things were starting to make sense to him. From the slightly scuffed appearance of his Kamui to the increased potency of his spiritual energy, it seemed that Ichigo Kurosaki's power had grown considerably throughout his time in London. An evolution no doubt fueled by the teenager's constant interactions with Alucard and the Jahrtausendarmee. Yet the spiritual energy thrumming through Ichigo's Life Fibers did not excuse the abject foolishness of confronting him without first transforming his Kamui into its advanced configuration.

In any other situation, if he weren't feeling quite so magnanimous towards those allied against Life Fibers, he would have used such a lapse in judgment against the youth.

"Do you intend to fight me in your current state, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

It was regrettably clear to the Quincy King from the suffocating silence immediately following his question that the teenager had already made up his mind on the matter, "You do not wish to answer? That is understandable. Such a decision must not have been made lightly... but I must give my thanks for destroying Tubalcain Alhambra and Rip Van Winkle. For it saved me the effort of killing them myself."

" He doesn't care about his own soldiers?"

Mugetsu was incensed, her Life Fibers bristling in barely restrained anger. She might be a Kamui, her understanding and comprehension of human emotions slightly warped from not being human, but Yhwach's complete lack of empathy greatly disturbed her, "Alucard devoured his soldiers and he doesn't even care? There's something seriously wrong with this man, Ichigo."

"You never answered my question."

Ichigo mentally noted Mugetsu's worry as he slowly raised Tournesol, "Are you the Quincy's leader?"

"Indeed I am..."

Yhwach's expression twisted into something that only superficially resembled remorse as he explained, "I am indeed the leader of the Jahrtausendarmee or, as you've come to call it, Millennium. The destruction of London, the massacre of its population, was done under my orders. But while I do not take any satisfaction from tonight's events, neither do I feel any remorse. Those that perished were unavoidable casualties, necessary sacrifices to pave a path to the future."

"Necessary?!"

Tournesol trembled within Ichigo's clenched fingers, wisps of sapphire spiritual energy beginning to surround the blade, as he furiously shouted, "How the hell was this necessary?!"

"The answer should be obvious," Yhwach purposely motioned towards the desolate ruins of London, the beginnings of a sadistic smirk pulling at the corners of his mouth, "It was all to free this world from Life Fibers!"

"Mugetsu Zangetsu!"

Amused chuckling pierced through the ensuing silence as the Quincy King fervently watched Ichigo's Kamui transform into its advanced configuration, his once immaculate uniform rustling in the resulting burst of spiritual energy. Yet despite the nauseating sensation prickling at the back of his mind, the nearly tangible power repulsing the surrounding darkness, Yhwach's menacing smirk did not falter, "I see... you've already made up your mind. It is unfortunate that words have failed, for conflict is always such a bitter affair. But tell me, do you believe your current power is enough to defeat me?"

"I know how strong you are..."

Ichigo swept Tournesol through the air as he spoke, the motion kicking up another gust of wind, "And maybe I don't stand a chance of stopping you. But don't you dare tell me all of this was to stop Satsuki's mother! Because from where I'm standing... you're the one that killed millions of people!"

For a brief moment Yhwach's hand instinctively moved towards the weapon sheathed at his waist, the entertaining thought of observing Ichigo Kurosaki's power temporarily crossing his mind, before frowning in disdain when Quilge's spiritual energy vanished. It seemed his time in the World of the Living was reaching its limit, far sooner than he anticipated. With Alucard defeated, the eldritch hold he possessed over London gone, it was only a matter of time before certain parties grew aware of the events that transpired. Yet there was only one being that garnered his attention - Ragyo Kiryuin.

Despite her unyielding devotion to the Original Life Fiber, her every waking moment dedicated to completing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, the Quincy King could not overstate the Kiryuin matriarch's intelligence and cunning. No, it would be prudent to return to the Silbern before the Jahrtausendarmee's success in isolating London from the rest of the world finally unraveled. For he did not doubt Ragyo Kiryuin or her assistant were highly interested in the truth behind the night's events.

"That is true."

Ichigo tensed when Yhwach continued reaching towards the sword strapped to his waist. Curling his fingers tightly around Tournesol even after the Quincy King paused and lowered his hand, a contemplative frown slowly replacing the sociopathic smirk, he didn't loosen his grip when the man stoically added, "Over three million souls were erased from existence, destroyed to weaken Alucard's monstrous power. But if you still wish to fight, you should focus your effort upon Ragyo Kiryuin. For it was her desire to feed humanity to Life Fibers that forced my hand."

Clouds of steam erupted from Mugetsu at the Quincy King's cold indifference, her multicolored eyes narrowing furiously as Ichigo shouted, "Don't give me that crap! How does any of this have to do with stopping Satsuki's mother?!"

Yhwach momentarily stared at the teenager, completely unconcerned by the nearly tangible spiritual energy, before calmly answering, "There is no need to tell you. It will all become clear once Montana finishes his mission."

"Montana?"

Spiritual energy pulsed chaotically around Tournesol as Ichigo slid one foot backwards, his brow furrowing at the strange name, "Who are you -"

" Be careful, Ichigo!"

Mugetsu's warning emerged in the form of a deep, feminine growl as she cut her wearer off mid-sentence, multicolored eyes staring at the Quincy King. Over the last few minutes her Life Fibers had been twitching strangely, an unsettling sensation that reminded the Kamui of Nui Harime's disturbingly cold touch. While the disconcerting sensation rippling through her threads was nothing like the Grand Couturier tracing patterns across her uniform, fingers lightly plucking at her Banshi, it still worried the Kamui, "This man defeated Alucard, who overpowered Senketsu and Ryuko even in Senkou. We shouldn't rush into battle without a plan."

"Your Kamui is quite intelligent, Ichigo Kurosaki. It would be wise to heed her advice."

Tournesol nearly fell from Ichigo's suddenly numb fingers at the Quincy King's comment, the unadulterated shock almost enough to knock Mugetsu out of Zangetsu. Beads of sweat trickling down his face as he steadied his hands, the normally weightless blade growing increasingly heavy, the teenager stared in disbelief at the Father of the Quincy. The man could hear Mugetsu! He had been able to hear her this entire time! But that was impossible! Ignoring Kon and the other Mod Souls, only Life Fiber Hybrids like Ryuko or his dad should be able to hear Kamui. Yet Yhwach didn't have a single Life Fiber in his body. He was damn sure of that.

What hell was going on?

Snapping back to reality when the shadows behind the Quincy King surged upwards, forming a rapidly solidifying portal composed of darkness, Ichigo gnashed his teeth and sprinted towards Yhwach, "Do you think I'm just going to let you leave?!"

Already halfway through the gateway when the emotional outburst reached his ears, Yhwach briefly paused before looking over his shoulder and asking a single question that stopped Ichigo cold, "Why are you so focused on preventing my departure when Ragyo Kiryuin is moving upon Karakura Town at this very moment?"

"What?!"

Ichigo's breath hitched in his throat, the question coming out as little more than a strangled gasp of air. Satsuki's mother was attacking Karakura Town? Only subconsciously aware of the foreign spiritual energies scattered throughout London rapidly vanishing, disappearing from the World of the Living one after another, Ichigo stiffened in growing shock when the Quincy King turned to leave, imparting one final comment before the darkness swallowed him.

"Farewell, Ichigo Kurosaki. Gather your strength and allies and destroy Ragyo Kiryuin... my lost son born in the dark."

---

...

---

6:15 AM London Standard Time

The somber atmosphere enveloping Richmond Park grew increasingly thick when several medics disembarked from the helicopter hovering only a few inches above the frost-covered grass, the insignia of the Scottish Ambulance Service visible underneath the aircraft's rapidly spinning rotors. Hurrying across the impromptu airfield towards the field hospital set up on the other side of the tree line, cases of medical supplies held tightly within their arms, none of the trained men and women uttered a single word, their attention focused on assisting those that survived Millennium's unforeseen assault.

And standing at the side of this procession, her gaze focused on the small patch of dirt between her feet, was Ryuko Matoi.

" You're thinking about that shinigami again."

Ryuko huffed loudly at her Kamui's blunt, but accurate, comment. Folding her arms tightly across Senketsu as she slowly meandered through the recently transformed park, the single highlight of crimson hair falling gently over her eye, she bit the inside of her cheek before snarling, "Yeah... I could have helped Ichigo fight those freaking Quincy if it wasn't for that bitch's pain in the ass bankai!"

" You shouldn't blame yourself, Ryuko."

Senketsu trailed off as he paused in thought. Although they weren't currently synchronized he could still feel Ryuko's anger and frustration bleeding across their connection. It was a rather unpleasant experience. One that he no longer wished to have, "For starters, whenever you are upset your blood develops a bitter aftertaste. It's even worse than when you eat Mrs. Mankanshoku's strange home-made cooking."

Her eye twitching at Senketsu's criticism of Mrs. Mankanshoku's Mystery Croquettes, which were far better than any of the crappy food at Honnouji Academy, there was an awkward silence as Ryuko's mind slowly wrapped around his first comment about her blood, "Hey!"

Ignoring the embarrassed outburst from his wearer, Senketsu's neckerchief fluttered lightly as he calmly continued, "More importantly, there was no way we could have expected to fight an army of undead Quincy... not to mention Alucard."

Ryuko briefly stiffened at her Kamui's answer before relaxing, the frustrated guilt that had been building throughout the night dissipating. Senketsu was right. There was no reason for her to feel guilty, at least about this. Nobody has expected her to fight against both Millennium and the undead bastard's army of familiars. That was freaking insane. Even though she wished she could have done more, like beating the crap out of a Sternritter or two, she still managed to kick a lot of Quincy ass. Not to mention taking down that shinigami bitch even with her stupid bankai. Still... if it wasn't for that bitch she could have helped Ichigo by going straight after the Quincy's boss from the start.

Yawning loudly as exhaustion finally reared its ugly head, Senketsu reciprocating the gesture with the Kamui equivalent, Ryuko rubbed a hand against the back of her neck and lazily grumbled, "You're right, Senketsu. But what the hell was with that undead bastard anyway?"

" I don't know."

Confusion laced the Kamui's voice as he mulled over the question, his eye glancing sideways before swiveling upwards, "It is rather strange he sent his familiars to attack us when we both had a common enemy."

"It's because the bastard's a freaking psychopath," Ryuko scoffed derisively, "He tried drinking my blood, remember?"

Senketsu shuddered at the reminder of their ill-fated fight against the vampire, "D-Don't remind me of that! I can still taste traces of his disgusting blood in my Life Fibers, Ryuko!"

Ryuko's amusement at her Kamui's reaction vanished, dissipating as quickly as it arrived, when two medics marched across her path, a heavily bleeding man lying unconscious on the stretcher. Somberly noticing that the man's right leg was missing below the knee, a not-so-subtle reminder of what the undead bastard did to her own leg, she clenched her hands into fists. Nui Harime and her bitch of a mom might be monsters but this was different. Millions of innocent people were dead because some asshole decided he had nothing better to do.

Millennium was going to pay for this.

"Hey... how are you holding up?"

Ryuko didn't bother turning around at the sound of Ichigo's voice, instead collapsing onto the grass with an exhausted grunt. Propping a hand under her chin as another yawn escaped from her mouth, she sat pensively for several long seconds before replying, "Alright... but Batou told me to 'stay put and not activate Senketsu.' Apparently he thinks walking around in Senketsu will make people nervous, which is a load of crap! They have freaking vampires for crying out loud!"

" I don't blame them," Mugetsu smugly quipped, her condescending tone earning an annoyed growl from Senketsu.

Ichigo barely rolled his eyes when Mugetsu started laughing at Senketsu, the melodious sound causing Ryuko's Kamui to bristle angrily around her body. As the verbal confrontation building between the Kamui abruptly ended when an increasingly annoyed Ryuko pulled Senketsu's lapel, threatening to throw him into a washing machine if he dared trying to jump off her body, Ichigo found his thoughts drifting back to Yhwach's departing comment. There was something familiar about the Quincy King, a sense of nostalgia that didn't make any sense.

"Hey!"

Leaning backwards when Ichigo didn't chastise Mugetsu for starting the fight, an annoyed frown quickly developing at his solemn expression, Ryuko huffed before jabbing her elbow into his leg, "Still thinking about that asshole you fought?"

"It's something he said..."

"Why the hell do you care?!"

Ryuko didn't bother waiting for Ichigo to finish before interrupting him with an angry snort. Easily leaping back onto her feet, arms folded tightly across Senketsu, she spat to the side and scoffed, "I don't know what the bastard said but it's obvious he was lying! He's a Quincy, right? That means he was probably scared of Mugetsu since all of his stupid techniques are crap against us! I bet he was talking of his ass to stop you from attacking before he could run away!"

" There was something unsettling about that man," Mugetsu's eyes narrowed at the recollection of Yhwach's presence, "Despite not having a single Life Fiber in his body, he was able to hear my voice."

A nervous shiver visibly rippled across Senketsu's uniform, "He could hear you? How is that possible?"

"I don't know," Ichigo admitted in place of Mugetsu, "But even if he was lying, we can't let Ragyo attack Karakura Town."

Ryuko tightened her grip on Senketsu's sleeves, an irritated growl leaving her throat, at the mention of her 'dear old mom.' Damn it! Even thinking about that rainbow bitch made her want to throw up! There was nothing she wanted more than to use Senketsu's full power to beat the living crap out of Ragyo Kiryuin, to make her pay for everyone she's hurt, but she wasn't stupid enough to think it would be that simple. What happened at Honnouji Academy personally demonstrated her mom's inhuman strength. Ragyo would kick their ass if they didn't have a foolproof plan, something that would have taken the undead bastard by surprise.

But even if she wasn't anywhere close to the bitch's level, it would be a cold day in hell before she let Ragyo Kiryuin feed humanity to Life Fibers!

Nearly gagging on the taste of bile when she remembered that Nui Harime, the psychotic bitch who brutally murdered her dad, was also her sister, Ryuko opened her mouth to address her annoyance only for Senketsu to suddenly shiver in visible disgust. Her eyebrow immediately twitching in mounting irritation when she smelled the familiar bitter odor, she slowly began reaching towards the small pouch on her hip when Aikuro Mikisugi appeared out of nowhere with two cups of freshly brewed coffee in his hands.

"Coffee?"

The nudist commander's smirk slowly faltered, eventually disappearing entirely, at the tense silence that followed his admittedly biased question. Shrugging at the heated glare Ryuko sent his way, his pants somehow unbuckling themselves as he sauntered between the teenagers, Aikuro casually tossed one coffee over his shoulder into a nearby trashcan, "I couldn't help but overhear your private conversation. You took down dozens of Quincy. Not only that, you confronted their leader, which saved thousands of lives."

Ichigo's gaze fell at the comment, "But we didn't save everyone."

An uneasy silence fell over the area before Aikuro sighed, "Details about Anderson's death are still rather... sketchy."

Ryuko found her annoyance for the exhibitionist reaching its breaking point as she stomped forward, fingers tightly gripping the front of the nudist's uniform, "What the hell do you mean sketchy?"

"The only ones who know what happened to Anderson are Iscariot..."

It was thanks to years of experience in the art of nudity and stripping that Aikuro managed to effortlessly free himself from Ryuko's supernaturally strong grip, the only casualty of his escape being the bulletproof vest in the bewildered teenager's hand. Taking a cautionary step backwards as Ryuko glanced around in confusion, the nudist commander subtly adjusted his uniform before continuing, "... and they're not exactly talking. But that trigger-happy paladin pacing outside the medical pavilion did ask to see you, Ryuko."

Pulling the Scissor Blade from her pocket, the crimson weapon expanding to its full size in just under a second, Ryuko sneered as she pointed the blade at the nudist's crotch. She had a pretty good idea what Iscariot wanted, but that didn't mean she liked it, "Why the hell would she want to see me?"

"I can't really say..."

Aikuro smirked mysteriously as he sidestepped the Scissor Blade, one hand held flamboyantly on his waist, "But since you seem to already know her, it could be a golden opportunity to find out how Anderson died."

The Scissor Blade momentarily inched closer to the nudist commander's crotch, a bead of sweat trickling down his forehead at Ryuko's annoyed grimace. Subtly expressing his relief when she reluctantly lowered her arm, the hardened Life Fiber weapon spinning around her wrist before coming to rest upon her shoulder, Aikuro pretended not to listen when Ryuko leaned towards Ichigo and whispered, "Keep an eye on the exhibitionist. It's time I got some answers without fighting a freaking vampire at the same time!"

With a defiant huff Ryuko marched around the nudist commander, her eyes narrowing with renewed determination as walked towards the field hospital across the park. Sipping at his coffee as he watched the teenager leave, the top button of his shirt miraculously popping open with a brief shimmer of purple light, Aikuro turned to Ichigo and asked, "Surprised I'm still wearing clothes?"

"Somewhat," Ichigo sarcastically muttered, refusing to look at the nudist commander.

"Contrary to popular belief I have a very good memory," Aikuro suavely admitted, the purple light above his nipples dimming as he ran a gloved hand through his hair, "For example, I still remember your threat from the last time I tried exposing my nude glory in front of your impressionable eyes."

Ichigo's eyebrow momentarily twitched at the nudist's shameless admission, an expression perfectly mimicked by his Kamui, before he decided to quickly change the subject, "By the way... didn't Batou manage to capture one of the Quincy?"

"Worried he might escape?"

Aikuro smirked at Ichigo's concern, which garnered an annoyed scowl from the teenager, "Let's just say we've taken every possible precaution to make sure our special guest remains safe until we get back to Osaka. And just to cover our bases, Miss Victoria is standing guard outside his cell. We wouldn't want any of his friends staging a breakout now, would we?"

There was also the Doktor's sheer, unadulterated terror when Seras Victoria walked into the repurposed police station. Watching the Quincy break down into a nervous fit, especially after Batou told the vampire what he found in the man's laboratory, had been very insightful into the inner workings of Millennium.

"You know, Ichigo..."

Muted purple light shone from the nudist commander's crotch and nipples as he stared off into the pre-dawn twilight, "Thanks to Ragyo Kiryuin's announcement at the Great Culture and Sports Festival, Miss Satsuki never managed to finalize my termination papers. That means I'm technically still your homeroom teacher."

" Ichigo, he's starting to strip again," Mugetsu lightly growled, her multicolored eyes narrowing when Aikuro's hands began moving towards his pants.

"Which is how I can tell your battle against the Quincy's enigmatic leader didn't go as expected..."

The sudden change in Aikuro's personality, the shift from flamboyant exhibitionist to serious nudist, caught both Ichigo and his Kamui off guard. One hand propped on his waist as he turned back towards the teenager, the nudist commander scratched his chin before adding, "And from Mugetsu's glowing disposition it appears even her power has its limits. It's quite troubling to think a Quincy possesses the ability to overpower a Kamui..."

" Did he just call me inadequate?"

Ichigo tuned out Mugetsu's bristling annoyance at the perceived insult as he stared at the ground, his brow furrowing slightly, "He left before I had a chance to stop him."

Worried concern flashed across the nudist commander's expression. Thanks to Integra Hellsing's confrontation with the Major earlier in the night, they understood Millennium's goal with disturbing clarity. Knowing that the enigmatic and, quite frankly, insane leader of the Quincy not only personally ordered millions of innocent people murdered with the purpose of drawing Rago Kiryuin out of Honnouji Academy but was also strong enough to defeat Alucard sent a cold shiver racing down his spine. Whatever the Quincy were truly planning could not be good. If his phone hadn't been reduced to scrap metal after the Sternritter destroyed the DTR Model Ray he would have already informed Oliver of the dire situation.

Luckily Batou didn't have that problem.

Smoothing out a strand of unruly blue hair as two more buttons on his shirt spontaneously unfastened themselves, the subsequent eruption of purple light earning an annoyed murmur from both Ichigo and Mugetsu, Aikuro abruptly stiffened when he became aware of a new presence. The scent of imported tobacco growing thicker as a feminine hand tightly gripped his shoulder, the digits squeezing the muscles like a vice, the nudist commander swallowed the nervous lump in his throat when an aristocratic voice directly addressed him.

"I've been looking for you, Mister Mikisugi..."

It took Aikuro's well-trained mind just over a second to effectively weigh all of his options. Escaping from Integra Hellsing's hold in a burst of motion that even Mugetsu had trouble following, which also had the unfortunate side effect of leaving him completely naked from the waist up, the nudist took a moment to analyze the rapidly deteriorating situation before coming to the obvious conclusion. The woman was still mad at him.

"Rest assured, Nudist Beach shall pay to remove the burning wreckage of the DTR Model Ray from your front lawn... and fix your rose garden."

Chuckling nervously when he noticed Integra's furious expression, the cigar held tightly between her clenched teeth visibly tearing, he raised his hands defensively and added, "If this is about your helicopter... let me just say I'm a certified pilot with years of experience! And while I did technically steal your helicopter, it was only to make sure proper medical help reached the surviving Wild Geese!"

"The rotorcraft you 'borrowed' had custom-made, Italian leather upholstery. Its controls and cockpit were designed specifically for my height and build. Not even Walter could fly it without difficulty. Only one was ever produced..."

Integra calmly removed the cigar from her mouth as she marched towards the nudist, "So pray tell, why did you pilot it NAKED?!"

" Ha!"

Mugetsu laughed, her threads rippling contently, as she watched the nudist commander stammer out several excuses, each failing to dissuade Integra Hellsing from potentially beating him to within an inch of his life. It was such a shame Senketsu wasn't here to see this. Therefore, as the better Kamui, it was her sacred duty to inform him of this delightful event with as much detail as possible.

Her multicolored eyes carefully tracking Aikuro as he continued backpedalling away from the irate woman, beads of nervous sweat dripping down his face, Mugetsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a smirk before asking, "Ichigo, do you think she'll make him stop stripping?"

It took Ichigo roughly a second to think about the question before responding in a deadpan manner, "I doubt it. The guy's going to keep stripping until the day he dies."

"I guess she managed to track him down, after all. Gee, that's a crying shame..."

The familiar baritone voice caused Ichigo to look over his shoulder as Batou leisurely emerged from the nearby shadows, gravel and dirt crunching softly beneath his boots. Watching the shameless display of faux cowardice from his fellow nudist with a mixture of exasperation and embarrassment, Batou eventually sighed in annoyance before rubbing the bridge of his nose. He had known the moment Integra Hellsing asked about Aikuro, the anger visible on her face, what the bastard pulled off. And he couldn't exactly blame her reaction, which was part of the reason he'd so helpfully pointed out the idiot's location. For once he was content with letting Aikuro suffer the consequences of walking around naked in public.

It was just a crying shame there were far more pressing issues to deal with at the moment.

Coughing loudly just as Integra's building frustration with the half-naked nudist reached the tipping point, Batou reached into his pocket before frowning, "You can kick Aikuro's ass later. Right now we've got a major problem - Osaka's gone dark."

Aikuro's nervous posture immediately vanished at the unexpected news, "That's troubling. What about Karakura Town, Kobe or Kyoto?"

Batou grimaced at the question as he pulled out his cell phone and tossed it to Aikuro, "I managed to contact Berlin and Paris after dropping off our special guest. They've been trying to get in touch with headquarters for the last three hours. Only every nudist base across the island has gone completely silent."

"The lights are on yet nobody's home, huh?" Aikuro grimly muttered, a perturbed expression crossing his features at the implications, "A total communications blackout timed almost perfectly with Millennium's attack. Only one person on the planet possesses the resources to pull off something of this magnitude in such a short period of time."

Ichigo frowned at the obvious answer, "Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Then I suppose you should make haste for Japan without any further delay."

There was an almost habitual display of motion as the leader of the Hellsing Organization placed the frayed remains of the cigar between her teeth. Her overcoat billowing ominously in the early dawn as the familiar taste of tobacco filled her mouth, the aroma helping to soothe her agitated nerves, Integra inhaled deeply before explaining, "After speaking with that despicable Quincy I realized leaving anything to chance when it came to Ragyo Kiryuin was suicidal. As we speak, a military aircraft is refueling at RAF Northolt. Sir Hugh Irons has also prepared a helicopter to transport you to the airfield once you've secured your guest. With any luck, you should arrive in Japan in approximately fifteen -"

"You think you're the only ones that want Ragyo Kiryuin dead?"

The heavily accented voice rudely interrupted the rest of Integra's explanation as Heinkel Wolfe came marching from the direction of the field hospital. Her tattered cassock billowing with every purposeful step, exposing the tightly wrapped bandages around her mostly regenerated chest, the paladin sneered irritably before reaching out and rudely pushing Batou to the side. Straw-blond hair lightly rustling in the predawn breeze as she stomped to a halt in front of Integra, the large differences in their respective heights apparent, Heinkel's burnt hand sporadically twitched, "She is an inhuman monster! An abomination that needs to be destroyed, her black soul chained to the deepest depths of Hell for all eternity! I will not let verdammt Life Fibers devour humanity like it's a stuck pig!"

With a calmness befitting a woman of her social standing, Integra patiently listened to Heinkel before removing the cigar from her mouth and sardonically responding, "Very well... I have no objections to your decision. However, I presume there will be no further altercations between our organizations until both Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs are dealt with?"

An indignant scoff escaped the paladin's mouth at the rhetorical question, "Ragyo Kiryuin has seized full control over the Vatican, her insidious threads turning His Holiness into her damn puppet! Everything Anderson tried to prevent thirteen years ago has come to pass. So right now I don't care if you're Protestant. Because if you can guarantee that abomination will die, her bleeding corpse strewn across the earth, than I'll gladly fight at your side."

"Fair enough."

Integra gave the paladin a humorless smirk, her tone unfaltering, as Ryuko Matoi marched into view out of the corner of her eyes, the teenager's scowling expression betraying a wide variety of emotions. Crushing the half-smoked cigar between her fingers, wisps of smoke briefly curling through the air, she waited long enough for Ryuko to join them before turning to Batou, "Given both the severity of the situation and the danger posed by your prisoner, I have ordered Seras to accompany you to Japan. I hope that won't be an issue."

"Nah," the nudist commander's scowl briefly lessened as he folded his arms and grunted, "In fact, it would probably make things a hell of a lot easier for us. I know Olivier will chew me out for saying this, but I'll sleep better knowing there's a nearly immortal vampire on our side when we storm Honnouji Academy."

"Then what the hell are we waiting for?"

Ryuko's mounting annoyance at the situation was made apparent as she cracked the knuckles on her right hand, the corners of her mouth curled into a vicious smirk. As faint traces of autumnal sunlight shimmered over the horizon to the east, the early dawn casting the destruction wrought by the Quincy in an entirely new light, she glowered sourly and added, "It's about time I had a little chat with 'dear old mom.'"

" Yes, I believe we've overstayed our welcome, Ryuko," Senketsu's single eye twitched, focusing on Heinkel for a few seconds before swiveling upwards, "Hopefully Ragyo Kiryuin will be defeated by the time we get back. All this fighting has really tired out my threads. I could use a good ironing."

" Is getting ironed all you can think about?" Mugetsu rolled her eyes, a difficult feat for a Kamui, at Senketsu's utterly selfish behavior. The fate of the world was at stake, hundreds of humans would probably die, and all he could think about was getting ironed? The nerve! Of course... she wouldn't mind if Ichigo hand washed her on the trip back, hopefully using that special brand of detergent.

But unlike her fellow Kamui, she would never dare say that out loud.

Senketsu bristled angrily at Mugetsu's smug expression, "At least I -"

A familiar, although annoying, ringtone rudely interrupted the Kamui before he managed to finish his admittedly brilliant retort. Growling slightly under his non-existent breath at the incessantly repeating song, Senketsu's first reaction was to stare angrily at Aikuro Mikisugi. After all, he was the only one that had a cell phone in their hands. However, it didn't take long for the Kamui to realize the ringtone was coming from his left, where he saw Ichigo rummaging through Mugetsu's pockets in search of his own cell phone. An embarrassed look on his face when he finally pulled out the device, which had miraculously survived the night with little more than a cracked casing, the teenager's eyes widened in muted astonishment at the number displayed prominently across the screen.

"Yoruichi?"

Batou's already troubled expression soured when Ichigo placed the phone against his ear. Something didn't feel right about this. How the hell could Yoruichi have bypassed whatever trick Ragyo used to cut off Japan from the rest of the world? It would take someone smarter than Satsuki's hacker friend to...

God damn it.

The only bastard smart enough to pull off a stunt like this, yet not tell anyone until the last second, was Kiske Urahara. Massaging the bridge of his nose while making a mental note to have a heart-to-heart chat with the 'retired' shinigami when they got back to Karakura Town, Batou stiffened when Ichigo suddenly stammered.

"What."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #32 - The Incredulous Skeptic

"I swear that's what happened!"

Integra Hellsing arched a single eyebrow, her expression stoic and unchanging, as she stared incredulously at the slightly nervous nudist soldier standing at attention. Briefly glancing over her shoulder at Batou, the nudist commander busy directing soldiers halfway across the clearing, she took a deep drag from her cigar before asking in the most deadpan voice she could muster, "Really?"

A single bead of sweat slowly trickled down the man's cheek at the piercing stare, "Yes, ma'am!"

Calmly removing the cigar from her mouth, faint wisps of smoke drifting lazily through the air, Integra closed her eyes and took a moment to compose her thoughts, "You mean to tell me that Sir Penwood, one of my most trusted associates and my late father's closest friend, cut a swathe of destruction through Millennium's forces with his bare hands?"

"Don't forget about the taxi!" A member of the SAS randomly quipped from the other side of the clearing, earning a scathing glare from Batou.

The leader of the Hellsing Organization listened in growing irritation when the nudist soldier explained for the third time the sequence of events that transpired during their retreat out of the city. How they'd been running through the corpse-choked back alleys only for a Quincy to suddenly crash through the buildings in front of them. That Sir Penwood had calmly strolled through the cloud of dust and smoke, his suit impeccable, while fixing the cuff of his sleeve. And yes, how the apparently nervous wreck of a man had reached out and picked up an automobile and thrown it at a group of Quincy.

An angry snort left the woman's mouth at the mental image.

"What you just described is, quite frankly, impossible," Integra snapped, her patience reaching its rather short end, "I've known Sir Penwood since I was a girl. The man helped raise me after my father's untimely death. I would have known if he was capable of the supernatural feats you've described! For God's sake... Alucard would have at least mentioned if the man possessed any type of extraordinary power!"

For a moment there was utter silence, the nudist refusing to look away, before he answered, "He did bring up the vampire."

Judging by the slight tensing of her jaw, which nearly snapped her second cigar in half, Integra hadn't been expecting that answer, "Sir Penwood has known Alucard since the Second World War. I fail to see how it's relevant to the matter at hand."

"Upon dealing with the last of the Quincy, which involved snapping their weapons with his bare hands, Sir Penwood engaged Commander Batou in conversation," the nudist coughed to dislodge the nervous lump in his throat, a byproduct of Integra Hellsing's stern gaze, and motioned to the gray haired nudist, "During this time, he casually mentioned Alucard."

Integra narrowed her eyes at the statement, "What were his exact words?"

Flinching under the intense glare, the nudist soldier hesitantly answered, "I cannot recall the exact phrasing but the context involved the vampire's inability to solve anything without his help."

It was only due to her extreme patience that Integra did not express her annoyance about the ludicrous story in the most direct way possible. While the likelihood that both Nudist Beach and the SAS were lying right to her face were low, especially in the aftermath of a gruesome massacre that left three million dead, she refused to even consider the notion that Sir Penwood was capable of fighting off a Sternritter using nothing more than his bare hands and a dented manhole cover. Especially considering the Sternritter was the same Quincy who gave Ryuko Matoi some difficulty.

"Richards! Don't forget to tell her how the guy - "

A loud smack echoed throughout the clearing when Batou slapped the SAS member on the back of the head hard enough to cut him off midsentence, "Give it a rest! It's not like she's going to believe anything you say! Even if it is true, we have no goddamn evidence. But jeez... that guy could throw one hell of a punch..."

"I managed to take a picture, sir."

All eyes turned onto the nudist in front of Integra as he reached into his vest and pulled out his phone, "I noticed Ryuko Matoi leave her phone in the safe house after she departed to fight the Quincy. I thought it best to hold onto it until I could return it to her."

Integra's eye twitched for the briefest of moments, her lips quivering in building irritation at the nonsense surrounding her, when the nudist reached into his pocket and began looking through the images on Ryuko Matoi's phone for the mysterious photograph. Grabbing the device once the nudist apparently found what he was looking for, her finger posed over the screen, she stared at the high-definition image and frowned.

It was blurry... of course .

Yet she had to give them proper credit. Despite the suspicious blurriness, the individual displayed prominently in the image did resemble Sir Penwood to a remarkable degree. But she still doubted their claims. For instance, Sir Penwood certainly did not possess a body that well sculpted or muscular. Nor could he overpower the same Sternritter that captured Walter and fought off Ryuko Matoi using nothing more than standard grappling techniques. It was insanity.

"A single blurry image proves nothing," Integra scoffed, turning the full focus of her ire upon Batou, "But from the evidence you've put forth it appears that Sir Penwood managed to survive the nigh, a rather miraculous feat. So... where is he? Surely contacting him will settle this annoying little matter?"

"I don't know," Batou shrugged, allowing the woman's glare to wash harmlessly off his body. He'd seen Olivier angrier whenever Alex accidentally ate her lunch, "The guy left after punching the Quincy halfway across London. Said something about dealing with his annoying son..."

Integra found that statement to be strange. Sir Penwood only had a single child and he was identical to his father in nearly every way imaginable, including a meek temperament. He was also studying in Spain at the moment, which raised several questions. If Sir Penwood was indeed in possession of supernatural powers, including the ability to easily overpower a Sternritter with nothing more than his bare hands, what else had he been hiding?

Across time and space, in a dimension hidden within the Soul Society, Yhwach's face flinched for the briefest of moments.

You Make Me Feel Brand New

It's been a while since I managed to upload two chapters less than a month apart but Chapter 52 was just so easy to write. And with the Hellsing Arc reaching its conclusion back in Chapter 51, the various actors and characters recovering from the Battle of London, I'm pleased to announce (and give up) the first chapter of the Karakura Assault Arc, which returns exclusively to Bleach and Kill la Kill. And while there might be a few mentions of Hellsing, either by characters talking about Integra or Alucard, none of them will actually appear in the arc.

I hope you enjoy the chapter. And be sure to check out the story's tvtropes page. it has a lot of stuff you might have missed while reading the story.

Also, I feel the need to mention that the poll between Satsuki and Ryuko is basically tied.

---

...

---

Chapter 52 - You Make Me Feel Brand New

November 9th, 2002 - 10:50 AM JST [2:50 AM GMT]

"Are you telling me the shipment never arrived?"

Ragyo Kiryuin halfheartedly listened to the middle manager stammer relentlessly over the phone. Strumming her fingers against the desk when the man fervently shifted the blame for the shipment's loss onto Nudist Beach's shoulders, the cacophony of colors radiating from her silver hair permeating every shadow of the former Student Council chambers, her mood quickly soured when he mentioned the destruction of her COVERS.

"Well then... you can expect tighter security for the next delivery."

A cold smirk danced across the Kiryuin matriarch's lips at the middle manager's relieved sigh. What a foolish reaction. Did he honestly believe she'd simply let things slide? The man wouldn't survive another week for his failure to stop Nudist Beach, that was certain, but his usefulness was not yet at an end. She still needed to understand how her former husband's organization managed to acquire her company's shipping manifest.

"However, your doubt concerning my COVERS suggests the problem is far greater than you've reported."

She heard the man's breath hitch in his throat at her offhanded comment, an expression of pure terror that brought a smile to her face, "It would be troublesome to send Xcution out to deal with such a minor problem... especially after Miss Tristan's murder at the hands of these naked pigs. But perhaps you have a point. Nudist Beach must suffer the consequences of continuously disrupting the European market. You can expect Miss Partas to arrive within twenty-four hours to ensure the shipments are properly delivered across France."

The middle manager's pathetic stammering intensified at the mention of her employee. Tapping one finger rhythmically against the desk as she patiently listened to his faux confident pleas that such drastic measures weren't needed, that his forces were more than enough to prevent any further assaults, Ragyo narrowed her maroon eyes and smirked, "Bien sûr... but please inform me once the next shipment arrives in Paris."

Snapping the phone shut on her soon-to-be terminated employee before he could respond with more of his annoying drivel, Ragyo turned towards the windows overlooking Honnouji Academy's barren courtyard and stared at the recently constructed satellite transmitter. As several COVERS floated across her field of view, tendrils of Life Fibers trailing lazily from their collars and sleeves, she stopped strumming her fingers and sighed. Nudist Beach was becoming far more of an annoyance that initially anticipated. She'd assumed her husband's audaciously named organization would focus their efforts on the COVERS slowly pushing southward. Yet that had not been the case. And she could trace the source of her woes back to Olivier Mira Armstrong.

She should have searched for the woman's body after dealing with Genesis...

Her former employee had been quite busy these last seventeen years. Ragyo couldn't help but reluctantly concede that Olivier had done quite well in taking over Souichiro's pathetic organization. Turning what would have most likely been a mockery of an army more focused on fighting naked instead of destroying Life Fibers into a reasonable threat was quite the feat, an accomplishment worthy of the Armstrong name. But what truly garnered her attention was the presence of a fourth Kamui.

Danketsu.

The Kamui's magnificent name sent a shiver racing down her spine. She had known about Danketsu and its wearer for quite some time, despite her foolish daughter's valiant attempts to keep the information under wraps. At first she assumed the Kamui was nothing more than a cheap knockoff, a mockery woven by her treacherous husband using a small sample of Junketsu's Life Fibers. It was a belief that had been bolstered in the aftermath of Nui's mission to Rio de Janeiro, where her clone observed the Kamui's advanced configuration was nearly identical in appearance. Yet that changed when dearest Nui excitedly announced how the woman - the same woman that coward failed to capture in Seattle - was a Life Fiber Hybrid.

While she needed to reprimand Yuu for leaving something so important out of his report, such a revelation certainly explained how the woman survived his trap. To think yet another Life Fiber Hybrid existed upon this pathetic planet. One unrelated to either Isshin or herself. It was miraculous, a quirk of fate she could play to her advantage. And if dearest Nui was correct, this woman's, Kinue Kinagase, Life Fibers were quite powerful, which could potentially cause issues down the line. But the presence of another hybrid did not compare to the problem currently occupying her every waking moment.

Isshin.

After twenty-two years that man know how to both infuriate and infatuate her. It was thanks to that lovable oaf that Souichiro even managed to weave Danketsu in the first place. Her former husband was a pathetic man, a parasite possessing only a modicum of talent. All of his creations - Senketsu, Danketsu, the Scissor Blade and Anti-Life Fiber weaponry - were nothing more than cheap copies of her inventions. But that didn't bother her. No, what truly bothered her, what caused the rainbow light shining throughout the office to dim, was that Isshin knew everything about the Original Life Fiber's glorious plans and yet he denied it. Every step of the way he's fought against the Life Fibers, from kidnapping dearest Amu to hiding Souichiro and Ryuko.

And during the Great Culture and Sports Festival he had the audacity to lay a hand on her.

But, even so, she couldn't help but love the man.

Despite his childish but annoying rebellion against Life Fibers, things would be truly boring without Isshin's charming personality. He was the only man worthy of her affection. For there was no other soul worthy of the Original Life Fiber's gift, to travel eternally at her side throughout the heavens once humanity succumbed to its inevitable fate.

La vie est drôle...

Ragyo was torn from her swirling thoughts when the wooden doors on the far side of the office creaked open, her maroon eyes swiveling sideways as Rei Hououmaru appeared in the doorway. Subtly adjusting her aviator sunglasses as she crossed the expansive room, her heels clicking softly with every step, the Revocs secretary bowed profusely before addressing her boss, "I presume your business call with the Paris office went as expected?"

"Paris is most definitely a lost cause at this point," Ragyo tensely conceded, her finger traced a pattern against the desk, "Souichiro's organization will undoubtedly interfere if we sent another shipment to the city, which impacts our market saturation across Western Europe. For the time being we'll refocus our efforts upon the African market. Oh, and please be sure to fire the manager who allowed this atrocity to happen."

Hououmaru stiffened as she pulled a PDA from her breast pocket, "I shall begin preparations right away. However, something has come up that requires your immediate attention."

A single silver eyebrow quirked at her secretary's remark, "Oh?"

"Ten minutes ago we received a heavily encrypted package of data," Hououmaru swiped her fingers across the PDA's screen before continuing, "According to the information, at this very moment the Quincy organization known as 'Millennium' are launching a major assault on London and the surrounding boroughs."

Ragyo nearly laughed at the irony, an amused smirk playing at the corners of her mouth. London, the bastion of the organization that managed to keep the embargo on her company in place, was under attack from those pathetic rats scurrying in the shadows. Dearest Nui's report had been most enlightening. Her mannerisms aside, it had been quite interesting to hear that Millennium and those Quincy from the Great Culture and Sports Festival were one and the same. Yet that didn't make the slightest difference in the end. If these Quincy couldn't defeat a single member of Xcution without assistance from Nudist Beach or her daughters, than what threat could they pose against her?

After all, none of them possessed the same power as that woman .

Maroon eyes narrowed fractionally as she perished the thought from her mind, "Is there anything else, Hououmaru? Foolish as they may be, I hardly think these Quincy would simply waltz into London with a creature like Alucard waiting for them."

"Satellite imagery detected several aircraft heading towards London," Hououmaru brought up an image on her PDA, "They should reach the city in just over ten minutes."

Ragyo sighed, an annoyed frown gracing her features as she glanced towards the computer on the desk. It appeared she vastly overestimated the intelligence of these Quincy. Directly attacking London and earning the full and undivided attention of Alucard was something even she wasn't keen on doing. The vampire was a mystery, a creature that defied logic and caused her a small amount of grief. But she was content to leave London, and by proxy Great Britain, alone if it meant not having to deal with Alucard, especially after witnessing his sealed power.

Tapping a perfectly manicured finger against the desk as she glanced toward the computer, a detailed image of Shinra Koketsu displayed on the screen beneath scrolling lines of data, she mused thoughtfully before shrugging, "It's tragic that Isshin's actions prevent me from leaving Honnouji Academy. I would have loved to watch Ryuko and Ichigo eviscerate the Quincy down to the last man."

"There's one last thing you should know, Ma'am."

The excitement tainting Hououmaru's voice piqued Ragyo's interest, "It seems Millennium's objective is to destroy Alucard - which will involve slaughtering the entire population of London."

"A rather laudable goal."

The deaths of a few million people did not bother the Kiryuin matriarch. She had already written Great Britain off as a lost cause, the entire country firmly under the control of Nudist Beach and the Hellsing Organization. And with a monster like Alucard, regaining any semblance of control over the English market would have been nearly impossible. Which is why she couldn't help but thank Millennium.

London's destruction would undoubtedly create a humanitarian crisis of global proportions. Millions of people will require essential supplies to survive the winter, things like shelter, food and clothing . Nobody would find it suspicious if Revocs, the largest and most successful attire conglomerate in the world, donated thousands upon thousands of outfits. After all, she was the magnanimous CEO of Revocs, a philanthropist in the eyes of the pigs in human clothing. Not even Alucard would dare interfere in - Ragyo stiffened, an expression of dawning realization slowly crossing her face, before she coldly asked, "Everyone, you say?"

Hououmaru smirked while subtly adjusting her sunglasses, "All three million residents, Ma'am."

Melodious laughter slowly filled the Kiryuin matriarch's office as she absorbed the true meaning of Hououmaru's answer, the corners of her mouth sadistically twisting upwards. As rainbow light burst forth, covering the room in a brilliant cacophony of colors, Ragyo's laughter continued growing in volume until it could be heard even within the deepest bowels of Honnouji Academy.

---

...

---

A thunderous clash exploded across Tsubakidai Park as Ira Gamagori stumbled backwards, arcs of electricity crackling around his Shackle Regalia Mark II. Grunting in determination as he planted an armored foot deeply into the ground to arrest his momentum, the former Disciplinary Committee Chair of Honnouji Academy paid no heed to the disturbing glowing cracks slowly spreading across his Goku Uniform. Failure was not an option! Not when everything was on the line! He couldn't allow himself to stagger, to fall upon his knees at this critical moment!

"Your strength remains as impressive as ever."

Admiration filled Gamagori's voice as the faceplate of his Shackle Regalia slid upwards with a hiss of pressurized air, exposing his smirking features, "But it will take more than that to defeat me, Yasutora Sado!"

Chad quietly grunted in acknowledgement of the Elite Four's compliment as he relaxed his stance, wisps of blue spiritual energy rising from the dual-colored shield extending nearly halfway up his right arm. Flexing his armored fingers, the slight tingling sensation from Gamagori's attack already beginning to fade, he answered, "... thanks. You've gotten better as well."

His brown hair shifting lightly in the autumn wind blowing gently through the park, Chad frowned pensively without saying another word as he considered what Gamagori was truly asking. But despite agreeing to the pre-determined rules of their match, which had for some reason involved signing release forms, he was still reluctant to unleash Brazo Izquierda del Diablo's full power against the former member of the Elite Four.

Which was a problem at the moment.

After more than half a dozen similar matches, all of which eventually ended with Gamagori's Shackle Regalia torn to shreds, Chad felt like he understood the teenager far better than most people. Gamagori was stubborn to a fault. Even if he destroyed his Goku Uniform, Chad knew the teenager would continue fighting until he was either knocked unconscious or Satsuki Kiryuin ordered him to stand down. And that was something he couldn't help but respect. The former Disciplinary Committee Chair might be slightly... loud... but he was just that kind of guy, willing to lay his life on the line for a friend. And while he was fairly certain Gamagori saw himself more as Satsuki Kiryuin's right-hand man instead of her friend, it was still petty much the same thing.

"You want me to hit you as hard as I can, right?"

Chad's question sounded more like a statement as the stoic teenager raised his right arm, spiritual energy enveloping the transformed limb, "... but my answer hasn't changed since the last time you asked. Sorry."

"You DARE go easy on me?!"

Scintillating bolts of purple and green electricity exploded from Gamagori's Goku Uniform at the audacity of his opponent. He was Lady Satsuki's impenetrable shield! There was no attack in all of creation he would not weather to protect her! His faceplate snapping back into place as he stomped forward, the impact of his steps shaking the ground, Gamagori held out his arms and loudly shouted, "While reluctance to harm one's allies is very admirable, do not forget the rules of this match! You signed an agreement in writing to use everything at your disposal! If you attempt to renege on your promise, to go back on your WORD, I will not hesitate to discipline you using the full power of my Shackle Regalia!"

Chad spent almost a minute quietly weighing his options before eventually coming to a decision. Extending his left arm, liquid metal flowing down the limb and coalescing into white and red armor, he flexed his fingers before answering, "Alright... but I don't want to destroy your Goku Uniform again. Your friend was rather... scary... after last time."

"Excellent! I'm glad you've realized the error of your ways!"

Arcs of crackling electricity scorched the surrounding landscape as Gamagori rushed towards Chad, one fist cocked over his shoulder, "But do not think the outcome of our battle will be the same as last time, Yasutora Sado! Now prepare yourself! Shackling Punch!"

"Look at those two idiots go..."

Nonon Jakuzure murmured irritably under her breath when the two idiots resumed beating the crap out of each other. Why the hell did she leave the warm comfort of her apartment to watch the toad get his Goku Uniform destroyed for the sixth time? Oh, that's right. Satsuki wanted to observe Gamagori's fight against Strawberry's friend and she just couldn't allow her best friend to go alone. Tucking her hands deeper into the pockets of her bright pink jacket to stave off the bitter cold, her cheeks flushed red, Nonon grumbled in annoyance when Gamagori slammed his fist against Chad's transformed right arm.

"How surprising. The toad is quoting his stupid rules even when he's completed pissed off..."

"You are mistaken, Jakuzure."

The absolute certainty permeating every word of the short answer easily overwhelmed the vibrant display of clashing spiritual energies, the cacophony of harsh and conflicting sounds subsumed beneath the far more noble response. Adjusting the collar of her white jacket, fully unzipped to allow Junketsu the freedom to gaze upon the world, Satsuki Kiryuin's voice remained perfectly calm when she continued, "Gamagori possesses no animosity towards Yasutora Sado for his past defeats."

Nonon frowned in confusion but an annoying voice rudely interrupted her before she could speak, "Lady Satsuki's right."

The golden bandana covering Uzu Sanageyama's sewn eyes fluttered softly in the wind as the kendo master observed the friendly sparring match taking place fifty two feet and seven inches away, pulses of what he now recognized to be spiritual energy painting an extraordinarily vivid picture of Gamagori's fight with Yasutora Sado. It was still strange to consider that his Shingantsu, which he had sacrificed so much for, had been incomplete, unable to sense the supernatural energy known as spiritual energy. At first he found such assumptions insulting. But after getting his ass handed to him several times a week by Yoruichi Shihoin, a cocky smirk on the shinigami's face while she ran circles around his Blade Regalia Mark III, Sanageyama conceded that maybe she had a point.

"Gamagori's tougher than Chad," the former Athletic Committee Chair explained, smirking when he sensed the approving nod from Lady Satsuki, "But all of his techniques are slow and easy to dodge. And that's ignoring the lack of anger or frustration in his muscles. Heh... smooth. So that's what he's trying to do."

Nonon snapped her head towards the blind kendo master at his enigmatic answer, "What? What is the toad trying to do?"

"Gamagori has recognized the difference between power and experience."

Satsuki's heels clacked softly against the ground as she calmly answered Nonon's question, her piercing blue eyes completely focused on the high-intensity battle between Gamagori and Ichigo's friend. Ignoring the powerful bursts of electricity arcing through the air as the two combatants fought for dominance, the slightest hint of red spreading across her cheeks, the former Kiryuin heiress stood tall before continuing, "You should already know, Jakuzure, that simply possessing power greater than your opponent's does not guarantee victory if you lack the necessary experience to properly wield it. For in a battle between two warriors of comparable strength and speed it will be the more experienced fighter who will emerge victorious. My defeat against Ichigo is testament to that notion. And when facing a monster like my mother, who possesses both power and experience in abundance, such a noticeable weakness will only result in your death."

Reaching towards the auburn Scissor Blade strapped against her back, the hardened Life Fiber weapon unable to collapse to a more manageable size, Satsuki curled her fingers around the curved handle, "It was not until the Great Culture and Sports Festival, when my mother finally dispensed with her mockery of civility, that you experienced what it truly means to fight to survive, to use all of the power at your disposal against opponents fully intent on taking your life. For make no mistake. If events had proceeded upon a different path Xcution would have killed you without the slightest hint of regret. Such is their unholy and barbaric dedication to Ragyo Kiryuin."

"And that's why Lady Satsuki wants us to train against Ichigo's friends."

Sanageyama folded his arms and smirked when another burst of spiritual energy washed over his body, "Ichigo's fought against some pretty nasty characters... Hollows, arrancar and even a few shinigami. Heh... I'm actually envious of the guy. Fighting through alternate dimensions to save the world from psychopaths sounds like a lot of fun. But if there's anyone that can help Gamagori, it's going to be Chad."

"Jeez... that almost sounded profound, monkey," Nonon smirked when Sanageyama's expression didn't change for several seconds, which was the length of time it took him to realize she was being entirely sarcastic. Mockingly waving her baton through the air, a snarky grin plastered across her face, she waited until he just began reacting before adding, "And give it a rest with the sagely advice, would you? We all know you're counting down the hours until you can fight that annoying woman again!"

"Yoruichi's brutal training helped expand the range of my Shingantsu," Sanageyama impatiently tapped a foot against the ground, the bandana wrapped over his eyes shifting with his expression. He would not let Nonon's snarky comments get to him. Not again, "If you actually followed Lady Satsuki's instructions and fought Uryu Ishida seriously, you would have noticed the same improvements with your Symphony Regalia."

"Bite me, monkey."

Nonon wasn't in the mood to hear that annoying Quincy's name. When Satsuki announced that she wished for them to fight Ichigo's friends, both to gain valuable combat experience and help Iori and the creepy shopkeeper find any remaining defects in their regalia, she had marched forward jauntily. After all, getting stronger was the only way she was ever going to settle the score with Dokugamine. That near-sighted psychotic bitch was going to pay for trying to turn her 'fluffy!' But before she even thought about kicking Riruka's ass halfway back to Italy, she needed to focus all of her efforts on Uryu Ishida.

Ugh, even thinking the name left a bad taste in her mouth!

Somewhere along the line the Quincy decided that since his stupid powers don't work all too well against her Symphony Regalia, which was fine by her, he would instead hit her with everything at once. Turning around and finding more than one thousand arrows only a few feet away from her face was bad enough, but it was the annoying and condescending smirk that really pissed her off. It was bad enough knowing that the freaks could fly, which was her territory god damn it, but having to hear the Quincy's arrogant commentary every time he blitzed through her defenses was infuriating!

Stomping her foot against the ground and growling when she remembered the Quincy's last comment, which had been nothing more than blatant mockery of her choice of music, she vowed to make him pay during their next fight. It didn't matter if they were allies or Satsuki found no fault with his behavior. Nobody mocked Nonon Jakuzure! Not Strawberry or the Transfer Student. And especially not that four-eyed bastard!

"That's enough."

Gamagori stopped moving the instant Satsuki's authoritative voice reached his ears, crackling chains of purple electricity halting inches from Chad's extended left arm. Turning away from his worthy rival at the familiar clacking of heels against dirt, his Shackle Regalia reverting back into its normal form in a burst of stars, the former Disciplinary Committee Chair ignored his disheveled appearance and stood at attention, "Understood, Lady Satsuki."

Silence momentarily reigned over the park as Satsuki flipped the Scissor Blade around in her grip, the polished surface reflecting her stern expression, before planting it firmly in the ground. Leaving the weapon partially embedded in the ground as she continued marching forward, blue eyes narrowed fractionally at Gamagori's damaged Shackle Regalia, Satsuki's voice contained a measure of pride when she finally spoke.

"Over these last few weeks your performance in battle has improved across the board - strength, reflexes, speed and intuition. But do not confuse improvements with readiness! For I noticed several weaknesses during your match with Yasutora Sado! Vulnerabilities and flaws that my mother and her followers will undoubtedly exploit at the first opportunity! Your Shackle Regalia might have been woven with a singular purpose, but that does not mean you must limit yourself to it! Thinking outside the box! Breaking through the false limitations imposed upon oneself! It is through those methods that you will receive the experience necessary to stand against Life Fibers!"

Gamagori's brow creased into an introspective frown at the biting criticism, the hidden truth of Lady Satsuki's bold words as clear as day. He had allowed himself to grow complacent with his Shackle Regalia's power, limiting himself to the techniques Iori had initially instilled into the Goku Uniform. And while his honest defeat at the hands of his rival during the Karakura Town Raid Trip had opened his eyes, it had come too late to make a difference. Such arrogance could not be allowed for Lady Satsuki's impenetrable shield! How could he hope to protect her if he could not think outside the box?

Steeling his expression into a firm scowl as he turned around, Gamagori marched toward Chad before respectfully extending his hand, "That was a most enlightening match, Yasutora Sado. I look forward to defeating you the next time we fight."

"Likewise..." Chad nodded as he returned the firm handshake, "But please... call me Chad."

"Nonsense!"

The teenager's size seemingly doubled as he folded his arms and passionately declared, "It is disrespectful to address one's allies by anything other than their given name! Calling you anything else would destroy the camaraderie between us!"

"Well said... Maxwell."

A single eyebrow twitched when Yoruichi Shihoin appeared out of thin air almost directly behind him, the playful smirk etched across her face all but apparent. But did she truly think he would allow her to flagrantly disregard the sanctity of social standards? To utter such rude insults against his person?! Angrily spinning around to face the shinigami, a spiked whip emerging from his sleeve, Gamagori's determination to punish Yoruichi rapidly vanished when he found himself face to face with his father.

"Y-You!"

"It fills a father's heart with pride to see his son behave in such an exemplary and commendable manner!"

Alex Louis Armstrong ignored Gamagori's increasingly petulant expression as he firmly clasped a hand around his shoulder. It was truly inspiring to know that his son had grown into a fine young man with a strong moral compass. For despite the more questionable activities he confessed to committing while a student of Honnouji Academy, the knowledge that he did so in order to facilitate humanity's victory over Life Fibers and Ragyo Kiryuin was just enough to earn his forgiveness.

"But I did not come here to exchange simple pleasantries!"

Pink stars twinkling into existence as he flexed his biceps, the well-defined muscles bulging beneath his uniform, Armstrong posed dramatically before adding, "For Satsuki Kiryuin's words carry more than a grain of truth! Despite the great power of your Goku Uniform, the threads PULSING with your determination, there is still much for you to learn before you are ready to fight against the likes of Xcution! Power and experience go hand in hand, two sides of the same coin! One without the other can only lead to disaster! Therefore, Maxwell Bradley Armstrong, I will bestow upon you the secret hand-to-hand techniques that have been passed down the Armstrong line for GENERATIONS!"

"I will require no such thing!"

The nerve of his father to believe he required such archaic techniques to stand at Lady Satsuki's side! Looming menacingly over the older man, who seemed unaffected in the slightest by his son's response, Gamagori boasted, "I shall carve my own path in life! Walking forward as my own man! Independent of the Armstrong name!"

"Simply outstanding, Maxwell!"

Armstrong's boisterous shouting echoed across the park at his son's marvelous answer, the dedication permeating the response bringing a proud tear to his eyes. Tightly clenching his hands together and flexing, the already tight-fitting Nudist Beach shirt ripping apart at the seams and exposing his well-sculpted physique to the world, the nudist commander blatantly ignored the mixed reactions from the audience and posed in front of his embarrassed son, "But I must unfortunately DIGRESS! It's the folly of today's youth to think they can survive without learning from the past! Such foolhardy thinking can only lead to tragedy! Yet you are correct! A name is but a sequence of letters! Meaningless on its own! Striving to create your own mark upon the world is a pursuit worthy of an Armstrong!"

"Now then... we have much work to do!"

Firmly grabbing Gamagori's wrist before his son could voice a single protest to the contrary, Armstrong turned around and began marching away. Humming a pleasant tune under his breath as his son futilely attempted to escape his grasp, the passionate blows raining down relentlessly upon his well-defined physique doing very little damage, the nudist commander briefly stopped in front of Satsuki and politely inquired, "Please forgive my rudeness, Miss Satsuki. By interrupting your training session I have besmirched the Armstrong name!"

"I see no harm in this."

Satsuki's unyielding answer brooked no arguments as she closed her eyes and tore the Scissor Blade from its temporary perch in the ground. The eccentric mannerisms of Gamagori's biological father were well known to her. Yet she knew beneath his bombastic and gregarious personality lay an intelligent mind and strong will... the signs of an Armstrong. Flicking a strand of loose hair behind her ear as she turned around, Satsuki remained completely silent while Gamagori was dragged away by his enthusiastic father. Despite his behavior, born out of nothing more than childish embarrassment and petulance, she understood fully well that he would be in capable hands.

For it was foolish to underestimate an Armstrong.

"Man, that's gotta suck..."

Sanageyama shook his head as Armstrong slowly but surely dragged Gamagori off into the distance with barely any effort. In any other situation he would probably make a joke about his comrade's misfortune or take pictures like Jakuzure was doing with her phone. But he was intimately aware of the nudist commander's monstrous strength, power enough to shred his Blade Regalia with a single punch. Rubbing his chin at the phantom memory, Sanageyama couldn't help but feel a little jealous for Gamagori. While his matches against Yoruichi Shihoin were helping his Shingantsu, he would give nearly anything for a rematch against Armstrong.

Only slightly aware of her newest protégé's thoughts as she watched Armstrong passionately drag his son away, the cat-like smirk stretching across Yoruichi's features slowly shifted when she noticed Satsuki Kiryuin staring into the distance. Letting out a tired yawn as she sauntered over to the stern teenager, amber eyes narrowing fractionally when she attempted to follow Satsuki's gaze only to find nothing, the former captain's tone lacked any amusement as she asked, "What's wrong?"

Her undivided attention focused upon Karakura Town's eastern boundary, Satsuki did not immediately answer the formerly exiled shinigami's question as she once more stabbed the Scissor Blade into the ground between her feet. There was something lurking in the farthest depths of her mind. A foreboding sensation that was both alien and nostalgic, bringing to light memories best left forgotten. Yet while she could not understand the reasoning behind the apprehension enveloping her mind, the direction in which it arrived was suspicious all on its own.

Turning towards Yoruichi after nearly a minute of silence, Junketsu's multicolored eyes narrowed underneath her jacket, Satsuki skipped the preamble and sternly ordered, "Contact Isshin Kurosaki. Inform him that my mother is most likely preparing to attack."

---

...

---

The rhythmic clacking of heels against metal echoed softly throughout the retreating darkness as Ragyo Kiryuin strode forth from the elevator, entering the former Student Council chambers with all the regality someone of her stature possessed.

Her elation at the recently revealed news had tempered during the trip from her office, the rainbow light radiating from her silver hair dimming to a fraction of its normal brilliance as she somberly descended the small flight of stairs. She could not simply rush forward. For as ecstatic as she was concerning Millennium's plans for London, the Life Fibers composing her body thrumming with anticipation, there was too much at stake. One false step, one minor underestimation of Nudist Beach or Isshin's allies, could destroy everything she worked hard to achieve. And with Isshin being... well... Isshin, she needed to play her hand carefully. If she didn't, it was quite likely the lovable oaf would find some way to stop her.

But first things first...

"Hououmaru," Ragyo's voice reverberated softly in the darkness, the stern undertone drawing her secretary's attention, "What are our latest projections?"

Flicking her finger across the PDA in her hand, streams of data running down its screen, Rei Hououmaru followed exactly one step behind Ragyo as she answered, "The acquisition of the last remaining American attire companies were finalized during your meeting with the Paris office. Revocs is now the sole distributor of clothing for North America, which puts our market saturation at just over 89.8%."

Ragyo smirked as she plucked a strand of floating Life Fibers out of the air, the crimson thread immediately dying itself the colors of the rainbow. Despite the cowardly yet effective tactics of Nudist Beach, attacking her shipments whenever possible, everything was still proceeding nearly on schedule. Yet simply achieving ninety percent market saturation wasn't nearly enough. Not in the slightest. It didn't matter if every human wore clothing imbued with Life Fibers, the naked apes crushed beneath her feet, if she did not have Shinra Koketsu and the god-like power of Absolute Domination as well.

Absorbing the Life Fiber into her finger as she reached the central platform of the Student Council chambers, her stern gaze drawn to the screens displaying a detailed map of Japan's prefectures, Ragyo closed her eyes and sighed in mild frustration. Ignoring the Mentally Refitted shells of the Honnouji Academy Computer Club, she folded her arms underneath her ample bosom and quipped, "I must give credit where credit is due. The naked apes are putting up far more of a struggle than I anticipated. I assumed the COVERS would have already pushed through Shiga Prefecture. But it seems Olivier is still as stubborn as I remember."

The rainbow light from Ragyo's hair dimmed slightly as she sat down in the very same throne once used by her daughter. Staring at the screen as the information displayed changed to a map of the world, various percentages superimposed on the continents, Ragyo leaned onto her hand before asking the single most important question on her mind, "How long will it take these Quincy to destroy London?"

Hououmaru smirked at Lady Ragyo's question before responding, "The data you gathered during the Great Culture and Sports Festival on the Quincy and their abilities suggests they could destroy London in several hours. However, that neglects the presence of any resistance. Alucard, as well as Ichigo and Ryuko, will most likely take offense to their actions and work to stop them. I understand your excitement, Ma'am, but we must consider the possibility that Millennium will fail to achieve their stated goals."

"You raise a fine point, Hououmaru..."

Ragyo crossed her legs as she hummed thoughtfully, "These Quincy can plan all they want... they can spend another six decades hiding in the shadows like rats... they might even find a way to slaughter London. But they'll tragically perish against Alucard's monstrous power regardless of their own abilities, which unfortunately leaves me with the annoying task of destroying the vampire. Yet once the Grand Couturiers finish Shinra Koketsu, not even Alucard will be able to stand before me!"

Even without the power of Absolute Domination coursing through its weaving, Shinra Koketsu was still a Kamui. A Life Fiber garment of the highest order, fit only to be worn by the being destined to drag humanity towards its final, collective fate. Chuckling softly at the notion of destroying the vampire, Ragyo's maroon eyes snapped towards Hououmaru, "And what is the Vatican's response to Millennium's actions?"

"The information we received suggests that the Vatican has created several battalions under the banner of the Ninth Crusade to deal with Millennium," Hououmaru tapped her PDA's screen several times as she scrolled through the data, "It consists of over three thousand soldiers, most of them wearing Life Fibers, under the control of Iscariot's commander, Bishop Enrico Maxwell. From the Grand Couturier's report, his partnership with the Hellsing Organization and Nudist Beach might be enough to tilt the scales against the Quincy."

"Is that so?"

The amusement in Ragyo's voice did not go unnoticed by her secretary. Enrico Maxwell... now there was a name she never dreamt of hearing again. To think that insignificant child, who possessed not a shred of resistance to Life Fibers, managed to weasel his way into leading the only part of the Catholic Church free of her magnanimous influence. And a bishop as well! The irony was enough to make the Kiryuin matriarch chuckle, for this made things far too easy. After all, with so many different forces allied against them, Ichigo and Ryuko including, there was hardly a doubt in her mind Millennium would get slaughtered before the sun rose on London.

But luckily enough, there was a straightforward solution to fix this problem.

Humming softly as she considered her choices, perfectly manicured fingers strumming against the silk-like fabric of her dress, a cold smirk slowly twisted the corners of Ragyo's lips when she came to a decision, "But I can't help but feel a mere bishop is insufficient for such a monumental task. Hououmaru, contact our colleagues in the Vatican and let them know that Enrico Maxwell is long overdue for a promotion. I think the rank of archbishop should suffice..."

"As you wish," Hououmaru bowed softly before mechanically turning around, one hand reaching for the phone in her breast pocket, "I shall inform them of your recommendations at once."

Propping her cheek against the palm of her hand as Hououmaru's voice faded into the background, the secretary's Japanese fluidly shifting into perfect Italian, Ragyo closed her eyes and pondered the situation at hand. Yes, it was almost certain she would achieve the necessary market saturation despite Millennium's actions in London. But when the Quincy failed to defeat Alucard, she needed to contend with the distinct possibility the vampire would immediately shift his sights onto her. A twinge of irrational annoyance fluttered in her chest at the thought. Dealing with the vampire would delay the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. But given the power felt by her COVERS clone during their skirmish, which still brought a sneer of revulsion to her face, such preparations were more than necessary.

Yet the high probability of dealing with Alucard was a risk she was more than willing to take at this point.

For the confrontation unfolding in London afforded her quite the golden opportunity.

Rainbow light spilled forth in radiant waves of color as the Kiryuin matriarch's appreciation for Millennium's marvelous timing grew exponentially. While she doubted they would be inconvenienced in any way, both Ryuko and Ichigo were effectively trapped on the other side of the world. Their Kamui - Senketsu and Mugetsu - were out of the picture, cutting the number of Kamui standing against her to two. But although most of her remaining attention was focused upon Danketsu and the interesting woman wearing it, Ragyo was hesitant to ignore the threat posed by Satsuki.

La vie est drôle... to think her foolish firstborn believed she could actually arrest her plans.

Yet despite being a failure in every sense of the word, her human body unable to accommodate Life Fibers, Satsuki was still her daughter. A fact that would not change no matter how much she wished otherwise. For while she possessed Souichiro's pathetic genes, Satsuki was still conceived after the Original Life Fiber blessed her body with its glorious power. Her ability to activate Junketsu's advanced configurations during the Great Culture and Sports Festival was proof enough that Satsuki received some modicum of her power, albeit almost insignificant.

But no matter how strong her willpower or intense her determination, Satsuki was still human. And a human could never hope to stand against the glory of Life Fibers.

Subtly twitching her finger, the enthralled members of the Computer Club immediately responding to the gesture by quickly replacing the world map displayed upon the screen for an image of Satsuki wearing Junketsu Zenkan, Ragyo stared at the Kamui as memories of its untapped power pulsed through her mind. Junketsu was the first Kamui, the culmination of years of hard work and research. Both Isshin and her own Life Fibers were used to grant the Kamui existence, which meant if Satsuki hoped to wield Junketsu's full power she would need Isshin's assistance. And given that Isshin is the kind of man to constantly look for new ways to annoy her, she wouldn't put it past the lovable oaf to do just that.

Perhaps Isshin's training would be enough for Satsuki to actually stand against her...

Mocking laughter filled the Student Council chambers at the absurd notion. Even if Satsuki managed to unlock Junketsu's full power with Isshin's assistance, wearing the Kamui with the effectiveness of a Life Fiber Hybrid, in the end she was still just a poor girl using something she could never hope to understand. But Ragyo's amusement was rapidly tempered by reality. Human or not, her daughter was anything but stupid, possessing both the mindset and intelligence befitting a Kiryuin. And given the particular individuals associated with her former husband's organization, including a very annoying man, it was better to err on the side of caution.

After all, underestimating the pigs in human clothing was how dearest Nui lost her eye. Yet dismantling Nudist Beach, destroying everything her former husband worked so tirelessly to achieve, was an opportunity she couldn't afford to simply let slide.

The gentle clacking of Hououmaru's heels as she returned to her side, one hand smoothing out the faintest of wrinkles on her uniform while the other purposefully snapped her phone shut, caused Ragyo's lips to curl upwards into a conniving smirk. Maroon eyes remaining half-lidded when the image of Satsuki shifted to Ichigo and Ryuko, their magnificent Kamui still as beautiful as the day she first saw them, Ragyo waited several long seconds before asking, "Were there any complications? You were gone for quite a while, Hououmaru."

"My deepest apologies, Ma'am," Hououmaru bowed profusely, the aviator sunglasses falling down the bridge of her nose, as she apologized, "But it seems Iscariot has become aware of your infiltration of the Catholic Church, which is most likely due to their ongoing collaboration with Nudist Beach. However, you will be pleased to know that the Pope will anoint Enrico Maxwell as an archbishop within the hour."

"If the Quincy can't slaughter a few million people even after my gracious assistance, then they truly are pathétique ."

Slowly pushing herself out of Satsuki's former throne as she spoke, the rainbow cacophony of light illuminating the chamber doubling in brilliance, Ragyo turned to Hououmaru and smirked maliciously, "Begin preparations for Operation Laissez Faire."

Hououmaru's eyes widened fractionally at the command before she quickly regained her composure. Fingers flicking rapidly across the PDA in her hand, the leader of Xcution settled upon one particular file before calmly responding, "Understood, Ma'am. I shall inform Yuu to commence stage one of the operation immediately."

"His merveilleusement performance these past few weeks aside, such an important task might be too much for the coward to handle..."

Ragyo's tone shifted noticeably as she marched across the Student Council chambers, her heels clacking loudly with every step. An irritated scowl slowly developing across her regal features when her attention was drawn to the monitors displaying the former Sewing Club, the glowing silhouette of Shinra Koketsu crystal clear, she leaned her head backwards and sighed, "I'm afraid Yuu's normal tactics just won't work against Olivier. You're the only member of Xcution that remembers how driven that woman can be, Hououmaru. And with a Kamui such as Danketsu on their payroll, combined with Ginjo's betrayal, Nudist Beach could easily turn the tables on the coward. Oh, that reminds me. Have your people discovered what Ginjo downloaded from our Moscow office?"

"Details concerning the weave patterns of Xcution's raiment, their personal information and histories, a list of Revocs' daughter companies and global market saturation," Hououmaru read off in quick succession, her amber eyes never straying from the PDA's screen, "We're still combing through the data. But the servers Ginjo accessed contained no information on Operation Laissez Faire."

That single detail did more to ease Ragyo's growing concern than anything else. Despite his nearly impeccable record during his years of service in Xcution, the only blemish coming from his neutrality during Genesis and Olivier's little rebellion, Ginjo never earned her trust. Perhaps her suspicions stemmed from his close ties to Isshin, for it was that foolish man who convinced her to hire Ginjo in the first place. Or maybe her doubts pertaining to his loyalty began in the immediate aftermath of Isshin and that woman's unprovoked attack over seventeen years ago. Ragyo didn't know and, more importantly, she didn't care. She had always suspected Ginjo would side with Isshin when the time came, which is why she limited his role in Operation Laissez Faire from the very start.

And in the end Ginjo accomplished absolutely nothing with his pathetic betrayal.

The crimson Life Fibers floating lazily throughout the shadowed chamber immediately adopted a brilliant rainbow hue as Ragyo's lips curled into a psychotic smirk. Her maroon eyes widening sadistically as she stared at Hououmaru, the dark skinned secretary bowing her head respectfully, the Kiryuin matriarch could barely contain her growing pleasure when she finally spoke, "Inform Xcution that I require a volunteer for a very special mission."

---

...

---

"Imitating Hollows... seems like a perfectly logical path for you to follow in order to gain more power. It's not surprising you would do that to becoming stronger."

Her breath was coming out in short, gasping pants as she knelt on the ground, bloodied fingers grasping onto a nearby piece of rubble for support. Beads of sweat trickling down her face as the stoic voice drew ever closer, the pale moonlight filtering through the jagged hole in the wall vanishing behind a figure clad in white, she continued gasping for air when he derisively added, "But you will never be my equal."

The feeling of complete inferiority permeating every fiber of her being was a strange sensation to the Grand Couturier. Only Isshin Kurosaki had ever made her feel this nervous, and that was only because he was the same as Lady Ragyo. Yet despite the vast chasm between her strength and the figure standing in the darkness, the thought of giving up never crossed Nui's mind. The entire situation was confusing to the Grand Couturier. She didn't understand why she was here, fighting against this complete stranger in the middle of the night, but everybody was counting on her to win. And the thought of letting her friends and comrades die was enough to rouse her into action.

Focusing her tired eyes on the pale figure standing against the moonlight, the javelin of green energy clasped in his right hand shimmering brilliantly, she tightly clenched her fingers around the midnight black katana in her own hand, "Getsuga -"

"I told you it's useless!"

Nui's eyes widened in surprise at the man's frustrated response. That was the first time since their fight started that he showed any emotion. But how did she know that? Pushing such thoughts to the back of her mind as she hastily raised her sword to block his sudden attack, emerald sparks dancing through the darkness, the Grand Couturier gasped when the force behind the strike sent her lurching backwards, her body crashing through the thick wall and out into the night.

As she rapidly fell through the skies, smoke and dust clinging to her wounded body, Nui couldn't understand why she wasn't regenerating. Even if her opponent was stronger than she expected, the Life Fibers composing her body should have already healed the damage. It didn't make sense! She wasn't human! She shouldn't be able to feel pain! This shouldn't be happening to her! Yet despite the confusion running rampant through her mind, Nui refused to let go of her weapon. Even as the pale figure closed the distance between them, his bat-like wings flapping harshly in the darkness, her determination to win overwhelmed any thoughts of giving up.

What was going on?

A pained grunt left her mouth when her opponent slammed his blade against her bare stomach, the twitch of growing frustration barely noticeable in his dulled eyes. Smashing into a piece of falling debris with enough force to shatter the stone, Nui barely managed to catch the brief fluttering of wings before a clothed knee powerfully impacted against the small of her back. The world drifting out of focus as she tumbled through the air, her body crashing multiple times against the side of a massive stone column, the Grand Couturier grimaced when she finally reached the open skies only for a clawed hand to reach out and grasp the tattered remains of her sleeve.

And despite teetering on the edge of consciousness, her sight drifting out of focus, Nui still refused to let her sword fall from her numb fingers.

" Why won't you let go of your sword?"

Her opponent's voice remained as emotionless as ever, yet the trace of incredulousness in the question reached her half-conscious mind. Held aloft several inches above the roof, Nui felt the world slowly drift back into focus when he added, "You've experienced the vast difference in our powers and yet you actually still think you can defeat me."

" Difference... in power? That doesn't... matter at all."

The words left her raw throat before the Grand Couturier understood what happened. None of this made any sense. Why did she feel the need to say that? Who was this person that so easily managed to defeat her? As the unanswered questions continued growing inside her confused mind, Nui forced herself to look into the figure's cold eyes, "You think I'd give up, just because you're more powerful than me? From our first battle together I knew that you were stronger. At this point, no matter how many times I see how powerful you are, it won't make a difference to me. I'm determined to see this through to the end. I refuse to give up! You should have realized that by now!"

*Tired muscles quivered as she declared, "I will... find a way... to beat you... *****!"*

*A burst of static pierced through the hazy background, cutting off her opponent's name even though she was the one who said it. Eyes widening slightly when the man's grip tightened dangerously around her sleeve before he callously tossed her away, Nui coughed painfully as she bounced against the roof. Panting heavily as she struggled onto her feet, the Grand Couturier stared tiredly at her opponent when he lightly scoffed, "That's nonsense, *****. Those are the words of someone who doesn't know the true despair of defeat."*

Kneeling on the ground, a trail of blood oozing down her forehead and forcing her left eye shut, Nui still couldn't understand why she was still fighting. Even though it infuriated her tremendously, this wasn't an opponent she could defeat. He was too powerful and fast. And with her regeneration not working, she might actually die if they kept fighting. Wait... why was she fighting in the first place? Was it to protect a friend? But that was nonsense. She didn't have any friends aside from -

Her heart nearly stopped when the pale figure extended his wings, dark green torrents of energy surrounding his body. Unable to move when the pressure in the air doubled and then tripled, flickers of shadows enveloping her opponent as he slowly transformed, the Grand Couturier could barely breath when an emotionless voice pierced through the darkness, "Since you do not understand I will teach you. This is what true despair looks like."

" Resurrección: Segunda Etapa."

Nui Harime's sapphire blue eyes snapped open, cutting off the rest of the dream before she could find out what happened next.

Blinking slowly as she stared upwards in the perpetual darkness, her position on the cute bed she ordered Hououmaru to bring into the Sewing Club giving her a nearly perfect view of Shinra Koketsu, the Grand Couturier absentmindedly moved a lock of blonde hair off her face. It wouldn't be proper for a woman of her standing to not look her best when she woke up, you know!

"Hmm... what was I dreaming about?"

The question lazily escaped the Grand Couturier's mouth as she watched hundreds upon hundreds of Life Fibers float throughout the darkened room. Sitting up while holding a finger against her chin, an expression of purely innocent wonder adorning her features, Nui pouted when most of the dream slipped away like water through a sieve. All she could remember was fighting against some strange creature that looked like a bat... or maybe it was a bird? Well... she knew it was at night. But the moon had looked awfully strange. And the last time she checked, she didn't have a black sword like Satsuki's useless Bakuzan.

"Oh well, I guess it wasn't that important!"

A saccharine smirk stretched across the Grand Couturier's joyful features as she leapt out of bed, her pink boots landing upon the ground without a single hair out of place. Humming happily when every wrinkle besmirching her dress vanished, Nui adjusted the bow in her hair before skipping towards her destination. There was a lot of work she needed to do if she wanted to remain on schedule. And tardiness wasn't something Lady Ragyo tolerated! Cheerfully watching the Mentally Refitted members of the Sewing Club work without any food or rest, her expression twisted into an annoyed frown when she noticed several new corpses slumped against their sewing machines.

Gosh, she must have overslept. They were all still alive the last time she checked!

With a quick snap of her fingers several COVERS landed behind the fallen students, the emaciated and perpetually screaming faces of their victims not bothering the Grand Couturier in the slightest. Hands clasped behind her back as she watched the Life Fiber beings wrap themselves around the corpses before leaping back into the darkness, Nui Harime purposely ignored the fresh blood splatters and happily looked over her shoulder.

"Golly... I guess I really did oversleep!"

Staring directly into the dulled eyes of her twin sister, Amu's purple dress a darker reflection of her cute pink one, Nui pouted childishly, "I hope it wasn't too much trouble working without me, Amu."

"Of course not," Amu Harime replied without emotion, strands of Life Fibers trailing from her outstretched fingers into the darkness, "But did you hear? Lady Ragyo..."

"... is preparing to attack the naked apes," Nui finished without missing a beat, the knowledge of everything she missed during her nap coming to the forefront of her mind. Entwining her fingers with Amu's, the Life Fibers composing her body pulsing at the contact, she grinned happily, "To think Lady Ragyo is ready to make her grand entrance! It's enough to..."

"... make our hearts flutter," Amu stoically agreed. Tilting her head upwards, dulled sapphire eyes gazing at the nearly completed Shinra Koketsu, she thought silently for several long seconds, "But we should get back to work. It wouldn't be wise to let those nudists think they could win. After all..."

Nui laughed happily as she walked off with her sister, "... they have no idea what they're in for!"

---

...

---

The early afternoon shadows slowly lengthened along the abandoned stretch of highway as the faint whirring of a helicopter faded into the distance, a brief shimmer of white paint visible against the overcast background before vanishing. Landing in a soft crouch several hundred feet below her departing aircraft, the pavement cracked from the landing, Esdeath Partas flicked a strand of blue hair out of her eyes as she stared at the skyline far to the west.

Perfect...

Esdeath slowly stood up with an almost disturbing level of calmness, one hand brushing dust from her raiment, before folding her arms and assessing the situation. Her landing hadn't been the most inconspicuous. It was more than likely the nudists were already aware of her general presence, which meant she would need to contend with the various Anti-Life Fiber measures they had in place.

Grinning at the thought of finally destroying the naked pigs and their headquarters, Esdeath pressed a finger against her ear, "I've arrived, Lady Ragyo."

"Magnifique..."

The Kiryuin matriarch's tone carried a hint of joyful pleasure at the announcement, "You're free to commence Operation Laissez Faire, Miss Partas. Use every scrap of power at your disposal to make sure not a single nudist leaves Osaka alive."

"Of course, Ma'am," Esdeath's smirk twisted sadistically at the news, "And shall I spare Olivier Mira Armstrong?"

"No," Ragyo's cold response wasn't surprising to the member of Xcution. She was well informed on the Armstrong's reputation, the harshness and ruthless passion in which she used to command Xcution before turning traitor. That Lady Ragyo wanted the woman to suffer before dying only made her task easier, "While I would prefer if you tortured her for all the years she's spent opposing me, time isn't exactly on our side. So kill Olivier quickly... and do not underestimate her."

"Understood."

It was difficult for her to tell what was more pathetic - that Nudist Beach had the audacity to oppose Lady Ragyo or that they truly believed they could prevent Life Fibers from taking their rightful place in the world. Life Fibers were the pinnacle of evolution. Anyone that attempted to fight back, to prevent Lady Ragyo's plans from coming to fruition, would perish down to the last man, woman and child. To believe otherwise was foolish. For there was nothing on earth that could resist the power of Life Fibers. Not even those pitiful Quincy, the insultingly named Sternritter, could stand against the strength of her raiment without assistance from Lady Ragyo's treacherous daughter.

Her battle against the Quincy possessing pyrokinesis had proven moderately interesting. While his flames did counter her raiment to some extent, the rest of his techniques were quite inadequate. And while he did manage to lightly singe her forearm, a lapse of judgment born from overconfidence, the superficial injury did not stop her from freezing his entire arm in exchange.

If Satsuki Kiryuin hadn't interfered a moment later, when the Quincy was at her complete mercy, she would have struck the finishing blow.

Marching forward, her heels clacking with every step, Esdeath traced a finger against the Xcution symbol stitched above her left breast as she stared at Osaka in the distance. Rapidly swinging her left arm outwards as the sun vanished behind a cloud, she smirked while proudly exclaiming, "Xcution Uniform: Cocytus Raiment!"

An intense burst of rainbow light shone across the landscape as Esdeath's raiment transformed, pale blue metallic armor flowing across her body. Grinning wildly when the last piece of her armor settled into place, the pleated skirt shimmering lightly in the sunlight, she took a moment to experimentally clench her fingers before disappearing in a burst of speed. Ice spreading across the ground with every step she took, the surrounding landscape melting into a blur of orange and brown, Esdeath kept her eyes squarely locked on Osaka. There was no telling what tactics and weaponry the naked apes were preparing to use against her.

But it was the Kamui wearer she was looking forward to meeting the most.

The notion of fighting against that woman caused Esdeath's sadistic smirk to widen. This was the first time since the Grand Couturier wove the last stitching into her Cocytus Raiment that Lady Ragyo authorized the use of its full power. And she planned on using every scrap of power to overwhelm the Kamui wearer before dragging her limp body back to Honnouji Academy for proper judgment. But fighting against such a worthy adversary in a clash for dominance, her very life and existence in the line, was something she'd been hoping - Esdeath instinctively ducked when an Anti-Life Fiber needle pierced through the exact spot her head had just been occupying.

"A sniper... at this range?"

It was mildly impressive a human existed with the skill and eyesight to accurately shoot a target from over two kilometers, especially without the assistance of Life Fibers. There were perhaps only a handful of people in the world capable of such a feat. Yet it didn't make the slightest difference in the end.

Expertly deducing the most likely locations for the sniper's nest based on the needle's incoming trajectory, Esdeath's expression twisted in perturbed annoyance when she could only narrow down her search to two buildings along Osaka's western edge. Forced to twist sideways when several more needles spiraled precariously close to her body, the wake following the unique bullets rustling her blue hair, she quickly began counting down the exact amount of time it took the sniper to reload. Somewhat impressed by the barely five second interval between shots, Esdeath waited until the next passed harmlessly over her shoulder before raising her hand into the air.

"Cristaux de Glace."

A cacophony of light shone brightly from Esdeath's Cocytus Raiment as an ornately spear carved exclusively of ice flashed into existence between her outstretched fingers. Slamming the weapon harshly against the pavement, a thick layer of frozen water expanding outwards from the point of contact, Esdeath frowned in temporarily irritation as she glanced futilely across the distance skyline. She still couldn't find the sniper's location, which only helped to make her mission that much more interesting. The corners of her mouth slowly twisting into a malicious smirk as she reared back her arm, Esdeath carefully focused on the center window of the building's top floor before stepping forward and throwing the spear.

The surrounding ice shattered as the spear left her fingers, spiraling through the air in a display of turbulence faster than the speed of sound. Watching in ruthless amusement when the lance pierced through the building's façade less than ten seconds later, the structure shuddering from the impact, Esdeath lowered her arm and smirked as the secondary effects of her attack began. Thick columns of razor-sharp ice exploded through the walls of the building, tendrils of crimson-tinted thorns skewering every cowering nudist within the structure. And on the off chance the sniper wasn't in the building?

Well... there was only one other choice.

An intricate rapier forming between her fingers in a burst of frost, Esdeath chuckled when the first klaxons pierced through the somber and quiet afternoon before resuming her march upon Osaka.

There was nothing on earth that could stop her from completing Operation Laissez Faire and making all of Lady Ragyo's dreams a reality. The Kamui wearer she fought against back in Brazil could certainly try, but Esdeath was more than prepared to deal with the traitor to Life Fibers. While Danketsu's power severely dwarfed her raiment's, the woman possessed a single weakness that would make victory all but impossible - she cared for humans.

As the surrounded landscape vanished within a firestorm of explosions, courtesy of the Anti-Life Fiber mines buried along the highway, the sadistic smirk adorning Esdeath's features didn't falter in the slightest.

She was going to enjoy this.

"Hmm? Oh my, it seems like I missed. Well, there goes my perfect record..."

Sukuyo Mankanshoku gently sighed as she pressed a hand against her cheek. Kneeling against the roof as she lowered the M-98 Widow Anti-Life Fiber Model Type 5, the specialized weapon still aimed at her target, she stiffened when the high-rise two blocks to her left exploded into a column of jagged, blood-covered ice. It seemed their uninvited guest could not pinpoint her nest, which didn't come as a surprise. It would take someone with the eyes of a hawk, or at the very least wearing supernatural clothing that granted the ability, to spot her from over two kilometers away.

With a slight narrowing of her eyes as stared through the M-98 Widow's sight, Sukuyo ignored the dozens of nudists who just perished in an extremely brutal fashion to focus on what was truly important. Her perfect record, spanning nearly thirty years and several countries that no longer exist, was in jeopardy of being tarnished! If she wanted to return to Karakura Town a hero, with lots of snacks and souvenirs for Mako and Mataro to enjoy, she needed to make sure the next needle pierced right through their uninvited guest's temple.

She could still salvage her perfect record yet!

Pausing in her efforts when Esdeath Partas vanished within an expanding cloud of smoke and fire, her position obscured courtesy of the Anti-Life Fiber mines, Sukuyo took a moment to reload the M-98 Widow. One should always make sure they had plenty of ammunition, especially when attempting to take down such a stubborn target. Smirking gently when the feed snapped shut with a soft click, the younger-than-she-appeared Mankanshoku was about to resume her efforts when a nudist vaulted up the fire escape to her right.

"The Anti-Life Fiber claymores had no effect," the man announced with audible frustration, sweat and dirt marring his features. Breathing heavily as he stared off to the west, covered eyes narrowing at the column of smoke drifting upwards into the overcast skies, he frowned before adding, "Current estimates place Esdeath Partas reaching the city limits in just over five minutes."

"Why, that's not a lot of time," Sukuyo shouldered the M-98 widow and turned to the nudist, "How odd... I didn't receive any new orders from Miss Armstrong."

The nudist grimaced, his eyes never leaving the highway to the west when he answered, "Communications across the country were severed eight minutes ago. We're currently relying on Kaneo Takarada's self-stylized Granny Network ."

"You mean that sweet old lady that stopped by just a few minutes ago?"

Sukuyo's tone lacked any sort of concern as she stared back through the M-98 Widow's sight, which caused her to miss the nudist's twitch of annoyance. Softly squeezing the trigger as the smoke surrounding her target cleared, the blue haired woman visibly staggering when the needle flew slightly off-course and ricocheted off her left leg, she stiffened slightly in dull surprise when Esdeath's gaze focused upon her position. Sighing daintily as she stood up, Sukuyo turned to the nudist and cheerfully announced, "It seems the target managed to spot me. We should run away as quickly as possible!"

"What?!"

An eruption of rainbow light immediately followed the nudist's shocked question as the remaining smoke and fire surrounding Esdeath dissipated into nothingness. Teeth clenched in disbelief as he spun around, eyes widening behind his sunglasses, the soldier couldn't understand how the woman managed to spot Sukuyo. They were over two kilometers away from Esdeath, which was far enough that even the General had difficulty accurately spotting a hidden target. This was insane! He needed to warn headquarters! Breaking into a sprint as he remembered the granny crocheting in the second floor of a store down the block, the nudist choked when Sukuyo grabbed his collar and yanked hard in the opposite direction.

"Not that way!" she politely scolded, the M-98 Widow already folded within the case strapped to her back, "Our uninvited guest is getting ready to launch a salvo of deadly arrows on this location. You'll get skewered alive if you flee in that direction."

It was thanks to years of fighting against Life Fibers that the nudist was able to pinpoint the source of the faint whistling growing louder by the second. Running behind Sukuyo when the first shards of ice began slamming into the rooftop, thorns of frozen death rapidly spreading outwards, the nudist gaped in surprise when the dainty sniper vaulted across the nearly fifteen foot alleyway to the adjoining building. His envy at her prodigious skill tempered by the worsening situation, he pushed himself to his utmost limits before following her lead, cursing lightly when he barely managed to land on the rooftop.

Leaping behind the emergency stairwell the moment he landed, a mixture of annoyance and relief on his face when he noticed Sukuyo crouching a few feet away, the nudist coughed heavily when the building he'd been standing upon not a minute ago vanished underneath a layer of crystalline ice. Kinue hadn't skimmed on the details in her mission report. Without reinforcements, and soon, the woman would easily tear through what remained of their outer perimeter defenses before heading into Osaka. And he did not want to imagine what the psychotic slave to Life Fibers would do once she reached the city.

Kinue couldn't have picked a worse time to be in Kobe.

"We can't stay here."

A cascade of explosions tore through the afternoon when Esdeath targeted several other buildings in her increasingly creative attempts to kill them, the structures collapsing under the weight of the blooming ice. He needed to warn the General about the enemy marching upon Osaka. With their communication network offline and Kaneo Takarada's Granny Network nowhere to be found, headquarters was completely in the dark. If he didn't figure out a method to send a message to the General without getting killed by Esdeath in the process, any reinforcements sent would be slaughtered by the woman before they even realized what happened.

The relentless wailing of the emergency klaxons continuing unabated, the nudist chanced a glance around their cover in case of any further surprises before gravely adding, "We need to fall back and warn the General. Esdeath cannot be beaten without a DTR!"

Sukuyo nodded understandingly at the order before pointing over his shoulder, "But reinforcements are already here."

Mentally kicking himself for failing to notice something so obvious, the nudist turned around to see dozens of military helicopters rapidly flying towards his location. This was one of Nudist Beach's pride and joy, the same fleet that rescued Ichigo Kurosaki and the others during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. But the soldier's relief was quickly extinguished when Olivier Mira Armstrong leapt from the lead helicopter, her boots slamming violently into the nearby rooftop.

"Would you care to repeat that comment, soldier?"

Olivier's derisive tone carried the full weight of her displeasure for the soldier's audacious claims. Scoffing lightly when the man respectfully saluted her, the nervous twitching of his hand visibly apparent, she marched past him without saying another word. Although the notion of preparing one of their remaining DTR Model Rays left a vile taste in her mouth, the leader of Nudist Beach wasn't stupid. Whoever came up with the belief that the first side to show their trump card automatically loses should be shot. The point of a trump card was to take down your opponent before they could use their best weapon. And with Kinue currently in Kobe, a mistake on her part, that title fell to the DTR Model Ray.

But that didn't mean she liked it.

The DTR Model Ray was commissioned nine years ago with the express purpose of eventually fighting against the most powerful incarnations of COVERS, a name Professor Matoi weaseled out of the surprisingly tight-lipped Isshin Kurosaki. It wasn't designed for regular combat, even if the enemy was someone like Esdeath Partas. And once Aikuro returned to headquarters after his little joyride halfway around the world, which involved commandeering a multi-billion dollar piece of military equipment, Olivier planned on explained in clear, concise language how much she appreciated his insubordination.

She didn't give a single fuck if Aikuro was the one who designed the DTR Model Ray in the first place.

Sternly watching several helicopters rapidly break formation to directly engage Esdeath, their Anti-Life Fiber weaponry adequate enough to momentarily stall the woman's march, she didn't react into the slightest when a large metallic crate crashed into the roof next to her feet. Stomping a boot against the steel box, the latches automatically coming undone, Olivier reached down and grabbed the heavily modified ML-77 Missile Launcher. If Esdeath Partas wanted to arrogantly march on Osaka like an invincible bitch, then she was going to make her work for it.

Mouth curled into a fierce scowl as she effortlessly hauled the nearly one hundred pound weapon onto her shoulder and walked towards the edge of the roof, Olivier waited until right before Esdeath sauntered within range before depressing the trigger. Unflinching when the Anti-Life Fiber missile immediately burst forth, the specialized starch and bleach warhead travelling just under the speed of sound, Olivier looked over her shoulder once the projectile slammed into Esdeath's position and growled, "That won't slow her down for long. But it will be a cold day in hell before Xcution sets foot in my city!"

"I've been around the block quite a few times, you know."

Sukuyo's cheerful smirk didn't falter in the slightest as she propped the M-98 Widow against her shoulder and approached Olivier, "And as a mother who's routinely had to scold her son for his duplicitous methods of stealing furniture, food and other random accessories, I've learned to spot a diversion from a mile away."

"Agreed."

Unflinching when the surrounding aircraft launched their entire arsenals at Esdeath, the notion that the firepower would be enough to kill the woman never crossing her mind, Olivier handed the now useless missile launcher to the nudist soldier, "Order the men to fall back to position Delta Omega Alpha. The entire concept of high ground is pointless when fighting someone like Esdeath Partas."

Her boots stomping heavily against the rooftop as several helicopters exploded in the distance, dozens of frozen arrows puncturing completely through their fuselages, Olivier scowled when she became acutely aware of another presence. Glancing downwards only to find the same old woman who had been sitting next to her on the helicopter had somehow managed to jump out without breaking a single bone in her body, Olivier swallowed her growing irritation at Takarada's insulting network, "Inform Tsumugu Kinagase to thoroughly sweep the city, starting with our headquarters. I sincerely doubt Esdeath is the only one Ragyo Kiryuin sent."

---

...

---

"Revocs has some nerve to think they can just walk into my town."

From his extravagant but completely safe office in Naniwa Kinman High School, Kaneo Takarada watched the battle erupting to the west with growing annoyance. Did these Revocs punks seriously think they could get away with this? The communications network stretching across the Kansai region had been state-of-the-art. Millions of dollars had been invested into the project. Nudist Beach even managed to acquire a few lucrative patents on the damn thing! And in the course of ten minutes, just when he was about to eat lunch, some asshole uploads a virus and shuts it all down.

"But don't think we're just going to let ya waltz through the front door," Takarada grinned wildly at the troops marching through the streets in front of his school, the heavy artillery and weaponry enough to unnerve at least several major governments. Ragyo Kiryuin had to be nuts to think they hadn't anticipated a full-on invasion. The timing might have sucked, especially with one of their trump cards away in Kobe, but Nudist Beach had been preparing for the rainbow bitch to pull a stunt like this since the disaster at Honnouji Academy.

The sound of stomping boots caught Takarada's attention when a group of heavily armed nudists, soldiers he personally selected as his entourage, stormed into his office. Ignoring the teenager as they fanned out across the room, the form-fitting body armor hiding their features, the seven nudists thoroughly checked every inch of Takarada's office before turning to the Student Council President.

"Sir," one of the nudists, a grizzled man in his late forties, stepped forward, "We've been ordered by the General to escort you to our headquarters. It'll be the safest position in Osaka should the intruder penetrate the outer perimeter."

"Do any of ya have any idea where you're standing?"

A bundle of Takarada Bucks appeared in the teenager's hand as he lightly fanned his face, the reflection from the window showing his greedy smile, "Next to your headquarters there ain't no safer place in Osaka than this room! Five-inch thick titanium walls laced with Anti-Life Fiber technology, bulletproof glass that can withstand concentrated artillery fire and a security system that only responds to my biometrics. Nothing can get into this room without my permission!"

"Mr. Takarada..."

Another nudist, a young man with faint traces of stubble, threw away any pretenses of politeness, "The woman currently marching on Osaka will not hesitate to torture and kill you if she manages to breach the perimeter. If you refuse to leave under your own power, the General has ordered us to drag you to headquarters using whatever means necessary."

"I'm well aware of that woman's murderous reputation. I've paid for and attended far too many funerals to forget something like that."

Takarada's characteristic smugness vanished at the heavy reminder of the sadistic pleasure Esdeath Partas took in torturing and killing any nudists she captured. Fingers clenching the stack of money in his hands, the faux currency crinkling under the pressure, he snorted loudly before exclaiming, "But we have a weapon of our own! Something powerful enough to tear apart that ice bitch! And I'm not talking about something simple like guns! Because when dealing with monsters like Ragyo Kiryuin or Esdeath Partas, conventional missiles and guns are about as useful as pennies on the dollar!"

The nudists briefly glanced at each other before one, a young woman, asked in an extremely deadpan tone, "Are you talking about money, sir?"

"Of course I am!"

He couldn't believe the nerve of the nudist to ask such a ridiculous question. Slapping the bundle of Takarada Bucks against his desk as he spun around, the customized and expensive wood costing a fortune and a half creaking under the blow, he grinned smugly, "That bitch might be strong as hell but her uniform ain't close to being a match for the unlimited power of money! Money can buy anything in the world except for loyalty, because someone that can be bought for nothing more than a few thousand bucks ain't someone that won't accept a higher offer!"

Takarada walked around his desk with a confident swagger, the ZENI etched across the front of his golden grill shining brightly as he waved the thick stack of legal tender at the stoic nudists. His cocky smile widening when the door to the office slammed shut with a hiss of compressed air, the windows behind his desk shimmering as the Anti-Life Fiber technology in the panes activated, he flamboyantly announced, "Money is what developed the state-of-the-art equipment used by Nudist Beach! It's what funded the research into countering our guest's uniform! And do I need to mention money is what allows your organization to hide across the world from Revocs? Money is the beginning and end of everything! For money is how we created the ultimate Anti-Life Fiber trump card! A weapon to surpass Kamui!"

An awkward silence permeated the newly sealed office when none of the nudists bothered to respond to his grandiose speech. Stuffing the bundle of Takarada Bucks into the folds of his coat upon noticing the seven identical expressions of resigned annoyance, the heir to the Takarada Conglomerate swallowed whatever remained of his dwindling pride and walked across the room towards the fridge underneath his Rembrandt.

"Ya might as well make yourselves comfortable. That door ain't going to open for another ten minutes."

Humming under his breath as he rummaged through the extensive selection of foods and drinks stuffing every shelf in the fridge, all of which were legally purchased and shipped into Osaka through completely legitimate methods, Takarada smirked when he spotted a choice dish of lobster. Nearly salivating in anticipation at his lunch, which had almost been ruined by the invasion, he reached out to grab the plate only to freeze before his fingers touched the porcelain. There was a nearly imperceptible discoloring of the seafood, something people without money would never have noticed.

With a loud snap of his fingers six of the nudists immediately betrayed the seventh, their Anti-Life Fiber weapons aimed directly at his shadowed face. Grinning widely as he stood up and turned around, the tainted food in the fridge already forgotten, Takarada mockingly clapped his hands at the caught spy, "I suppose ya think I'm some rich idiot without a shred of intelligence."

"Well..." the intruder smirked as he slowly raised his hands, the barrel of the weapon pressed against his neck making quite the point, "Your security system was just so lax I couldn't help but snoop around."

"Is that right?"

Takarada gave the intruder a wide berth as he strode toward his desk. Folding his arms as he sat down, he pointed a finger at the man and exclaimed, "I suppose ya feel rather smart for bypassing my security, don't ya? I've heard a lot about ya, especially about your show in London. And evading a woman like Yoruichi Shihoin ain't no walk in the park either! But ya made one mistake coming after me..."

Slamming his hand against the desk, the Student Council President leaned forward and shouted, "I only have SIX guards and I know all of their names and faces by heart! Ya lost the moment ya walked through that door! Ya have a better chance of Satsuki Kiryuin confessing her love to me than tricking Kaneo Takarada! Heh... but what can I expect from a coward working for that rainbow bitch to the north?!"

"Why thank you..."

An intense burst of rainbow light exploded from the intruder's body at the backfired insult, destroying not only the misappropriated Nudist Beach uniform but also exposing the active Lache Raiment somehow concealed underneath. The corner of his mouth twisting into a cocky grin as he danced through the reflexive gunfire, the specialized Anti-Life Fiber needles passing harmlessly through his equally smug afterimage, Yuu Akiyama displayed not the slightest trace of hesitation when he appeared in front of a nudist and smashed his knee into the man's crotch.

"My apologies..."

Letting go of the soldier as he collapsed to the ground in the fetal position, both hands tucked firmly between his legs, Yuu glanced over his shoulder before casually ducking beneath the Tailor Dagger aimed at his spine. One hand gripping the edge of his burglar's cap while he counted to five, the potent sleeping gas emitted by his Lache Raiment quickly knocking out two more nudists, he turned towards the three remaining soldiers and smirked as strands of crimson Life Fibers emerged from his sleeves.

"But I prefer to fight in a fair, but cowardly, way."

The glowing Life Fibers twisted into thin razor-sharp wires between his splayed fingers at the command before whipping towards the nudists in the blink of an eye, effortlessly slicing apart their weapons fast enough to heat the metal to a red-hot glow. Whistling jauntily when two of the nudists quickly recovered and attempted to blindside him only to get caught by a previously invisible Life Fiber trap, the threads wrapping taunt around their struggling bodies, he curled his finger and watched as the sixth and final nudist was bound tightly next to her colleagues. After giving his newly captured prisoners a once over, their arms and limbs pinned tightly together, Yuu clapped his hands and turned towards the unnerved Takarada.

"Not many people would have noticed the colorless, odorless poison I laced throughout every single one of your meals," Yuu ignored the muffled groaning from the captured nudists and politely inquired, "What gave it away?"

"Ya think an antiquated trick like that would fool me?!"

Takarada ignored the nervous sweat trickling down his face as he glared defiantly at Yuu, "Ya think you're the first bastard to try and poison me? Ya should have seen what happened during last year's Student Council elections!"

"Oh, I know all about that..."

Yuu smirked at the Student Council President's falling expression while casually pulling out a burglar mask from his raiment's pocket, "Which is why I installed a very special device into your fridge. The moment you opened the door a small but powerful signal was emitted, priming the fifty-nine bombs scattered across the city. And before you ask, the bombs do not contain any Life Fibers. So your detectors won't be able to track them down... unless I tell you where to find them, that is."

Grinding his teeth at the worsening situation, Takarada gripped the edges of the desk while subtly moving his finger towards the emergency escape hatch button, "I suppose this is the part where ya threaten to detonate the bombs unless I tell ya what ya want to know? Or are ya just going to kill me?"

"I'm afraid it's neither of those options," Yuu merrily spread his arms, an expression of faux surprise etched on his face, "You're far too valuable of a hostage to simply kill. And after last year's Student Council elections I never would have been able to sneak the detonator into your office. Instead, the bombs will immediately detonate once you press the emergency escape hatch button underneath your desk."

The Student Council President of Naniwa Kinman High School froze at the declaration, his finger hovering an inch away from the button. Was the coward bluffing? No... he was sure the member of Xcution was telling the truth. Sweating nervously when Yuu walked across the office and leaned over his desk, Takarada stiffened when the cowardly spy smirked.

"Now, why don't you start by telling me all about this secret weapon. I believe you called it... DTR?"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales [Alternate Weave #3 - Purity]

"... Ichigo!"

Ichigo Kurosaki's eyes snapped open as he smashed through the surface of the water. Momentarily struggling for air against the salt water invading his lungs before remembering that he didn't need to breathe, or at least not like a normal person, he gritted his teeth before pressing down on the spaulder strapped around his left shoulder. As Mugetsu's power coursed through his body, Ichigo had only a second to register her rising worry and confusion before she independently activated Gufū and reoriented his body.

Bursting through the surface of the ocean in a violent spray of salt and foam, the heat exploding from his transformed legs boiling away the surrounding water, Ichigo reflexively tried to catch his breath. Rivulets of water running down his face as he hovered in the air, Mugetsu shivering around his body in order to remove any liquid still stuck in her threads, Ichigo stared out across the ocean and quickly realized they were no longer in London.

" Ichigo, where are we? "

"I don't know," Ichigo hesitantly admitted as he searched for any signs of human life. The last thing he remembered was getting a call from Yoruichi before a massive wave of vertigo swept over him. And just before blacking out he heard Ryuko shouting his name, "But we can't stay -"

The chaotic mixture of presences that suddenly washed over his mind, two spiritual energies he never imagined working together, cut Ichigo short before he could finish. What he felt was impossible. And judging from Mugetsu's shock it was clear he wasn't the only one to come to that conclusion. He knew better than anyone that Senketsu would never let Ryuko wear Junketsu. He was just too jealous... just like his own Kamui. And even on the extremely off chance Senketsu did allow Ryuko to wear another Kamui, there was still the question of how she managed to get all the way out here from London.

" Why is Ryuko wearing Junketsu? "

Mugetsu's multicolored eyes swiveled across her backswept wings as she stared over the horizon before narrowing in venomous disgust. She knew the abhorrent sensation plucking at her threads. It was something the Kamui thought she would never have to feel again. But there was something else, a slight difference that made things exponentially worse. Allowing the pure and adulterated anger she felt to permeating through their intimate connection, Mugetsu growled with barely contained contempt, "Ichigo, I can't tell where Junketsu's Life Fibers end and Ryuko's begins! It's as if someone wove them together, destroying who they were to create something monstrous!"

Ichigo didn't wait for Mugetsu to finish speaking before blasting towards Ryuko, jets of waters exploding upwards from the speed. This was bad. Even if the situation wasn't anything like the Karakura Town Raid Trip, and his Life Fibers had nothing to do with Junketsu's current distress, he refused to allow them to suffer. The vivid memories of the Kamui's agony due to Satsuki were still fresh in his mind.

He would find a way to help them.

It took him barely a minute to finally spot the carrier cutting lazily through the ocean and another five seconds to realize Ryuko was fighting against Satsuki. His confusion worsening when he sensed Senketsu, the Kamui wrapped around Satsuki as she desperately fought to defeat her brainwashed sister, Ichigo swallowed the nervous lump in his throat as he twisted around and landed on the SS Naked Sun's deck several meters behind Ryuko. Grimacing in growing dismay at the potent yet vile spiritual energy pulsing from Junketsu, the Kamui's presence tainted beyond anything he felt in Karakura Town, Ichigo's eyes widened at the sheer joy Ryuko was experiencing choking her sister to death.

"Ryuko!"

Ryuko's fingers tightened around Satsuki's throat, eliciting a gasp of pain from her sister, when she heard some asshole shout her name. Growling angrily at the unwanted interruption to her sister's long overdue ass-kicking, she turned around to tell them to 'shut the hell up' only to freeze as her eyes locked upon an orange-haired teenager wearing what looked like a very good imitation of a Kamui. No... it was a Kamui. But more importantly, it actually covered nearly every inch of his body.

"That's a pretty fancy Kamui you got there," she smirked maliciously as she drank in Mugetsu's enveloping appearance, how her clothing covered all of Ichigo's body, before turning spitefully back to her struggling sister, "It looks tailor-made too, nothing like this shitty dishrag."

" What did she call Senketsu? "

Ichigo pushed aside the growing sensation of foreboding as he drew Tournesol, the blue weapon instantly catching the attention of several people. Calmly swinging the Hardened Life Fiber blade in front of his body, the motion causing Ryuko's smirk to widen, he scowled when she tightened her grip around Satsuki's throat, "Let her go."

"So your Kamui can talk..."

The malicious interest in Ryuko's eyes was easily visible as she turned completely towards Ichigo with Satsuki's heels dangling only a few inches above the deck. Smirking when she released Satsuki before smashing an armored fist into her face, the force behind the blow sending her sister crashing backwards along the Naked Sun, Ryuko pointed the Scissor Blade at Ichigo and growled in annoyance. She didn't like the way his Kamui was looking at her. And the conflicted expression in Ichigo's eyes was enough to seriously piss her off.

Why the hell did he look so freaking sad?

"Whatever, I can deal with my bitch of a sister later," Ryuko muttered while flicking her wrist, causing the Scissor Blade to rapidly transform into Decapitation Mode accompanied by a metallic clang. Strutting menacingly towards Ichigo, who had yet to raise his own weapon in defense, she spat to the side while rubbing her chin. Junketsu could instinctively sense the power coursing through the guy's Kamui. But she knew that wasn't why Junketsu was pressing relentlessly against her mind, imposing its pure and untainted will upon her hybrid body. There was something else about the guy, a sense of familiarity. It was almost as if he was just like -

"Heh... you've got to be freaking kidding me!"

The deep blue undertone staining her feathery hair shone brightly as the last pieces settled into place. Now she understood everything about this guy! Tilting her head sideways while pointing the Scissor Blade at Ichigo, Ryuko grinned savagely, "It all makes sense now! There's no freaking way a normal human could wear a Kamui as fancy as yours without being eaten by it! But you're perfectly fine! Without a freaking care in the world! Which means you're just like ME!"

Steel crumpled like paper beneath Junketsu's heels as Ryuko rushed Ichigo, thoughts of skewering his body with the Scissor Blade pulsing through her twisted mind. She didn't give a damn if mother would be disappointed she ignored Satsuki and potentially allowed her escape. Finding another Life Fiber Hybrid and Kamui, especially when she was damn sure they weren't supposed to exist, would more than make up for it. She could already see the look on her mother's face when she dragged the guy back to Honnouji Academy. And thanks to not being human, she could do whatever she wanted to the guy without worrying about killing him.

Ryuko felt Junketsu's presence press firmly against her mind, directing her willing body like a puppet, as she tightened her fingers around the Scissor Blade. It was right. She couldn't afford to hit the guy with anything less than her full power. Wisps of crimson energy evaporating off the extended blade like smoke while superheated steam erupted from Junketsu's pauldrons, Ryuko stomped a heel against the Naked Sun's deck for leverage as she hefted the Scissor Blade over her shoulder and swung it at Ichigo's seemingly exposed neck.

She knew damn well beheading the bastard didn't have a shot at killing him. But it would make sure he was too busy regenerating while she finished dealing with Satsuki.

"Damn it!"

Ichigo cursed his stupidity when he attempted to parry the Scissor Blade with Tournesol only for the force behind Ryuko's attack to nearly shatter his arms. Gritting his teeth when his feet began pushing through the reinforced steel of the Naked Sun's deck, sapphire and crimson sparks dancing through the air between their blades, Ichigo stared into Ryuko's crazed eyes and grimaced. He should have activated Mugetsu Zangetsu the instant he noticed Junketsu was already in her advanced configuration. But something had stayed his hand. While the familiar strength of Junketsu Zenkan was powerful enough for Ryuko to almost break through his guard, the fact he actually blocked her attack without using Zangetsu implied the Kamui wasn't as strong as he remembered.

Which meant he had a chance.

A mixture of blood and spittle flew from Ryuko's disbelieving mouth when Ichigo somehow managed to overpower Junketsu and punch her in the face. Skidding backwards along the Naked Sun's deck, her Kamui's heels digging twin trenches in the steel plating, she gnashed her teeth in frustration. What the hell was going on? How had this asshole, this punk who came out of freaking nowhere, overpowered Junketsu so damn easily?! Blue eyes flickering to the left when she noticed Satsuki getting back onto her feet, Senketsu's single eye focused on their battle, Ryuko sneered at Ichigo as a blue aura surrounded her body, "Well, you're certainly not a pushover like my bitch of a sister. But I'm still going to kick your -"

"Mugetsu Zangetsu."

Ryuko was caught off guard by Ichigo's sudden shift into his Kamui's advanced configuration, its magnitude of power more than enough to temporarily quiet Junketsu's voice. Teeth clenched at the sanctimonious expression on the bastard's face, the look in his eyes seriously starting to piss her off, she snarled when she heard him whisper to his Kamui, "I'm sorry about this, Mugetsu. But we can't keep holding back against Ryuko and Junketsu."

" I know," the Kamui's feminine voice responded in a remorseful tone, "The longer Ryuko is bound to Junketsu, the harder it will be to safely separate them."

"SHUT THE HELL UP ALREADY!"

Any pretense of civility was rapidly discarded when Ryuko tore across the Naked Sun toward Ichigo. She was getting sick and tired of the asshole's stupid attitude. Did he really think she couldn't hear his every goddamn word? She didn't need his fucking pity! Shouting impotently as her heels kicked up large sheets of steel, Junketsu shining with a dangerous blue light, Ryuko attempted to bifurcate Ichigo only for the Scissor Blade to pass harmlessly through an afterimage. Fingers locked around the transformed hardened Life Fiber weapon as she attempted to slice Ichigo again and again... only to miss each and every time... Ryuko gagged when the bastard finally decided to attack, the simple swing of his blade sending her sailing backwards before crashing into the ship.

"Stop this, Ryuko," Ichigo nearly flinched when Ryuko staggered back onto her feet despite his warning, her eyes narrowed in rising fury.

"How the freaking hell do you know me?!"

Ryuko harshly stabbed the Scissor Blade into the Naked Sun as Junketsu's anger echoed throughout her mind, a tempest of emotions that caused the Life Fibers binding them together to quiver. Panting lightly as the trail of blood dribbling from her mouth vanished, absorbed back into her body without leaving a scratch, she snorted at Ichigo's conflicted expression and growled, "That annoying look in your eyes... the way you're holding back against Junketsu... you know me, don't ya?"

A tense wind blew across the Naked Sun, carrying with it the scent of the Pacific Ocean, before Ichigo solemnly replied, "Yeah..."

Bursts of steam erupted from Junketsu as Ryuko uncaringly grabbed the Scissor Blade before tearing it out of the Naked Sun. Tranquilly swinging the extended blade across her body, wisps of crimson energy enveloping the weapon, she spat onto the deck and frowned, "Whatever, but I guess this means I can't keep attacking you without thinking. Otherwise you'll just keep kicking my ass. But once I'm through tearing apart your Kamui, I'm going to finish dealing with my bitch of a -"

Ryuko's threat was severed prematurely when dozens of miniature rockets slammed into her body, enveloping a third of the Naked Sun in a roiling sea of flames while sending a thick cloud of smoke into the sky. Staring in morbid fascination when Uzu Sanageyama rushed toward Ryuko naked as the day he was born apart from a few well-placed belts and straps on his arms and legs, Ichigo didn't show the slightest hint of surprise when Satsuki appeared at his side.

"Your Kamui..."

Calmly wiping the blood oozing down her face onto Senketsu's sleeve, the Kamui rapidly absorbing the nourishing liquid, Satsuki paused briefly to gather her thoughts before turning her full gaze upon Ichigo, "Where did you get it?"

Ichigo resisted the urge to roll his eyes at Satsuki's demeanor, "Does it matter?"

"I suppose not," Satsuki admitted as she watched Ryuko demolish the Elite Four's attempts to restrain her with predictably little effort. Returning her attention to Ichigo after Jakuzure unleashed a second salvo of rockets, most of which were cut to shreds before reaching their target, she took notice of Mugetsu's appearance before commenting, "You referred to your Kamui as Mugetsu - Moonless Sky. I suppose that means you can communicate with it?"

"Yeah, I can hear her," Ichigo didn't flinch apart from a slight narrowing of his eyes when the Naked Sun's main cannons fired upon Ryuko, one of the massive shells ricocheting into the clear skies courtesy of the Scissor Blade. Hand tightly clenched into a fist when he heard Ryuko's sadistic laughter, the cruelty permeating her voice causing Senketsu to continue worrying about his only true wearer, he partially turned to Satsuki before asking the question that was on his mind, "Does Karakura Town mean anything to you?"

"No."

Satsuki arched an eyebrow in moderate curiosity at the seemingly random question. She had never heard of a city called Karakura Town, yet the emphasis he placed upon the location implied its importance. It was highly likely the city was either where he was born or where his Kamui was woven. Barely missing Ichigo's dejected expression when another series of explosions tore across the Naked Sun's deck, Satsuki easily discarded her current line of thought to focus on the matter at hand, "We can save such trivialities for later! Your Kamui's power will be useful in restraining Ryuko Matoi should she regain the advantage! But do not interfere unless absolutely necessary! For it is my duty to free Ryuko from clothing!"

" Ugh, I nearly forgot how Satsuki used to speak," Mugetsu grumbled at Satsuki's overbearing presence before her multicolored eyes swiveled toward Ryuko, "But freeing Ryuko is not going to be easy, Ichigo. I don't know how we're going to separate Junketsu's Life Fibers from her own."

" What?"

Senketsu's eye quivered fearfully at Mugetsu's comment as he watched his wearer tear through the Elite Four, "There has to be a way to save Ryuko!"

"I've dealt with something like this before," Ichigo grimaced as he desperately tried to think of a way to save Ryuko without killing either her or Junketsu, a situation which was made unnecessary more difficult when Satsuki glared at him with suspicion in her eyes. He had nearly forgotten she couldn't hear Kamui. But before he could explain to her what Mugetsu had told Senketsu, Ichigo stiffened when a familiar presence pulsed through his mind, a sensation that caused Mugetsu to instinctively tighten around his body.

" She's coming, Ichigo... "

Senketsu shivered at the mixture of frustration and apprehension in Mugetsu's voice, an action that quickly drew his current wearer's attention, "Who's coming?"

"Someone stitched Junketsu directly onto Ryuko. It won't be easy separating them," Ichigo didn't give Satsuki the chance to argue as he turned towards the purple light just beginning to shimmer on the horizon. Great, this was just what he needed at the moment, "But you should figure something out quickly. I don't know how long I can keep Nui Harime busy."

If Satsuki was bothered by Ichigo's familiarity with the Grand Couturier she didn't express even the slightest hint of surprise, her eyes instead narrowing in determination. There were more important matters to deal with at the moment than asking such meaningless questions. Whether Nui Harime was truly on her way due either to her mother's orders or the Grand Couturier's immoral interest in Ryuko, the end result would be a disastrous complication to her plans. And she refused to allow such distractions at this crucial time.

"Deal with the Grand Couturier however you see fit," the Kiryuin heiress still didn't trust Ichigo. Until a few weeks ago she had been privy to her mother's deepest and most closely held secrets. There should have only been two Kamui in existence - Junketsu and Senketsu. The presence of Mugetsu, a third Kamui and proportionally stronger than Junketsu, threw everything into turmoil. Yet she would not allow suspicion to cloud her judgment. Ichigo's clash against Ryuko demonstrated his allegiance was not with her mother, and for the time being that was good enough.

Senketsu's heels clacked against the Naked Sun's deck as she left Ichigo to deal with the Grand Couturier. Despite her suspicions, the information he willingly provided would prove vital in freeing Ryuko from Junketsu's deeply woven control. Tightening her grip upon the reforged shards of Bakuzan as she leapt away, steam bursting from her temporary Kamui's vents as a wave of exhaustion pulsed through her mind, Satsuki vanished into the surrounding smoke moments before Nui Harime landed silently behind Ichigo.

"Were you expecting me?"

The Grand Couturier tilted her head in curiosity at the teenager's audacity, the determined look in his eyes causing her to giggle in amusement. But it was the Kamui wrapping around his body, covering nearly every inch of flesh with clothing, which stopped her from immediately messing with Satsuki's little scheme. It had only taken the briefest of glances to figure out that it was a true Kamui and not a fake dishrag like Senketsu, which caused a twinge of envy in her heart. Who could have woven such a high-quality piece of clothing without getting Lady Ragyo's attention?

It was almost at her level.

"And you're wearing a Kamui, which raises so many interesting questions!" Nui's single sapphire eye blinked cutely when Ichigo didn't answer the question. Smirking as she reached into her pink dress and pulled out the purple Scissor Blade, she tucked it against the small of her back and playfully pouted, "I really should drag you back to Lady Ragyo. She would so want to examine your adorable little Kamui! But don't you worry! I'll come back and deal with you right after I throw a wrench into Satsuki's plans!"

Something completely unexpected happened when she attempted to interfere with Satsuki's little scheme to separate Ryuko and Junketsu. One moment she was easily passing Ichigo without any difficulty, the purple Scissor Blade gleaming dangerously within her manicured fingers, and in the next she found her center of balance abruptly shifting when something locked firmly around her wrist. Blinking owlishly when the sudden change in momentum caused her pink boots to comically leave the ground, her large pigtails fluttering in the wind, the Grand Couturier was surprised when she was spun around before being rudely tossed away from Ryuko and Satsuki.

"Huh?"

Her smile fading as she smashed face-first into the Naked Sun's deck, the metal crumpling under the impact, Nui easily flipped back onto her feet a moment later looking no worse for wear. Yet she was starting to get annoyed. There was nothing that could stand against the strength of her Life Fibers! But this human wearing a high-quality Kamui had just tossed her away from Ryuko without any effort. And that just wouldn't do!

Ichigo narrowed his eyes when the Grand Couturier vanished without saying another word. He knew what happened when Nui started getting annoyed. Having a Scissor Blade thrust into his chest wasn't something he wanted to experience a second time. But while it was still uncertain about a lot of things, including how different this Grand Couturier was from the one he knew, one thing he did know was that she was weaker . And that was good enough for him.

"Sorry about this..."

Calmly tracking Nui as she attempted to sever his left arm at the elbow, the manic expression on her face intimately familiar, Ichigo waited until the Scissor Blade was inches from his body before blocking the strike with Tournesol. As the Grand Couturier's eye widened, nervousness and fear playing across her features when she realized his arm hadn't moved from the moment their weapons connected, Ichigo's features tightened into a scowl, "But I'm not going to let you stop Satsuki from saving Ryuko."

Killer Queen

It took a little longer to write this chapter than I anticipated, mostly because I went back and rewrote the introduction of Ragyo and Hououmaru into the story in Chapter 3. I recommend you go back and reread that chapter because I closed a lot of potential plot holes while clarifying a few things... as well as Ragyo's initial surprise at Kisuke Urahara's skills in weaving Mugetsu and creating a Bleach Bomb. The initial version was rather lackluster considering how much I've improved my writing, so it was necessary to go back and rewrite everything in Ragyo's introduction from scratch (especially considering her personality in that chapter was created prior to Episodes 18 and 19).

I also highly recommend you go back to Chapter 18 and reread the entirety of Isshin's flashback from start to finish. The reason why will become clear once you read through this chapter.

There is one other thing I need to mention. Grocamol on deviantart has commissioned an ongoing manga adaptation of my story, drawn by the extremely talented Ardeearollado . It's only five pages into the first chapter but I'm truly honored that someone would willingly pay an artist to draw a manga about my story.

So that being said, I hope you enjoy this chapter!

---

...

---

Chapter 53 - Killer Queen

March 10, 1985 - Kiryuin Manor

" I'm sorry about Masaki."

Isshin Kurosaki pulled uncomfortably at the collar of his only formal business suit, a nonnegotiable requirement whenever he visited Ragyo, for the fourth time since walking through the front door. Grimacing at the sensation of the high-quality threads rubbing against his skin, the former shinigami ignored the tiny voice whispering from the depths of his mind that he could weave something truly worthy for a man of his station out of Life Fibers. He nearly laughed at the utter failure of a temptation. If he hadn't even tried sewing anything of his own accord over the last three years aside from Junketsu, which really didn't count as clothing given that she was technically alive, he wasn't about to start now.

And luckily enough the whisper in the back of his mind, the voice that first appeared in the aftermath of his encounter with the Original Life Fiber, had grown increasingly silent over the last few months. Maybe it finally realized it would never convince him to use Life Fibers and decided to give up.

"It's nothing more than a cold," Isshin half-smirked as he stopped trying to loosen his tie, the specially tailored suit quickly snapping back into place, "As long as my darling Masaki drinks plenty of fluids she'll be up and about in no time. But I'll be sure to pass along your condolences, Souichiro."

"That's good to hear."

Souichiro Kiryuin absentmindedly played with his wedding ring as he sighed in relief at the welcoming news. They had originally planned on visiting Karakura town several days ago but Ragyo's ongoing attempts to expand into the South American market and his Life Fiber research on Junketsu's sentience had forced a change of schedule. To think that something like a Kamui could function on nothing more than a few drops of Ragyo's blood per day, remaining completely mobile without any need of a host. It was remarkable. Every theory he had derived on Life Fibers assumed they required a host's bioelectrical energy to survive. Yet Junketsu sustained itself on nothing more than Ragyo's blood.

As the early afternoon sunlight filtered through the windows of the second floor corridor, saturating everything in yellow and white hues, Souichiro ignored the faint shouting coming from the foyer and rhetorically asked, "So how was your first impression of Kuroido?"

Isshin gave his friend a dirty look, the memory of the portly man attempting to slam the front door on his face still quite fresh, "He's not the friendliest person in the world."

" Sorry about that," Souichiro half-heartedly apologized, earning the man another glare from Isshin, "Soroi stepped down from steward of the manor a few months ago, forcing us to search for a suitable replacement. Kuroido might be a little... abrasive... but he takes his job very seriously. He was probably unaware of your tendency to walk through the front door without knocking. Or that you're one of Ragyo's oldest friends."

As the last vestige of Kuroido's distant shouting reached his ears, no doubt the result of Soroi explaining the identity of the man he recently insulted, Souichiro took the opportunity to examine Isshin's peculiar attire - a white business suit with matching red tie. There was no question that Ragyo personally designed the clothing, he could spot her patterns from over a mile away. But the bright red tie was undoubtedly Isshin's contribution to the ensemble, a somewhat childish act of rebellion against Ragyo's choice of attire. Yet the notion that his wife could force Isshin, the same man who constantly wore bright and highly clashing colors, to wear this particular suit whenever he visited Souichiro found utterly baffling.

" By the way..."

The Life Fiber scientist, one of only a handful of people in the world who understood the alien organisms to any appreciable degree, trailed off when Isshin attempted to adjust one of his sleeves. Repressing the desire to smoke, a habit he was trying to break, Souichiro decided to ask the single question that had been plaguing him for the last few minutes, "What did you do to your hair?"

Raising a hand to his hair, which once more resembled its original coloring from his tenure as captain of the Tenth Division, Isshin grinned proudly at the fact he wasn't shining with the colors of a rainbow and gave Souichiro a thumbs-up, "Hiding my stunning silver hair for more than a day or two proved difficult, a challenge I'm more than certain Ragyo knows far too well! It took countless nights of work but it's been almost a month since my naturally produced rainbow light penetrated THIS disguise! You should have seen Masaki's joyous expression when she realized she no longer needed sunglasses around the house!"

Souichiro sighed heavily and refused to say anything the rest of the way to Ragyo's office. Holding one hand against the partially open mahogany doors, the gentle tones of a familiar voice reaching their ears, the scientist looked over his shoulder and quietly asked, "Isshin, if it's not too much trouble can you teach your technique to Ragyo? I'm sure she will listen to you on the need to... more thoroughly... disguise herself in public."

" Nonsense!"

Isshin resisted the urge to interrupt his beleaguered friend's request before he could finish. Folding his arms as he loudly declared his intentions, the former shinigami turned around and sagely continued, "A man must never criticize their wife's inherent talents or beauty no matter how strange or outlandish their sense of fashion! It is our duty as husbands to say they're the most beautiful person in the entire world! Someone you would sacrifice everything to protect! Always approve of whatever they think is fashionable even if deep down you know that's not true."

" Is that right?"

The slightly amused voice carrying just the barest undertone of faux annoyance immediately caused every muscle in Isshin's body to stiffen. Adorned in a loosely fitting white business suit and matching skirt, jeweled earrings jangling lightly as she tilted her head sideways, Ragyo Kiryuin tapped a manicured finger against her cheek and smirked slyly, "I'm insulted by your flagrant lack of tact, Isshin. You should check to make sure nobody could eavesdrop before spouting such nonsense. What will Masaki think when I inform her of your opinion on the matter?"

Isshin sputtered incoherently at the thinly veiled threat, which caused a brief bout of subdued laughter from Ragyo. The former shinigami was unsure whether she actually intended to inform Masaki on his transgressions or was simply trying to get underneath his skin. In either case, this wasn't a bluff he was willing to call. Not when the end results involved a stern discussion from his lovely wife.

As the man furiously attempted to think of an excuse to minimize Ragyo's willingness to call Masaki, which from her expression seemed incredibly likely, his train of thought abruptly crashed and burned when Souichiro rubbed his nose and coughed awkwardly, "Isshin, your hair is showing."

"What?!"

Rushing around Souichiro faster than the scientist's eyes could process the movement, Isshin pressed his face against the mirror hanging on the nearby wall and stared in disbelief at the dim rainbow light penetrating his disguise. Damn it! More than a month without any problems, of not having to listen to Ryuken's dry and mocking humor about his hair, only for Ragyo to ruin everything with nothing more than a single jesting comment.

"Oh for the love of..."

Ragyo irritably rolled her eyes at the ongoing display of childish antics. She would never understand why Isshin stubbornly insisted on disguising his true appearance with something so boring. Neither of them should care what the rest of the world thought, especially those foolish men working to destroy Revocs and everything she cherished. Still, she had to give Isshin's remarkable technique credit. That he constantly strove to improve the duration of his idiotic disguise, ignoring every notion to the contrary, was only further evidence that the man should have been her Grand Couturier.

Yet she knew better than asking Isshin such a foolish question after his previous nineteen refusals.

The faint crying from the bundle held against her chest caused Ragyo's maroon eyes to narrow angrily. Immediately curling two fingers on her free hand through the air, shimmering strands of rainbow Life Fibers reflecting dimly in the sunlight, she lazily swung her arm downwards and harshly tore away the rest of Isshin's stupid disguise. Smiling pleurably as the man's shoulders slumped in defeat, his glorious silver hair once more matching her own, Ragyo motherly cradled the infant in her arm and asked, "I'm sure you didn't come here just to cry in a corner like a petulant child, Isshin."

Isshin's self-induced depression was instantly forgotten when he noticed the small bundle held protectively in Ragyo's arms. Grinning widely when Satsuki's familiar blue eyes closed as she yawned and fell back asleep, he chuckled quietly and proudly boasted, "Well, it seems that I was right after all. Satsuki did, in fact, receive your - "

A soft smack interrupted the rest of the compliment when Rei Hououmaru appeared behind Isshin and firmly smashed her clipboard against the back of his head, "Please refrain from finishing that line of thought. Lady Satsuki is trying to sleep."

" What?" Isshin rubbed the spot Hououmaru hit with her clipboard and impetuously groaned, "I was just going to say Satsuki inherited Ragyo's - "

The stainless steel clipboard shattered in the secretary's fingers when she smashed it against the back of Isshin's skull a second time. Staring emotionlessly at the former shinigami as he rubbed his uninjured head, she adjusted her aviator sunglasses before stoically warning, "I understand you are enthusiastic about Lady Satsuki, Isshin, but attempting to comment on her appearance a third time will force me to break out the Anti-Life Fiber weaponry."

" Punishing Isshin is one thing... but please try not to break Revocs equipment in the process."

Ragyo lightly chastised Hououmaru's lack of proper forethought. Something as mundane and common as a steel clipboard wasn't enough to teach the notoriously stubborn but sweet man his lesson. A more delicate approach was necessary to get the point across to Isshin. Fortunately it appeared he was reluctant to repeat his mistake a third time. Handing Satsuki to Hououmaru, the secretary carefully cradling the infant in her arms, Ragyo flicked a strand of silver hair out of her eyes, "Please bring Satsuki to Soroi, Hououmaru. And schedule a conference with Xcution at the earliest possibly opportunity."

" Very well," Hououmaru bowed her head respectfully, careful not to wake Satsuki, before adding, "I thought you should also know that Motoko's unit reported from Berlin just over an hour ago. Their investigations suggest several organizations are preparing to break into our Tokyo research facility."

" How prévisible..."

Ragyo sighed in annoyance as Hououmaru left with Satsuki. Preventing Life Fibers from falling into human hands was proving excessively tedious, due in large part to the attempts by her rivals to constantly break into Revocs research facilities. One would think after witnessing their mercenaries devoured alive by Life Fibers, torn apart by the very threads they foolishly attempted to carry out of her facilities without proper protection, they would have given up. But the stupidity of humanity was endless. If, or rather when, Revocs gained full control of their companies she planned on enthusiastically dismissing their boards of directors down to the last man and woman... with prejudice.

" Humans just can't seem to resist the allure of Life Fibers."

Something about the way Ragyo said 'humans' rubbed Isshin the wrong way. But before he could voice his concerns on the matter, or how knowledge of Life Fibers spread to the rest of the world, she sauntered back into her office without another word. Turning to Souichiro for an explanation only for the scientist to shrug his shoulders in response, the exhaustion in his eyes slightly bothersome, Isshin pulled at the tight collar of his suit before walking into the spacious and accommodating office.

" I know I've been out of the loop for a while," Isshin's hair shifted in the early spring wind gently gusting through the open windows behind Ragyo's desk. Frowning pensively as she sat down with a tired groan, he rubbed the back of his neck and asked, "But how did anyone learn about Life Fibers?"

" An ex-employee..."

The guilt and self-loathing in Souichiro's voice surprised Isshin, "A geneticist I personally hired to help improve our understanding of Life Fibers. She was one of the best in the field, someone that could have broken down the evolutionary process that led to Life Fibers taking on their current form. But two months after being brought on board she leaked classified information on Life Fibers to several rival companies and governments."

" That's unlike you, Souichiro," Isshin folded his arms and frowned, "You're usually more careful about this sort of thing."

" Olivier's leading the investigation into how she slipped through security without getting caught," the Life Fiber scientist collapsed on the couch across the office from Ragyo's desk and grimaced, his expression suddenly twisting into a morbid grimace, "But we might never find out who hired her. Ten minutes after she released the information she tried stealing a bundle of Life Fibers without any protection."

" This sounds serious," Isshin had faith in Olivier's investigative capabilities but it was better not to take any chances with Life Fibers, "I know someone who -"

" Your assistance is appreciated but I'd rather not drag you into this atrocious mess," Ragyo passionately interrupted before Isshin could finish voicing his suggestion. A few minutes passed in silence, the tension building in the air as Ragyo signed several forms pertaining to recent acquisitions in South America and Europe, before the corners of her mouth curled upwards, "She's due next month, you know."

" Huh?"

Ragyo sighed deeply at the dumbfounded expression plastered across Isshin's face. Pressing a hand delicately over her stomach, the simple action enough to cause the man's maroon eyes to visibly widen, she patiently explained, "My second daughter - Satsuki's younger sister - is due in a few weeks."

" That's great news!"

All traces of somberness vanished into the spring breeze as Isshin flashed across the office and wrapped an arm proudly around Souichiro's shoulders, the scientist wilting in surprise at the overly friendly gesture. Thoughts of future play dates, birthday parties and other family events passing through his mind, the former shinigami chuckled sagely, "We should get Hououmaru to begin scheduling dozens of play dates for our children!"

Ragyo's maroon eyes widened fractionally at the confession, "Isshin, are you saying..."

" We found out last week," he proudly announced, the memory of Masaki's joyous smile shining brilliantly in his mind, "Our son's set to arrive in July!"

The pen in Ragyo's hand almost snapped in half, her self-control the only thing preventing blue ink from staining the documents scattered across her desk. As Souichiro congratulated Isshin, her husband offering to take him and Masaki out to celebrate, the Kiryuin matriarch's expression shifted between several conflicting emotions before she settled upon a simple smile, "I suppose congratulations are in order, Isshin."

Isshin scratched at his stubble-free chin and smirked, "Ichigo is going to have a hard time fighting off Satsuki and her sister when they're older."

" Already planning that far ahead? I don't..." Souichiro trailed off as the full weight of Isshin's statement came to light, "... did you say Ichigo?"

Ragyo felt a minor headache immediately start to develop in the depths of her mind at the particular choice of name Isshin decided to bestow upon his son. Leaning onto her hand and sighing impatiently when Souichiro's attempts to gently break the obvious news to the man fell on deaf ears, she waited several long seconds before dryly announcing, "Isshin, despite whatever YOU might think, Ichigo is most often a girl's name."

Isshin Kurosaki opened his eyes when the portable radio on the coffee table somberly announced severe thunderstorms set to arrive in the afternoon.

Staring silently out the living room window, faint traces of crimson pulsing across the glass from the customized Anti-Life Fiber protections he installed a few months ago, the former shinigami frowned at the slowly darkening overcast skies. It was going to rain soon, perhaps even before Ragyo and her army of COVERS arrived. The irony of the familiar situation was enough for Isshin to subtly clench his hand into a fist.

Dark and stormy days like this brought up terrible memories.

The rainbow undertone shining from his silver hair dimming minutely as the Anti-Life Fiber protections installed around the home hummed gently in his ears, an entirely separate one from the barrier around Karakura Town, Isshin grumbled quietly under his breath and sighed. Pulling a cell phone out of his pocket as he turned around, the floorboards creaking with every step, he tightly gripped the device at Yuzu and Karin's muffled conversation from the kitchen before taking a deep breath.

"I'm going out for a while!"

Despite the cheerful tone of his voice, developed after years of practice, Isshin's expression was etched into a tight grimace as he marched towards the front door. Staring at the phone when Yuzu nervously asked where he was going, the sullen mood enveloping Karakura Town over the last few weeks causing his most sensitive and caring daughter to constantly ask such questions, he wondered not for the first time if keeping them home was the smartest option. While his improvements around the house prevented any Life Fibers from entering or leaving without his direct permission - including his own - there were other places around the world equally safe from Ragyo's forces.

"It's dad business!" Isshin shouted loudly over his shoulder when he opened the front door and was promptly greeted by a gust of wind, "Don't leave the house until I get back!"

"Just make sure to kick her ass," Karin's annoyed response echoed dully from the kitchen.

"Karin! Language!"

---

...

---

Satsuki Kiryuin ignored the tense silence permeating the training ground underneath Kisuke Urahara's shop as she glared dispassionately at the elevator in the distance.

Nearly twenty minutes had passed since she initially informed Isshin Kurosaki of her mother's actions while ordering the remaining residents of Karakura Town, those who possessed the required strength and fortitude to stand firmly against Life Fibers, to gather within the secondary Nudist Beach headquarters. Such an order should have been followed without any issues given the size of the city. Yet while most of her friends and allies were already in attendance, two people remained suspiciously absent - Kisuke Urahara and Isshin Kurosaki.

It had been Yoruichi Shihoin who explained the former's sudden departure, albeit in a manner that expressed her deep annoyance with the exiled shinigami's eccentric behavior. If her story was accurate, Kisuke Urahara had vanished less than a minute after she informed them of the situation, leaving behind only a hastily typed note to explain his absence. Although this wasn't the first time the shopkeeper purposely left Karakura Town despite her orders, which caused Gamagori endless aggravation, the timing between her mother's offensive and his departure was too perfect to be coincidental.

She only hoped Kisuke Urahara's written claims of 'reinforcements' were not merely the man's usual ambiguousness.

Her greatest concern at the moment, however, was the conspicuous disappearance of Isshin Kurosaki. As the individual most capable of defeating her mother, Ichigo's father played a crucial role in defending Karakura Town. Yet the man had purposely decided not to attend the meeting.

The fact he profusely apologized over the phone before abruptly hanging up only made things worse.

"We cannot wait any longer."

Leaning over the table displaying a holographic representation of Japan, the forty-seven prefectures in the image colored in shades of green or red, Satsuki's expression tightened into a disciplined scowl as the surrounding murmurs immediately quelled, "Please begin, Inumuta."

Houka Inumuta pushed his glasses up the bridge of his nose as he continued typing commands into Kisuke's computer. The collar of his Goku Uniform automatically unzipping when the three-dimensional image transformed into a replica of Honnou City, a spherical shimmer of light surrounding the academy at the center, he coughed gently, "Upon receiving Lady Satsuki's warning I immediately repositioned several of the Ishida Conglomerate's satellites above Honnou City. While it still remains virtually impossible to penetrate the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, I was able to detect large-scale movement over Tokyo Bay."

Uryu frowned at the familiar objects floating across the holographic image, "How many COVERS?"

"Fifteen thousand at the very least, empowered by the former residents of Honnou City most likely," Inumuta paid no attention to the varying outbursts of surprise by those present as his fingers responded to the information scrolling across the monitor, "At their current velocity the COVERS will reach Karakura Town in roughly thirty minutes."

"Trying to overwhelm us with quantity, huh? Luckily we have quality on our side," Ira Gamagori acknowledged sagely, his mood tempered by Jakuzure's obnoxious groaning and her subsequent commentary. Marching forward when something on the image caught his attention, he poked his finger at the holograph and asked, "What are these red dots?"

"I'm glad you asked."

Inumuta finished typing on the keyboard with a dramatic flourish, his finger loudly pressing one final button before turning around. Waiting patiently as the three bright red dots in the image grew larger, data and information rapidly scrolling down the computer's screen, the former hacker took a deep breath, "As some of you already know, the Life Fibers woven in every Goku Uniform possess a unique energy signature, which enabled Iori and myself to gather data on Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki's battles against the Club Captains back at Honnouji Academy. Using both the flash drive from the Moscow Distribution Facility and Kisuke Urahara's notes on spiritual energy, I managed to modify my software to detect the Life Fibers composing Xcution's individual raiment."

There's only three dots," Gamagori irritably pointed out, his face twisting into a contemplative scowl at the lack of helpful information, "Who are they?"

Resisting the urge to roll his eyes, the sheer obviousness of his fellow Elite Four's question plucking a nerve, the former hacker tensely sighed before answering, "I'm afraid that's far beyond the limits of my software. We won't know their exact identities until they reach Karakura Town."

Satsuki furrowed her brow at the unwanted implications behind Inumuta's lack of useful information. Aside from Rei Hououmaru, there were five members of Xcution still remaining in her mother's employ. It was a noticeable decrease from the height of their power yet they still remained a formidable and highly dangerous force upon the battlefield. The presence of only three members, their raiment most likely newly stitched by the Grand Couturier was alarming for a variety of reasons. Her mother was not someone who would field only half of her elite operatives, those fanatically loyal to Life Fibers in both body and soul, against a target as hardened and resilient as Karakura Town.

She was missing something.

The traces of anxiety coursing through her calculating mind abated when Junketsu tightened around her body in a comforting gesture. Her glower lessening as she turned her attention onto the only person in the room more qualified to speak about Xcution than herself, Satsuki flicked an errant strand of hair out of her eyes, "Kugo Ginjo, as Xcution's former second in command, beholden to my mother's secrets for nearly twenty years, you possess greater insight into the organization than anyone present. Myself included. Who would Rago trust enough to lead this operation?"

"It's nowhere near that simple..."

The former substitute shinigami didn't look Satsuki when almost two decades of memories flashed through his mind, images of former colleagues screaming for help right before they were devoured by the Life Fibers in their uniforms or worse. Running hand through his combed back hair, Ginjo let out a deep sigh before elaborating, "Xcution is fanatically loyal to Revocs to the point of suicide, all thanks to Ragyo Kiryuin's Life Fibers woven into their raiment. Most of them don't last for more than a few years, which is why your mother hunts down teenagers with high resistance to Life Fibers. By the time they finish training with the Grand Couturier their minds are completely broken."

Folding his arms during the subsequent silence from the shocked and appalled audience, Ginjo's felt Ragnarok shift slightly across his back, "But don't underestimate Xcution. Ragyo might control them like puppets but they're still extremely dangerous. Some like Esdeath doesn't even need to transform to use their raiment's abilities."

A frustrated snort escaped Uzu Sanageyama's mouth at the reminder of his embarrassing loss, "Tell me about it. That sadistic bitch didn't even bother trying to activate her raiment."

Ginjo's grimace deepened as he finally turned to Satsuki, "Ragyo must have been concerned Xcution would accidentally kill the civilians before the COVERS had a chance to feed on them, especially considering Esdeath has a tendency to freeze everything to death whenever she activates her raiment. She probably ordered Xcution to only use a fraction of their full power."

"Who wasn't at Honnouji Academy?"

The seemingly innocuous question caused the already foreboding atmosphere to grow increasingly stiffening. Taking the former Student Council President's intrigued reaction to his observation as a sign to continue, Uryu flicked a finger against the frame of his glasses, "Alexander Anderson killed one member of Xcution while the other four survived with minor wounds. Kinue Kinagase dealt with another two before the festival. So excluding Ginjo and Hououmaru, that leaves one person unaccounted for..."

"Yuu Akiyama."

Satsuki mentally noted Kugo Ginjo and Yoruichi Shihoin's reactions to the name moments before her face twisted into an annoyed scowl. As a backdrop of blue-white light appeared directly behind her head, the fierce illumination bright enough to nearly penetrate every shadow in the room, she splayed her hands across the table and passionately declared, "By his own admission, Yuu Akiyama is a coward of the highest order. But don't let his childish behavior fool you! Yuu's most dangerous ability is not the uniform sewn from Life Fibers but his own mind! For only a genius could out-manuever someone of Yoruichi Shihoin's caliber before escaping to London, where he proceeded to nearly hand the country to Revocs!"

Yoruichi grumbled at the unwanted reminder of her failure. After chasing the bastard halfway across the country, fighting her way through the hundreds of COVERS he placed in her path, she finally cornered him several kilometers north of Tokyo. But even after avoiding all of his traps, which was only possible thanks to years of working with Kisuke, the coward still managed to pull one over on her. When she grabbed the bastard by the neck and prepared to tear the raiment from his body, Yuu had pulled out a remote and calmly claimed there were more than twenty hostages in the surrounding buildings, which were set to explode if he wasn't at least ten kilometers away in the next ten minutes.

In hindsight she really should have punched the damn bastard.

It was only when she reached the first hostages that things rapidly went from bad to worse. All of the men and women sitting in the shadowed warehouse, thick ropes tied around their arms and legs, were actually life-like animatronics programmed to simulate a range of human movements and sounds. And they were all stuffed with plastic explosives that detonated the instant she stepped close enough to realize the bastard tricked her again.

As her expression soured at the smug coward making her look like a damn recruit fresh from the academy, and not the previous commander of the Onmitsukido with over a century of experience, Ginjo somberly explained, "Yuu's poisoned, blackmailed, kidnapped and even hacked his way through dozens of companies, all without using his raiment."

Gamagori stiffened at the grim news, "So you're saying we're dealing with someone equal in intelligence to Lady Satsuki? That's quite the frightening concept."

"While I surpass Yuu Akiyama in a variety of fields, likewise he is my superior in others," Satsuki admitted without a trace of shame. Calmly retaking her position in the chair next to Kisuke's computer, she crossed her legs before continuing in a stern tone, "Which is why there's a distinct possibility Yuu has already managed to sneak into Karakura Town. If Kugo Ginjo's information is indeed accurate, Isshin Kurosaki's Life Fiber barrier won't detect Yuu, leaving him free to disable the barrier and allow my mother to march upon the city with impunity.

"The situation is far worse than that..."

The complete lack of bravado in Alex Louis Armstrong's voice as he marched into the room ground the conversation to a halt, "We've lost all contact with the Kansai Region."

Inumuta was acutely aware of Lady Satsuki's genuine surprise at the announcement, her normally regal features marred by an unsightly scowl, as he activated his Probe Regalia Mark II. Rapidly searching through thousands upon thousands of lines of coding, the entirety of Nudist Beach's servers laid completely bare to his eyes, the former hacker's mouth twitched when he found the source of their problems, "It seems someone managed to upload a worm into your communications network, causing the Kansai Region to go completely offline. I can repair the damage, but that's going to take some time."

The silence following Inumuta's admission was deafening, broken only when Armstrong stroked his chin and frowned, "Is that so? That's quite disconcerting news. But if we're truly unable to contact headquarters for the foreseeable future, then there is only one path left to take..."

Any naïve hopes that the younger Armstrong sibling would continue behaving in a respectable manner were violently disproven when he suddenly flexed his arms and boasted, "Until such time that my sister reestablishes communications from Osaka I shall assume full control over the nudist forces within Karakura Town! The stockpiled weaponry! The disciplined soldiers trained in several types of Anti-Life Fiber tactics! They shall be the blade that cuts through the thousands of COVERS ready to descend upon this fair and noble city!"

Nodding respectfully in response to the nudist's bombastic declaration while noting Gamagori's irritation, Satsuki leaned back in the chair, "Continue, Inumuta."

The former hacker was enveloped by a second burst of light when his Probe Regalia returned to its normal uniform appearance. Adjusting his glasses as he typed several dozen unique commands into the computer, the holographic image on the table flickering from Honnou City to Karakura Town, he pressed one final button and scoffed, "Under the assumption that Yuu Akiyama succeeds in somehow disabling the Life Fiber barrier, our first order of business will be neutralizing Xcution. While my software cannot differentiate between members of the organization, it can detect their raiment once they get within range. Which brings us to Lady Satsuki's plan..."

Mitsuzo Soroi stepped forward at the faint nod from his mistress, the silver tea tray in his hands covered with over a dozen earpieces. As he diligently made his way around the room, pausing just long enough for every person to grab one of the devices, Inumuta took a deep breath and explained, "Since one-on-one battles against Xcution are quite dangerous, not to mention suicidal, I recommend attacking them in groups. These earpieces will allow easy coordination of our movements so please make sure they are switched to channel two."

"Kicking Xcution's collective ass is great and all but I think we're forgetting about something a little more important."

Rubbing two fingers against the earpiece in his hand, the minute grooves etched onto the device enough to paint a clear picture in his mind, Uzu Sanageyama scoffed derisively, "Like how we're going to take down the Grand Couturier. Not to mention the big bad herself - Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Isshin Kurosaki shall deal with my mother."

Not a trace of uncertainty or doubt plagued Satsuki's answer, for Ichigo's bumbling father was the only person that could counter her mother upon the battlefield. Despite her personal desire to kill the woman determined to feed humanity to Life Fibers, the former Kiryuin heiress was not delusional. Junketsu's power was not enough to contend with what she briefly witnessed during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. But while Isshin Kurosaki would effectively contain her mother, preventing her from singlehandedly slaughtering anyone she came across, he would be unable to assist in defending Karakura Town from Xcution and the rest of her mother's forces.

Her sharpened mind, honed over more than a decade of planning from the shadows, rapidly coming to terms with the new variables, Satsuki's brow furrowed at the thought of the last opponent they needed to face, "As for the Grand Couturier, although her strength surpasses anything accomplishable by both regalia and raiment, it is her innate regeneration that will pose the greatest threat. Therefore, Yoruichi Shihoin, Tessai Tsukabishi and myself will work in tandem to defeat Nui Harime."

"And what of young Ururu?"

Tessai Tsukabishi frowned deeply at Satsuki's grim expression, his square-rimmed glasses shining in the lighting, "Do you intend to deal with the manager's daughter as well?"

Satsuki closed her eyes before stoically answering, "If Ururu Tsumugiya has been swayed into swearing fealty to my mother, than there is nothing we can do to save her."

"I refuse to believe young Ururu is beyond saving," Tessai's enormous frame quivered with barely repressed emotion as he tightly clenched his hand into a fist, "Which is why I must sincerely apologize for refusing to follow your plan, Miss Satsuki. If the manager's daughter appears upon the battlefield, it is my solemn duty to bring her to heel."

Nodding at the formerly exiled shinigami, Satsuki mentally began adjusting her plans, "Can you compensate for Ururu Tsumugiya's increased abilities?"

"There are several rather strong sealing techniques at my disposal," Tessai declared gruffly, his glasses flashing ominously with each word, "They should be enough to restrain Ururu until we can reverse whatever damage was done to her mind."

"I'm afraid that won't work..."

The clomping of wooden geta echoed loudly in the artificially bright underground chamber as Kisuke Urahara emerged from the shadows. Brushing some coal-black dust off his coat while blatantly ignoring the sudden tenseness in the atmosphere, the shopkeeper casually explained, "Life Fibers sustain themselves upon the bioelectrical energy produced within the nervous and circulatory systems of living organisms. However, that's only partially accurate. In reality, this bioelectrical energy is nothing more than spiritual energy. And since Kido are really nothing more than spiritual energy molded into the desired technique, Ururu's Life Fibers will devour any Bakudo you might use against her."

Yoruichi's fingers twitched impatiently as she waited for Kisuke to finish speaking. Once she was absolutely sure he had nothing else to say, she sauntered across the room and kicked him in the shin, "Where the hell have you been?"

Kisuke smirked enigmatically despite the pain running up his leg, "I went to get some reinforcements once I heard Satsuki's mother was paying a visit! Didn't you read my note?"

The dark skinned shinigami's amber eyes twitched in rising annoyance as she grabbed the man's coat, "Reinforcements, you say? By some miracle did you finally manage to find out why we can't contact the Soul Society? Or better yet... will the entire Gotei 13 arrive to deal with Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"Hmm... you'll just have to wait and see, Yoruichi!"

Rubbing his injured leg when Yoruichi responded by kicking him in the shin again, Kisuke grinned mischievously as he recovered from the debilitating attack. A paper fan appearing in the palm of his hand, the exiled shinigami turned to Satsuki, "I couldn't help but overhear your plans for dealing with Nui Harime, Miss Satsuki. You really are quite the intelligent young woman. I assume you have several contingencies ready in the event the Grand Couturier survives your trap?"

Blue eyes stared intensely at the shopkeeper, years of dealing with both the Grand Couturier and her mother allowing the former heiress to easily penetrate his eccentric personality to the devious man hiding beneath the surface, "When facing an enemy that straddles the boundary between insanity and reality it's best to consider all options and scenarios."

"I couldn't have said it better myself," Kisuke acquiesced, "And you're right about one thing. Junketsu's power working in tandem with Yoruichi should theoretically be sufficient for you to defeat Nui Harime..."

The calculating tone in Kisuke's voice as he trailed off was not lost on those intimately familiar with the shopkeeper. Waving the paper fan in front of his face as he walked across the room, wooden geta clomping softly against the floor, he stared directly into Satsuki's eyes and finished, "But I humbly request you throw out any plans regarding the Grand Couturier. Because I can state with absolute certainty she will make her way to this shop, or more specifically me."

Satsuki's gaze narrowed at the admission, "The Grand Couturier is not known for her predictability."

Unperturbed by the teenager's accusatory tone, Kisuke's smirk slowly vanished as he snapped the paper fan shut with a flick of his wrist, "You should know better than anyone in this room that Nui Harime doesn't appreciate being upstaged when it comes to the fine art of sewing. Not only did I manage to figure out the secret to weaving a Kamui, which I'm certain she's tried to create, but I also embarrassed her in front of your mother during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. So I'm pretty much guaranteed to be at the very top of her list."

"But you believe Nui Harime is insane, don't you Miss Satsuki?"

The shopkeeper's tone deepened dangerously as he continued without pausing, "Truthfully, I was originally of similar mindset. But after doing a little research and speaking with both Ichigo and Ryuko concerning their experiences at Honnouji Academy, I adjusted my hypothesis. It may come as quite the surprise, but the Grand Couturier is actually quite sane. She simply has a twisted perspective of reality... among other things. I'm sure you noticed her behavior around Ichigo. How she referred to him as her 'cousin.' The reason for the peculiar nickname can be traced to her rather concerning attachment issues. She treats every Life Fiber Hybrid as extensions of her family, lashing out whenever someone attempts to disprove that notion. Or worse, take them away. And since she likely believes I kidnapped Ururu seventeen years ago..."

"She's going to lash out disproportionately," Satsuki finished with a tightening of her own expression. She remembered with vivid clarity Nui Harime's psychotic outbursts when she returned to Revocs, blood streaming from her left eye. The usually saccharine Grand Couturier, possessing an unnerving dissonance befitting of someone without a shred of humanity, had taken her frustration out on the middle managers, slaughtering over a dozen employees before her mother was forced to intervene.

But all that occurred after the Grand Couturier's mind shattered, broken beneath the heavy strain of attempting to reconcile the notion that a human permanently injured her body with Ragyo's teachings about the superiority of Life Fibers. It had been too much for Nui Harime, causing her intelligence to falter alongside a noticeable decrease in her strength while she fervently sought out Ryuko for revenge. However, the complete restoration of her eye changed everything. Now that she regained her full mental faculties, the Grand Couturier would undoubtedly not repeat her mistake.

"I presume you have a plan to defeat both the Grand Couturier and Ururu Tsumugiya?"

"More or less," Kisuke frowned pensively at the barely noticeable quivering of Yoruichi's shoulders. So she realized what he was planning, huh? That would make things easier in the long run, "But I'm going to need everyone to leave my humble little shop until further notice."

"You're going to use that against Ururu?!"

Yoruichi's unrestrained outburst drew the attention of those familiar with the normally playful shinigami. Acutely aware of Tessai's subdued reaction to his explanation, the stoic man staring intently in his direction, Kisuke patted dust off his coat before grimly responding, "While the long-term effects of Ragyo Kiryuin's Mental Refitting on humans normally leads to death, I'm unsure how the Life Fibers she implanted into Ururu interface with her mind. Ragyo's skill with Life Fibers exceeds my own by a large margin. Not to mention whatever other tricks she picked up from the Original Life Fiber..."

Taking his childhood friend's ensuing silence at the explanation as a sign she was letting the matter concerning Ururu rest for the moment, Kisuke mentally sighed in great relief when Yoruichi decided not to kick his shin a third time. It would be unseemly, not to mention embarrassing, if he collapsed to the ground writhing in pain. Calmly removing his bucket hat as he walked across the room, the measured clapping of his geta echoing in the silence, the shopkeeper replaced the paper fan within the folds of his coat, "That being said, there's one last order of business. Uryu..."

The teenager Quincy resisted the urge to scowl at the shopkeeper's enigmatic tone, "I need you and Tessai to escort Orihime to Karakura General Hospital."

"W-What?"

Orihime Inoue, who had thus far remained silent, widened her eyes in absolute surprise, "But why?"

A contemplative scowl etched itself across Satsuki Kiryuin's features as she attentively listened to the comments from Orihime Inoue's friends in response to Kisuke Urahara's logical but cold answer. Running a finger down Junketsu's sleeve when she noticed the Kamui's multicolored eyes staring intently at the orange haired teenager, she cleared her throat before speaking loud enough to immediately gain everyone's undivided attention, "You're referring to the events of the Naturals Election. Or more precisely, the miraculous regeneration of Nui Harime's formerly missing eye."

"There are two ways to counter the regeneration of a Life Fiber Hybrid."

The upper half of Kisuke's face was framed within the shadows of his bucket hat as he solemnly explained, "The first is exhausting their spiritual energy. Contrary to popular belief, a hybrid's regeneration isn't limitless. It takes a certain amount of spiritual energy for their Life Fibers to regenerate. However, fighting Nui Harime long enough to reach that point will be rather difficult. The other method involves cutting through their body using a pair of hardened Life Fiber blades, which would effectively negate the regenerative properties of their internal Life Fibers. Such an attack is usually permanent. But your Shun Shun Rikka easily managed to regenerate Nui Harime's damaged eye."

"And that makes you the single greatest threat to Ragyo Kiryuin's plans."

Orihime's depressed expression quickly morphed into a state of confusion at the shopkeeper's comment. How could her Shun Shun Rikka pose any sort of threat to someone powerful like Ragyo Kiryuin? As she spent several moments wracking her mind for an answer, Orihime was torn from her thoughts when Kisuke took the initiative, "The ability to heal injuries caused by Hardened Life Fiber blades wouldn't normally draw Ragyo Kiryuin's undivided attention. But someone like her, whose knowledge on Life Fibers is second to none, undoubtedly understands the true implications of your powers."

"If you can reject the damage caused by the Scissor Blades, it only makes sense that you can mimic them."

Satsuki's eyes immediately focused upon the formerly exiled shinigami, "How certain are you of this?"

"Pretty certain," Kisuke enigmatically answered while pulling a small device out of his coat, the nearly palm-sized invention faintly glowing around its edge. Fiddling with the strange device while fully aware of the building tension in the atmosphere, the corners of his mouth curled into a familiar knowing smirk before he added, "But there is a single advantage we have over Ragyo Kiryuin. Despite her impressive knowledge on everything related to Life Fibers, her background on spiritual matters is sorely lacking. Tessai's skills, in conjunction with Ryuken's unique style of construction, should conceal Orihime from your mother."

"I hate to be the bearer of bad news but it appears we overestimated Ragyo Kiryuin's patience. She'll be arriving on our doorstep in just over twelve minutes."

The former hacker ignored the subsequent uproar as he began packing away his equipment. While he was mildly interested in Orihime Inoue's miraculous ability to resurrect the dead, his current priority was preventing Karakura Town's communications network from being sabotaged by a third party. In other words, he needed to prepare defenses to make sure Yuu Akiyama didn't repeat what happened to Osaka.

"I'll require another secure location to keep the communications network fully operational," Inumuta's collar automatically unzipped as he pushed his glasses up the bridge of his nose and turned toward Satsuki, "Karakura General would be optimal in reestablished a secure base for the network. Furthermore, connecting directly to the Ishida Conglomerate's servers will allow me to more accurately track Xcution's movements."

"And I shall take my leave as well!"

Pink sparkles twinkled around Armstrong as he vigorously shook Kisuke's hand, the strength behind the display of respect causing the shopkeeper to wince, "Your bravery in the face of adversity is inspiring, Kisuke Urahara! It's a travesty that you must fight your own flesh and blood! Forced to battle the daughter you love and cherish! But please feel honored that your words of encouragement have not gone unheard! For Nudist Beach shall fight until our last breath to prevent Ragyo Kiryuin and her army of COVERS from taking the city!"

An expression of mild curiosity graced Satsuki's features at the nudist's boisterous speech. Silently observing Gamagori's eyebrow twitching spasmodically in response to his father's actions, which Jakuzure was more than willing to derisively mock, she leaned slightly toward Inumuta before quietly inquiring, "What is the status of Iori's project?"

The blue hair teenager subtly glanced around the room, "Preliminary testing was completed yesterday afternoon. After Kisuke Urahara checked over the results, Iori began processing your request. The package has been delivered with detailed instructions tailored specifically for the designated target."

Despite the importance of the discussion, Satsuki found her mind drifting upon watching Yasutora Sado attempt to comfort Orihime Inoue, who seemed increasingly depressed by the revelations regarding her abilities. Biting the interior of her cheek as she regally stood back up and grabbed the auburn Scissor Blade from its resting place against the table, Satsuki's heels clacked loudly with each deliberately placed step as she marched across the underground chamber towards the elevator. Her stride unfaltering when Yoruichi Shihoin demanded to know where she was going, the former Kiryuin heiress's expression didn't waver as she answered.

"To find Isshin Kurosaki."

---

...

---

It was going to rain soon.

Isshin could feel the familiar chill in his bones, or whatever facsimile his internal Life Fibers created. In less than an hour the heavens would open asunder and Karakura Town would be deluged in a heavy downpour, which coincidentally made the windbreak he put on this morning, one of Masaki's last gifts before her passing, all the more necessary. Although his current physiology, unwillingly bestowed by the Original Life Fiber, made him immune to both the ravages of time and the elements, there were some things he refused to ever lower himself into doing. Dressing flamboyantly in bright and overwhelming colors like Ragyo, uncaring about anything the world had to say, was one such line the former shinigami would never cross.

Ichigo's completely unfounded remarks about his atrocious sense of fashion didn't prove anything.

Lost in his spiraling thoughts while sitting upon one of Tsubakidai Park's somewhat comfortable wooden benches, built when Ryuken donated millions of dollars into revitalizing the city after Satsuki's Raid Trip, Isshin frowned at the spiritual energy growing closer with every passing second. Judging from the way Ragyo was flaunting her presence, which only he could sense thanks to the glowing spool of eldritch yarn underneath her manor, she was either incredibly content or extremely annoyed. Emotions that he knew from experience would only lead to trouble for him in the long run.

Fixing the collar of his worn jacket as the distant peeling of thunder echoed faintly from the north, the air growing heavy with the scent of rain, Isshin resisted the urge to sigh heavily when he sensed Ragyo shifting her course by a fraction of a degree, "Well, there goes any chance of catching her off guard..."

After embarrassing her in front of thousands of people, not to mention being the only true obstacle in her path, Isshin expected Ragyo would want to personally deal with him. And he knew she wouldn't be in the mood to sit down and simply talk things out like normal adults.

"You never were the sort of woman to just take 'no' for an answer," he solemnly confessed with a heavy sigh. Wrapping his arm around the back of the bench as another rumble echoed only a few kilometers to the north, Isshin watched a brief flash of purple light illuminate the overcast skies before his mind drifted toward something that had been troubling him since the Great Culture and Sports Festival.

Ragyo was stronger than he remembered.

It was apparent from the moment she angrily slapped him during Parent Student Day that Ragyo wasn't the same woman from seventeen years ago. Since the fateful night he realized the depravities Ragyo committed in the name of the Original Life Fiber he'd secretly been training. It hadn't been easy hiding his progress from Kisuke's ever-watching eyes but since Life Fibers are completely different from both shinigami and hollows, he managed to convince the bastard that his shinigami powers were still gone. But the strength he felt when she slapped him, or rather how much power Ragyo was actually holding back, suggested his old friend hadn't grown complacent.

"I suppose you couldn't relax with someone as strong and handsome as myself on the playing field," Isshin sagely commented. He had assumed for a long time that Ragyo would find training abhorrent since it meant the Original Life Fiber's power wasn't enough to fulfill its plans for humanity. Yet not only did she train, almost catching up to him despite all of his effort, but Ragyo somehow learned how to properly wield a sword instead of swinging it around like a complete idiot.

Lightly rubbing his jaw at the memory of their fight, Isshin sarcastically added, "But who the hell taught you to throw a right hook?"

The rhetorical question went unanswered when a familiar prickling pulsed across his mind. Sighing slightly louder than necessary as he checked his watch for the time, Isshin watched arcs of lightning illuminate the darkening skies in shades of sickly purple for nearly a minute before arching a silver eyebrow, "Your request caught me by surprise. Usually you're the one against these personal meetings."

Coughing awkwardly into his hand when the friendly comment was followed by a long moment of silence, Isshin scratched the side of his face and grimaced, "I hope you didn't have too much trouble getting through the barrier. I had Kisuke test the damn thing but the guy can't exactly wear Life Fibers..."

There was another long moment of silence despite Isshin's best efforts to break the ice before the obscured figure standing patiently on the other side of the bench hung their head and sighed. As the intricate white cloak concealing both their gender and any revealing features billowed in the gusting winds preceding the approaching storm, the figure coughed into a gloved hand before asking in a slightly strained tone, "How did you copy Ragyo's improvements? It's..."

"Amazing? Well... I do know quite a few things about Life Fibers," Isshin smugly boasted, his expression darkening as another wave of thunder echoed through the heavens, carrying with it the heavy scent of rain.

What he failed to mention was that Ragyo's ingenious improvements to his barrier didn't come without their drawback, a painful lesson the former shinigami knew better than anyone else at the moment. Reverse engineering the Infinite Woven Life Fiber Barrier had been fairly straightforward, thanks largely to Kisuke's detailed notes and the knowledge seared into his mind by the Original Life Fiber. But reworking his designs from the ground up, altering the fundamental construction of the barrier, had come with a heavy price. For although his improved barrier flawlessly worked to prevent Ragyo and her COVERS from entering Karakura Town, he could never leave.

And the knowledge that thousands of people were dead, or worse, constantly gnawed on the edges of Isshin's conscience.

"But if it's any consolation, copying Ragyo's barrier wasn't the easiest thing in the world," Isshin continued in a fairly pleasant tone, none of his guilt or self-loathing evident when he leaned backwards and smirked, "Kisuke might understand how she built the damn thing but the guy doesn't have an artistic bone in his body. He'll never comprehend Ragyo's unique craftsmanship when she puts her heart into something. It's a miracle he managed to create Mugetsu without leaving a single Life Fiber out of place."

"I see..."

The cloaked figure's concealed shoulders hitched slightly with every strained breath as the bitterly cold wind briefly intensified, exposing several strands of sweat-covered purple hair sticking to their hidden face. While they normally allowed Isshin to speak freely for several minutes before gently guiding him back to the reason they were meeting in the first place, time was of the essence. As rivulets of blood dripped from within the folds of their left sleeve, staining their gloved fingers a deep crimson before pattering quietly onto the grass, they resisted the desire grab their limp arm, "It was difficult avoiding Ragyo's attention. I had to wait until after Esdeath departed for Osaka before excusing myself from her office. And if the Grand Couturiers hadn't been preoccupied with an errant stitching on Shinra Koketsu I never would have managed to leave Honnouji Academy alive."

Isshin's brow furrowed at his colleague's words, his fingers clenching as the mirth and amusement drained from his features, "How is Ururu?"

A wince completely unrelated to their current condition rippled through the figure's cloaked form. Coughing hoarsely when the air briefly thickened, the world momentarily turning to shades of gray and black before snapping back to normal, they ignored the rampant pain in their left arm and somberly replied, "I'm sorry, Isshin. But Ragyo was very... thorough... in her methods when Ururu proved resilient to normal Mental Refitting."

Several minutes of agitated silence passed excruciatingly slow as Isshin cursed his shortsightedness. Despite all of the information on Life Fibers unwilling implanted into his mind by the Original Life Fiber and decades of experience as captain of the Tenth Division, he wasn't the most brilliant tactician. He didn't have Ragyo's cold logic and intelligence and all of his plans couldn't hold a match to Kisuke's when the sly bastard was given ten minutes to prepare. Having Ururu follow Ichigo and Ryuko to Honnouji Academy had been extremely risky considering Ragyo's plans, but with the Soul Society unable to help she had been the only one who could stand against Nui Harime.

But contrary to popular belief the Grand Couturier wasn't an invulnerable monster. In fact, Isshin could name several captains off the top of his head that were both stronger and faster than Nui Harime. The problem anyone would have if they chose to fight against the Grand Couturier was overcoming her powerful regeneration.

Yoruichi could have dealt with Nui during the Great Culture and Sports Festival if he hadn't asked her to remain in Karakura Town in case anything went horribly wrong. But without a Hardened Life Fiber blade, which in the hands of a shinigami was no different from a normal sword, she couldn't counter Nui's regeneration. From there it was only a matter of time until the Grand Couturier slowly but surely analyzed Yoruichi's fighting style for the perfect moment to strike. And that wasn't factoring in Ragyo's propensity for personally dealing with those standing in her way.

Even with over a century of experience and enough power to overwhelm the Grand Couturier, Yoruichi wouldn't have stood a chance against Ragyo.

Isshin had hoped Ururu's connection to Nui - Twin Life Fiber Entanglement - would weaken the teenager long enough for either Ryuko or Ichigo to knock her unconscious. He knew they wouldn't kill the Grand Couturier despite the atrocities she committed under Ragyo's orders. And once Nui was out of the way he could have dealt with Ragyo and her COVERS before easily sweeping aside Xcution, putting an end to the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet before it could truly begin.

In hindsight, it had been an extremely risky plan even if it technically worked. But he should have known Ragyo would have something special up her sleeves. Yet how could he have ever expected the woman would stoop low enough to hire someone to assassinate his own daughters?

"I'm sure Kisuke has something prepared for Ururu. The bastard has contingencies for everything you can imagine," Isshin half-heartedly dismissed with a lazy wave of his hand, the strained smirk never reaching his eyes. Despite his heavily restrained ability to speak about most topics pertaining to Life Fibers thanks to the Original Life Fiber, he had a pretty good idea how Ragyo molded Ururu into her twisted version of a perfect daughter.

Permanently restitching a Life Fiber Hybrid's mind wasn't easy by any stretch of the word, especially if they fought against the technique every step of the way. Ururu's internal Life Fibers should have instantly rejected the foreign threads, preventing the sickening ability from ever taking hold. But if Ragyo used Mental Refitting alongside Life Fiber Hierarchy in a specific combination that made his stomach mentally lurch, she could have easily achieved such revolting results.

"But you should probably find someplace to lay low for the next few hours."

Despite his concerned tone of voice, Isshin was internally grateful for the distraction provided by the burst of familiar spiritual energy from halfway across Karakura Town. He would have given an arm to forcibly derail that train of thought before it ruined his entire day. Satsuki wrapping up her emergency meeting on dealing with Ragyo was the perfect excuse for him to shift the conversation onto a more positive topic. But judging from the way Ragyo's daughter activated Junketsu seconds after leaving Kisuke's shop, it was very likely Satsuki was intent on hunting him down.

That might be a problem.

"There's an abandoned hospital north of here," Isshin rested his arms against the bench while ignoring the thunder rumbling almost directly over the city, "Its basement was converted into a shelter during Satsuki's Raid Trip. You can hide there until this mess blows over."

Prefacing the suggestion with a tired sigh, Isshin once more calmly checked his watch when he sensed Ragyo's pace toward Karakura Town abruptly quicken. His expression twisting at the chaotic cacophony from the army of COVERS annoyingly buzzing in the back of his mind, the inhuman vibrations from the Life Fibers focused upon a single purpose, Isshin's eyes narrowed in growing suspicion at his colleague's strange silence. They were never this quiet. In every meeting stretching back almost seventeen years they had always spoken in an exasperated yet serious manner, chastising his purposeful lack of focus before forcefully returning the topic back to Ragyo.

This was the first time he was the one leading the conversation. And that was more than enough of an incentive for Isshin to finally turn around.

"What's wrong?" Isshin glanced curiously over his shoulder, "You're not usually this -"

The question died in his throat when he turned around and noticed what he should have seen from the start. Momentarily stunned into speechlessness at his colleague's heavily injured condition, countless bloody tears covering the once pristine white cloak, Isshin was brought back to reality when they hunched forward and coughed wetly, thick strands of blood and saliva dribbling thickly from their mouth. He should have noticed something was wrong when they refused to talk any more than was necessary, a clear and worrisome departure from their previous meetings. It was a miracle they managed to flee Honnouji Academy with a dislocated, and possibly broken, shoulder without falling unconscious, which was something that greatly bothered Isshin.

Their injuries were severe enough that he should have detected something wrong with their spiritual energy before they even arrived.

But until a few seconds ago, when he actually turned around, they had sounded and felt perfectly fine .

"I'm... sorry..."

Isshin's heart skipped a beat when his colleague slowly started falling backwards, their body finally giving out after pushing itself long past the breaking point. Vanishing in a burst of motion faster than the eye could follow, the former shinigami managed to gently catch his friend just before their head bounced off the ground. The blood staining his cherished jacket completely ignored as he instinctively began examining the full extent of their wounds, decades of human and spiritual medical knowledge coming to the forefront of his mind, Isshin tensed as a raspy voice reached his ears, "Ragyo caught me... right before I could..."

"You didn't have to do this!"

The first drops of rain lightly landed against the back of Isshin's neck as he interrupted their completely unnecessary excuse. Grimacing angrily at his inability to have stopped Ragyo sooner, he clenched his hands impotently and declared, "You shouldn't have risked everything trying to escape! Telling me about Ururu or anything else wasn't worth your life!"

"Ragyo... she..."

A choking gasp barely managed to escape the figure's blood-filled mouth as they were wracked by another series of painful coughing. Their head resting limply against the ground as the howling wind picked up, exposing strands of blood-caked purple hair, Rei Hououmaru stared upwards into the stormy skies before weakly continuing, "... she... Laissez... Faire."

Isshin's breath hitched in his throat at the unexpected name. He had spent much of the past decade working relentlessly to counter Ragyo's plans, thinking of creative and unique ways to work around the mental blocks placed upon his mind and soul by the Original Life Fiber. But it wasn't until a few weeks after Ichigo left for Honnouji Academy, when Hououmaru last managed to escape Ragyo's watchful eye, he first heard of Operation Laissez Faire. And what little information Hououmaru knew about it wasn't good. An operation designed for the singular purpose of eliminating both Nudist Beach and himself.

In any other situation the notion that anyone in Revocs aside from Ragyo could hurt him would have been laughable. But from the way the woman was rapidly marching on Karakura Town, the previously flaunting presence now extruding a cold fury, it appeared she was worried Hououmaru knew something that could jeopardize her operation. Asking Hououmaru could give them an advantage over Ragyo. But at the rate she was losing blood, and whatever internal injuries she most likely had, she wouldn't survive much longer.

It wasn't a difficult decision to make for the former shinigami.

"Try not to talk..."

Even if Hououmaru did know everything about Operation Laissez Faire, he wasn't going to risk his friend's life in the process. Carefully examining several of the larger gashes placed across her stomach, the crimson dyed into the fabric beginning to mix with the falling rain, Isshin refrained from tearing open the bloods-soaked cloak and pressed a finger against her neck, "You have internal bleeding. I'm not sure if Ragyo sewed Life Fibers into your body but Ryuken's hospital is the only place in Karakura Town that has the proper equipment to stabilize your -"

It was the incessant electronic beeping, barely audible over the pouring rain and thunder, that caused every muscle in Isshin's body to simultaneously stiffen in dawning realization.

She wouldn't...

Harshly tearing apart Hououmaru's cloak without a second thought, his concern for her grievous injuries forgotten in light of the changing circumstances, the former shinigami's eyes widened in disbelief at the device intricately woven throughout the Life Fibers of her raiment. A Bleach Bomb, one of the most dangerous weapons in the world that only a handful of people even knew existed, had been stitched into the very fabric of the uniform. This wasn't good. It was impossible to disarm the device unless he knew exactly how Ragyo primed it in the first place. And knowing that woman, she made sure the Bleach Bomb would explode if he so much as touched it.

Damn her.

Isshin's fingers twitched nervously inches above the beeping device as rain continued trickling down his face. He needed to bring Hououmaru to Kisuke. The bastard was the only one who could safely disarm the Bleach Bomb without killing her or setting it off in the process. Swallowing the lump in his throat as he examined the Life Fiber circuitry stitched into the raiment, rainbow threads intermingling with normal cloth, Isshin nearly flinched at the unadulterated terror in Hououmaru's eyes.

"Don't worry," the former shinigami ignored the rapid pounding of his heart, born from apprehension and nervousness, as he reassured his friend, "If I know Ragyo, she was counting on me attempting to disarm the damn thing. It's probably primed to react only to my Life Fibers. So don't move. I'm going to call Kisuke and -"

Reaching for his cell phone, determined to get Kisuke's assistance no matter how much he needed to threaten the bastard, Isshin had barely pressed the first number before he became acutely aware that the Bleach Bomb was shimmering with a dangerous light. Staring at the glowing circuitry woven through Hououmaru's raiment, he numbly dropped the phone as a disturbing light started bathing the surrounding landscape in shades of black and white. This shouldn't be happening! He didn't even touch the Bleach Bomb!

An unnatural stillness pressed down upon Isshin's ears when the rainfall suddenly ceased falling, repelled by the chaotic energy radiating from the Bleach Bomb. The passage of time slowing to a crawl as he reached toward Hououmaru's uniform, fingers grasping through the air inches away from the glowing Life Fibers, maroon eyes widened when a faint pulse of spiritual energy rippled outward, bathing the surrounding landscape in shades of gray and black. Moving without any regard for his own well being, Isshin gripped the trapped raiment and pulled as the entirety of Tsubakidai Park was enveloped within an explosion of terrible white light.

---

...

---

Ragyo Kiryuin's expression twisted into depraved amusement at the beautiful explosion rippling through Karakura Town in the distance.

Floating majestically high above the ground while surrounded by thousands of Combat-Class COVERS, the Life Fiber creatures completely unmoving apart from the emaciated faces of their victims silently screaming for salvation, the Kiryuin matriarch's maroon eyes narrowed in sadistic pleasure. Sometimes it was just far too easy to play that man. But if she was perfectly honest, it was highly surprising Isshin fell for such an obvious trap. Despite his gregarious but annoying personality, he was still her equal when it came to Life Fibers. Every mote of knowledge bestowed upon him by the Original Life Fiber was given to her as well.

So why on Earth would Isshin think she'd do something so predictable as setting the Bleach Bomb to his Life Fibers?

"Oh Isshin..."

The name of the only man she ever loved passed from between slightly parted lips as the Kiryuin matriarch beheld the aftermath unfolding over the horizon. Silver hair gently waving in the torrential downpour, Ragyo trailed a perfectly manicured finger down her arm and mockingly sighed, "It's insulting that you honestly didn't see this coming."

Sometimes she couldn't help but wonder why she continued encouraging the man's behavior. Did Isshin honestly believe she was blind to her own secretary, who's worked at her side for over twenty years, disappearing at random hours of the night? Such a flagrant insult to her intelligence made Ragyo want to slap some sense into the loveable oaf. However, it was that same disrespect that allowed Operation Laissez Faire to exist in the first place. And for that she was willing to completely forgive Isshin's numerous mistakes and childish acts of rebellion against Life Fibers.

However, he still needed to pay for confiscating the Scissor Blade from dearest Nui. Stealing from a defenseless teenage girl was a personal matter she couldn't disregard. Did he have no standards?

But once again, accounting for Isshin's predictable behavior in her plans was so facile. Which made the Bleach Bomb she patiently stitched inside Hououmaru's rewoven raiment, one of the Grand Couturier's gifts in the aftermath of the Great Culture and Sports Festival, all the more amusing. The man's self-centered presumption that the device was configured for his specific Life Fibers meant he would willingly sentence Hououmaru to an excruciatingly slow and painful death from internal bleeding while he tried calling for help. But since the Bleach Bomb was subtly connected to the Life Fibers composing her secretary's cloak, Isshin still fell into her trap despite his paranoia. Thanks to a few modifications, the man would have just enough time to ponder the consequences of his pointless defiance before the Bleach Bomb detonated at point-blank range.

Of course, she had no intention of killing the man. For despite years of frustration and heartbreak born from his callous spurning of her affection, not to mention kidnapping Amu, she found the notion of killing Isshin completely reprehensible.

"La vie est drôle."

Ragyo shuddered pleasurably at the sensation of the Life Fibers woven throughout the garment she'd chosen to adorn her body. With Esdeath and Yuu currently dealing with Olivier's pathetic nudists in Osaka, slaughtering all who would reject the glory of the Original Life Fiber, it was time to begin the next phase of Operation Laissez Faire. And with Isshin out of commission, there was nobody left in the miserable city capable of stopping her.

"Hououmaru's splendid performance aside... I believe it's time to put an end to your pathetic display of resistance."

The peeling of thunder reverberated across the drenched landscape as the Kiryuin matriarch's lips twisted in sadistic amusement. Slowly raising a hand in front of her face, manicured fingers pressed tightly together, she chuckled darkly as the Life Fibers from Hououmaru's raiment scattered to the far corners of Karakura Town. Did Isshin truly think the crux of her plan only involved incapacitating him with a Bleach Bomb? Au contraire. Expanding her senses to the thousands of threads blown throughout the encapsulated city like a dandelion in the wind, she momentarily basked in the heavenly pleasure coursing through her veins before grinning madly.

"Au revoir..."

Isshin hadn't exaggerated about the impenetrability of his barrier. Not a single COVERS or Life Fiber Hybrid could traverse through the high-velocity Life Fibers enveloping the city without his permission. While a bothersome annoyance on the best of days, he then had the audacity to further modify the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, preventing either of them from crossing. The man really knew how to test her patience. However, impenetrable wasn't the same as indestructible. And that was a lesson Isshin would have time to ponder while her forces ravaged and slaughtered everyone in Karakura Town.

Except, of course, for her foolish daughter. She had something special waiting for Satsuki and the treacherous Kamui adorning her undeserving body.

Folding her arms underneath her ample bosom as thousands of COVERS immediately descended upon the unprepared city, Ragyo sighed in utter content at the subsonic vibrations of their Life Fibers. Their roars were akin to a beautiful symphony resonating in the depths of soul, an elegant cacophony unmatched by anything humanity ever accomplished. This was the moment she'd dreamt about for years. Months of planning coming to a head as Isshin's attempts to defend humanity from the Original Life Fiber were torn apart down to the dress patterns.

The truth of the world he'd denied for the last twenty years would finally be drilled into his thick skull... whether he liked it or not.

"Proceed with the operation."

Ragyo paid only the barest amount of attention to the three simultaneous eruptions of rainbow light across the rain-soaked landscape. While it was heartening to watch her employees diligently march forward, obeying her orders down to the letter, the heavy resistance undoubtedly waiting within Karakura Town meant some of them wouldn't be returning alive. But that was simply how the world worked. Xcution were nothing more than sacrifices, obedient servants ready to throw away their lives to ensure the success of her plans. Yet while she would have loved taking her sweet time with Isshin before personally killing Kisuke Urahara, she didn't have the luxury of an empty schedule. The generator powering the barrier was undamaged and fully operational. It was only a matter of time before she needed to retreat, lest her forces get trapped inside the city when the barrier restored itself.

But forty-five minutes was far longer than she needed.

Sighing contently at the plumes of smoke already rising from Karakura Town, miniature explosions crossing the horizon as the beleaguered defenders fought tooth and nail against the power of Life Fibers, Ragyo's lips quirked into an amused smirk when two presences simultaneously appeared on the periphery of her senses, "I take it things are nearly finished?"

"Gosh, we wouldn't be here otherwise!"

The saccharine voice pierced through the torrential downpour as Nui Harime smiled widely from her perch upon the right shoulder of a giant COVERS, having arrived only moments prior to Lady Ragyo ordering Xcution to kill every man, woman and child in Karakura Town. Sapphire eyes staring mirthfully over the dreary landscape as the rain caused her blonde pigtails to wilt slightly under the weight, the Grand Couturier enthusiastically nodded her head, "All that's left is the final stitching. But I could do that with both hands tied behind my back! So we decided to take a break and see how things are progressing! After all, watching these humans squirm..."

"... is something we wouldn't miss for the world," Amu Harime finished stoically with only the slightest trace of detectable emotion, her purple boots splashing lightly as she stood on the Life Fiber being's left shoulder. Tilting her head to the right and blinking when Lady Ragyo didn't acknowledge their answer, deigning to remain silent and continue staring at the battlefield in the distance, she pressed the purple Needle Blade against the small of her back, "Shinra Koketsu only needs a few more hours of work, Lady Ragyo. Once we heard what happened with Hououmaru, we couldn't help ourselves from watching. Because without Mr. Kurosaki..."

"... there's absolutely, positively nobody left on the planet that can stop us!" Nui proudly finished with an exaggerated bobbing of her head. Smirking mischievously as her own purple Needle Blade glistened in the pouring rain, the Grand Couturier stared at her unblemished reflection before cheerfully adding, "Even that shopkeeper and his transforming sword can't hold a candle to you, Lady Ragyo! But we're not stupid, you know! We wouldn't have come all this way if the old goat hadn't fallen into your trap!"

"Is that right?"

The smirk adorning the Kiryuin matriarch's features widened at the insinuation, "And this has nothing to do with a certain annoying man?"

Nui tilted her head in mimicry of her sister and giggled, "Gee, was it that obvious?"

Ragyo was keenly aware that it was dearest Nui who dragged her loving sister all the way from Honnouji Academy. Her cheerful daughter's motivations for disobeying a direct order were painfully obvious to the woman. Yet she couldn't fault the Grand Couturier. Kisuke Urahara had been an annoying thorn in her side from the beginning, a man who consistently pushed the boundaries of both her self-control and patience. From creating Mugetsu to entering the Original Life Fiber's sacred chamber, desecrating the holy being with his presence, the shopkeeper had long ago earned the exclusivity of her wrath.

If only her COVERS had managed to capture the man during the Great Culture and Sports Festival...

The deafening crackle of thunder gently pulled the Kiryuin matriarch from her darkening thoughts. Having the Grand Couturiers participate in Operation Laissez Faire was incredibly risky. And it wasn't too late to send her daughters back to the safety of Honnouji Academy. But she wasn't so cruel as to deny them the opportunity to stretch their legs. After working countless hours weaving the final garment necessary for humanity's destiny at the hands of Life Fibers, they deserved the chance to take vengeance. To torture Kisuke Urahara for the pain and humiliation he inflicted upon them by wiping the man and everything he cherishes from the face of the planet.

"Now I certainly cannot deny my daughters the chance to enjoy themselves..."

Ragyo flicked a strand of silver hair away from her eyes as something in the distance caught her attention, a brief shimmer of familiar blue light moving rapidly across the rain-soaked landscape, "But do be careful. He may be a foolish man but Kisuke Urahara has proven to be quite resourceful when cornered."

"You don't need to tell us twice, Lady Ragyo!"

Puddles of water splashed haphazardly across the COVERS as the Grand Couturier cheerfully walked off its shoulder. A dangerous glint visible in her eyes when her pink boots found purchase upon thin air, a trick she learned from watching those stupid Quincy at Honnouji Academy, she propped the Needle Blade behind her back and laughed, "We're not going to underestimate that party pooper a second time! While Xcution is having fun killing those stupid nudists..."

"... we're going to hunt down that stupid shopkeeper and kill him," Amu's waist-length black hair, styled in a manner reminiscent of her sister, was weighed down slightly by the rain as she leapt off the COVERS. One leg curled upwards as she gently landed in the air next to Nui, whose fingers reached out and entwined with her own, she smirked darkly and added in a subdued tone, "But not before torturing him for keeping me away from you, Lady Ragyo."

The Kiryuin matriarch saw no reason in clarifying that it was Isshin who kidnapped dearest Amu seventeen years ago, not the foolish shopkeeper destined to rot in the deepest bowels of hell. Chuckling heartily, Ragyo folded her arms underneath her bosom and smirked, "Well then... amusez-vous."

A wistful sigh escaped from between slightly parted lips when the Grand Couturiers smirked in synchronization before vanishing in an impressive burst of speed. Today's youth were simply too impulsive and impatient. She understood dearest Nui's desire to violently eviscerate Kisuke Urahara but the man was someone that couldn't be underestimated. Creating a Kamui wasn't something anyone could simply learn, a lesson her daughter understood. Yet it was the non-Life Fiber powers wielded by the residents of Karakura Town that garnered a modicum of her admittedly minuscule interest.

Just how did Isshin manage to conceal these people from her notice for all these years?

"Life is indeed amusing... wouldn't you say, Isshin?"

Ragyo's lips twisted into a psychotic smirk as the rainbow undertone shining from her silver hair intensified, bathing the surrounding landscape with its harsh light. She couldn't wait to see Isshin. They had so much to talk about...

---

...

---

A single involuntary twitch plucked at Satsuki's eye as she soared over Tsubakidai Park, the rain-soaked landscape displaying just how much damage it sustained from the detonation of the Bleach Bomb. Changing her trajectory as wisps of white energy curled through the humid air, clinging briefly against Junketsu's flight configuration before dissipating into the storm, the teenager's frown deepened when the Kamui tightened around her body. Although she remained unable to hear Junketsu for obvious reasons, the underlying connotations of the reaction were perfectly clear.

With a soft clack Satsuki's heel connected with the damp soil, her body illuminated by a shimmering flash of blue light and stars when Junketsu instantaneously transformed back into her standard configuration. Cautiously examining the decimated environment with a discerning eye, the former heiress's nose scrunched in disgust at the overbearing scent permeating the atmosphere. She had been unaware of Bleach Bombs until Kisuke Urahara's enigmatic explanation of his escape from the Grand Couturier.

Drawing the auburn Scissor Blade strapped across her back with a metallic snap, Satsuki ignored both the rain streaming down her face and the deep-seated revulsion pulsing through Junketsu. What she was planning had the potential to injure the Kamui yet she bitterly had little choice in the matter. With her mother's forces assaulting the city, slaughtering anyone they came across, they didn't have the luxury to remain cautious.

She needed to walk into the lingering effects of the Bleach Bomb... for better or worse.

Her black hair lay matted against Junketsu's uniform from the pouring rain as she leapt into the dissipating white haze hugging the ground without a second thought. Marching across the cratered and burnt landscape as the distant gunfire momentarily ceased, drawing her attention for the briefest of moments, Satsuki felt the Kamui tighten uncomfortably around her body when she reached the epicenter of the cataclysmic explosion, the figure laying prone upon the ground all too familiar.

"Isshin Kurosaki!"

Isshin ignored the metallic taste of copper as he struggled onto his feet. Actual pain... now that was something he hadn't experienced since encountering that thing hibernating beneath Ragyo's manor. And to think he'd missed the human sensation of having his body wracked by the most excruciating pain imaginable. Arms trembling as he propped himself onto one knee, trails of blood oozing down the burnt skin of his face, Isshin stiffened at the scrap of cloth growing damp in the puddle between his hands.

Rei...

As streams of bitterly cold water trickled down her body, causing Junketsu's armor to glisten slightly from the moisture, Satsuki landed next to the crouching man with a loud clack of her heel. Ignoring the strand of black hair laying against her face as she stared at Ichigo's father, the guilty expression in his eyes momentarily shattering her well-honed discipline and disposition, Satsuki's voice contained not a single trace of her conflicting emotions despite the Scissor Blade quivering slightly in her fingers, "How did my mother transport a Bleach Bomb into Karakura Town?"

"Your concern about my health is appreciated, Satsuki."

Isshin ignored the suspicious glare from Ragyo's daughter as he staggered back onto his feet. One hand callously wiping away the blood oozing from the corner of his mouth, the man winced at the pain lancing through his body. He never expected his friend to sacrifice Hououmaru just to get to him. It went against everything he knew about the woman. But perhaps he had been deluding himself all these years about Ragyo if she was willing to stoop to such unfathomable depths in service of the Original Life Fiber.

"We don't have the luxury of time to worry about your condition," Satsuki replied, her tone firm and unyielding, as her attention shifted eastward, "You are the only person capable of defeating my mother. You may chastise my disrespectful behavior all you wish, Isshin Kurosaki, but refrain from doing so until Ragyo Kiryuin lies dead upon the ground."

Running a hand through his silver hair at the remarkably strange comment, Isshin exhaled loudly and muttered, "I'll be sure to remember that... but you need to get the hell out of here right now."

Satsuki's brow furrowed pensively when Ichigo's father extracted the same hardened Life Fiber blade he wielded against her mother from the tattered remnants of his jacket. The rest of his uncharacteristically serious warning was not necessary for her to understand the direness of the situation - her mother was hastily approaching. Even with Junketsu's full power at her disposal, Satsuki knew she stood no chance against the monster calling herself Ragyo Kiryuin. Nodding as she turned to leave, knees flexing in preparation of shifting back into Senpū, she looked over her shoulder when Isshin hurriedly added, "Find Kisuke and tell him he needs to get -"

"I'm disappointed, Isshin."

Every muscle in Satsuki's body tensed at the suave voice, the genial and nearly motherly tone sending a shiver down her spine. Floating gently above the ground, arms folded beneath her bosom as the rain actively avoided touching her clothing, Ragyo Kiryuin sighed in disappointment, "You of all people should know better than to speak so freely around unworthy ears."

"And you should know it's rude to interrupt somebody when they're talking."

The suppressed vitriol tainting Isshin Kurosaki's voice was a startling departure from the childish and family-oriented man Satsuki had been living with for the last few weeks. Staring reluctantly at Ragyo's amused expression as lightning arced overhead, the former shinigami balanced the multicolored tachi in the palm of his hand and grumbled, "But you really had me going for a while, Ragyo. I never thought you would kill Rei just to take me down."

Ragyo's expression immediately soured at Isshin's unwarranted venom. While the man certainly had every right to speak his opinion on the matter of her tactics, the events that led to Hououmaru's raiment being rewoven into a fully functional Bleach Bomb were entirely his fault. But alas, trying to make Isshin follow even the most basic directives was a task unto itself. A melancholic sigh escaping her parted lips as she stood several inches above the ground, Ragyo tilted her head sideways and playfully mused, "Did you think I wouldn't notice your obvious correspondences with Hououmaru?"

Amused laughter echoed melodically across the park before Ragyo took a deep breath and smirked, "But I'm surprised you're still conscious, Isshin. That Bleach Bomb was designed with your level of stubbornness in mind. It seems I've underestimated just how stubborn a man like you can be..."

"Ragyo Kiryuin!"

The Kiryuin matriarch's attention lazily shifted to her petulant daughter at the completely childish outburst. Absentmindedly observing both the furious expression etched in Satsuki's eyes and the terror circulating through Junketsu's quivering Life Fibers, Ragyo shook her head in disbelief when Isshin grumbled inaudibly under his breath. Did he honestly think she couldn't hear every word that left his mouth? Humoring Isshin by pretending she hadn't heard his flagrant and admittedly rude insults, she stood silently in the torrential downpour as the man gathered his wits and decided to speak normally.

"So you're going with this little act, huh?"

Isshin held a heavily burnt arm in front of Satsuki, preventing the teenager from interfering as he locked gazes with Ragyo, "You knew a Bleach Bomb wouldn't be enough to take me down."

"True..."

Rainbow light spilled through the decimated park as the Kiryuin matriarch placed a hand against her cheek and chuckled darkly, "Yet it's clearly taking your full concentration just to remain standing. You're nothing more than a shadow of your glorious self, Isshin, a weakened husk that even my foolish daughter and her treacherous Kamui could defeat. And while you'll regain your full power soon enough, as of right now..."

Trailing a finger down Isshin's neck when she abruptly closed the distance between them, Ragyo smirked at the shocked expression in her daughter's eyes before whispering, "... even you cannot hope to stop me."

The Kiryuin matriarch's smile noticeably faltered when Isshin rudely leapt away, leaving her standing slightly embarrassed in front of her foolish daughter. Her heel clacking upon the air when the man darted forward and swung the hardened Life Fiber weapon at her neck, the killing intent behind the strike momentarily taking her off guard, Ragyo angrily narrowed her eyes before snapping her arm upwards and grabbing Isshin's wrist.

"Pardonnez-moi, mon amour," Ragyo muttered before smashing her hand into the man's stomach.

An explosion of multicolored energy disintegrated the already decimated landscape the instant Ragyo's fist connected with Isshin's stomach, forcing Satsuki to stab the Scissor Blade into the muddy soil lest the overwhelming intensity of the technique send her flying backwards. Junketsu's armor glowing with a fierce blue light as the Kamui deepened their level of synchronized, Satsuki found the additional power greatly appreciated when the shockwave accompanying her mother's unholy blast rippled across Karakura Town. Ignoring the sharp ringing in her ears, the former heiress broke out in a cold sweat when Ichigo's father vanished, his body crashing through multiple building in an expanding trail of destruction leading out of the city.

"Now, with that particular matter settled..."

Ragyo's tone returned to its previously mirthful state as she casually reached over her shoulder. Manicured fingers clasping firmly around the hilt of Isshin's tachi, which the man had accidentally discarded prior to his impromptu departure, she turned half-narrowed maroon eyes to her daughter and smirked, "... there's only the matter of you, Satsuki."

"Don't underestimate me! Junketsu Zenkan!"

An aura of spiritual energy enveloped Satsuki's body as Junketsu eagerly transformed into Zenkan, the immense power radiating from the advanced configuration vaporizing the rain coating her body. The ground cracking beneath her Kamui's heels as she refused to give the monster in the guise of her mother a single moment of respite, the former heiress couldn't suppress a snarl when she swung the Scissor Blade only for Ragyo to effortlessly dodge at the very last second.

"Come now," the regal woman mockingly chastised, her tone devoid of worry as she easily evaded or countered every attack Satsuki used, "Did you think wearing Junketsu would be enough to stand at my level?"

Accentuating the difference between their powers by deflecting the Scissor Blade before casually leaping upwards, Ragyo's eyes widened in genuine surprise when Satsuki tensed her knees before following suit. Now this was an interesting development. How did Isshin teach her foolish daughter such an intriguing ability? It might have been a mistake on her part if her eldest daughter was capable of learning such techniques. Grinning smugly when Satsuki arrogantly attempted to take advantage of her introspection, Ragyo's heels clacked against the solidified air as she continued avoiding her daughter's easily telegraphed strikes.

"Although I will admit your strength has improved since our last reunion."

Ragyo quirked an eyebrow when Satsuki abruptly ceased attacking, rings of condensation rippling beneath her heels with each step. Watching dispassionately when both her daughter and the Scissor Blade were enveloped within a deep blue aura, the Kiryuin matriarch frowned at the name Satsuki gave Junketsu's signature attack. Tenrai Kagai certainly possessed a marvelous symbolism befitting that of the first Kamui. Her silver hair rustling slightly when Satsuki shouted passionately and rushed forward, blue spiritual energy coating the Scissor Blade, she waited until her daughter was nearly upon her before stabbing Isshin's tachi straight through one of the hardened Life Fiber blade's circular holes.

"But you're just a poor girl who doesn't know her limitations..."

The potent spiritual energy encompassing the Scissor Blade exploded harmlessly into the surrounding storm as Ragyo stared deeply into her daughter's furious expression, "My blood might run through your veins but you're still only human. And a human can never hope to truly wear Kamui!"

Ragyo didn't hesitate upon finishing her explanation to promptly kick her petulant daughter directly in the stomach, the amount of power contained within the restrained strike enough to send Satsuki violently crashing to the ground where she belonged. Taking a brief moment to examine the underlying intricacies of Isshin's blade as she patiently waited for the dust to settle from her daughter's indignant landing, Ragyo smirked at Satsuki's defiant glare, "Speaking of Kamui, I believe it's time Junketsu returned to where she truly belongs."

"You shall never touch Junketsu!"

A single stream of crimson trailed down Satsuki's face as she stood unflinchingly in the rain, her attention focused upon her mother's monstrous visage. Her expression tensing at the terror radiating from Junketsu at her mother's insinuations, Satsuki tightened her grip around the Scissor Blade and sneered defiantly. As a blue-white backdrop of holy light burst into existence, bathing the scorched landscape with its glory, she clasped both hands around the weapon and fiercely declared, "I'm aware of the gulf between our powers! Isshin Kurosaki demonstrated that concept quite clearly! Even with Junketsu's full strength at my fingertips I don't stand a chance of defeating you!"

Ragyo arched an eyebrow at the childish statement, "And yet you still harbor delusions of stopping me?"

"Lying is unbecoming of you, mother."

The corners of Satsuki's mouth curled faintly into a smirk at the faltering of her mother's sadistic expression. Flicking the Scissor Blade through the air as a writhing aura of deep blue spiritual energy once more enveloped her body, she ignored the small amount of satisfaction pulsing through her chest at Ragyo's visible astonishment when the weapon transformed into an identical replica of Ryuko's Decapitation Mode.

"Your entire plan is nothing more than a desperate gamble!"

Lightning flashed across the heavens as she raised the transformed Scissor Blade to her shoulder, a metallic ringing echoing across the landscape. As streams of water cascaded down Junketsu's armor, the backdrop of holy radiance grew increasingly brilliant, "You can hide your nervousness beneath a paltry veneer of confidence but this battle was predicated upon a quick victory! For once Isshin Kurosaki's Life Fiber Barrier is restored, both you and your army will be rendered powerless!"

The spiritual energy radiating from the former Kiryuin heiress, bolstered by her nearly perfect synchronization with Junketsu, exploded outwards as she defiantly proclaimed, "I might fall beneath your power, Ragyo Kiryuin, but -"

"You talk far too much..."

Manicured fingers clasped firmly around her daughter's mouth as the Kiryuin matriarch closed the distance between them in a single step. Easily lifting Satsuki off the ground despite her feeble attempts to counter the sudden shift in momentum, Ragyo's lips curled in sadistic pleasure at the fear in her daughter's blue eyes, "Grandiose speeches are wonderful when used appropriately, Satsuki. Speaking down to the plebeians... asserting your dominance over humanity... killing Quincy. The middle of a battle, on the other hand, is certainly not the proper place for such avocations."

Squeezing a modicum tighter when Satsuki's heel slammed into her stomach to absolutely no effect, Ragyo's maroon eyes narrowed fractionally as she calmly stabbed Isshin's sword into the ground, "However, your little act of disobedience was anything but a fight. Your thoroughly annoying attempt at stalling for time, while quite commendable, has amounted to absolutely nothing. A few minutes wasted on a meaningless conversation against a young girl who still cannot comprehend the truth of the world."

Ragyo decided to accentuate her point by delicately trailing a finger down her daughter's bare stomach, eliciting a muffled shout of defiance. Easily intercepting Satsuki's wrist when she foolishly swung the Scissor Blade at her heart, she chuckled before knocking the weapon out of her daughter's unworthy grasp. Amused eyes watching the work of her former and unimaginative husband twirl through the air before stabbing blade-first into the mud, the rainbow undertone in her hair shone menacingly as she shook her head and sighed, "Today's youth simply have no respect for their elders..."

The simultaneous widening of both her daughter and Junketsu's eyes as several Life Fibers emerged from her fingers, the rainbow threads weaving dangerous through the air, brought endless satisfaction to the Kiryuin matriarch. Heroic willpower and determination aside, her daughter was still nothing more than human. An exceptionally gifted and powerful human born of her flesh and blood but nothing compared to Life Fiber Hybrids. And with Satsuki's allies and Nudist Beach preoccupied with Xcution and her COVERS, she had all the time in the world to reweave her daughter and Junketsu into obedient servants.

Having Satsuki slaughter her former comrades, the utter betrayal stinging deep as they lay dying in the rain, would be well worth wasting another few minutes.

"Now isn't this quite the surprise..."

Maroon eyes widened fractionally at the distinctly masculine voice penetrating the pouring rain, the entirely unexpected presence momentarily taking her by surprise. Just how did this man manage to avoid her senses? Quickly recomposing herself with all the grace afforded to a woman of her social standing, Ragyo ignored her daughter's continuing petulant actions as she glanced impatiently over her shoulder at the source of the unwanted interruption. As rain trailed down his black cloak in thick streams, the hood hiding everything but the lower half of his smirking visage, the man continued in the same calm tone.

"It seems I owe Kisuke Urahara an apology. I assumed his rhetoric born of unnecessary apprehension, the continued result of a previous irreconcilable difference of opinion. But your presence in Karakura Town helps explain his sudden change of heart."

Lightly disturbing the growing puddles of water covering the ground as he took several deliberate steps closer to the Kiryuin matriarch, the man held up a hand and commented, "This isn't a situation where one can allow their judgment to be clouded by emotion. Even determination can be detracting if expressed improperly. After all, you are someone who contorts the concept of 'power.' Intelligence, strength, speed... these concepts cannot describe you, Ragyo Kiryuin. For how does one compare anything to the woman who has been touched by the Original Life Fiber?"

Ragyo ignored the feeling of utter disgust trailing down her spine, "And who are you?"

There was something inherently wrong about her unwanted guest, a mixture of discontent and antipathy increasing with every second that passed. And despite her legendary patience, for some reason she wished nothing more than to immediately skewer the man through the heart. Casting one final look at her daughter before callously tossing her away without a second thought, the Kiryuin matriarch removed Isshin's hardened Life Fiber sword from the ground before turning her full attention upon the man, "From your familiarity with that annoying shopkeeper I can only presume you're another one of Isshin's clandestine colleagues."

"Isshin Kurosaki..."

The amusement in the man's tone caused Ragyo to narrow her eyes, "You might say we are well acquainted. In fact, your chance encounter with him would never have happened if it weren't for my personal involvement."

Lightning pulsed through the heavens, bathing the deluged city in shades of purple, as the Kiryuin matriarch sneered. It was annoying enough that the man felt the need to speak to her in a condescending fashion, completely ignoring the fact she was only humoring him, but claiming he had anything to do with Isshin was simply too much. There was confidence and then there was suicidal disrespect, " Your involvement?"

"Perhaps you don't believe me," the man, completely unperturbed by the sudden rise in spiritual energy, noticed Satsuki crouching against a fallen tree. This was the first time he was able to personally observe a Kamui, one of the pure Life Fiber beings. Putting aside the matter of its appearance around Satsuki Kiryuin, the power radiating from its advanced state at a surprising level, he casually added, "But I wouldn't expect a woman of your position to simply take my word at face value. Needless of your beliefs, Isshin's encounter with Masaki Kurosaki would never have occurred without my direct involvement."

Maroon eyes widened briefly at the insinuation before narrowing in growing fury. It was abundantly clear the man was taunting her, using her loss to that woman in a futile attempt to enrage her. But just because she refused to fall for the tactic did not mean she would allow the man to continue speaking... or standing. The rainbow undertone from her silver hair brightening dangerously as she clacked a heel against the air, a pulse of spiritual energy rippling outwards from the point of contact, Ragyo tightened her fingers around Isshin's blade and smirked coldly, "Is that right?"

Wisps of rainbow energy wafted from the hardened Life Fiber weapon as her tone grew increasingly sinister, "Assuming you're telling the truth, my dear étranger, there is something about you that piques my interest. You're neither human nor are you one of those Quincy scurrying in the shadows. And you're certainly not a vampire. So tell me, just who are you?"

"What an interesting question..."

As streams of water cascaded from the man's raised arm, a faint wind began blowing through the park, "Would knowing my name depreciate your desire to end my life?"

"I simply wish to inform your next of kin," the Kiryuin matriarch explained with a distinct lack of amusement as she marched towards the boorish man, "But my patience with your baseless slander has reached its limit. I do have a schedule to keep."

"Is that so?"

A brief moment of silence followed the rhetorical question, punctuated only by the pealing of thunder, before a katana abruptly shattered into existence between the man's fingers. As the hood of Kisuke Urahara's spiritual-concealing cloak was blown away by a gust of wind, revealing swept-back brown hair, Sosuke Aizen's calm demeanor didn't falter at Ragyo's unimpressed quirking of her eyebrow. It would have been presumptuous to assume a woman of her caliber, who's witnessed the truth of the world with her own eyes, would find such a mundane display remarkable.

"Then by all means try to kill me," Aizen smiled amiably at the monstrous spiritual energy lurking beneath Ragyo Kiryuin's false skin. Jagged arcs of lightning illuminating the storm deluging Karakura Town when he raised his power, causing the woman's eyes to widen fractionally and her daughter to wisely leap several dozen meters further away, the traitorous shinigami shifted into the most basic of zanjutsu stances. His calculating mind simulating nearly a dozen variations of attacks the woman would attempt in the next five seconds, each difficult to counter for anyone other than himself, Aizen ruminated on the question he asked Kisuke Urahara not an hour ago.

Just how did Isshin Kurosaki allow the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to progress to such an extent?

Turn Back the Pendulum

Here is the next chapter of To My Death I Fight and boy, is it a large one. While other chapters have TECHNICALLY been longer, the content and material contained below is rather important in the long run. That's the reason it took so long to write. I wanted everything to be perfect (or nearly so) for you, my readers, to enjoy.

And from the title of the chapter I know some of you are going to be disappointed by the lack of a fight between Ragyo and Aizen. It is something I REALLY want to write, and will do so in the next chapter. But note that this chapter isn't filler. In fact, I would go so far as to say this chapter explains the reasons and motivations behind not only a lot of the main story - including Ragyo's background - but also a large portion of Bleach's pre-timeskip events.

With that said, I would like to give a few shout outs to some artists on Deviantart:

(1) that-booky-chick15: for her continued fanart of my story, its characters, and the amazing artwork of Nui Harime in Tite Kubo's style of manga that is my current avatar.

(2) grocamol: for commissioning a manga adaptation of my story by ardeearollado, which is currently eight pages long. Please go to his deviantart page to see the entire manga so far and, if you truly wish, help keep the manga going.

I would also like to thank my beta reader for his continued tolerance of my stupidity and sometimes atrocious grammar and spelling errors. Who knows where I would be without his constantly blunt, but always helpful, honesty.

Be sure to check out the tvtropes page for To My Death I Fight . Now with all of that out of the way, I hope you enjoy the latest chapter of my story.

---

...

---

Chapter 54 - Turn Back the Pendulum

July 23rd, 1916

An agonizing screech warbled across the bone-white dunes of the boundless desert of the damned as a large Hollow collapsed limply onto the sand. Sharpened claws curling violently into the ground as glowing blue eyes widened beneath its lizard-like mask, the twisted soul convulsed spasmodically when torrents of bubbling spiritual energy began wafting from its body. Taut muscles and veins bulged grotesquely as the barely contained energy radiating from the depths of its corrupted soul grew increasingly chaotic, coloring its once pale flesh an unhealthy shade of crimson. Emitting a torturous wail as blood began oozing from cracks across its inhuman body, the Hollow hunched its back before exploding in a violent burst of flesh and gore.

Standing calmly upon a nearby dune, his white haori flapping lightly in the phantasmal wind constantly blowing across the expansive desert, Sosuke Aizen's mouth curled into a faint smile when the Hollow's corpse slowly dissolved into its component spiritual particles. His pleasant expression unfaltering as the twisted creature's spiritual energy was drawn toward the shimmering orb sitting delicately in the palm of his hand, the ambitious shinigami was unfettered when his creation's normal coloration shifted into a deep sapphire tint. Soft eyes narrowing introspectively, Aizen's thoughts turned inward as he lightly curled his fingers around the sphere.

Contrary to what his associates believe, he was never one to shy away from the prospect of failure.

Yet he couldn't help but feel the slightest hint of annoyance that these particular Hollows, which he painstakingly gathered over the last year, were abject failures. Despite his original hypothesis, none of them possessed any unique characteristics or abilities that visibly differentiated them from the rest of their brethren. Even their most powerful specimens, a pair of Hollows with strength comparable to low-ranked seated officers, could not survive the Hōgyoku's influence without quickly undergoing Soul Suicide. But most disconcerting was the undetermined reasoning behind the growing list of failed results.

Perhaps it was time to adjust the parameters of the experiment.

"Yet another failure..."

Kaname Tōsen softly expressed his mild disappointment at the experiment as he stood to the immediate left of the bespectacled captain. Milky-white eyes narrowed contemplatively behind the clear goggles concealing his disability, he took notice of the spiritual environment surrounding the blood-soaked dunes before continuing in the same calm tone, "Sixty-two Hollows yet none of them survived the transition to a higher state of purpose. It's quite likely attempting to continue this line of experimentation will be a waste of time. Shall I finish off the rest of the specimens?"

A trace of a smirk appeared on the captain's features at the sound of a zanpakuto slowly leaving its sheathe, "Do you doubt my methods, Kaname?"

"N-No, of course not..."

With a metallic clink Tōsen snapped his zanpakuto back into his scabbard before kneeling reverently, "Please forgive my insolence, Captain Aizen."

Aizen's expression didn't falter at the obedient behavior of his subordinate despite his perturbed thoughts. While Kaname's deference to his authority and knowledge on the Hōgyoku was appreciated to a certain extent, if one possessed the necessary acumen to form a legitimate opinion then they should freely speak their mind. Blind obedience can only take one so far before fervent demeanor overwhelmed logic. Kaname's strength might have risen to the level of a standard captain under his tutelage but power was meaningless of one lacked the proper motivation and rationality.

It was common knowledge that an opponent experienced in the basics of psychology can easily twist zealot fanaticism to one's disadvantage.

"There's no need for apologies, Kaname."

The mischievous smirk plastered upon his lieutenant's face at the measured response did not escape Aizen's attention. Purposefully remaining ignorant to the way Gin Ichimaru stared intensely at the Hokyoku, his amusement twisting darkly for a fraction of a second, the captain carefully placed the shimmering sphere within its specially crafted container. It was too dangerous to leave his creation exposed to the spiritually rich environment of Hueco Mundo for extended periods of time. In its currently incomplete condition, allowing the Hokyoku to absorb too much ambient spiritual energy could lead to catastrophic consequences.

Tucking his arms within the folds of his shihakusho, the captain's tone remained affable as he slowly walked away, "Your opinion holds a grain of truth. Initial judgment would imply these Hollows are nothing but trash. However, there are still several things I wish to test before deeming the current series of experimentation a failure."

"I'm beginning to get worried, Captain Aizen. At the rate we're going through Hollows we might just start running out soon..."

Gin Ichimaru smirked playfully, his cavalier expression unchanging despite the venomous glare sent his way courtesy of Tousen. Hands clasped together against the small of his back as he sauntered after his captain, the recently promoted lieutenant chuckled before offhandedly commenting, "Although I suppose it is quite fortunate for us so many people are dying over in Europe. Perhaps I should pick up some more Hollows next time I'm in France."

"That won't be necessary, Gin," Aizen sensed the slight consternation on the youth's face at the response. Briefly pausing as Tousen fell into step, the blind shinigami's anger at Gin's behavior reluctantly abating, his voice contained not a hint of annoyance, "As my new lieutenant your duties in Verdun will be heavily scrutinized by the Twelfth Division. Restricted, one might say, to the battlefield. It would be unwise to draw the Gotei 13's attention to gather a few Hollows."

"I suppose ya got a point there..."

Half-listening to the conversation as the lieutenant rubbed a hand against the back of his neck out of embarrassment, Tousen's expression twisted slightly when something plucked on the edges of his mind. It was an old thought, a perturbing notion he'd been constantly pondering for the last several weeks. Blind eyes narrowing fractionally as he raised a hand to his chin, he collected his thoughts in the most appropriate manner before turning to Aizen and calmly inquiring, "Something's troubling me. Four years ago our research was moving at a pace that could only be called breakneck. We experimented upon enough Hollows to draw the notice of Baraggan Louisenbairn. Nothing was off limits. Yet these last few months you have reversed course. Is there something we should know?"

"It's nothing more than a minor change of pace, Kaname."

The captain's glasses shimmered opaquely in the perpetual moonlight as he continued walking without the slightest hint of concern. His brown hair blowing in the nonexistent wind as the bleached structure in the distance - the seat of power for the self-proclaimed God-King of Hueco Mundo - rapidly came into view over the expansive dunes, Aizen smiled affably at the intriguing question, "Our plans hinge upon dozens of interconnecting variables. At certain points the pace of our research may quicken. That is a fact. However, your concern is the result of incomplete data, arising from fragmentary knowledge. With that said, I will presume your next question involves asking why I wish to continue experimenting upon these particular Hollows despite the lack of progress. The answer to that question is quite simple -their souls came from Tokyo."

His two subordinates immediately shared mutual expressions of confusion at the answer. Aizen didn't expect them to understand the intricate motivations behind his reasoning. As far as the Seireitei was concerned, the geographic origin of a Hollow played no role in determining its starting spiritual energy or techniques. It was a supposedly proven fact, determined by decades of research even before Kishime Urahara founded the Shinigami Research and Development Institute.

"Captain Aizen..."

Gin casually leaned forward as he interrupted Aizen's train of thought, a conniving smirk once more stretching across his features. Pointing curiously at the Hōgyoku concealed inside the captain's haori the silver haired shinigami's blue eyes opened minutely, "It's been on my mind for quite some time now... twenty years as a matter of fact... but what exactly is the Hōgyoku? I know what it does but its power feels completely different from spiritual energy."

Despite Tōsen immediately chastising Gin for his impertinent question, the bespectacled shinigami's smirk never faltered. Removing the safely contained Hōgyoku from his pocket, the orb glowing with a deeply enchanting coloration, he pleasantly explained, "Although Kishime Urahara and myself individually created our own Hōgyoku, each with nearly identical powers and abilities, they are composed of diametrically opposite yet fundamentally similar materials. Yet despite our knowledge it is physically impossible to replicate our work and create another Hōgyoku."

A wistful sigh escaped the lieutenant's mouth at the enigmatic answer, his features falling as Aizen pocketed the Hōgyoku before proceeding to stab the air with his zanpakuto. As the dimensional gateway leading back to the Seireitei opened, the metaphysical wooden doors sliding open with a burst of light, Gin hid his disappointment behind a smirk. Oh well, there was still plenty of time to learn about the Hōgyoku over the next few decades.

The wooden floorboards creaked as Aizen walked into his captain's quarters. With the Great War enveloping most of Europe and her colonies, surveillance across the Seireitei was at an absolute minimum. And thanks to the millions of souls lingering around the battlefields, their pain and suffering rapidly transforming them into Hollows, none of the other captains noticed his absence these last five days. His compatriots were far too busy trying to hold back the inevitable flood of Hollows across the world to pay attention to his actions. Grinning faintly when Kaname and Gin left his chambers without another word, Aizen suppressed the growing urge to chuckle.

It was always amusing to watch the latter searching for information. Perhaps he should make their little game more interesting by telling his lieutenant the secret of avoiding the effect of Kyōka Suigetsu's illusions. He was looking forward to seeing how Gin used that against him.

---

...

---

August 11th, 1857

The sweltering August heat was nearly unbearable for the thirteenth seat of the Fifth Division.

Wiping a forearm against his sweaty brow, Sosuke Aizen ignored the blistering sun looming overhead as he continued observing the singular focus of his attention. As the faint breeze blowing inland from the nearby bay wound its way through the forest, granting him a momentary reprieve from the heat, he deftly leapt to another branch when his target stood up and moved out of sight. Convincing his captain that he was patrolling the outer districts of the Rukongai hadn't been difficult. The man was inattentive to the most mundane details on the best of days. By playing the role of an average seated officer willing to help his captain with the division's extensive paperwork he gained extensive leeway to move between the Soul Society and the World of the Living.

It was necessary for his long-term plans he continue the charade of being nothing more than an average shinigami.

A thin sheen of sweat slowly covered every inch of his body as he spent the next few hours patiently watching his target - a middle-aged woman possessing regal features and beauty unmatched - sitting in the shade cast by her extravagant manor. Leaning forward at the sound of voices, one hand lightly clenching a smaller branch for added support, Aizen ignored his parched throat when the woman chastised her eldest daughter for pushing her sister onto the ground. Sighing when she sat back down, one of her servants offering her a cup of tea to calm her nerves, the shinigami's mouth pursed in mild annoyance.

For the last month he had diligently observed every aspect of the woman's life, watching her movements from the moment she woke at dawn. Not a single action or conversation went ignored. Yet he couldn't shake the suspicion something was missing, a variable he must have overlooked. And it wouldn't be the first time. The innocent laughter of the woman's two daughters as they ran around the yard caused Aizen to narrow his eyes introspectively. Perhaps two generations of observations weren't enough to deduce a pattern. However, both the woman's mother and maternal grandmother had already succumbed by this point in their lives. There must be something different about this generation that -

An abrupt tensing of the matriarch's posture nearly caused Aizen to slip off the branch.

Seconds stretched into minutes as the shinigami watched the unfolding scene with bated anticipation. Taking note of the sudden silence in the surrounding forest as the once incessant droning of the summer insects vanished, Aizen frowned when the Kiryuin matriarch stiffly rose to her feet and turned towards the manor. Something was wrong. He hadn't sense any changes in either the woman's spiritual pressure or the ambient spiritual energy, which would explain the shift in behavior. For all intents and purposes she was exactly the same now as she was several hours ago.

It didn't follow the basics of logic and reasoning.

Carefully listening to the inflections in the matriarch's emotionless voice as she ordered her prostrating servants to watch over her daughters, he wiped the sweat from his brow before proceeding to the next stage of his plan. With expertise born from years of practice Aizen slowly extended his left arm, streams of ribbon-like spiritual energy shimmering in the air as he twisted his wrist clockwise. Kneeling as the illusionary array wrapped around his body, the Bakudo concealing both his spiritual pressure and physical presence, he waited until the Kyokko settled into place before using Shunpo to catch up with the Kiryuin matriarch as she stepped into the manor

Aizen knew better than perhaps anyone that the Kiryuin's could not be defined by the word normal . Scarce reasons existed that adequately explained how every member of the family possessed greater than average spiritual energy without having Quincy or shinigami ancestry.

And that strength was slowly growing with each generation.

The rush of cold air carrying the faint scent of mildew did little to alleviate Aizen's sudden nervousness as he carefully followed the matriarch into the catacombs beneath the Kiryuin manor. It took but a single discerning observation of the surrounding architecture to notice that the walls of the musky stairwell were old. Almost impossibly old judging from how the stone blocks were carved. Yet that wasn't the origin of the suspenseful chill racing down his spine. Staring attentively into the encroaching darkness as he perfectly timed his footsteps with the woman's, the warm light from the candle in her hand flickering against the walls, he frowned at the strange sensation permeating the atmosphere.

Even he could sense the inhuman spiritual energy coming from deeper within the catacombs.

Lingering behind when the matriarch reached the bottom of the stairs, her bare feet echoing softly against the stone floor as she continued forward, Aizen's eyes widened in restrained intrigue at the ancient doors barring further passage. How extraordinary. They might have once been constructed from mundane materials such as wrought iron and stone but whatever lay behind the closed threshold had twisted them into something unique. It would require both an immense amount of spiritual energy and inhuman physical strength to leave anything more than a small scratch upon the surface.

Which only made it stranger to comprehend.

A nervous tremor caused the fingers on his right hand to spasm when the Kiryuin matriarch placed her own hands upon the uncannily smooth doors. Watching with bated breath when the otherwise normal woman pushed gently on the sealed gateway, which slowly opened without any further impetus, Aizen felt a chill race down his spine as the darkened catacombs were bathed in a harsh orange-red light.

This... this was it .

After more than fifty years of preparations, patiently observing the Kiryuin family slowly amass increasing amounts of power and influence, he finally managed to lay his eyes on the Original Life Fiber. This should have been a momentous occasion, the culmination of decades of painstaking work and planning. Yet Aizen quickly found himself forced to brace his hand against the wall when an overbearing pressure began pressing down on his soul. He hadn't expected this either. Most shinigami would have instantly succumbed to the spiritual pressure of the eldritch creature floating in the middle of the sanctum. In mere seconds their spiritual forms would have broken down, absorbed by the blanket of Life Fibers covering every inch of the chamber.

But he was far above the level of his fellow shinigami.

His mouth twisting into a disturbed grimace when the spiritual energy constructing the Kyokko was abruptly stripped away, devoured by the innumerable Life Fibers writhing several meters away, Aizen waited a moment before cautiously approaching the glowing threshold.

Pausing on the edge of the sanctum, his sandals inches from the Life Fibers covering the floor, Aizen tensed when everything suddenly pulsed . No, he quickly realized upon observing the dust coating the walls hadn't shifted, that was an incorrect assumption. His attention snapping back to the Original Life Fiber when the creature's coloration changed, the ominous glow illuminating the chamber transforming into vibrant and burnt crimson, he instinctively leapt backwards when every Life Fiber in the chamber moved . Bundles of threads, each as large as his body, were unraveling before his eyes, splitting into thousands of smaller tendrils far too numerous for his to count.

Unable to avert his gaze as the thousands of Life Fibers converged upon the woman praying fervently beneath the Original Life Fiber, Aizen carefully reached for his zanpakuto when the massive creature split sickeningly down the middle, exposing a large and glowing jagged maw.

Nothing he researched could have possibly prepared him for the scene unfolding before his eyes. While most of the last five decades had been dedicated to observing the previous two matriarchs, he hadn't dared step foot within the catacombs underneath the manor. It would have been suicide without the guiding presence of the current Kiryuin matriarch. Yet those trivialities were the least of his concerns. He had anticipated the Original Life Fiber would be inherently different and exponentially stronger from the minuscule traces of Life Fibers he painstakingly managed to collect.

But this was beyond his wildest dreams. It was almost inconceivable that an existence such as this could -

An agonizing scream pulled him back to reality.

The sight of the Kiryuin matriarch getting pierced by hundreds of Life Fibers, blood pooling on the glowing floor as she was devoured both body and soul by the alien threads, nearly gave Aizen pause. Yet he refused to allow such a sickening display of inhuman gluttony prevent him from achieving his goal. Swallowing the bile in his throat as the woman's scream devolved into barely audible moans, he silently slipped a faintly glowing glove onto his right hand.

While he couldn't physically enter the deeper catacombs of his own prerogative, lest he wish for his soul to be painfully devoured by Life Fibers, monitoring the Original Life Fiber's guardians had exposed something rather interesting. For the briefest of moments during the ritual, when the current matriarch of the family willingly surrendered her body and soul to the creature, the eldritch being's impervious defenses faltered. It only lasted a few seconds - the length of time necessary for the Original Life Fiber to devour its latest meal - but that was more than enough to grant him the opportunity needed to see his plans come to fruition.

It was unfortunate that his ambitions required an innocent woman having her body and soul ripped apart and devoured by the Original Life Fiber.

With a single usage of Shunpo he crossed the imposing threshold, careful to refrain from touching the writhing mass of Life Fibers. His heart pounding rapidly in his chest as he stood in the air directly above the Original Life Fiber, its burnt crimson coloration returning to a comparably normal orange-red, Aizen didn't hesitate before cutting through a small tendril of the eldritch creature with his zanpakuto. Quickly grabbing the severed threads before they could rejoin the Original Life Fiber, the specifically invented glove briefly preventing the alien fibers from devouring his spiritual energy, Aizen turned around and used a second application of Shunpo to reappear back outside the sanctum.

"Amazing..."

Aizen refrained from speaking any louder than a whisper as he carefully placed the stolen Life Fibers into the small container previously hidden within his shihakusho. Wincing when the glove protecting his hand disintegrated into nothingness, exposing patches of burnt skin, there was a soft hiss of pressurized air as he sealed the specialized reliquary. There was no time to waste. This would only contain the Life Fibers for a few hours. He needed to return to his laboratory in the Seireitei before the Life Fibers ate through the spiritual glass.

Smirking profoundly as he began ascending the stairs, Aizen stiffened when an inhuman roar echoed inside the confines of his mind. Did it know ? Zanpakuto quickly flashing into his hand, several Kido ready to buy him enough time to escape the Kiryuin Manor if needed, he watched as hundreds of Life Fibers wrapped themselves around the doors leading into the sanctum. Preemptively leaping away when the Original Life Fiber's presence once more resonated deeply in his soul, Aizen narrowed his eyes when the alien threads pulled the doors shut with a resounding slam.

"That... went far better than I anticipated."

Despite several complications and variables his plan had been a genuine success. He'd calculated the probability of the Original Life Fiber detecting his presence, forcing him to fight the creature in order to escape. But after experiencing the indirect weight of its unworldly presence, there was not a doubt in his mind how such an encounter would have ended. Even he didn't stand a chance against that eldritch abomination. Illusions and sensory confusion were useless against a creature like the Original Life Fiber.

His glasses shimmering in the flickering light as he silently recast Kyokko, the Bakudo once more hiding his presence from those he wished to avoid, Sosuke Aizen's smirk grew with every echoing step towards the surface. Things were finally starting to work in his favor.

---

...

---

August 6th, 2001

"Sorry about that," Gin Ichimaru shrugged nonchalantly, an amused smile plastered across his face at Ichigo Kurosaki's unexpected return to Sokyoku Hill, "I didn't think you wanted me to interfere, Sosuke. So I let the Ryoka get by."

Aizen smirked at the lackadaisical excuse offered by his subordinate. It would have been simple for someone of his power and experience to prevent any interference until he finished retrieving the Hogyoku hidden within Rukia Kuchiki's soul. Yet he refrained from doing so, allowing Ichigo Kurosaki to assist Renji Abari in rescuing their friend, all for the purpose of personally observing the youth's unique existence.

It wouldn't be wrong to state that an increasing number of his fellow captains viewed Ichigo Kurosaki as nothing more than the latest human to miraculously obtain shinigami powers, an existence that would be tolerated until his usefulness to the Seireitei ended. Yet such a theory was factually incorrect. Since that night sixteen years ago, when his mother fought off Ragyo Kiryuin, Ichigo Kurosaki hadn't possessed either patriarchal shinigami powers or matriarchal Quincy and Hollow abilities. Every feat achieved by the teenager, whether it was the rapidity of his growth to the sudden appearance of an Inner Hollow during his fight against Byakuya Kuchiki, was due to his Life Fibers.

What was the evidence to support his assertion?

One simply needed to note the peculiar appearance of the youth's Bankai - Tensa Zangetsu.

Properly obtaining Bankai requires that a shinigami materialize and subjugate the spirit of their zanpakuto after years of arduous training. This final release almost universally takes on the form of an enormous spiritual construct or a large-scale effect. His Kyoka Suigetsu was no exception. And while there existed a few Bankai that seemed to break this unstated rule to an extent, namely Genryusai Yamamoto's Zanka no Tachi, Ichigo Kurosaki's was inherently different. No records existed within the archives of the Daireishokairo of a shinigami's Bankai transforming into a smaller form while covering their body in an entirely new outfit independent of the normal shihakusho.

Byakuya Kuchiki had been correct, although for the wrong reason, when he declared that Ichigo Kurosaki's Bankai wasn't a 'true' Bankai. For even though the Life Fibers composing the teenager's body remained dormant, at least for the time being, their influence upon his 'shinigami powers' were obvious to those aware of their existence.

"No matter. It's fine."

His glasses shimmered as he uttered the exact words necessary to draw Ichigo Kurosaki and Renji Abari's attention, "When you're cleaning the house, it doesn't make any difference whether there's one piece of dirt or two."

Aizen half-heartedly listened to the whispered conversation between the two shinigami following his purposefully threatening comment. He knew neither of them would allow such a slight to go unpunished considering their attachment to Rukia Kuchiki. They would stand and fight, foregoing the pragmatic solution of using Ichigo Kurosaki's faux Bankai to escape Sokyoku Hill. But perhaps he should credit their intelligence. From their determined expressions and rising spiritual energy, it was clear they realized running away wasn't an option.

One step of Shunpo would be enough to instantly cross Sokyoku Hill on the chance they foolishly attempted to escape or he deigned to take the offensive. From there, it only required a single strike to Renji's already injured left shoulder to deal with the heavily wounded shinigami. The stubborn lieutenant of the Sixth Division might have exceeded his expectations but he wasn't special. It didn't concern him in the slightest whether or not Renji perished protecting Rukia Kuchiki as he vowed to do only a few minutes ago. Ichigo Kurosaki, on the other hand, was a significantly more interesting subject.

It was quite the stroke of luck the teenager's Life Fibers remained strangely dormant. Dealing with an awakened Life Fiber Hybrid would have been complicated even for someone of his strength and intelligence. All but the most powerful Hado and Bakudo would have little to no effect, their spiritual energy devoured by the hybrid's Life Fibers, while Zanjutsu and Hakuda were out of the question. The only conceivable way any shinigami could defeat someone like Ragyo Kiryuin or her Grand Couturier was through powerful techniques, attacks that could vaporize every Life Fiber in their bodies.

Of course, it was prudent nothing survived. Only a few Life Fibers were required for the hybrid to regenerate, adapting and evolving to the technique in the process.

Yet Aizen couldn't help but ruminate on the potential reasons leading to Ichigo Kurosaki's current state of being. The Grand Couturier of Revocs, who Ragyo had symbolically called Nui Harime, had demonstrated distinctly inhuman abilities long before the woman decided to take a more active role in her 'development.'

Perhaps four Life Fiber Hybrids weren't enough to make any accurate predictions.

"Here we go! Zabimaru! Higa Zekko!"

Aizen watched in faint amusement when the pieces of Renji zanpakuto scattered across Sokyoku Hill began glowing with violet spiritual energy, the shattered portions of Zabimaru's Shikai hovering directly over his head. Higa Zekko, was it? How interesting. He hadn't expected the brash and reckless lieutenant to use such a self-damaging technique. Unflinching when the segments simultaneously shot towards the ground in a massive explosion, the captain nevertheless praised Renji's surprising ingenuity. While Higa Zekko was ineffective as a straightforward attack, the smoke and dust released in the aftermath would limit his visibility.

Truthfully, he couldn't see anything more than a foot away from his face.

Yet Renji's strategy immediately faltered against those who had mastered the ability to detect spiritual energy. And while his sight was indeed limited, a smokescreen did not stop him from hearing Ichigo Kurosaki's approaching footsteps.

It was admittedly disappointing he only required a single finger to halt the momentum of the youth's false Bankai. Whether they were dormant or not was irrelevant. He assumed that Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers would have granted him more power than this . But given the teenager's strange nature - from his lack of regeneration to faux human anatomy - perhaps his expectations had been too unrealistic. Smirking amiably as he gently curled his finger around the black weapon, Aizen didn't hesitate before slashing the youth's abdomen.

"Well now... I thought I had succeeded in cutting you completely in half."

Aizen ignored the subsequent spray of blood as Ichigo Kurosaki struggled to remain standing. For just a moment, vanishing faster than it took the signal to reach his brain, there was a flash of sapphire light inside the teenager's body. The truth of the matter was that he never intended to completely bisect Ichigo. That would be an extremely dangerous move. Even if Ichigo Kurosaki were ignorant of his unique existence, there was the distinct possibility cutting him in half would be enough of an incentive for his Life Fibers to awaken.

And dealing with a Life Fiber Hybrid in the middle of the Seireitei would be quite detrimental to his plans.

"But I guess I didn't strike deep enough..."

Softly releasing his grip upon the artificial Bankai, the bespectacled captain didn't bother waiting for Ichigo Kurosaki to collapse to the ground before using Shunpo to instantly cover dozens of meters. Rivulets of blood dripping down the length of his zanpakuto as he severed Renji's left shoulder nearly to the bone, the stubborn lieutenant's eyes quivering in barely expressible anguish before he finally fell unconscious, Aizen subtly smirked at the accuracy of his earlier assumption.

It had only required one strike to the lieutenant's shoulder.

His footsteps deliberately paced and methodical as he slowly approached the only remaining obstacle in his path, Aizen paid no attention to the terrified expression in Rukia Kuchiki's eyes, "Come now. Stand up, Rukia Kuchiki."

Grabbing the collar around her neck when she demonstrated the inability to follow his orders, Aizen effortlessly hauled Rukia onto her feet before offhandedly commenting, "Hmm? I see... my spiritual pressure has caused your body to go limp."

The captain's amiable smile was momentarily replaced by a perplexed expression, which vanished as quickly as it arrived, when Rukia Kuchiki's attention flickered toward something over his shoulder. Now this was interesting. Despite decades of study and preparation, he still underestimated the potency of Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers. Even dormant they granted him the inhuman strength to remain conscious and fully aware of his surroundings. But then again, the threads inside a hybrid were vastly different from those woven in every piece of Revocs clothing. So such surprises were to be expected.

This was, after all, still the first time he'd been able to personally observe a Life Fiber Hybrid. And it was far from a disappointment.

"Poor doomed thing . Is he actually still conscious? Your stamina is amazing but your spine is barely connected to your body," Aizen smirked condescendingly while slowly sheathing his zanpakuto, "You should lay still. At any rate, you have each served your purpose. Your job in all this is done now."

---

...

---

September 9th, 1985

Kaname Tousen didn't know what to expect as he stepped through the Senkaimon.

The heavy rainfall accompanying their arrival to the World of the Living felt almost poetic to the self-proclaimed follower of justice, a noticeable contrast to the serene evening in the Seireitei. Yet the inclement and worsening weather was unimportant, secondary in terms of both severity and concern to his growing confusion. For despite his best efforts to keep an open mind to new possibility, to avoid falling prey to the same arrogance befalling the rest of his fellow shinigami, he could not understand the suddenness of their departure from the Soul Society.

"Captain Aizen, what is this place?"

Thunder echoed softly over the horizon as Tousen respectfully addressed the only other person standing on the roof. Frowning at the strange construction of the complex, his spiritual energy allowing him to 'see' the architecture of the surrounding buildings and central structure, he couldn't recall any of their previous experiments taking place near this location. At first glance the area seemed relatively normal, albeit possessing a spiritual presence that felt enigmatically nostalgic, Tousen stiffened at the unnatural stillness in the air.

It was... disconcerting.

Rain dripped from the hood of Aizen's spiritual concealing cloak as he walked forward, his attention focused on something in the distance, "Revocs Headquarters. Or rather the future headquarters of their global conglomerate."

"A textile company?"

The blind captain didn't care for most events concerning the World of the Living aside from his required duties. Yet he was begrudgingly aware of the company's popularity thanks to the lieutenant of the Tenth Division. The woman's tendency to purchase dozens of unnecessary outfits during her rare assignments away from the Seireitei, which usually consisted of dealing with a particularly vicious Hollow, was legendary. But such unprofessional behavior wouldn't bother him if Rangiku Matsumoto didn't flaunt her new clothes in his division's barracks, barraging Hisagi with pointless questions about her beauty.

Revocs was simply the brand she bought during her last mission seven months ago.

His blind eyes narrowing in the general direction of the Revocs headquarters when a dull thump echoed in the distance, " This is where our sensors detected them?"

"Interesting, isn't it?"

Aizen smirked at the question as he stood upon the edge of the roof, the rapidly shifting wind causing his cloak to rustle, "Less than an hour ago Masaki Kurosaki and Isshin Shiba left Karakura Town without delay, rushing toward Revocs headquarters at frightening speed. What could have caused such changes in their behavior? I was aware of their friendship with Ragyo Kiryuin yet their actions precluded any sort of benevolent intentions. Such a development had to be seen with my own eyes."

A series of progressively heavier pulses of spiritual energy, possessing the same alien consistency and presence as the surrounding complex, drew the blind shinigami's attention even before Aizen finished speaking. Quirking an eyebrow at the mention of Ragyo Kiryuin - a woman who never came up in their plans yet seemed to have garnered his superior's vested interest - he stared off into the distance, "I was not aware of Isshin Shiba's relation with -"

The rest of Tousen's inquiry went unsaid when a massive explosion of spiritual energy erupted from the top floor of the central building.

"What the... this power is..."

As Tousen staggered when shards of chaotic spiritual energy crashed into the surrounding buildings, filling the air with an unnatural static that caused chill to race down his spine, the other captain's attention never wavered. Aizen was enraptured, enthralled, by the unexpected scene unfolding before his eyes. To think they had come to Revocs under the assumption there was nothing important to observe, a false alarm that would waste a few hours of their time. But watching this made the unplanned trip worthwhile.

He never expected something as magnificent as this to occur!

Masaki Kurosaki nearly screamed her throat raw as she furiously chased Ragyo Kiryuin into the raging storm. Drawing back the phantasmal string of her spiritual weapon upon taking her first step into the pouring rain, the normal cheerful woman's expression was twisted in absolute hatred as she fired a barrage of Heilig Pfeil with all the power at her disposal. Eyes narrowing when the other woman nimbly dodged her arrows, the arrogant smirk on her face never faltering, Masaki prepared to launch another barrage only to suddenly lurch forward as intense pain radiated from the very core of her soul.

Blood and spittle spewed from between clenched teeth when Masaki collapsed onto her knees, the spiritual bow dissipating into its composite energy. Wiping away the blood oozing from the corner of her mouth, she tightly clenched her hands and shouted as a pair of ethereal angelic wings burst from her shoulder blades, multicolored ribbons shifting gently in the feathery constructs.

"Quincy: Letzt Stil!"

The massive and sudden eruption of spiritual energy accompanying her transformation vaporized the surrounding landscape, utterly infuriating Ragyo in the process. But that was the least of her concerns. Surprised by the change in the other woman's appearance, the power rolling off Masaki incomprehensible, she failed to notice the first barrage of Heilig Pfeil as they pierced through the smoke. Reflexively flinching when the projectiles shattered against her skin, leaving no trace of damage in their wake, Ragyo's smugness vanished when the next arrow carved a thin gash across her cheek.

How did she...

Fingers clenched tightly around the Needle Blade as the wound stitched shut, the rainbow light of her Life Fibers quickly vanishing, Ragyo snarled at the other woman's audacity and arrogance. Masaki dared try and tarnish her flawless skin? Maroon eyes narrowed in growing fury as she danced through the subsequent storm of Heilig Pfeil, the hardened Life Fiber weapon in her hand wantonly deflecting the projectiles into the surrounding buildings without care, the Kiryuin matriarch angrily curled her free hand into a fist and sneered.

"Such an affreux form!"

Ragyo smirked as she punched Masaki squarely in the jaw before the woman could register she'd even moved, the powerful blow enough to dispel the surrounding storm. Her elation quickly turn to confusion, however, when she realized the Quincy hadn't budged despite the strength of her attack. Eyes widening at the faint pattern spreading across Masaki's cheek from the point of impact, she gagged and then growled when the other woman fired an arrow clear through her stomach.

"Blut Vene..."

Holding her stomach as the wound rapidly knitted back together, Ragyo snarled at Masaki, "What?"

Another arrow passed through her shoulder, nearly taking her left arm off in the process, before the Kiryuin matriarch regained her composure. Hastily deflecting the rest of Masaki's assault with the Needle Blade, rainbow light arcing from the edge of the hardened Life Fiber weapon, she gasped wetly when a Heilig Pfeil lodged itself in her throat. Staggering away from the Quincy, blood seeped down the front of Ragyo's once white dress for several seconds before she angrily shattered the projectile between her fingers. Hunched forward as the wound on her neck sealed shut and her raiment returned to its proper coloration, Ragyo clenched her teeth at the other woman's infuriating expression.

"It's a defensive technique," Masaki answered, her normally blue-white bow shimmering with several exotic colors, before leveling the weapon at Ragyo's forehead. As the light from her wings brightened and overwhelmed the rainbow undertone of the Kiryuin matriarch's silver hair, she pulled back the string of her bow and sneered, "Licht Regen!"

Hundreds... thousands... of Heilig Pfeil exploded from Masaki's bow, lighting up the stormy skies in a vibrant display of colors. Maroon eyes narrowed in rising fury at the continuous embarrassment, Ragyo screamed incoherently as her arm blurred into motion, deflecting each and every arrow with the Needle Blade before they could touch her body. She would not suffer such mockery for another second! Heels clacking against the air when she darted forward, her body flickering as she dodged most of the projectiles while regenerating from the rest, Ragyo prepared to stab the Needle Blade through Masaki's beating heart only to stiffen upon noticing the woman was gone .

Then she felt her right arm - and the Needle Blade - falling towards the ground hundreds of feet below.

"I-Impossible!"

The blood gushing from her stump of an arm abruptly ceased, flowing back into her body as the missing limb regenerated in a flash of rainbow light. Her mouth slightly agape when she looked over her shoulder and found Masaki standing only a few feet away, the Kiryuin matriarch felt the unfamiliar sensation of fear in her heart. This couldn't be happening! She was one of the Original Life Fiber's prophets! Chosen to lead humanity towards their ultimate fate as sustenance for Life Fibers! So why was -

A single arrow, innocuous in appearance, shot forth from Masaki's bow without any warning. Thick streams of blood oozing from her mouth when the momentum from the projectile carried her forward, slamming her against the façade of her headquarters hard enough to leave her temporarily dazed, Ragyo stiffened when the arrow vanished yet she still felt blood oozing down her back. Running a hand against the slowly regenerating wound, her finger tracing the ugly star-shaped scar marring her flawless skin, an immense amount of rainbow spiritual energy exploded from the Kiryuin matriarch right before she vanished in burst of speed.

"How dare you!"

Ragyo felt no catharsis when she smashed her fist into Masaki's nose, the woman's vaunted 'defense' crumpling under her superior strength. She no longer cared that the woman stole Isshin's heart, forcing her into a marriage with a pathetic man who couldn't even create the basic stitching for a Kamui! Souichiro was a second-rate hack that could never compare to the skill possessed by the only man she would ever love! Punching the Quincy repeatedly in the face, droplets of blood splashing against her skin with every blow, she was determined to make Masaki suffer for daring to scar her flawless body!

But simply beating Masaki to death wouldn't be good enough.

"A worthless... insignificant... ant !"

She purposely ignored the second arrow when it fired from one of Masaki's outstretched wings, lodging itself in her left shoulder and leaving behind a slightly smaller scar. Whatever technique the Quincy was using to bypass her regeneration seemed to require a lot of energy, leaving the other woman increasingly exhausted. So even when a third Heilig Pfeil stabbed into the small of her back in a shower of blood, Ragyo did not stop attempting to strangle the other woman, her manicured fingers squeezing ever-so-roughly around Masaki's throat.

"You... human... bitch !"

Rage consumed the Kiryuin matriarch as she tightened her grip around Masaki's throat. Laughing sadistically at the torturous expression on the other woman's face as she struggled to breathe, her mouth open in a breathless scream despite the ugly pattern flashing across her throat, Ragyo flinched when another two Heilig Pfeil burst from Masaki's wings and into her back. But even with the rampant pain coursing through her body, causing the multicolored undertone of her silver hair to brighten magnificently, she did not relent in her efforts to kill the other woman.

Her teeth clenched in blinding fury, unadulterated hatred for the woman bubbling within the depths of her soul, Ragyo noticed only a moment too late Masaki's arm swinging upward before the reformed spiritual bow smashed into her nose.

Thick streams of blood gushed from her broken nose as Ragyo staggered backwards, involuntarily releasing Masaki in the process. Gasping deeply as she hunched forward, one hand pressed firmly against her face, the Kiryuin matriarch's eyes widened in shock when her opponent rushed forward and punched her.

Hard .

Blood and spittle flew from between Ragyo's lips at the strength behind the blow. Her head snapping backwards from the strike hard enough to snap a normal human's neck, she had barely enough time to notice the different pattern across Masaki's hand before a second punch shattered her jaw. Using her considerable speed to avoid the other woman's third strike, the blood coating the front of her face vanishing alongside her wounds, Ragyo nimbly avoided the next series of blows before getting caught off guard when Masaki changed tactics.

So determined was she to break the other woman's neck, to tear her apart limb from limb, that Ragyo never noticed Masaki's weapon vanish until it was too late. And then she felt the pair of hands gripping the back of her neck, ripping into her glorious silver locks - the proof of her status as the Original Life Fiber's prophet, the one thing she still shared with Isshin even after Masaki stole him from her. She screamed when Masaki pulled, the other woman's expression twisted with nearly as much anger as her own, before attempting to return the favor by stabbing her hand through her former friend's heart.

Gasping when she missed, her fingers passing through the afterimage left behind by Masaki's Hirenkyaku, Ragyo screamed when two more Heilig Pfeil pierced her back, sending her careening down to the ground below in a violent display of rainbow spiritual energy.

"This... can't... be..."

The Kiryuin's matriarch's raiment was dirtied, rips and tears blemishing the fabric as she struggled onto her feet. This was a nightmare ! Holding a shaking hand to her face, the blood a sharp contrast to her normally pale skin, Ragyo's anger was replaced by building terror at the prospect that she might actually die . Her breathing coming out in shallow pants as the rain pelted the seven fresh scars on her back, her scalp still tingling from its recent abuse, she abruptly stiffened when Masaki suddenly appeared in a flash of speed. Fearfully staring at the woman when she dismissed her bow, Ragyo had only enough time to register the patterns spreading up both of Masaki's arms before she screamed angrily and began punching her with every ounce of power at her disposal.

On the far side of the Revocs compound Sosuke Aizen didn't react when an errant gust of wind, kicked up by Ragyo Kiryuin's crash to the ground, knocked off his hood, threatening to expose their presence. The captain of the Fifth Division half-heartedly noted Kaname's perfectly understandable reaction to the inhuman spiritual energy of the woman currently on the defensive. Such trivial matters didn't register in the face of much more pressing matter. Ragyo Kiryuin - a Life Fiber Hybrid - was losing against a Quincy. The form was similar to the Quincy technique Letzt Stil but its power was on a completely different level compared to her fight against White eight years earlier.

It was an impossible scenario. And yet...

"I now understand your interest in Ragyo Kiryuin."

Kaname's voice might have been steady yet there was no mistaking the underlying fear. While the battle might be advancing in a specific direction the monstrous potency of Ragyo's spiritual energy was staggering. It felt completely inhuman, different from anything he'd ever encountered. The woman might be losing against Masaki Kurosaki yet her power hadn't decreased more than normal. The current situation was the result of psychological warfare and inexperience, a terrifying mixture that allowed her opponent to hold the advantage. But there was something else that unnerved the normally stoic captain, an underlying familiarity to Ragyo Kiryuin's eldritch presence.

Yet most disturbing, or perhaps concerning, was the possibility of the woman's attention somehow bypassing the protection afforded by their spiritual cloaks.

"The battle unfolding has nothing to do with us, Kaname."

A flash of lightning arced across the heavens as Aizen ran a hand through his hair, water falling onto the roof as he replaced the hood a moment later. It was only thanks to decades of research, using what little scraps of Life Fibers he'd been able to acquire, that he sensed the subtle nuances. Spreading throughout the extensive compound at a growing rate that could only be called exponential, the hundreds of men and women employed by Revocs were having their memories devoured by the trace Life Fibers in their clothing. Every single thought pertaining to the battle between Ragyo Kiryuin and Masaki Kurosaki was being systematically erased.

Even those who lost their lives as a result of the battle would soon be forgotten.

"Do not forget why we are here, Kaname. Our purpose was determining why Masaki Kurosaki and Isshin Shiba left Karakura Town," the bespectacled shinigami's tone possessed his standard amiable and patient tone as he continued observing the multicolored smoke rising in the distance. His expression tightening into a mild frown when Masaki refused to deliver the finishing blow to Ragyo Kiryuin, her spiritual energy decreasing despite her advantage over the fallen matriarch, Aizen briefly paused before adding, "And now that we've learned why they departed Karakura Town there is no longer any reason for our presence."

"Such a being cannot be allowed to exist."

Kaname's fingers tightly gripped the hilt of Suzumushi as his tone hardened, "Justice demands the eradication of inhuman monsters. Yet we cannot inform the Captain Commander of our discovery without earning his suspicion. That leaves us with but one option - we must strike down Ragyo Kiryuin where she stands, killing her when she's at her weakest. It is the only way to ensure she does not pose any threat to our plans."

"At her weakest, you say?"

Aizen smirked at the fervent display of loyalty from his subordinate, "One can easily sense that Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual energy is currently less than my own. In a normal scenario it would be quite the advantage. Yet I have not given any weight to the notion. Why, you ask? The answer is because her defeat came not from a difference in strength, instead it was the result of extraneous circumstances. The combination of inexperience in properly utilizing her power alongside the dramatic shattering of her worldview, the result of Masaki Kurosaki damaging her body, made Ragyo Kiryuin overly susceptible. Yet there is no such opening for us. Not even Kyoka Suigetsu's illusions would grant us the slightest chance of victory if we attempted to interfere."

"There is also the fact that drawing Ragyo Kiryuin's attention will undoubtedly jeopardize our plans," Aizen added the last statement halfheartedly, a jovial smile on his face while he turned away from the finished battle. Of course, he purposely didn't tell Kaname the other reason why he decided not to strike the woman down despite his deep-seated desire. Ragyo Kiryuin was a being composed of Life Fibers. That much was obvious from first principles. Attempting to touch the woman, even with one's zanpakuto, would immediately cause her Life Fibers, which were woven directly from the Original Life Fiber, to devour their spiritual energy.

It would take a shinigami possessing massive amounts of spiritual energy to survive the process long enough to escape.

"Very well..."

The blind shinigami's measured tone intrigued Aizen yet he refrained from continuing the pointless argument pertaining to Ragyo Kiryuin. His face illuminated by an arc of lightning as he turned around, he stabbed Suzumushi into the air before turning his wrist counterclockwise. As the Senkaimon rapidly formed, the wooden doors sliding apart and exposing the dimensional gateway within, he stared contemplatively at the ground, "Still... I find it unlikely such a beast wouldn't take an interest in our affairs. We should adjust our plans in case Ragyo Kiryuin decides to intervene in the future."

Aizen smirked in amusement at the comment as Kaname walked through the Senkaimon, his body disappearing into the light. Moving to follow his subordinate, the shinigami's eyes widened when something completely unexpected prickled against his mind.

Droplets of water jumped from his cloak as he spun around, his attention focused on the familiar presence leaving Revocs headquarters. It made perfect sense why Isshin Shiba hadn't attempted to fight Ragyo Kiryuin. In his current state he was nothing more than an average human due to the actions of White.

Yet that was not what drew his attention.

He could sense the unique spiritual energy radiating from the two small bundles held protectively in the man's arms. This would force the acceleration of his plans. After the failure to induce hybridization in her own daughters, born after her conversion by the Original Life Fiber, Aizen assumed it was impossible to create an artificial Life Fiber Hybrid. But the two infants were physical proof that he was wrong. And while one child was undoubtedly Ragyo's, perhaps a daughter that escaped the notice of his admittedly insufficient surveillance of the company, it was the other that garnered his full attention.

Ragyo Kiryuin transformed Isshin Shiba and Masaki Kurosaki's son into a Life Fiber Hybrid.

"This is quite the unexpected development."

Aizen ruminated on the new development as he stepped through the Senkaimon. It required adjusting several variables now that Ichigo Kurosaki was a Life Fiber Hybrid. He couldn't allow the opportunity to study an artificial hybrid slip through his fingers. Yet something still troubled the normally unfettered shinigami. If Ragyo Kiryuin determined the method for properly inducing hybridization in humans, than what other experiments was she secretly conducting in the name of the Original Life Fiber?

---

...

---

June 23rd, 1982

Sosuke Aizen stared at the monitor while the faint humming of electronics filled the laboratory, basking the darkened room in a blue-white glow.

Five years ago the screen would have displayed nothing but information relevant to ongoing experiments, data pertaining to thousands of experiments and tests ranging from granting Hollows the ability to hide their spiritual presence to inducing artificial Arrancar evolution. Files on every experiment conducted over the last hundred years were safely secured in his laboratory. Yet the majority of his recent work had been focused on something different - recreating the experiment symbolically called White.' Or at least that was the name Kaname designated the sample.

In the aftermath of its defeat and subsequent self-destruction in Naruki City, when it purposely chose a Quincy for Soul Infiltration instead of a shinigami, he had spent days searching for an explanation behind the Hollow's reaction. It was a puzzle with an interesting solution, one that could change the course of his future research. And the simplest approach to this conundrum was recreating White from scratch.

But progress on that front had proven more difficult than initially anticipated.

Ignoring the intricacies necessary to perfectly replicate its original personality, another decade of research was required at the very minimum to reconstruct the sample's physical body and spiritual essence. White might have been created using the souls of dead shinigami as templates, hence giving it an inner 'whiteness,' but reconstructing the being that fought with Isshin Shiba was a most daunting task. Yet that challenge was currently the furthest thing from his mind. Although his ongoing fascination with the sample's decision to target Masaki Kurosaki, an Echt Quincy and its complete opposite, for hollowfication hadn't waned, at the moment Aizen was focused on something with far greater significance.

With a soft press of his finger the video on the screen shifted to another of the thirty-six cameras surrounding the Kiryuin Manor at strategic locations. At times Aizen wished he could install surveillance equipment within the manor. The benefits certainly outnumbered any possible disadvantages. But he was aware, perhaps better than anyone else, that such pursuits were naïve daydreams hinging upon an optimistic view of reality.

Things involving Life Fibers were never simple.

The Original Life Fiber had grown increasingly active in the decades following his appropriation of its Life Fibers, choosing to remain in whatever passed as 'awareness' in the years between sacrificial pilgrimages from the Kiryuin matriarchs. But whether his actions more than a century ago bore responsibility was irrelevant at this point. Over the last three cycles he had noticed evolutions the creature's defenses, changes perfect for detecting and eliminating someone attempting to conceal their presence. And to make matters more complicated the wards were now woven throughout the entire manor, making it impossible for any spiritual being to enter the premises.

For the fifth time that hour Sosuke Aizen lamented the haste in which Kisuke Urahara was exiled from the Seireitei.

It was only after years of research that he determined the man's groundbreaking spiritual-concealing Gigai was the only solution for bypassing the Original Life Fiber's wards. Normal artificial bodies could not withstand the defenses encompassing the Kiryuin Manor, leading to death within seconds of entering the property. But if a shinigami used a Gigai designed to hide both their spiritual energy and presence, transforming them into a 'human' in the process, they could enter the catacombs without getting devoured.

Theoretically, of course...

He first needed to track down Kisuke Urahara before putting such a theory to the test.

Aizen narrowed his eyes, annoyance visible alongside mild exhaustion, when the screen flickered before switching from the front gate to an outcropping on the southern corner of the property. Installing surveillance equipment and spiritual sensors within the Kiryuin Manor might be impossible but everything had loopholes, even the Original Life Fiber's seemingly impenetrable defenses. It didn't matter if he couldn't enter the manor. There were already workarounds in place, albeit inferior to what he originally planned. The cameras installed at strategic locations around the property were programmed to exclusively detect Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual energy, allowing him to observe her external movements.

Yet until recently his interest in Ragyo Kiryuin had been halfhearted, nonexistent in favor of more important experiments. While important in the long run, it would have been a waste of time when the woman hadn't displayed any of the necessary characteristics to warrant more prudent observations.

Typing rapidly into the keyboard as he manually changed to a different camera feed, the current viewpoint offering little benefit, Aizen's glare tightened when a pulse of multicolored light briefly flickered through the darkness.

He had been teaching calligraphy at Shin'o Academy when the spiritual sensors scattered around his laboratory first noticed an artificial increase in the ambient luminosity. On its own that would normally have not warranted a warning. Several experiments could easily be the source of the change in brightness. But when subsequent pulses were registered, each with identical coloration and duration, the room was hermetically immediately sealed to prevent anything from leaving. At the same time an untraceable signal was sent to a small device in his captain's chambers. Nobody, not even Gin or Kaname, could unravel the Bakudo sealing the room until he dealt with the situation.

However his duties as captain of the Fifth Division had prevented him from returning to his personal chambers until early the next morning, nearly twenty-four hours after the original detection.

It had required an hour of preparation before he walked out of the Fifth Division barracks, strolling past several shinigami without raising suspicion. Using Kyoka Suigetsu's power he had left behind an illusionary clone, albeit one developing a fever. Constant manipulation of Momo's emotions made it all but certain she would leave his illusion in peace, delegating his normal duties to both herself and the rest of the division until 'he' recovered. But Aizen felt neither guilt nor remorse for warping Momo Hinamori's mind. It had been a necessary sacrifice to ensure success.

Hours of uninterrupted observations, unburdened by a headstrong and independent lieutenant, were required if he wished to counter any potentially dangerous problems.

"How strange." Aizen quietly ruminated while rubbing his chin, the screen displaying the back of the Kiryuin Manor completely barren of life. This was turning out to be anything but what he expected. An event possessing such far-reaching consequences should have already made itself apparent, its effects upon the surrounding landscape obvious. Yet there hadn't been any sign of Ragyo Kiryuin during his observations. While an interesting and notable departure from her usual behavior, it was not enough to draw any conclusions.

It was immensely frustrating that, despite his infallible intuition and vast intellect, all of the evidence was purely circumstantial .

Despite years of experiments on the sample of Life Fibers he severed from the Original Life Fiber, which was substantially less than what he needed, the alien threads still possessed a seemingly infinite number of secrets. Their origins and overarching goals remained obscured, hidden behind the veil of their eldritch nature. How, for example, did that thing intend to devour humanity? The logistics and resources required to spread billions of Life Fibers around the world was staggering. But more importantly why did the Original Life Fiber always summon the Kiryuin matriarch only to absorb both her body and soul?

There were answers to those questions but Aizen hoped he was wrong or, at the very least, his information pointed to an erroneous conclusion.

Because being wrong meant he still had time .

If he truly was mistaken about the situation unfolding in the World of the Living than all of his precautionary measures were unnecessary. This would simply be an aberration, nothing more than an anomaly useful for improving future predictions and calculations. But Aizen did not get to his current position, eliminating both enemy and ally alike, by being naïve nor foolhardy. He needed absolute certainty on what exactly happened, if anything did happen, to Ragyo Kiryuin during those first twenty-four hours before making assumptions. Perhaps the Original Life Fiber devoured the woman like her predecessors, inadvertently eliminating its final guardian and bringing the Kiryuin family to extinction.

But if it hadn't...

Aizen discarded that unsubstantiated notion from his thoughts. It was detrimental to foolishly assume Ragyo Kiryuin was unique, different from her predecessors, without the slightest hint of conclusive evidence. Tirelessly resuming his observations as the night slowly changed into morning, the tense silence in the room constantly interrupted by the light clicking of the keyboard, he stiffened when the screen shifted to another camera feed.

Something had changed.

His pulse quickening as he leaned forward in growing interest, the electronic glow from the computer reflecting brightly off his glasses, Aizen grimaced in bitter distaste when Ragyo Kiryuin emerged from the manor. It was obvious what happened to the woman during those initial twenty-four hours. From her resplendent silver hair, the rainbow undertone shining in the early dawn, to the unnatural beauty flauntingly displayed with every sauntering step onto the veranda, the evidence was clear.

Against overwhelming odds the Original Life Fiber had chosen Ragyo Kiryuin as its puppet.

"What makes Ragyo Kiryuin different?"

That was a question the captain could not answer. There were several possible reasons why the Original Life Fiber chose Ragyo Kiryuin above her predecessors but as he watched the newly transformed woman stare forlornly at Tokyo Bay in the distance, the cameras recording every subconscious twitch and pulse of her spiritual energy, Aizen resisted the growing urge to frown. It didn't fit the pattern. He had spent the majority of the last century extensively documenting the lives of the previous six matriarchs from their childhoods to the exact moment they were summoned by the Original Life Fiber.

Whatever method that thing used to convoke the matriarchs never occurred until after they had children... always daughters.

Yet Ragyo Kiryuin, the one chosen to be its puppet, wasn't even married.

Softly tapping a finger against the desk as he watched Ragyo Kiryuin walk back into the manor, her steps measured and exact, Aizen ignored the multicolored light radiating from the opposite side of the room and frowned, "This is quite the problem."

---

...

---

November 1st, 2001

"What's wrong, Aizen? It is my imagination or are you getting slower? Perhaps you've reached your limit."

Aizen's breathing was slightly labored as he hunched forward, his one pristine uniform ripped and heavily burnt. Sweeping a hand through his brown hair, the single bang falling back into place nearly instantaneously, he chuckled airily, "Well now that I think about it, you may be right about my speed. I may have actually reached my limit as a shinigami."

A tense silence enveloped the rubble-strewn streets of the fake Karakura Town as the traitorous captain's posture slowly straightened, "But then again, the limits of a shinigami aren't something you have to worry about, Isshin Kurosaki."

Isshin Kurosaki, his features marred by wounds sustained over the last few minutes, twitched at the comment, "What's that supposed to mean?"

"Do you really need to ask such a ridiculous question? In any case, please accept my sincerest appreciations," Aizen politely smirked while casually stabbing Kyoka Suigetsu through the rubble at his feet, "By forcing our battle away from both Gin and Ichigo Kurosaki, you've granted me the rare opportunity to talk with you on a rather sensitive matter. A subject, I feel, you're quite familiar with."

Isshin ignored the thin stream of blood slowly oozing down his cheek, the result of consciously suppressing his regeneration, and stared incredulously at the former captain, "Hold the phone... you want to talk? What's with the sudden change of heart?"

"I first realized something strange when I avoided your earlier attack and countered with Raikoho."

It took an insignificant amount of self-control to keep his tone measured and voice stoic, a stark departure from the interest quickly growing within his mind. Extending a hand toward Isshin Kurosaki, the older-looking man tensing imperceptibly at the gesture, Aizen closed his eyes before smoothly continuing, "With my skill and expertise, an incantation-less Hado of that level should have injured all but the strongest of captains. Yet you escaped the technique without taking any damage, an improbable scenario but not impossible. After all, your skills as the former captain of the Tenth Division are well known throughout the Seireitei. It's quite possible you evaded my Raikoho using Shunpo, perhaps an original interpretation of Utsusemi."

"So I'm faster than you thought. Big deal," Isshin scoffed before shifting into a Kendo stance, "Now is there a point to this or are you going to keep talking nonsense, Aizen?"

"Nonsense?"

Aizen's disarmingly pleasant smirk widened at Isshin Kurosaki's absurd declaration. The sheer ridiculousness of the man's continuing denial was actually quite amusing. However he didn't have any time to waste on pointless conversation. Pointing a finger at the tachi gripped tightly in Isshin's hands as a cloud passed in front of the sun, temporarily enveloping the city in twilight, the shinigami's eyes narrowed, "Perhaps on its own that would be considered, in your words, nonsense. But I find your lack of cooperation rather disconcerting, Isshin Kurosaki. There is no need to continue this charade. All my suspicions were laid to rest the first time Kyoka Suigetsu parried your weapon."

"My weapon, huh?"

An aura of light blue spiritual energy wafted from Isshin's shihakusho, "That's a funny way to talk about Engetsu."

"Do you expect me to believe that blade is a zanpakuto?"

The nearly imperceptible change in Isshin Kurosaki's spiritual energy alleviated the last of Aizen's doubts. It appeared he finally managed to break through the man's mental barriers, obtaining definitive proof of the answer he suspected. Pulling Kyoka Suigetsu out of the ground before sheathing the zanpakuto in one swift motion, he returned his attention to Isshin and politely commented, "It might resemble Engetsu's sealed state but that sword is simply a facsimile. While quite dangerous in the hands of a being like yourself, it's certainly not a zanpakuto."

"Which leads to a very interesting question..."

Aizen's tone didn't falter despite the eldritch spiritual energy starting to permeate the surrounding landscape, "When were you transformed into a Life Fiber Hybrid? Was it, perhaps, the night Ragyo Kiryuin was summoned to the Original Life Fiber's sanctum?"

Mockingly polite clapping shattered the subsequent silence before Aizen calmly added, "There's no reason to be alarmed, Isshin Kurosaki. Despite observing Karakura Town for over a decade, I was unaware of your altered physiology until only a few minutes ago. Your acting skills were rather impressive. I never questioned your status as an exiled shinigami. But then again, you never displayed any of Ragyo Kiryuin's more prominent characteristics."

The wind blowing through the streets abated as Isshin relaxed his shoulders, "What can I say? Silver really isn't a good look for me."

"I see. Well then, let me ask you another question..."

Aizen was briefly silhouetted in shadow when an explosion of black spiritual energy erupted skyward in the distance, "Is Ichigo aware of the truth?"

Isshin ignored the sinking feeling in his gut, "What are you talking about?"

"That he possesses neither shinigami nor Hollow powers," Aizen found Isshin Kurosaki's reaction quite interesting but the traitorous shinigami was acutely aware he was approaching a dangerous precipice. Knowing any further attempts at provoking someone identical to Ragyo Kiryuin was inherently risky, he stealthily adjusted his tone, "I've known of his altered heritage for quite some time. Ichigo's miraculous abilities are derived from the Life Fibers composing his body, are they not?"

"... Lucky guess."

The former shinigami shrugged nonchalantly, his bluster replaced with mild consternation. There really wasn't a point in continuing to play stupid if Aizen already knew about Ragyo and the Original Life Fiber. Frowning as his attention shifted to the pulsating Hogenyoku embedded in Aizen's sternum, the cross-like lines extending outwards from the point of fusion shimmering with a disturbing purple light, Isshin relaxed his guard and grumbled, "You've got some serious guts, Aizen. I'm surprised you're not dead."

Aizen's expression twitched when the Hogenyoku suddenly dimmed, "Fusing with the Hogenyoku was a necessary gamble."

"Is that right?" Isshin scoffed at the answer. He had to give Aizen credit. The man had one hell of a poker face, "I'll admit I didn't see this coming. But if you're so smart, you already know I can easily tear that thing out of your chest."

"Such a thought has crossed my mind," Aizen wasn't perturbed by Isshin Kurosaki's subtle threat. While it was true the man could easily accomplish such a feat, especially if he were to remove the veil concealing his eldritch spiritual energy, the odds of that occurring were nearly astronomical, "However, our goals completely align. Your actions over the course of the last twenty years imply you harbor no loyalty to the Original Life Fiber. Therefore, the question one should ask is why you haven't tried destroying that being. The obvious answer would be Ragyo Kiryuin. Her power is more than enough to deter any straightforward assaults. But that's not the true reason, is it? You haven't attempted to destroy the Original Life Fiber because you cannot. Whatever method that thing used to transform both you and Ragyo Kiryuin into Life Fiber Hybrids implanted a subconscious directive into your mind that prevents you from actively rebelling. Am I correct?"

Isshin rubbed the back of his neck, "I never did grow out of my rebellious teenage years."

"You of all people should understand why I implanted the Hogenyoku within my body," Aizen's eyes narrowed fractionally at Isshin, "It's the only way to prevent the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet before it can begin."

"By killing the Soul King, right?" Isshin needed to thank Kisuke whenever the enigmatic bastard decided to show his face. The shopkeeper had explained everything they knew about Aizen's plan to forge an Ouken and destroy the Soul King, the 'linchpin of existence,' which meant the Original Life Fiber's mental influence was minimized. Two decades of dealing with that thing preventing him from telling anyone about its plans for humanity meant he was really good at discovering loopholes. Damn it. Now he needed to also thank Aizen . With an exaggerated sigh, Isshin scratched his cheek and grumbled, "You know... that's a really stupid plan."

That was not the response Aizen expected, "Oh?"

Isshin stared at the explosions of spiritual energy in the distance before begrudgingly explaining, "I'm going to guess you spent most of the last one hundred years obsessing over Life Fibers. And it's pretty damn surprising you found out about the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. But there are a few benefits from encountering that thing underneath Ragyo's house."

"I figured as much," Aizen grew increasingly relaxed despite the unexpected development. It appeared they were finally coming to an understanding, "There is only a finite amount of knowledge one can learn through second-hand sources and observations. Experimenting with only a few strands of Life Fibers had limitations, especially when physical contact needs to be kept to an absolute minimum."

"So why fuse with the Hogenyoku?"

Isshin suppressed the venomous disgust in the back of his mind at the darkened sphere embedded firmly in Aizen's sternum, "You must have known the odds of surviving the process were basically zero. Don't tell me the great 'Sosuke Aizen' couldn't think of a better plan."

"The reason I undertook such a dangerous gamble is rather simple," Aizen placed a hand over the Hogyoku, his voice deepening slightly, "By merging my Hogyoku, created from the Original Life Fiber, with Kisuke Urahara's, I recreated a power seen only once in the last hundred millennium. It is a strength that surpasses Life Fibers. You know what I'm referring to, Isshin Kurosaki. No matter their spiritual energy, it should have been impossible for a Quincy to defeat a Life Fiber Hybrid. Yet sixteen years ago Masaki Kurosaki bested Ragyo Kiryuin with contemptible ease."

A grimace stretched across the former shinigami's face at the reminder, "And you're hoping to use that same power?"

"Failure to act before Ragyo Kiryuin finishes consolidating her strength will undoubtedly lead to humanity's annihilation," Aizen found Isshin Kurosaki's obfuscating behavior rather puzzling. The man knew every detail concerning the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet yet refused to divulge any useful information. Perhaps his earlier assessment was inadequate. From the man's ambiguous answers and short responses it seemed the Original Life Fiber's subconscious directives weren't limited to merely physical rebellion.

"You might believe I'm a monster for laying waste to the Gotei 13. After all, the strength possessed by Genryusai Yamamoto's Bankai could theoretically overwhelm the regeneration of a Life Fiber Hybrid like Ragyo Kiryuin. However, my primary objective has always been the destruction of the Soul King. Therefore, that begs the question of why you are forcibly suppressing the Hogyoku."

"Because your plan won't work," Isshin grumbled and stabbed the Life Fiber replica of Engetsu into the ground, "In fact, destroying the Soul King will only make things worse."

"Oh? How so?"

Aizen's normally impassive expression briefly faltered when Isshin Kurosaki's eyes shifted into a familiar shade of maroon, "You're going to make me explain everything, huh? Let's just say defeating the Royal Guard and destroying the Soul King won't change anything in the long run. It'll be a complete waste of your time."

The traitorous shinigami resisted the appreciable urge to frown. It was simple for someone of his intelligence to read between the lines. There was no reason to believe Isshin Kurosaki spoke anything but the truth, which suggested decades of planning and research had been for naught. Countless experiments to further his knowledge, pushing the boundaries between shinigami and Hollow, amounted to little more than a waste of valuable time. But Aizen felt neither annoyance nor despair.

"I see... then perhaps a small change of plans is in order."

Isshin frowned, his eyes returning to their normal coloration, "What are you saying?"

Aizen swept an arm forward, "It's quite simple really. Taking your explanation at face value suggests destroying the Soul King is currently impossible. Likewise, you are incapable of harming the Original Life Fiber. If I understand your logic correctly, the opposite must therefore also be true. But what if I were to cast a guiding light into the future?"

Several long seconds passed before Isshin furrowed his brow, "... I'm listening."

The distant sounds of battle were eerily absent as the traitorous shinigami calmly surmised, "Ichigo Kurosaki's status as an artificial Life Fiber Hybrid means he's not beholden to the Original Life Fiber. There is no eldritch willpower controlling his actions. However, he currently believes he's simply a human who obtained shinigami and Hollow powers through a series of coincidental events. From your expression it appears you've already given this a considerable amount of thought. As long as that notion remains firmly in his consciousness, his Life Fibers will not awaken. But therein lies the answer. If Ichigo Kurosaki believed victory could only be achieved through sacrificing those same powers, there would be nothing stopping his Life Fibers from awakening. Am I wrong?"

Isshin remained silent as the traitorous shinigami finished speaking. Contrary to Aizen's expectations, he never wanted Ichigo involved in the fight against Life Fibers. Figuring out a way to stop Ragyo and permanently destroy the Original Life Fiber was his problem. But he wasn't stupid. Rescuing Ururu might have temporarily brought the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to a screeching halt but that didn't stop Ragyo from continuing to distribute Life Fibers across the world in the form of Revocs clothing. And it was only a matter of time before she turned her attention towards Ichigo.

It was painful even considering the idea but awakening Ichigo's Life Fibers was the only way to prepare his son for whatever Ragyo had planned.

"Alright..."

Pulling his sword out of the ground, a faint multicolored light briefly visible along the length of the weapon, Isshin frowned in bitter disdain as he stopped suppressing the Hogyoku's disgusting presence. Aizen might have been a coldhearted bastard with a body count in the thousands but he had a point. And that pissed him off more than anything else, "But let me give you some friendly advice, Aizen. You do anything to Ichigo and the Hogyoku won't stop me from killing you."

"There's no need for threats, Isshin Kurosaki. After all, we share the same objective," Aizen slowly unsheathed Kyoka Suigetsu as the Hogyoku embedded in his sternum pulsed with a shimmering blue-purple light, "In any case, it appears our conversation is just about finished. For my plan to succeed, I need you to convince Ichigo that sacrificing his powers is the only conceivable method of defeating me. I shall do the rest..."

Aizen's smirk didn't falter when Ichigo Kurosaki abruptly crashed into a nearby building, the explosion prematurely ending their conversation. Deigning not to speak as the teenager parried Gin's Bankai before landing next to his father, an expression of annoyance in his eyes, the traitorous shinigami's eyes narrowed when a mocking voice commented, "That was a very nice move there. Fascinating just how effective sheer luck can be."

Ichigo snorted as he rubbed the corner of his mouth, "You're stupid to think that was luck."

"I-Ichigo?"

"What is it?!"

The annoyed response caught Isshin completely off guard. Tensa Zangestu gripped tightly in his hand as he glared at Gin Ichimaru, the silver haired shinigami smirking broadly as he landed nearby, Ichigo scoffed and added with a small amount of irritation, "Leave me alone! I'm just getting warmed up! I'll defeat him soon! I don't want you to interfere!"

"Sorry about all this, Captain Aizen," Gin Ichimaru held the wakizashi form of Kamishini no Yari loosely between his fingers, "I hope I didn't interrupt your conversation."

"It's alright..."

Aizen smiled as tendrils of white matter emerged from the Hōgyoku in his chest, "I had pretty much finished explaining myself."

---

...

---

May 28th, 1790

"Hey, isn't that Sosuke?"

A young woman, long auburn hair falling past her shoulders, turned in the direction her friend was slyly motioning with her hand before responding in a hushed whisper, "I heard he's graduating an entire year early. They say he's a genius!"

Her friend's brown eyes narrowed suspiciously as she leaned closer, "Rumor has it Sosuke was offered a seated position only to politely turn it down! Right to the captain's face!"

"Really?"

The young woman stared curiously at the brown haired man on the other side of the courtyard, "Hmm... I wonder if Sosuke will continue tutoring after he graduates? My Zanjutsu still needs a lot of work..."

Sosuke Aizen ignored the audible whispers filtering across the courtyard as he stared pensively into the depths of one of Shin'o Academy many ponds, the crystalline waters reflecting the late spring sunlight. Despite the rumors circulated throughout the academy, some of which were bolstered by exaggerations and outright lies, he didn't possess the slightest desire to graduate early and matriculate into the Gotei 13. It simply wasn't something he preferred, which he fully realized was a dissenting opinion. Most students would have been ecstatic if a captain personally requested they join their division but Aizen remained conflicted. Unlike his classmates, who constantly professed their goals for the future, he lacked ambitions of his own.

A small pebble balancing precariously on the edge of the pond fell into the water with a noticeable ripple.

Any other shinigami in his position would have unanimously worked towards the rank of captain. He couldn't find fault in such logic. It was a noble goal if sought for the right reason but leading one of the thirteen divisions wasn't something he personally wished to achieve. It meant nothing to him. And while his fellow students would most likely find the answer both confusing and shocking, their opinions held very little weight.

Why should he allow the expectations others placed upon themselves dictate his actions?

Aizen stared somberly into the tranquil waters as a light wind blew across the courtyard, carrying with it the dry afternoon heat. There was no point dwelling on alternate possibilities and past events. The Gotei 13 recruiting him into their ranks was a fact and something he needed to accept. But perhaps he was overanalyzing the situation, giving unnecessary weight to evidence nobody apart from himself would notice. To the Gotei 13, or rather that persistent captain, he was a somewhat gifted student with greater than average spiritual energy and talent in Zanjutsu and Hakuda.

But given enough time and lack of discernable improvement in his abilities, the captain's expectations would rapidly be tempered by disappointment. In order to save himself from the embarrassment of personally recruiting an average student, the captain would leave him either as an unseated shinigami or a low ranked officer, which was perfect. The lack of formal oversight and responsibility was necessary for solving his existential dilemma.

Several relatively uneventful years patrolling the World of the Living and Rukon Districts, cleansing the occasional Hollow entering his jurisdiction, should be more than enough time to determine his future prospects.

Perhaps he would decide to seek the position of captain.

With a small frown Aizen expertly drew his zanpakuto from her scabbard. The constant presence in the back of his mind was yet another indication of his unnatural talents. Unlike the rest of the academy's students who still wielded nameless Asauchi, he already evolved the undifferentiated blade into a zanpakuto. Kyoka Suigetsu was truly his sword. Less than two years after passing Shin'o Academy entrance examination he heard the first whispers of Kyoka Suigetsu's voice. It had required another six months of Jinzen and conversing with his zanpakuto's spirit to learn Shikai.

His expression tightened at the recollection. The far-reaching ramifications of Kyoka Suigetsu's technique becoming known to the Gotei 13 was the main reason he had decided not to reveal his full strength.

Less than two days of contemplation had been necessary to reach that conclusion.

Kyoka Suigetsu was unique, different from any zanpakuto throughout the previous eight hundred years. She did not gain enhanced physical attributes or elemental techniques when he activated her Shikai. Neither did his zanpakuto change shape or functionality. On the contrary, her release possessed a far more insidious nature. Anyone witnessing Kyoka Suigetsu's release would instantly be ensnared within her proclaimed Kanzen Saimin or 'Complete Hypnosis.' It was an admittedly dangerous technique, one that he found disconcerting due to its permanence. There was no method to counter Kyoka Suigetsu's hypnosis even if one were aware of his zanpakuto's power.

It would be impossible for any person who witnessed his Shikai to fully trust their senses.

Aizen's fingers twitched around his zanpakuto.

The Gotei 13's standard response throughout the centuries towards perceived threats wasn't taught within Shin'o Academy. Intentions and benevolence wouldn't matter to the Central 46. Merely the assumption that his zanpakuto posed considerable danger to the Seireitei would be enough for them to sentence him to the Nest of Maggots.

Such ignorance bothered him tremendously.

Only those with limited imaginations would view Kyoka Suigetsu as inherently dangerous. Everything was a matter of perspective. The abilities possessed by one's zanpakuto had no correlation with their morality.

A ripple expanding across the pond's surface reminded Aizen why he was standing in the courtyard.

It was a theory so simple he could not help but chastise himself for not considering it sooner. Several nights ago in the midst of his studies a stray thought appeared in his mind. Since Kyoka Suigetsu was capable of controlling all five senses, rendering his opponents vulnerable to his subsequent actions, was the opposite also true? If there existed another zanpakuto with sensory manipulating powers was his sword capable of shattering their illusions? Would Kyoka Suigetsu render him immune to their hypnosis or vice versa? It was an intriguing concept worth pursuing if not for a single disadvantageous fact.

To the best of his knowledge Kyoka Suigetsu was the only illusion-type zanpakuto in existence.

Hence why he slightly modified his original intentions.

Waiting patiently until the last student vacated the courtyard, Aizen held his zanpakuto perpendicular to the ground before calmly announcing, "Shatter: Kyoka Suigetsu."

There was no momentarily flickering or noticeable change in the surrounding landscape upon release his zanpakuto. One moment the courtyard was quiet and the next a flock of birds native to the World of the Living were roosting in the nearby trees, courtesy of Kyoka Suigetsu manipulating his optical and auditory nerves. This was the first time he used Absolute Hypnosis on himself. But while the results were interesting, the overall experiment was a failure. Despite the authenticity of the illusion, from the feathers on the birds to their familiar chirping, he could easily differentiate it from reality. The illusion seemed almost superimposed upon the tree, a constantly shifting abstract painting he subconsciously rejected.

Perhaps being Kyoka Suigetsu's wielder afforded him immunity to her hypnosis or allowed him to instinctively view the underlying reality.

"I suppose that settles that particular question," Aizen mused as he prepared to reseal his zanpakuto, "Still, I wonder if..."

"Sosuke!"

He recognized the particular inflections - a fourth year student whom he tutored in Hakuda. Smiling softly as he turned around to greet the small entourage of underclassmen walking across the courtyard, Aizen stiffened when he noticed something different flickering on the edge of his vision. This... was unexpected. Yet despite attempting to quickly rationalize the situation as a side effect of Kyoka Suigetsu's hypnosis, which was technically still active, he immediately dismissed that notion. What he was witnessed bore no signs of falsehoods or delusions, which made the only logical choice more difficult to comprehend.

Although they possessed differing levels of spiritual energy, every one of their Asauchi shimmered with a disturbing blue-green light.

"I suppose congratulations are in order, Sosuke!"

One of his fellow fifth year students, a larger man from the outer Rukon Districts, laughed jovially, "We were taking bets on when you'd graduate. I personally thought you'd leave a year ago!"

"It wasn't like I had much of a choice," Aizen laughed nervously, a placating gesture to hide his tumultuous thoughts, "You really can't turn down a captain when they personally ask you to join their division..."

His mind scrambled for an answer that was not forthcoming. Perhaps Kyoka Suigetsu's hypnosis truly was absolute, even to him. If that was indeed the case, his previous assumptions were the unfortunate result of subconsciously creating an illusion with the sole purpose of being analyzed. Subtly turning his attention toward Kyoka Suigetsu when the focus of their conversation drifted to the Gotei 13, Aizen's confusion deepened upon noticing his zanpakuto lacked the same blue-green glow as the Asauchi.

"I haven't given it much thought..."

Aizen smiled politely as he sheathed his still released zanpakuto with a soft click. There was a connection, albeit unknown, between Kyoka Suigetsu and the shimmering Asauchi. He had only noticed the blue-green illumination surrounding the blades after personally succumbing to his zanpakuto's hypnosis. From that single piece of evidence, it stood to reason the phenomenon wasn't visible to the majority of shinigami.

So what exactly was the source of the strange anomaly?

"But I was considering joining the Fifth Division," Aizen chuckled as they walked across the courtyard, his mind still focused on the unexpected development, "Their captain seemed quite insistent I join his division."

---

...

---

November 1st, 2001

Sosuke Aizen watched the aftermath of his Frigor with detached interest.

He was content with the current progression of events even with the unexpected changes induced by the Hōgyoku. It was a rather interesting phenomenon. Despite spending decades researching the Hōgyoku's potential, sacrificing countless souls in search of its limitations and full abilities, the inner machinations of Life Fibers eluded his grasp. Not a single one of his experiments, Hollows and shinigami alike, demonstrated how the Hōgyoku restructured one's soul if they survived the implantation process. Masaki Kurosaki's brief ascension to the same plateau of power hadn't influenced her appearance, instead merely altering the density and coloration of her spiritual energy while in Letzt Stil.

His eyes narrowed at the shadowed figure slowly emerging from within the flames.

Something wasn't right .

For a brief moment, when Ichigo Kurosaki managed to wound his previous form, he had experienced a strange mixture of anger and indignation. That the teenager could stand against the Hōgyoku's power wasn't surprising. He anticipated Isshin Kurosaki, someone who had been directly influenced by the Original Life Fiber, teaching his son the proper 'technique' necessary to achieve victory in this battle, destroying his self-proclaimed Hollow and shinigami abilities in the process. He had expected suffering injuries obtaining that goal. But his outburst and final transformation upon teleporting away from Ichigo Kurosaki was disturbing. While he took the evolution in stride, purposely informing Ichigo that the Hōgyoku did not wish to lose to a mere human, Aizen knew the cause behind his temporary loss of composure.

The Hōgyoku was beginning to influence his mental state, an outcome he'd predicted but failed to truly account for as it overwhelmed even his own considerable mental defenses.

Aizen allowed a snarl to twist his transformed appearance. He needed to act quickly and force Ichigo Kurosaki into using whatever 'technique' Isshin Kurosaki taught him. The longer the fight progressed the more likely the Hōgyoku, or more specifically the Original Life Fiber, would obtain a greater presence in his mind. He refused to allow that thing to have any influence over his decisions and actions.

"I see you were able to withstand my attack with very little damage," Aizen conceitedly declared, condescension and arrogance purposely accentuating his tirade. Staring at the burns covering Ichigo Kurosaki's left arm from the point-blank attack, the former captain mentally noted the resilience of the youth's hibernating Life Fibers, "However, your left arm is no longer usable."

In a burst of motion Aizen leapt into the flames, one clawed hand tightly gripping Ichigo Kurosaki's throat before the youth could react. Pushing the teenager out the other side of the superheated flames, wisps of fire clinging to their bodies, he purposely emitted a savage growl as his transformed wings suddenly encircled Ichigo. But despite purple spiritual energy condensing into three concentric rings as the eyes on his wings widened, Aizen was not fooled by Ichigo Kurosaki's limp form. From his breathing pattern to his grip upon his Bankai, it was clear the teenager was still conscious.

"Can you hear me, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Aizen ignored the whispers in the back of his mind as he arrogantly boasted, "I have to give you credit. For one brief moment you broke the boundary between Hollow and shinigami to become a transcendent being. But that power is no more! It has completely dissipated... and not a trace of it remains! You're not even worth trying to understand anymore! Now it's my turn! I, a true transcendent being, will cause your death!"

He observed Ichigo Kurosaki's limp form, fully aware the teenager was listening to his every word, "I must say, it will be quite a victory. By eliminating you I will completely break free from shinigami and Hollows alike!"

Tightening his fingers around Ichigo's throat hard enough that the teenager flinched, he indulged in the urge to gloat, proclaiming his superiority, "It's over, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"Is it, Aizen?"

The transformed shinigami's eyes widened at the question. For a brief instant he felt control of the Hogyoku slip from his grasp. But that was impossible. Ichigo Kurosaki might have obtained great power but his Life Fibers were still hibernating. Was there something he missed? If he considered the improbable scenario that Isshin Kurosaki prematurely awakened his son's Life Fibers, perhaps through a technique usable only by those influenced by the Original

Life Fiber, he would have detected their distinct spiritual energy the moment Ichigo emerged from the Dangai.

It wasn't something easily forgotten.

Yet he felt nothing from the teenager. Even now Ichigo Kurosaki's spiritual pressure still mimicked that of a shinigami and Hollow.

So how did he synchronize with the Hogyoku?

"This the best you can do?"

The amount of confidence in Ichigo Kurosaki's voice took the traitorous captain off guard, surprising him long enough for the teenager to disperse his Ultrafragor into wisps of purple spiritual energy with an almost careless swing of Tensa Zangetsu. Pushed backwards through the air by the concussive force of the strike, Aizen's blank eyes widened in astonishment when Ichigo slowly raised his zanpakuto, "Aizen... let's end this already. All this rambling you do? Well, I'm sick of it."

"So prepare yourself..."

Aizen felt a small modicum of satisfaction at the declaration. This was it. His choreographed battle with Ichigo Kurosaki for the presumed fate of Karakura Town and inhabitants was reaching its climax. If he took Ichigo's comment at face value while eliminating all other possibilities, he was preparing to unleash whatever 'technique' Isshin taught him during their time in the Dangai. There was nothing else he needed to do.

Twisting his skull-like visage into an expression of false shock, Aizen watched Ichigo calmly brace his burnt hand against his right arm, "I'll show you my final... Getsuga Tenshou."

A magnificent eruption of chaotic white and black spiritual energy extended into the heavens mere moments after Ichigo Kurosaki's statement, the power concealing his form inside a brilliant pillar of blinding light. Aizen could feel the youth's spiritual pressure on his skin, the weight of the energy causing the very air to tingle with electricity. Yes... everything was going according to plan. Ichigo Kurosaki, through his own actions, was using a 'technique' he assumed required sacrificing his Hollow and shinigami abilities. In the end he would be left as an ordinary 'human,' thereby allowing his Life Fibers to slowly awaken.

And while Ichigo Kurosaki prepared for his confrontation with Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber he, Aizen, would go into hiding. Through careful manipulation of the battle and detailed understanding of Isshin Kurosaki's thought processes, most of which was information rendered outdated in the last hour, he would fake his death at the hands of Ichigo's so-called final Getsuga Tenshou. Every aspect of this fight had been planned from the moment he sensed the full weight of Ichigo's spiritual energy. His erratic behavior and inability to fight against the teenager was necessary to trick the Gotei 13, but more importantly Kisuke Urahara, into believing his death was valid.

The lack of scrutiny was necessary if he wished to eventually destroy the Soul King.

"What is that? What is that form he's taking?"

So why was he growing increasingly frustrated with Ichigo Kurosaki? It didn't make sense. The Hogyoku's influence should still be minimal and easily suppressed. But he refused to leave anything to chance. Every few seconds he checked his thought patterns for inconsistencies, determining whether they were genuine or originated from another source. Why had the Hogyoku chosen now to increase its foothold in his mind?

Aizen was stunned when the torrential outpouring of spiritual energy dissolved into wisps, allowing him to see Ichigo Kurosaki once more. Wait a minute. This was the so-called final Getsuga Tenshou, the 'technique' Isshin Kurosaki taught him during the extended time in the Dangai?

Streams of midnight black spiritual energy clung to Ichigo's body like smoke, taking on the appearance of flames slowly wafting upwards into the sky. But such a trivial effect wasn't what drew the traitorous captain's undivided attention. Everything below Ichigo Kurosaki's eyes, which now displayed a familiar maroon color, apart from his left arm was covered in blue-gray bandages while his previously orange hair was now waist-long and pitch black. This wasn't merely a sacrificial technique.

It was a complete transformation.

Through some miracle Ichigo Kurosaki was using the spiritual energy of his slumbering Life Fibers to bolster his strength.

Yet he was subconsciously rejecting them?

The Hogyoku pulsed with a resplendent multicolored light.

That didn't make sense. Despite his unique origins Ichigo Kurosaki was a Life Fiber Hybrid. But he hadn't anticipated this outcome. Against all odds, including his own calculations, Ichigo was subconsciously accessing the spiritual energy of his hibernating Life Fibers for the final Getsuga Tenshou. It was amazing. There no longer existed any distinction between him and Ragyo Kiryuin. He had ascended to the same plateau stood upon by the Kiryuin matriarch and Isshin Kurosaki. His physical appearance proved that notion!

Aizen felt his consciousness falter under foreign indignation.

It was inconceivable! Ichigo Kurosaki was still rejecting his origins despite the power coursing through his body, which far exceeded anything remotely possibly by either Hollows or shinigami? Aizen found it impossible to comprehend. The teenager firmly believed that underneath his false powers lay the heart and body of a normal human. Normal? Human ? Such blasphemy!

To reject both his existence and the Original Life Fiber with such trivial excuses was abhorrent! And he wished to defeat him ?!

"No! No! No! No! No! No! NO!"

Aizen felt the inhuman presence originating from the Hōgyoku, an eldritch willpower born from the darkest depths of reality, increasing exponentially with each declaration until none of his consciousness remained, "It's absurd! A mere HUMAN can't surpass me! It couldn't possibly be!"

His incoherent ranting was interrupted when Ichigo raised his right arm, a serene expression visible on his masked visage. Startled into silence by the power contained within the pure black spiritual energy condensing between the teenager's fingers, Aizen flinched backwards when everything suddenly snapped back into focus. What just happened? A few moments ago the Hōgyoku had nearly subsumed his mind, leaving him struggling for conscious control over his own body. Yet for some reason the Hōgyoku's eldritch willpower receded in the wake of Ichigo Kurosaki's final Getsuga Tenshō?

Blank eyes widening as the final vestige of the Hōgyoku's presence left his mind, Aizen had only a second to process Ichigo Kurosaki swinging his arm downwards before everything faded to black.

"Mugetsu."

---

...

---

July 31, 1894

"You've been awfully quiet, Sosuke."

The suddenness of the comment took the normally collected lieutenant off guard. Brow furrowed into a thoughtful frown as he turned towards his captain, who was slouched forward while nonchalantly scratching his back, Aizen quirked an eyebrow and politely inquired, "What ever do you mean, captain?"

"Don't give me any of that polite nonsense," Shinji Hirako, captain of the Fifth Division and his direct superior, replied without bothering to turn around. Remaining completely silent when his captain answered, deigning instead to think about more important matters, he didn't need to wait much longer before the man grumbled under his breath, "That was your cue to answer, Sosuke. Anyway... these last few weeks you've been rather withdrawn. Well, more than usual at least. I don't think you've commented once about my impeccable sense of fashion."

"My apologies, captain," Aizen smoothed a crease on his shihakusho before bowing his head slightly, "If you wished for my criticism of your fashion sense, than all you needed to do was ask. Perhaps I should start with your lack of -"

"Goddamn it, I was kidding!"

Shinji's left eye twitched sporadically at the comment, a stark contrast to his lieutenant's serene yet vaguely amused expression. Deciding to take a moment to calm his nerves, lest he lose his cool and do something that would result in disciplinary charges by Central 46, he looked over his shoulder and scoffed, "That's no way to talk to your captain."

Aizen sighed before pressing a finger against his glasses, "If I recall, you asked for my opinion on the matter. Lying to you, even over something as trivial as the clothes you purchase when you visit the World of the Living, would be disrespectful. That's why I refuse to comment either way on your... peculiar... choice in music."

The normally flippant captain paused midstride at his lieutenant's unintended admission, anger coursing through his soul, before chuckling, "Heh... trying to change the subject on me, Sosuke? Not bad. But why don't ya tell me what's really on your mind."

"That's interesting coming from you, captain," Aizen allowed the barest trace of concern in his voice, which had the intended effect of catching the rightfully suspicious Shinji Hirako off guard. Running a hand through his slightly messy brown hair, sighing purposely once more at his captain's lack of recognition, he paused for an appropriate amount of time before hesitatingly asking, "Wait... don't tell me you forgot about tomorrow?"

"Huh?"

Shinji blinked in confusion, one hand scratching the back of his neck as he stared incredulously at his lieutenant. What was Sosuke talking about? As he mentally went through the list of important dates, the growing look of concern on his subordinate's face gravely worrying, Shinji dryly quipped, "What? Did the Captain Commander schedule a last minute meeting or something?"

Aizen had difficulty hiding his disbelief at Shinji Hirako's inattentiveness, "Tomorrow is Lieutenant Sarugaki's birthday. It appears you forgot about the date... again ."

"WHAT?!"

The ordinarily calm and collected Shinji Hirako, who refused to allow any of life's trivial problems get the better of him, felt his heart sink at the horrible, terrible news. How the hell did he completely forget about Hiyori's birthday? It was literally the most important date of the year! After her rampage across half the Seireitei last year, which sent nearly a hundred shinigami to the Fourth Division for treatment, he had circled the August on every calendar in the division's barracks. He ordered the entire division to remind him of August First one month in advance. He made damn sure there was no chance he would forget.

And he still forgot?!

His expression rapidly cycling through absolute terror and primal fear before finally settling on desperation, Shinji grabbed Sosuke by the shoulders and passionately demanded, "You knew her birthday was tomorrow and didn't remind me? What the hell's wrong with you, Sosuke?!"

"After last year's... incident... I thought it wise not to get involved in your personal matters, captain," Aizen took his captain's subsequent series of curses in stride, his glasses shining menacingly in the afternoon, "Lieutenant Sarugaki can be quite frightening when angry, especially after you shifted the blame for last year's events onto my shoulders. But there's no reason to be worried, captain. There are still several hours left to buy her a mildly reasonable gift. I even took the liberty of collecting some Kan from your quarters for you to -"

He didn't have enough time to finish his sentence before Shinji grabbed the money from his outstretched hand and sprinted away, his fear-induced speed bolstered by judicious usage of Shunpo. As he watched his captain flee the scene, fragments of panicked phrases and words reaching his ears, Aizen's expression tightened imperceptibly. That had been close. He must have grown overly complacent with Shinji Hirako's suspicions if the man deduced a minor shift in his natural disposition. Shrugging his shoulders at several unseated shinigami walking across the barracks, their captain's strange behavior well known, he waited long enough for everything to return to relative normalcy before walking in the opposite direction, his thoughts focused on a singular topic.

Kisuke Urahara.

His initial opinion of the man had been lackluster. After several weeks of subtle observations, using Kyoka Suigetsu to hide his presence when needed, he had determined that Kisuke Urahara was potentially a genius comparable to himself. He was a man capable of simultaneously formulating multiple plans that account for unexpected variables and changes while flawlessly running mental simulations of his opponent's actions. Yet he hadn't given Kisuke Urahara much thought, instead dedicating himself to more important issues. The recently promoted captain might possess an intellect rivaling his own, but that did not make him a threat. After all, while Kisuke Urahara was potentially the only person in the Seireitei able to counter his plans, likewise he could develop countermeasures for everything the man created.

It would be moderately troublesome killing the man if it came down to a battle of simply intelligence. But the vast difference between their spiritual energies, abilities and repertoire of techniques meant the outcome was already decided.

That mindset changed three weeks ago when he detected a familiar, yet subtle, spiritual energy radiating from the recently created Shinigami Research and Development Institute.

He hadn't originally believed the findings from his spiritual sensors. Something like that couldn't be true. It was impossible. Not a single Hollow or shinigami aside from himself had stepped foot anywhere close to the Kiryuin Manor since he first deduced its location decades ago. While an ordinarily unbelievable scenario given the unique spiritual energy clinging to the property, soaking into the very fabric of reality, nothing was impossible when Life Fibers were involved. But more importantly, the current matriarch of the Kiryuin family was only in her late teens. It was physically impossible for Kisuke Urahara to have entered the Original Life Fiber's sanctum. The creature's wards and defenses would have devoured him alive.

All of this was predicated, however, on Kisuke Urahara on visiting the World of the Living, eluding his surveillance of the Kiryuin Manor and stealing a sample of Life Fibers.

There had been rumors of Kisuke Urahara's peculiar behavior over the years. Thirteen years ago, long before Kirio Hikifune was promoted from captain of the Twelfth Division to the Royal Guard, the man had mysteriously vanished for several days without a trace. Yet that hadn't been enough to garner further observations. He had been more concerned with some promising Hollowfication experiments in the outer Rukon Districts, safely hidden from any prying eyes. But the series of miraculous inventions Kisuke Urahara created over the next few years, one after another in quick succession, heavily suggested he'd somehow entered the Soul King Palace.

Aizen's pace quickened slightly.

But if he added the recent burst of spiritual energy into the equation, there was only one possible conclusion - Kisuke Urahara had created a second Hogyoku, one independent of the Original Life Fiber.

It required a considerable amount of self-control to restrain his growing exhilaration into nothing more than a pleasant smirk.

If Kisuke Urahara was intelligent enough to create a Hogyoku, than that could only mean he understood the truth lurking in the shadows of both the Soul Society and the World of the Living. Aizen never thought he would see this day. Creating an actual Hogyoku implied that Kisuke Urahara must also know the Original Life Fiber's terrifying plans concerning for humanity. The only question was broaching the subject of Life Fibers. Caution would be necessary to avoid any unwanted consequences. Gin and Kaname might be loyal towards his goal of rebelling against the Gotei 13 but that was because it conformed to their own interests.

They were merely subordinates, cast aside at the first opportunity.

Kisuke Urahara, on the other hand, had the potential to be a valuable ally - his first true comrade - in destroying the Original Life Fiber and saving humanity. All he needed to do was figure out the most appropriate method of speaking with the man. But that shouldn't be too difficult. Surely Kisuke Urahara, as someone who understood the truth behind Life Fibers, would be amenable to cooperation.

---

...

---

November 1st, 2001

"It is the Hogenyoku's will."

Kisuke Urahara watched his adversary with a calculating gaze as the specialized Kido continued taking effect, "The reason the seal I shot into you is only now taking effect is because your powers have started to weaken. This is all thanks to Ichigo. The seal was able to take effect because he fought so hard and pushed you to your limit. The Hogenyoku... is saying it does not recognize you as its master."

Aizen stiffened at the implications behind Kisuke Urahara's explanation. He had known the inherent risk of implanting the Hogenyoku into his soul. Isshin Kurosaki had been telling the truth when he mentioned the chances of surviving were astronomically small. Yet even though he had severely underestimated the Hogenyoku's connection to the Original Life Fiber, it had been a necessary risk for his plans to reach fruition - freeing humanity from the tyranny of Life Fibers. But if Kisuke Urahara spoke the truth, and the Hogenyoku no longer saw him as its master, then the consequences were dire.

Those things were aware of his plans.

"You're wrong," he muttered, his lips trembling at the growing implications of his defeat, "It can't be! It's impossible! I control this power!"

He hunched forward, agony and pain coursing through his veins, when the sealing Kido embedded in his body suddenly strengthened. Struggling to remain standing when the spiritual energy transformed, forming into large crosses that stabbed completely through his chest, Aizen sneered defiantly. He refused to allow someone like Kisuke Urahara, who ignored the growing threat of Life Fibers plaguing humanity, to defeat him!

"Urahara... Kisuke Urahara!"

Such a decision defied common sense and reasoning! It was a betrayal of humanity itself! Even though he'd never gained the opportunity to speak privately with Kise Urahara one hundred years ago without risking throwing all of his plans to the wayside, he expected the man to have done something . Anything! By creating the Hogyoku, Kise Urahara should have known about Life Fibers and their plan to devour humanity! He should have spent the last century preparing contingencies to neutralize and counter both the Original Life Fiber and Ragyo Kiryuin! His invention and usage of a specialized Gigai able to conceal his shinigami powers meant he could safely interact with Life Fibers!

There was nothing stopping Kise Urahara from entering the Original Life Fiber's sanctum underneath the Kiryuin Manor!

So why in the world had he refused to stop them? It didn't make any sense!

"Do you know how much I despise you?!"

The uncaring expression on Kise Urahara's face bothered Aizen more than anything else. Ignoring the seal slowly creeping up his body, encasing his lower legs within an earth-like shell of matter, he gnashed his teeth in frustration and angrily demanded, "With your great intellect why is it you don't take independent action? Why in the world is it that you choose to subjugate yourself to that thing ?!"

"When you say 'that thing,' are you talking about the Soul King?"

Kise didn't recognize the source of his adversary's mounting anger as closed his eyes and calmly sighed, "I see... so you saw it, didn't you? Without the existence of the Soul King the Soul Society would split into pieces. The Soul King is the keystone to it all. Without that keystone in place the system would fall apart. That, my friend, is how the world works."

"That's an argument only a loser would make!"

Aizen tore furiously at the seal enveloping around his body in a desperate attempt to regain his freedom. How could he have been so blind? He refused to allow someone like Kisuke Urahara to emerge victorious. It spat in the face of everything he fought tooth and nail to achieve! The man might have created another Hogyoku but he was still utterly blind towards the truth of the world. Kisuke Urahara never encountered Life Fibers. It was an impossible contradiction that went against everything he believed!

But the other man's blatant ignorance in the face of reality suggested otherwise.

Snapping a piece of the growing seal, freeing his left arm in the process, he desperately motioned at the only person who could have possibly understood the atrocious but necessary actions he took over the last two hundred years, "A victor should speak of how the world should be! Rather than how the world currently operates!"

"I REFUSE to accept a world ruled by that thing!"

As the seal finished enveloping his body, instantly severing all of his senses in the process, Aizen's seemingly incoherent ranting contained all of his self-loathing and hatred at failing to create a future for humanity free from Life Fibers, "I am a victor! I shall decide how the world should be!"

---

...

---

November 9th, 2002

The sound of Kisuke Urahara's footsteps reverberated through the darkness as he strode through the pitch-black void encompassing the lowest level of the Central Great Underground Prison - Muken. For several long and immeasurable minutes he walked through the shadows without uttering a single word, the miniature device sewn into the pocket of his dark coat constantly emitting the spiritual frequency necessary to prevent the bypass into the normally impenetrable prison from sealing shut. Adjusting the brim of his bucket hat upon reaching his destination, Kisuke frowned at the swirling darkness stretching before him.

"From your silence I take it you already know why I'm here?"

Kisuke found the resulting silence somewhat concerning, a sensation compounded by the strange nature of the endless void composing Muken. As he stood unmoving in the darkness, the faint chill permeating the prison giving him goose bumps, the shopkeeper resisted the urge to sigh when the shadows slowly parted, revealing a smirking figure. Although his body was covered head to foot in thick black straps, sealing away his movement and immense spiritual energy, Sosuke Aizen's single visible eye nevertheless narrowed in amusement from Mayuri Kurotsuchi's uniquely crafted chair.

"That all depends, Kisuke Urahara," Aizen grinned smugly at the other man, "Have you come all this way, breaking some of the Soul Society's most ancient laws, simply to learn my motivations? My background and reasoning? Or perhaps you grew concerned about the condition of the seals binding me to this chair?"

"My, oh my. You sure do like taking apart my hard work, don't you?"

His expression twisted into a calculating frown as he stared at the nineteen seals etched into the floor, cracks and splinters indicating what transpired, Kisuke slowly shook his head in disappointment, "In less than a year you've already removed more than half of the seals placed upon your body by Central 46. Well now... that's quite the impressive feat. And in any other situation I'd be shaking in my boots. But I'm curious, Aizen. Is this due to your own ingenuity and intellect... or the Life Fibers comprising the Hōgyoku fused with your soul?"

Aizen closed his uncovered eye at the question, "Life Fibers, you say?"

Raising his right arm, the only limb he managed to free from the powerful seals constraining him to the chair, he motioned politely at Kisuke, "While a notably accurate conclusion, it is long overdue from a man of your intellect. From what I remember, during our last encounter you were still blind to the concept of such things. The truth of the world remained lost to you. A regrettable, if understandable, excuse if we were speaking about anyone other than yourself. It's truly disappointing, Kisuke Urahara, it took you over a century to realize the existence of Life Fibers."

"Well..."

Kisuke purposely drawled out the word, allowing it to mask his embarrassment, "I don't know about your Hogyoku, but the one I created wasn't made with Life Fibers. It's actually a very long story. One, I assume, you're already quite familiar with. However, you're wrong about one small thing. During your battle against Ichigo, even before you departed from the fake Karakura Town, I already knew about Life Fibers."

The brief but noticeable widening of Aizen's single eye at the admission intrigued the shopkeeper. Deciding to press the advantage, he sighed gently, "You can thank Uryu for that. A few days after you escaped from the Soul Society with my Hogyoku his father sent him to Revocs headquarters for a two-week internship. During those fourteen days Uryu met some rather interesting people... including a woman by the name of Ragyo Kiryuin."

"And then things became complicated..."

Ignoring the constant chill permeating Muken, the former captain narrowed his eyes, "Uryu still hasn't explained all the details but a few days after his internship ended he returned to Revocs. He broke into their high security research laboratories and stole a large quantity of Life Fibers, which he gave to me for safekeeping. While I was shocked by his behavior, the strange spiritual energy coming from those threads piqued my interest. I promised Uryu I wouldn't tell anyone where I obtained the Life Fibers. Unfortunately..."

Kisuke sighed as he removed his hat, allowing his shaggy light-blond hair to fall freely, "... I was preoccupied with more important matters at the time. I didn't truly start researching Life Fibers until a week after you were defeated by Ichigo."

"And what have you found?"

Aizen's condescending smile returned, although not as wide as before, "Given the specialized Gigai you're wearing, it should have been relatively safe for you to handle Life Fibers."

"You're right on the nose," Kisuke frowned, pausing briefly as he mulled over his words, "Are you familiar with the concept of Kamui?"

"God Robes?" Aizen chuckled softly at the concept, "That does sound like something Ragyo Kiryuin would create from Life Fibers. From the inflection in your voice am I to assume you've created one of these Kamui? Perhaps one designed to be worn by a Life Fiber Hybrid like Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"Your intuition is quite frightening," Kisuke sighed as he placed the bucket hat back on his head, "But you're correct. It took some effort but I created a Kamui for Ichigo - a sentient, living uniform capable of transforming into more powerful forms. It's similar in some regards to a shinigami's zanpakuto. And ironically enough, he chose to name her Mugetsu."

"Did he now?"

Aizen closed his eye and smirked at the memory of Ichigo Kurosaki's technique neutralizing the Hōgyoku's growing influence on his mind, "While an interesting admission, I believe we're getting off topic. You never explained why you came here, Kisuke Urahara. Perhaps you wish to free me from Mūken. But as you can see, I'm not in need of your assistance."

He accentuated his answer by clenching the fingers on his right hand, "Ten of the seals specifically created to seal my spiritual pressure while constraining me to this chair are already broken, unraveled by the Hogyoku's power. I simply need to patiently bide my time and eventually the remaining seals will shatter. From there, it's a trivial task escaping Muken into the World of the Living or Hueco Mundo without drawing the Gotei 13's notice."

Kisuke's eyes were framed in darkness as he listened to Aizen's explanation, "Is that right? Well then... I'm afraid I'll have to disagree with you. If you truly wanted to escape Muken, you could have done so months ago..."

Crouching down onto the floor, the shopkeeper ran a finger against one of the broken seals, "You were right about one thing, Aizen. The Hogyoku's power is eating away at the seals keeping you bound to that chair. But upon closer examination of the still functioning seals, including their inconsistent rates of decay, it becomes obvious you've been holding most of your power back, exponentially delaying your eventual escape from Muken."

Unconcerned by Aizen's perplexed frown, Kisuke calmly dusted off his hands and stood back up, "The only question is 'why.' It cannot be because you fear incurring the wrath of the Captain Commander. Due to the Hogyoku's power killing you would require his Bankai, a tactic Genryusai Yamamoto is notoriously adamant against using. No, the truth of the matter is much simpler. You fear leaving Muken because the moment you step outside its boundaries the Original Life Fiber - and by proxy Ragyo Kiryuin - will instantly become aware of your location. There would be nowhere in the World of the Living, Hueco Mundo or the Soul Society you could hide."

"That, my friend, is the downside of fusing with the Hogyoku."

Nearly half a minute passed in absolute silence before the corners of Kisuke's mouth curled into a smirk, "Fortunately, luck seems to be on our side. With her attention split between Nudist Beach, four Kamui and their experienced wearers and Karakura Town, it's almost certain Ragyo Kiryuin won't notice your presence."

Aizen leaned backwards, resting his head against the chair, "You appear to have put some thought into this, Kisuke Urahara. When did you first plan on visiting me? Surely coming to this dreadful place wasn't just a passing fancy."

"You give me far too little credit, Aizen. I always plan for all eventualities, no matter how improbable. After Ichigo and Ryuko left for London I immediately assumed Ragyo Kiryuin might attack Karakura Town in their absence," Kisuke reached into his coat, removing a duplicate set of keys for the nineteen seals at his feet, "After all, it's easier fighting two Kamui instead of four. And while I didn't anticipate the Quincy getting involved to such an extent, it appears my suspicions about that woman were completely accurate."

The traitorous captain carefully eyed the keys in Kisuke's hand, "London, you say? I was growing curious about the status of the creature known as Alucard. If I remember correctly, the embargo on Revocs clothing in England should have ended a few days ago. I take it things didn't go the way Ragyo Kiryuin expected?"

"Is it that obvious?"

Kisuke carefully placed the first key into the proper lock, freeing Aizen's left arm and hand, "But you'll have to live without the details because, to be honest, we don't have any time to waste. As we speak Ragyo Kiryuin is preparing to attack Karakura Town. It's likely she'll use everything at her disposal - thousands of human-powered COVERS, the remnants of Xcution and the Grand Couturier. If she succeeds, there will be nobody left to stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet."

"And you wish for me to deal with Ragyo Kiryuin?"

With an energetic crackle of spiritual energy the two seals constraining Aizen's upper chest vanished, "Why haven't you asked Isshin Kurosaki, the other one touched by the Original Life Fiber, to kill that woman?"

Kisuke hesitated as he placed the next key into the respective slot, "Isshin's history and relationship with Ragyo Kiryuin makes it highly unlikely he would find the desire to willingly land the finishing blow. Not to mention the matter of Ragyo Kiryuin's frightening intellect. It takes a certain amount of acumen to successfully run the second largest company in the World of the Living, which most likely increased due to the Original Life Fiber. She's not someone we can afford to underestimate. Ragyo Kiryuin wouldn't risk all her cards directly attacking Karakura Town without something prepared to deal with Isshin's interference."

"And that is where you come in..."

The fourth to last seal, binding Aizen's left leg, vanished in a flash of spiritual pressure, "Despite failing to seal away the Original Life Fiber, the information gathered during my short visit to the Kiryuin Manor led to some interesting revelations."

Kisuke's eyes narrowed as he unlocked the seal binding Aizen's other leg, "What you said before being sealed... you were warning me about the Original Life Fiber, weren't you?"

"Among other things..."

Aizen smirked when Kisuke unlocked the second-to-last seal, the one constraining his waist, "My goal has always been to destroy the Original Life Fiber and the Soul King. Allowing Life Fibers to devour humanity under Ragyo Kiryuin's delusional beliefs was something I've worked two hundred years to prevent. So if you're wondering whether I'm willing to aid in your fight against the woman, the answer is, of course, yes."

An intense burst of spiritual pressure pulsed across the pitch-black void when Kisuke released the final seal. As the traitorous captain slowly rose from the chair, standing for the first time in nearly a year, the shopkeeper adjusted his bucket hat once more, "Well then, I don't think anything else needs to be said. Now if you'll kindly follow me, the exit to Karakura Town is five kilometers in that direction."

Installing a backdoor into this place without the Soul Society finding out was rather tricky."

"Of course..."

Aizen rubbed his sore wrists as he followed Kisuke Urahara through the darkness, "But there is one question I feel you should answer, Kisuke Urahara. Why didn't you simply ask the Soul Society for assistance in stopping Ragyo Kiryuin? Why come to me of all people?"

"Now that's a silly question, Aizen."

There was not a trace of amusement in Kisuke's expression, "You already know why I didn't bother going to the Gotei 13..."

Aizen's condescending smirk twisted into outright smugness at the shopkeeper's admission, piercing through the infinite void of Muken as they marched toward the distant exit.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #33 - Over Budget

"This emergency meeting will now come to order!"

Genryusai Yamamoto, wizened and scarred from two millennia of fighting, tapped his zanpakuto loudly against the floor of the chamber. Staring intently at the twenty-five gathered men and woman representing the full military capabilities of the Seireitei, he waited until the last whispers died away before turning his attention towards the person patiently waiting in the middle of the room.

"Captain Aizen," the Captain Commander's tone deepened as he spoke, "Several hours ago you claimed to have evidence of a grave matter threatening the security and stability of the Soul Society.

Under your request, I convened this meeting to address your concerns. The floor is now yours."

"Thank you," Sosuke Aizen bowed respectfully at the elder shinigami, keeping his posture lowered just long enough to alleviate any suspicions concerning his motivations. Fixing his glasses as he raised the clipboard in his right hand, several sheets of papers fastened at the top, he cleared his throat before continuing, "As you are all aware, it is the Fifth Division's responsibility to correctly appropriate the Seireitei's annual budget among the thirteen divisions and various associations. It is a task that I treat with utmost seriousness, which is why during this year's standard audit we discovered some major... discrepancies."

"Don't look at me," Mayuri Kurotsuchi preempted the suspicious glances from his fellow captains with an annoyed scoff, " I'm not the one responsible. The Shinigami Research and Development Institute's budget remains the same inadequate value the feeble-minded members of Central 46 granted us for the last five years. I haven't spent a single penny more than that."

"Discrepancies?"

Toshiro Hitsugaya frowned at Aizen's peculiar choice of wording, "Are you trying to suggest someone, potentially a captain, has been stealing money, Captain Aizen?"

"It's nothing of the sort, Captain Hitsugaya. Truth be told, it's actually rather hard for me to explain," Aizen allowed a perplexed frown to cross his features, one that would convince the other captains of his false sincerity, "But after auditing the budget an additional two times while accounting for any potential private expenditures, I determined that a large portion of our annual budget is being spent on something called... Revocs."

"Revocs?"

Jushiro Ukitake couldn't help but quirk an eyebrow in curiosity at the strange name, "Why, I don't believe I've ever heard of such a thing."

"Perhaps we should let Captain Aizen finish his explanation," Shunsui Kyoraku smirked mischievously while nudging his friend in the ribs. He couldn't have been the only one in the room to notice several of his colleagues tense at the strange name, "After all, losing a large chunk of our budget would be rather terrible. If money keeps getting spent on whatever this Revocs sells, I won't have enough Kan to buy sake."

A slap echoed across the chamber as Nanao Ise angrily smacked the back of her captain's head before Yamamoto interjected, "Captain Aizen, do you have a list of the individuals and associations squandering our budget on something so frivolous?"

"Yes, Captain Commander," Aizen flipped to the second page on the clipboard, drawing the attention of his fellow captains and their lieutenants, and cleared his throat, "Starting with the most egregious spenders, last year the Shinigami Women's Association had a budget of two hundred and fifty thousand Kan. Of that budget, roughly eighty percent was spent on Revocs brand clothing."

"Wait just a damn minute," Kenpachi Zaraki's gravelly voice interrupted Aizen's explanation, "Are you saying you called this stupid meeting, woke me up at nine in the morning, all because some idiots decided to spend their money on clothing? Like I give a damn about Revocs or whatever. If you ask me, spending hours picking out clothes is stupid and - "

"It is not, Kenny!"

Yachiru Kusajishi angrily puffed her cheeks as she sat upon Kenpachi's left shoulder, "Don't you listen to anything I say? I told you dozens of times but you never listen, Kenny! The best and cutest clothes in the World of the Living are made by Revocs! And as president of the Shinigami Women's Association, it is my job to make sure we wear the latest fashions and trends!"

Kenpachi rolled his eyes at Yachiru's annoying explanation before something hit him, "Hey! That's why you put those locks on your room, right? It's full of clothing you bought with my money, isn't it?!"

Staring blankly in mounting confusion when the Eleventh Division's captain and lieutenant started bickering, Aizen coughed lightly before continuing down the list, "Roughly ninety thousand Kan was spend this year on Revocs clothing by the Tenth Division's lieutenant. And that's in addition to the eighty thousand Kan we discovered from the year before..."

"MATSUMUTO!"

Hitsugaya's left eye twitched furiously as sheets of ice began visibly forming at his feet. So THAT'S why his division had been strapped for money the last few years! It hadn't made any sense why he couldn't balance the books! Turning angrily towards the spot his lieutenant should have been standing only to notice her trying to sneak out the window, Hitsugaya suppressed the growing urge to strangle her, "Do you care trying to excuse your actions?"

"Uh..." Rangiku Matsumuto fiddled her fingers nervously as she stood in front of the window, one foot on the frame, "What can I say, captain? Revocs has the best designs! Whoever created them has excellent taste!"

The captain stared in disbelief when Matsumoto leapt out the window, vanishing moments later using Shunpo. Resisting the desire the chase down his lieutenant and make her pay for her crimes against the division, Hitsugaya turned back to Aizen and tensely muttered, "My apologies. Please continue with your report, Captain Aizen."

Aizen shivered at the growing chill in the air, which strangely enough wasn't coming from Toshiro Hitsugaya, and flipped to the next page on the clipboard, "Of course. Next on the list are Captain Unohana and Lieutenant Kotetsu of the Fourth Division. Their combined expenditure surpasses the Shinigami Women's Association with a staggering - "

"I don't think we need to worry about that, Captain Aizen."

The deadly undertone in Retsu Unohana's otherwise cheerful voice sent shivers down everyone, including Yamamoto's, spine, "How I decide to spend my division's yearly budget is not your concern."

Aizen observed the ambient temperature of the room plummet several degrees when one of the only shinigami able to match him in battle publically dared him to speak up. Nervously flipping to the next page as the dense spiritual pressure vanished, he swallowed the lump in his throat, "Yes... there was also fifty thousand Kan spent by... Captain Tosen?"

Every captain and lieutenant collectively turned to the blind shinigami, who took the unseen attention in stride, "What can I say? I like the sensation of their fabrics against my skin."

"Um... yes," Aizen decided to hold off discussing the matter with his subordinate until later, "That was all the captain and lieutenants with expenditures above seven thousand Kan. If we account for the seated officers and unranked shinigami, the total amount spent last year on Revocs clothing comes to three million, four hundred and fifteen thousand Kan, roughly forty percent of our annual budget."

"I think I've heard enough."

Yamamoto's voice carried across the chamber as he slammed his zanpakuto against the floor, "It is clear from the evidence that Revocs has a detrimental effect on the Seireitei. Every Kan spent on frivolous fashions and accessories limits our ability to protect the Soul Society and World of the Living. Therefore, I am opening the floor to suggestions on countering this serious problem."

"Considering the scope of the matter," Aizen made sure to choose his words very carefully when Retsu Unohana's expression tightened, "I suggest a complete ban on Revocs. While I understand my colleagues might find that somewhat drastic, the safety and protection of the Soul Society comes foremost. But if they truly wish to spend money on clothing, there are several stores in the Seireitei and Rukon Districts. For much cheaper prices, I might add."

"Hmm..."

Yamamoto stared intently around the room, ignoring the piercing stare from the Fourth Division's captain, before inquiring, "What is your reasoning for such a drastic decision?"

"Well..."

Aizen adjusted his glasses and shrugged his shoulders, "Considering we're already an old-fashioned and feudalistic meritocracy, why not go the whole distance?"

There was a tense moment of silence amongst the gathered shinigami at the admission. Leaning back in his chair as the ambient spiritual pressure originating from multiple sources in the room increased, Yamamoto tapped his finger against his disguised zanpakuto, "Fair enough. The motion carries! I hereby announce a complete ban on Revocs products within the Soul Society! Not a single Kan shall be spent on their clothing! You are all hereby dismissed!

A loud scream that could only come from Rangiku Matsumuto, who was currently hiding several rooms away, pierced through the air, "NOOO!"

As the captains and lieutenants departed for their respective divisions, some grumbling more than others at the declaration, Aizen's attention was pulled away from watching Toshiro chase down his fleeing lieutenant when Shunshi grabbed his shoulder and chuckled, "That was some meeting, Captain Aizen. You're a real lifesaver. I had a feeling Nanao was hiding something from me. Now

I have an excuse to go snooping around her room for illegal contraband..."

Ignoring the glare coming from the Eighth Division's lieutenant, her glasses shimmering angrily as she walked out of the room, Aizen resisted the urge to smirk in triumph. It seemed everything was proceeding even better than anticipated.

Laughter in the Rain

Here's the next chapter of To My Death I Fight and I would like to announce that it's NOT a flashback. There are no flashback scenes in this chapter. With that said, I would like to say I've wanted to write what happens in this chapter for a very long time. But pacing and proper character development forced me to wait. And that's a good thing, because it allowed the Bleach manga to finish (that's another topic I don't want to discuss) and showcase a lot of new and interesting abilities for shinigami.

So check out my story's tvtropes page and I hope you enjoy the chapter!

---

...

---

Chapter 55 - Laughter in the Rain

"Round five starts now!"

Yasutora Sado darted backwards, the motion aggravating his broken shoulder, when Moe Shishigawara shouted at the top of his lungs and slammed his fist against the street. Quickly twisting to the right upon noticing the dangerous smirk stretched across the other teenager's face, the shattered pieces of his shoulder screaming loudly in agony, sweat trickled down Chad's back as Moe's punch blurred through the rain only a few inches from his jaw.

"What's the matter, Chad?"

Moe Shishigawara's disappointment at failing to shatter his opponent's jaw like glass vanished when Chad attempted to return the favor with interest. Grinning haughtily as he slipped away from the teenager, his head bobbing left and right as he dodged punches powerful enough to send anyone else to the morgue, he couldn't help but boast, "Yo! I thought you said you were goin' to stop me! At this rate kickin' your ass will be a piece of -"

"El Directo!"

Spiritual energy exploded from the wing-like extension jutting from his right shoulder as Chad stoically answered Moe Shishigawara's comment with a powerful haymaker, the attack eliciting a shocked expression in the other teenager's grey eyes. Frowning when his opponent dodged at the last second, an embarrassed gasp leaving the Xcution member's mouth as he scrambled back onto his feet, Chad slowly lowered his arm as the building he unfortunately punched collapsed in an expanding cloud of smoke, "... sorry about that."

"Huh?"

Moe blinked in confusion as he leapt away from Chad, his recent embarrassment already forgotten, "Why the hell are you apologizin'? I'm tryin' to kill you, you know!"

Chad ignored the debris falling onto his shoulders as he turned around to face the Xcution member. Experimentally clenching his hand, the red and black armor covering his right arm glistening in the rain, he shifted stances as spiritual energy erupted from his broken shoulder, "... it took some time but I think I've figured out your raiment's ability."

Stomping his foot against the ground at the response, the Life Fiber bandages wrapped around his forearms crackling with spiritual energy, Moe angrily pointed a finger at Chad, "Like hell you did!"

His Loterie Raiment shone with a familiar multicolored radiance as he rushed Chad with the singular purpose of breaking every bone in the guy's body. So what if the guy thought he figured out his raiment? It wasn't going to save him from getting his ass beaten into the ground! Undeterred in the slightest when the black and red armor covering the other teenager's right arm abruptly liquefied, flowing outwards before changing into something even more monstrous, Moe couldn't help but whistle. All right. He had to admit that Chad's armor was pretty awesome.

"Heh... you think that fancy shield's goin' to stop me?!"

Moe grinned savagely as multicolored spiritual energy gathered between his fingers, "Tough luck! Because it ain't going to stop me from kickin' your -"

His taunt was interrupted when Chad punched him squarely in the nose.

"God... damn... shit!"

Blood oozed from Moe Shishigawara's broken nose as he staggered backwards, one hand tightly gripping his face. As the taste of copper grew increasing prevalent in his mouth, Moe angrily glared at Chad. God damn it, the guy could throw one hell of a punch! The pink haired Quincy bitch at Honnouji Academy hadn't given him this much trouble, leaving only a few light bruises before he stomped her face into the ground. And she could punch straight through solid concrete! Chad wasn't anywhere close to superwoman's level of strength yet he managed to flat-out break his nose with only one punch?

And how the hell did he suddenly get faster ?

"I'm done messin' around, Chad!"

He slipped through the other teenager's guard in a burst of speed, one arm cocked over his shoulder. Sneering as the multicolored light radiating from within his raiment grew in both brightness and intensity, Moe shouted passionately while sucker punching Chad in the stomach, "Météore Grève!"

Spittle flew from Chad's mouth as a shockwave of multicolored spiritual energy exploded from his back, shattering every window on the street. Hunched forward as Moe smirked and casually withdrew his arm, he grimaced at the excruciating pain radiating from his stomach. Several ribs were broken, possibly more, and it hurt to breath, but he refused to let Ichigo down. Looming over the teenager, spiritual energy crackling on his fingertips as his Brazo Izquierda del Diablo flowed into existence, Chad pushed through the pain as power coursed through his transformed arm.

"La Muerte!"

A resounding crack echoed alongside the concurrent peeling of thunder as the spiritual technique slammed into Moe Shishigawara's hastily risen guard, the outpouring of energy both shattering the pavement and gouging the image of a skull on the building across the street. Curses flowing profusely from his mouth as he skidded down the road, his sneakers leaving trails of smoking rubber in their wake, Moe froze in wide-eyed astonishment when the building behind him exploded into dust. Holy crap... was that the technique Chad was planning on using at Honnouji Academy? Staring at the damaged state of his raiment, rips and tears covering the Life Fiber bandages and jacket, Moe felt a flash of instinctive panic.

The Grand Couturier was going to be seriously pissed when she found out a human scratched one of her tailor-made raiment!

"Now that's more like it!"

Moe disguised his nervousness at the thought of showing the Grand Couturier his damaged raiment with false bravado, "La Muerte? That's Spanish, right?"

Rubbing away the blood oozing from his nose while countless explosions illuminated the skies above Karakura Town, Life Fibers floating in the rain as Nudist Beach decimated Lady Ragyo's army of COVERS, Moe Shishigawara sneered confidently, "I guess I'm real lucky you were holding back at Honnouji Academy! You could have kicked my ass if you used that attack when I was poundin' superwoman into the dirt! But don't think I'm going to give you another chance, Chad! Humans like you only get one lucky shot!"

Chad tensed when Moe Shishigawara smashed his fists together, disturbing multicolored light leaking from within his raiment. Pushing spiritual energy through his Brazo Derecha de Gigante as he rushed the member of Xcution, who briefly shadowboxed in place before doing the same, his eyes widened when someone unexpectedly landed on the street directly in front of him, sending out a large shockwave that dispelled the surrounding storm.

"What the hell?"

Moe was surprised when someone crashed into the middle of the street, his arms flailing unceremoniously when the subsequent shockwave nearly knocked him off his feet. Pointing a finger at the figure crouching within the smoke rising from the newly formed crater, his anger rising at the unexpected interference, he furiously demanded, "Yo! Who the hell do you think you are interruptin' my fight?!"

The midnight black over coat clasped around her shoulders fluttered dramatically in the pouring rain as Mako Mankanshoku energetically leapt onto her feet. She couldn't believe her good luck! Adjusting her black and gold cap as the familiar crimson glow of Life Fibers shone from within her Goku Uniform, the normally carefree and cheerful girl matched Moe's accusatory pose before shouting in return, "Mako Mankanshoku is here to save everyone !"

"... Mako?"

"I'm sorry for interrupting your super important rematch!"

Mako motioned awkwardly with her hands as she pivoted around to face Chad, fully ignoring the confused member of Xcution staring blankly in her direction. Shifting poses with all the grace afforded to her by Mother Nature, she continued without missing a beat, "Lady Satsuki's friend stopped by this morning around breakfast with my new Goku Uniform! But the instructions were really hard to understand! So I decided to just throw them away and hope for the best!"

Chad listened patiently to Mako's... explanation... as flashes of lightning arced overhead, "... so everything worked out then?"

"That's right! My shirt's no longer inside out and I remember to wear underwear this time!"

Her geta stomped against the street as she turned around to Moe Shishigawara, the green reed in her mouth shifting with every overdramatic syllable. Folding her arms over her chest, the golden brass knuckles emblazoned with her name glistening in the rain, she huffed at the confused member of Xcution as thunder rolled through the skies, "Mako Mankanshoku is fully dressed and ready to fight! With my new and improved Goku Uniform I will save Ichigo's hometown from Ryuko's mom!"

"HA! This is some kind of joke, right?"

Moe Shishigawara couldn't help but mock Mako for her fearless stupidity in the face of overwhelming odds. It was incredible. She actually believed her Two-Star Goku Uniform had the slightest chance of standing against his raiment, stitched personally by the Grand Couturier? It would take someone wearing a Kamui or Yoruichi Shihoin, who somehow managed to fight the Grand Couturier and live, to kick his ass! Smirking as the abrupt change in fortune, he shifted into another kickboxing stance.

It seemed luck was finally back on his side.

"Yo! Unless that ugly as hell Goku Uniform is actually a Kamui, you don't have a chance of defeatin' me," Moe boasted confidently, jabbing a thumb against his chest, "But consider yourself lucky! Right now I'm busy settling the score with Chad. So why don't you run away and maybe I won't kick your ass."

"Mako Mankanshoku refuses to run away!"

Mako motioned enthusiastically to herself, Chad and finally the surrounding buildings as she ignored every word that came out of Moe Shishigawara's mouth, "I refuse to let Ryuko's mom destroy Ichigo's hometown! He lives here! And it's a really nice place! My family has a house with a working refrigerator and everything! That is why I will step in for Chad! I won't let you hurt any more of Ichigo's awesome friends! Not when they spent most of their time rescuing each other over and over again!"

The green reed falling out of her mouth as she posed dramatically in the rain, Mako finished her speech by pointing at her increasingly perplexed opponent, "So a delinquent like you, who is working for a horrible woman like Ryuko's mom, cannot defeat me! Not when I have a date with Gamagori at the movies tomorrow!"

"Hey! You take that back about Lady Ragyo!"

It no longer mattered if Mako Mankanshoku's cheap and second-hand Goku Uniform couldn't measure up to his Loterie Raiment. He didn't even care that she called him a delinquent right to his face. Nobody, especially not a human, walked away after calling Lady Ragyo such demeaning names! Maybe a few broken bones and ruptured organs would teach Mako a lesson about respect.

Multicolored spiritual energy gathered around his fist as he furiously rushed Mako, intent on transforming the girl into a bloody smear on the ground, "Take this! Météore Grève!"

"MAKO CATCH!"

With an almost casual display of reflexes bordering on indifference Mako caught Moe Shishigawara's haymaker, her Goku Uniform rustling heavily as the subsequent explosion tore through the street. Holding onto her black cap for dear life as the super powerful punch sent tickling shivers racing down her spine, the street under her feet shattering in a cute pattern that reminded her of Art Club, she ignored her opponent's astonished expression to focus on something more interesting. Such as whether she was always this strong. Mako blinked in confusion as Moe pushed more spiritual energy into his punch, desperately trying to break her hand. She remembered Ryuko putting up a better fight when she went nuts with power at Honnouji Academy. But Ryuko hadn't been using Senketsu's full power at the time. But on the other hand...

"The hell..."

Moe's mind screeched to an undignified halt when Mako Mankanshoku caught his punch like it was nothing. His eyes widening in astonishment when he tried breaking every bone in her hand only to realize he couldn't, he bent over nearly to the ground when Mako pulled a golden wrench out of her Goku Uniform and threw it at his face. All right, he remembered reading about that little ability of the Fight Club Goku Uniform. But how the hell did she block a punch from his Loterie raiment without breaking any bones in her arm? It would take someone wearing a Kamui to negate the special ability of his raiment. Even Chad's awesome armor couldn't withstand his punches! And she stopped his Météore Grève without even breaking a sweat?

"Damn it... I guess you hit the jackpot..."

Snorting as the multicolored light permeating his raiment intensified, Moe didn't give Mako Mankanshoku time to argue before unleashing a rapid series of punches and kicks. Maybe he was exaggerating the issue. After all, a lot of people at Revocs said he tended to get overexcited. Besides, the Grand Couturier managed to block his punches all the time when she tested his raiment. There was not a chance in hell a Goku Uniform could stand against something woven by the Grand Couturier. The girl was probably just lucky, nothing more. But everyone's luck had limits. He just needed to keep up the pressure.

It was the perfect -

"ATATATATATATATATATA!"

The repetitive sound echoed through the drenched streets as Mako Mankanshoku countered his punches and kicks, her shouting only stopping when she declared, "Ryuko and Ichigo are counting on Lady Satsuki to protect this town! And Lady Satsuki actually asked me - Mako Mankanshoku - to help out! So I won't let you or Ryuko's mom destroy this town!"

Moe Shishigawara's eyebrow twitched in growing frustration as the other teenager continued matching him blow for blow. What the hell was going on? The information Lady Ragyo downloaded from the Sewing Club said that Mako Mankanshoku's uniform granted her superior strength and speed compared to every other Two-Star Goku Uniform, maybe enough to fight against regalia. But this power was unreal! It was absurd that she was still standing against him! If he didn't know better, he would almost think Mako was wearing something greater than regalia. But that was freaking impossible!

"Alright! Now I'm seriously pissed off!"

Stumbling when Mako jumped into the air, her spiked geta digging into his shoulders, Moe spun around and shouted, "What kind of Goku Uniform are you wearing? How the hell are you counterin' my Loterie Raiment?!"

"Because the numbers don't make sense!"

Mako darted forward in the middle of her defiant proclamation and smashed her emblazoned brass knuckles against Moe Shishigawara's hastily crossed arms. One foot tucked against her back, tongue pressed against the inside of her cheek when the Xcution member remained standing, she was completely oblivious to the spiritual pressure tearing through the street as she pushed even more power into her punch.

"And everyone knows that luck fails against math!"

A resounding bang rang loudly in her head when Moe Shishigawara suddenly went bouncing down the road, his raiment cracked and damaged. Huffing proudly at the results from her hard work, she raised her fist and announced, "The proof stands for itself! Luck is for idiots who don't know how the world works!"

"... the hell's going on?"

Moe sneered as he deftly leapt back onto his feet, the cracks spreading across his raiment's armor glowing with a dangerous multicolored light. All right, he was done messing around with this girl! Dealing with Chad could wait. Right now all he wanted, needed, to do was beat Mako Mankanshoku's ass halfway to Honnouji Academy! Smirking when Mako rushed forward, a golden wrench held firmly in her fingers, he braced himself for the attack. He just needed to wait for the brief opening in her defenses, the one moment when her guard was done. The instant she swung that wrench at his face would be when he -

"MAKO HOME RUN DERBY!"

Every pane of glass in a three-block radius shattered when Mako passionately swung a golden baseball bat squarely into Moe Shishigawara's left temple, the resulting impact sending an explosive boom ricocheting across Karakura Town. His vision swimming from the blow in the brief moment before he was sent flying upwards into the rain, his body crashing into and through several dozen COVERS, Moe gnashed his bloody teeth when Mako appeared overhead, her left leg extended nearly to her shoulder.

Like hell he was going to let her pull off a combo!

Although his left eye was forced closed by the blood oozing down his face, the splitting headache disrupting his concentration, Moe Shishigawara wasn't down for the count! He took more damage sparring against the Grand Couturier than anything this... human... could dish out! Sneering viciously as he prepared to counter her attack, his entire body froze when he noticed the three additional stars stitched across the back of her Goku Uniform.

She was wearing a fucking raiment?!

Stiffening when Chad appeared out of nowhere, crackling arcs of electricity gathered in his left hand, Moe cursed under his breath.

"Oh shit..."

---

...

---

"Then by all means try to kill me."

Whatever amusement Ragyo Kiryuin still felt vanished at the boorish man's frustrating boast. Was he purposely attempting to provoke her into ending his pathetic life? Yet it was the growing disgust in the back of her mind that currently preoccupied her attention. For some inexplicable reason she had the strangest desire to savagely tear the man apart, to watch his blood mix with the falling rain. But Ragyo refused to listen to her instincts. This insignificant man was nothing more than a pest, an ant compared to giants. Giving him the pleasure of eliciting such an embarrassing reaction would be tantamount to declaring they were equals.

It was a ludicrous notion.

But that didn't mean she would allow his foolish taunts to go unpunished.

"La vie est drôle. You seem to be under the assumption that you have the ability to defeat me."

Despite her opponent's wry smirk Ragyo found her attention flickering toward her petulant daughter crouched against a fallen tree. That was another reason she despised the man. His interference in their private, familial matters prevented her from Mentally Refitting both Satsuki and Junketsu, molding their minds to her will before unleashing them upon Karakura Town. Watching her eldest daughter destroy her allies, ripping them apart without hesitation, would have been marvelous . Yet the man's offhanded mention of Kisque Urahara ruined that transitory period of boredom, replacing it with unadulterated hatred .

Merely thinking about that blasphemous man, who dared to enter the Original Life Fiber's sacred chamber, made her briefly reconsider whether she should have personally dealt with him instead of sending dearest Nui and Amu.

"Which is why I must question your sanity," Ragyo's heel clacked loudly against the air when she stopped across from the man, her fingers caressing the hardened Life Fiber weapon she confiscated from Isshin's clumsy hands. She might loathe Kisque Urahara with every fiber of her being for having the audacity to create a Kamui and thinking he could seal away the Original Life Fiber, but Ragyo refused to underestimate the shopkeeper. Not again . His ability to weave Life Fibers made him one of the most dangerous people on the planet.

Caution was required when dealing with anything involving Kisque Urahara, a man who learned the deepest secrets of Life Fibers.

"For just how do you plan on stopping me?"

Ragyo snarled at her opponent's utter lack of concern, his tenuous connection to Kisque Urahara the only thing staying her hand, "Contrary to what you might believe, I can feel your disgusting and abominable, not to mention weak, power. You're not human... nor are you a Quincy. And you're certainly nothing like that annoyance of a vampire."

Bright flashes of lightning illuminated the park in shifting hues of white and purple as her tone darkened, "From your suicidal fermeté I presume Kisuke Urahara invented yet another annoying Anti-Life Fiber weapon, created when he wasn't busy defiling Life Fibers."

"That's an interesting choice of words, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Sosuke Aizen wasn't perturbed in the slightest by Ragyo's monstrous spiritual energy. While stronger than anticipated, which was yet another consequence of Isshin Kurosaki's abject failure to put aside emotions and save humanity, fretting over something so trivial was nothing more than a waste of time. Beads of water dripping from Kyouka Suigetsu's blade, he looked at the pinpricks of crimson light floating over Karakura Town, "Defiling, that is. A man like Kisuke Urahara, who created both Kamui and hardened Life Fiber blades, isn't the sort of person to defile Life Fibers. Rather, he did far more with them than you believed possible, simply because his research was approached from a philosophical point of view. He didn't understand the underlying truth behind Life Fibers nor their connection to the Original Life Fiber, which allowed him to achieve remarkable feats."

"But perhaps I'm reading too much into your response," Aizen swept his arm forward and smirked at the Kiryuin matriarch's darkening expression, "It's equally likely your disdain is the result of nothing more than envy."

"Envy?"

Isshin's blade quivered between Ragyo's fingers at the flagrant insult. How dare this insignificant speck of a man suggest she was envious of Kisuke Urahara! That shopkeeper might have stumbled across the secret to weaving Kamui, a feat her failure of a husband couldn't achieve without copying Junketsu, but that was nothing compared to the divine knowledge possessed by those chosen by the Original Life Fiber!

"Hardly."

Ragyo accentuated the word with an arrogant scoff, her demeanor returning to relative normalcy at the lies spewing forth from the man's mouth, "While his knowledge on Life Fibers far exceeds my pathetic husband's, it still pales in comparison to my own."

"Now back to the matter at hand..."

The pealing of thunder deafened Karakura Town as Ragyo raised her sword until it was perfectly mirroring her opponent's stance, "I'm quite the busy woman, so I'm afraid whatever you're planning is doomed to fail. Please give my regards to Kiske Urahara... after dearest Nui and Amu send him to the deepest reaches of Hell."

"Since when were you under the assumption that my plan hasn't already started?"

Aizen swept his arm outward, the gesture obtaining the desired result when Ragyo Kiryuin's expression tightened fractionally, "You're already aware of Kiske Urahara's intelligence and abilities. What makes you believe all of this isn't part of his plan? Your monstrous power is well known, after all. So perhaps you are correct, Ragyo Kiryuin. Perhaps I was given an Anti-Life Fiber weapon created to kill a Life Fiber Hybrid of your caliber. Or maybe I'm simply stalling for time, waiting until the proper moment to unleash my full power."

Lightning flashed across the skies as Aizen finished with a calm flourish, "On the other hand, perhaps my objective is convincing you I'm not worth the effort, leaving you vulnerable to the Anti-Life Fiber countermeasures I activated before arriving. "

Ragyo's eyes narrowed as she searched for any sign of deceit from the boastful shinigami. She highly doubted even someone like Kiske Urahara could have anticipated her actions to such an extent. It was far more likely the shopkeeper placed Anti-Life Fiber traps throughout Karakura Town in preparation for any number of scenarios, which meant this annoyance of a man was either a terrific liar... or he wasn't bluffing. But a simple sweep of the burnt landscape, wisps of white smoke still rising despite the pouring rain, assuaged any lingering doubts that the man wasn't lying.

There were only a handful of things that could withstand the destructive power of a Bleach Bomb... and crude inventions made by human hands weren't on that list.

"It's insulting that you thought I would fall for such an obvious bluff," Ragyo closed her eyes and chuckled, the corners of her mouth curling into a sadistic smirk, "But I'm afraid that your excuses hold no weight. You claim that Kisuke Urahara buried Anti-Life Fiber traps throughout Karakura Town? While that may be true... nothing created by human hands could survive the full majesty of a Bleach Bomb. Now..."

Spiritual pressure exploded from Ragyo as she opened her eyes, "... I think you've wasted just about enough of my time."

In a single step she closed the distance between herself and the man, Isshin's hardened Life Fiber sword arcing towards his neck. Yet to her astonishment not only did the shinigami's own weapon interject itself at the last second, it also stopped her attack without shattering. As her arm quivered from the unexpected arresting of her momentum, multicolored sparks of spiritual energy dancing through the rain, Ragyo glowered when the man spoke with only the barest traces of strain.

"How disappointing..."

Aizen smirked at the Kiryuin matriarch despite the bead of sweat dripping down his cheek. With one hand pressed against Kyouka Suigetsu, the additional strength helping to counter the power of her hardened Life Fiber blade, he strategically retreated when his opponent angrily increased her spiritual energy. Bounding away from the woman, his boots stepping on platforms of solidified air, he ignored the minute cracks tarnishing his zanpakuto, "Did you believe such a shallow strike would be enough to -"

Ragyo Kiryuin was upon him before he finished the question.

Blood sprayed through the rain when her initial strike cut deeply into his shoulder. Zanpakuto clashing fervently against hardened Life Fiber blade as he parried and countered Ragyo Kiryuin's assault, every ounce of his concentration focused on deflecting her attacks, Aizen was forced to constantly use Shunpo to stay ahead of her movements. He couldn't help but feel as if he underestimated the woman, a notion bolstered by the growing cracks across Kyouka Suigetsu. The Kiryuin matriarch was a much different... and stronger... woman from seventeen years ago.

This... might be a problem.

"You seem fond of that particular style of swordsmanship, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Aizen grunted when the Kiryuin matriarch slammed the appropriated weapon against Kyouka Suigetsu, the force immediately shattering the ground underneath his feet. Subtly noting Satsuki Kiryuin standing some distance away, her attention focused entirely upon her mother's ferocious assault, he pleasantly inquired, "I'm assuming from your current posture and altered stance you're aware of the three openings in your guard?"

"Au contraire, my dear man..."

Ragyo smirked as she flexed her fingers around the hardened Life Fiber blade, more than doubling the strength pressing against the man's sword. It was time she finished this farce of a fight. Her silver hair shimmering brightly when the shinigami's guard collapsed under the strain, spurts of blood spraying in the rain from the wound cutting across his chest, Ragyo took sadistic pleasure at the insolent man's pathetic attempt to escape before vanishing . One leg arcing gracefully upwards as she reappeared in front of the shinigami, hints of concern in his eyes, she frowned when he leaned sideways, the fingers on his left hand gently pushing against her ankle.

Maroon eyes narrowing when the man used his annoying technique to disappear into the wind, Ragyo waited until the tip of his blade was pressing against her spine before pirouetting around and catching his zanpakuto in her hand. Drawing pleasure from her opponent's astonished expression, his disbelief at failing to scratch her skin causing a shiver to race down her back, Ragyo smirked savagely before smashing her knee straight into his stomach.

"... I have no openings against someone as weak as you!"

There was a tense moment of absolute silence before a deafening boom reverberated across what remained of Tsubakidai Park. Multicolored stars twinkling brightly in the rain as his body contorted painfully around Ragyo Kiryuin's knee, Aizen's vision briefly faded to darkness when he found himself propelled skyward by the sheer physical strength contained in the attack. Forcefully snapping his attention downwards when he sensed a massive amount of spiritual energy collecting at one point, the traitorous shinigami stiffened at the rainbow light coalescing above the Kiryuin matriarch's finger.

"Lumière Divine."

Ragyo's silver hair whipped frenziedly as the gathered energy enveloped the petulant man, wiping him from existence in an explosion of multicolored light. Smoothing a small crease on her dress when a supersonic blast echoed throughout Karakura Town, dispelling the hazy smoke and allowing her to see that the shinigami was indeed dead, she sighed deeply and in great contentment, "Only a fool would dare stand against one chosen by the Original Life Fiber."

Her smirk widened maliciously when she sensed Satsuki approaching, the emotions coursing through Junketsu's Life Fibers a welcome change of scenery, "Don't think I've forgotten about you, Satsuki. There's still just enough time to properly introduce you and Junketsu to the pleasures of Life Fibers..."

"Have you forgotten something, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"What?!"

Ragyo gasped when the blade of a man who should already be dead pierced straight through her heart. Wheezing in disbelief as blood spurted from the fresh wound, staining both the ground and her dress crimson, she gnashed her teeth when the foreign object tore itself from her body, cutting open what used to be her lungs in the process. One hand pressed against the gaping wound as she lurched forward, one foot almost touching the muddy soil, the Kiryuin matriarch furiously stopped the embarrassing behavior with a determined clack of her heels.

She refused to grant this insignificant speck of a man any satisfaction.

An intrigued smile stretched across Sosuke Aizen's features when the woman's body knitted itself back together, normally lethal wounds regenerating in seconds. Calmly flicking the blood staining Kyouka Suigetsu onto the drenched soil, the traitorous shinigami ignored the copious amount of crimson oozing from his stump of a left arm, "I didn't anticipate such a powerful technique. Without my zanpakuto's special ability I would have lost more than simply my left arm."

"Zanpakuto?"

The splatters of blood tarnishing her immaculate dress vanished as Ragyo gracefully stood at her full majesty. Slowly turning around to face the shinigami, she purposely downplayed her irritation with his continued survival under an annoyed scoff, "The Grand Couturier mentioned Kisuke Urahara's weapon transforming into a more powerful state. Shall I presume your zanpakuto can do the same?"

Aizen shrugged at the question, his eyes never leaving the Kiryuin matriarch, "It's an admittedly pretentious name for a weapon but one that successfully encompasses its purpose."

"Your delusional hopes of victory are refreshing."

A disappointed scoff left Ragyo Kiryuin's slightly parted lips as she tucked a strand of silver hair behind her ear, "However your prétendu zanpakuto appears to be damaged. Did you honestly think your inferior weapon could stand against a hardened Life Fiber blade? Your words are nothing more than empty threats. So I'm afraid despite your admittedly amusing efforts this battle has just about come to an end..."

Heels clacked sharply against platforms of spiritual energy as Ragyo sauntered away from the shinigami, her attention momentarily falling upon her rebellious daughter. There wasn't any reason to continue wasting time fighting the annoying man. His strength might have been more than she expected from someone not blessed by the Original Life Fiber but he was an insect compared to her greatness. He could stab her heart hundreds... no, thousands... of times with his zanpakuto, yet the result would never change. While he might have survived the glorious power of her Lumière Divine, a feat she still couldn't comprehend, it was only a matter of time until he bled to death.

Which meant she could focus her attention upon more important matters.

"Your tenacity is impressive but I've lost any interest in continuing this farce of a battle."

Ragyo punctuated her response by casually flicking Isshin's sword lengthwise across her body, removing the last traces of the man's filthy blood from the beautiful weapon. Noticing her daughter's expression of utmost fury, deep blue eyes burning with unbridled hatred, she nearly sighed at the unfolding tragedy. She had so been looking forward to spending some quality 'mother and daughter' time with Satsuki, "But I do have a schedule to keep... and killing a half-dead man and my failure of a daughter is rather low on the itinerary."

"This rain is quite nostalgic, Ragyo Kiryuin..."

A thin stream of blood oozed from Aizen's mouth as he stared into the pouring rain, his smirk widening when the Kiryuin matriarch stopped midstride, "Most people would find such weather boring and meaningless. Yet I cannot help but reminisce about a particularly tempestuous evening seventeen years ago."

Spiritual pressure, far more than anything previously unleashed, blanketed the decimated park, driving the air from Satsuki's lungs while subsequently forcing her onto her knees. The multicolored light radiating from her silver hair dimming slightly, Ragyo Kiryuin's hate-filled eyes were focused completely upon the shinigami as a single word escaped her clenched lips.

"What?"

"I was present the night you kidnapped Ichigo Kurosaki, transforming him into an artificial Life Fiber Hybrid," Aizen motioned with his remaining hand, entirely unconcerned by the oppressive spiritual pressure, "I witnessed everything that transpired... including your fascinating battle with Masaki Kurosaki."

Flashes of lightning illuminated Tsubakidai Park as Ragyo clenched her twitching hands, perfectly manicured fingernails threatening to pierce her skin, "Anecdotal evidence suggests your disdain for the woman arose from losing Isshin Kurosaki. But I find such an explanation insufficient. Your hatred of Masaki Kurosaki cannot be attributed to affection. That you lost the only man who could possibly understand your feelings was merely an excuse to conceal the true motivations behind your contempt."

"So one must ask - why do you loathe Masaki Kurosaki?"

The traitorous captain's condescending smirk widened with every word, "By all accounts the woman was friendly and understanding. Why would the CEO of Revocs, known through the world for her patience and self-control, focus her efforts upon something so trivial?"

Ragyo furiously gnashed her teeth when the man had the audacity to close his eyes, the damnable smirk never faltering, "I'm sure you know the reason, Ragyo Kiryuin. On that night seventeen years ago, hours after you kidnapped Ichigo Kurosaki, Masaki Kurosaki not only fought you... she defeated you."

"That seemingly ordinary woman destroyed the feelings of superiority woven into your mind by the Original Life Fiber," Aizen calmly observed the blood oozing from the upper half of his missing arm before continuing, "After all, a resounding defeat at the hands of someone you considered completely powerless is quite humbling. But that's still not why you hate Masaki Kurosaki. You despise her because she permanently scarred your otherwise flawless body."

"Ichigo's mother was the cause?"

The auburn Scissor Blade stabbed deeply into the muddy soil as Satsuki Kiryuin watched the shinigami slowly circle counterclockwise around her mother. Two months ago she would have thought such an assertion ludicrous, the unsubstantiated product of an unstable mind. Yet everything she witnessed since Ichigo and Ryuko arrived at Honnouji Academy - from the events of the Raid Trip to the unique abilities possessed by Ichigo's allies - had forced her to discard that limited point of view. She was intimately aware of the seven star-shaped scars marring her mother's back, their origin a point of interest since the day she grew aware of Ragyo Kiryuin's inhuman madness.

To think the woman Ichigo's father constantly recounted with reverence was the source of her mother's only shame.

"It must be a terrible feeling, Ragyo Kiryuin," Aizen grinned as he stood across from the barely contained woman, "To know the immense strength bestowed upon you by the Original Life Fiber wasn't enough to best a single Quincy. Even now, with your spiritual pressure leagues greater than seventeen years ago, that ignominious defeat still dictates your every -"

"You insolent man..."

Kyouka Suigetsu shattered, splinters of metal shimmering madly in the rain, when Ragyo closed the distance to the treacherous shinigami in a single step, hardened Life Fiber weapon cleaving through both flesh and zanpakuto with very little effort. As an astonished gasp escaped Aizen's mouth at the sight of his severed right arm, the limb cleanly sliced just below the elbow, he lurched forward when the Kiryuin matriarch stabbed her left hand through his heart.

An eruption of spiritual pressure momentarily dispelled the rain as Ragyo callously hefted the skewered shinigami into the air. Glaring venomously at the defeated man, his disgusting blood dripping from her splayed fingers like water, her sneer lessened into a cruel smirk, "Did you honestly believe I would allow to you bluster without consequence?"

Twisting her arm inside his body, which elicited a pained grunt from the man, she chuckled as lightning flashed overhead, "I'll admit your psychological ploy nearly worked but what did you really accomplish? You sacrificed your life to waste several minutes of my valuable time. And now you're nothing more than a broken and dying man, unable to stand against the power of Life Fibers. There is still more than enough time to retrieve what I came to this pathetic city for in the place."

"So that's the reason you attacked Karakura Town..."

The agonizing pain in Aizen's voice disappeared as he smirked at the Kiryuin matriarch, "How truly... fascinating."

Ragyo's eyes widened in disbelieving shock when the wounded shinigami shimmered before shattering, leaving her standing alone in the middle of Tsubakidai Park. What was going on? Focusing her attention upon her arm, which lacked the slightest trace of the man's filthy blood, the Kiryuin matriarch found herself at a loss for words when she attempted sensing his disgusting power only to realize it was gone . She couldn't detect anything ! But that was impossible! She severed both his arms... destroyed his pretentiously named zanpakuto! For the man to have vanished he would need to -

A pulse of spiritual energy drew Ragyo from her thoughts.

How had she missed that as well?

Heels clacking loudly upon platforms of solidified spiritual energy as she turned around, lips pulled into a frustrated snarl, Ragyo froze when she saw a perfectly healthy and uninjured Sosuke Aizen standing across the scorched field, "How did..."

"You seem flustered, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Aizen's cloak rustled chaotically as he pointed his left arm at the Kiryuin matriarch, palm held perpendicular to the ground, "But I suppose that's the expected reaction. Hado Number Ninety Nine - Goryutenmetsu."

Ragyo took an uncharacteristic step backwards when an ephemeral dragon composed of blistering spiritual energy burst out of the ground, flashes of intense lightning arcing violently from its snake-like body. Scoffing under her breath as the ground shattered around her feet, pillars of unstable earth rising upwards, she stared at the insignificant man as multicolored spiritual energy enveloped her body. While the attack didn't possess even the slightest chance of killing her, only a fool would allow their opponent to hit them with something of that magnitude.

As she prepared to leap away, to wait in the shadows until the man exhausted himself on this pointless attack, the Kiryuin matriarch was caught completely off guard when twin bands of yellow light encircled her ankles, forcibly preventing her from moving.

"What is this?!"

"Those are special Anti-Life Fiber anklets, created by weaving several high-level Bakudo into their design," Aizen replied without hesitation, a sense of nostalgia in his voice, "But if you're looking to blame someone, might I suggest Kisuke Urahara? After all, they are his invention."

Ragyo didn't have the chance to respond when the spiritual dragon rushed forward with a deafening roar, its body curling through the rain. Raising Isshin's hardened Life Fiber blade just before the technique slammed into her body, she screamed as the subsequent explosion enveloped Tsubakidai Park in a burst of light.

---

...

---

"Hup!"

In a flurry of nearly imperceptible strikes the entrance to the Urahara Shop exploded inwards, showering the front of the store with large splinters of wood. Singing softly to herself as she cheerfully sauntered into the abandoned building, streams of water dripping from her blonde pigtails with every bouncing step, Nui Harime stared in disappointment at the rows of familiar merchandise lining the darkened shelves, "Golly, I was expecting something new and exciting. But it looks like absolutely nothing has changed!"

The floorboards creaked underneath her pink boots as the Grand Couturier stood in the middle of the empty store, inquisitive sapphire eyes searching for anything strange or out of the ordinary. Looking curiously over her shoulder when Lady Ragyo's presence pulsed through Karakura Town, her emotions as apparent as her beautiful hair, Nui Harime was torn from her boredom by a very interesting question, one that required her full and undivided attention.

"Gee... now who could be stupid enough to seriously annoy Lady Ragyo?"

Nui curled her manicured fingers through the handle of the Needle Blade as she pondered the abstract question. There were very few people on this miserable planet that Lady Ragyo would give the time of day, let alone use anything close to her full strength. The first person that came to mind was the old goat... but that was impossible! She not only watched the Bleach Bomb stitched into Hououmaru's raiment with love by Lady Ragyo explode point-blank in his face - she also felt it! No way the old goat was recovering from a blast like that any time soon! That left only Satsuki...

She nearly slapped herself for even thinking something so utterly ridiculous. As if Lady Ragyo would ever waste the time and effort killing someone so pathetic!

"I wonder where that cowardly shopkeeper could be hiding..."

With a cute yet dignified pout the Grand Couturier returned her attention to the task at hand, blonde pigtailed bouncing with every step. She didn't have any time to daydream about the fun and interesting punishments Lady Ragyo was giving Satsuki and Junketsu. There were far more important things to worry about... such as torturing Kisuke Urahara for kidnapping Amu and brainwashing her into believing she was nothing more than a pathetic and worthless human.

The nerve of some humans!

Tucking the purple Needle Blade behind her back as she walked down an aisle, eyes scanning every darkened corner for the source of her irritation, Nui hummed thoughtfully, "Could he be... huh?"

The front half of the Urahara Shop disintegrated in an explosion of crimson red flames when the Grand Couturier stepped into the middle of the intricate seal carved into the floor. As pieces of smoldering wood and metal rained down onto the drenched neighborhood, car alarms merged into an incoherent cacophony from the shock wave, Nui Harime emerged from the sneak attack smiling widely, not a single speck of dirt blemishing her cute pink dress.

"Now that was new and exciting!"

One leg curled against the hem of her dress when rain began pouring through the new hole in the ceiling, Nui giggled softly at the intimately familiar presence tickling in the back of her mind, "This might actually be interesting, don't you think?"

Puddles of water splashed beneath purple boots, identical in almost every fashion to her sister's, as Amu Harime walked into the partially destroyed store. Her duplicate Needle Blade held delicately in her fingers, she looked silently around the burning building before setting upon the floor, "I can sense Kisuke Urahara. He's..."

"... right underneath our feet," Nui finished with a cheerful flourish, sapphire eyes focusing on the somehow intact door leading to the back of the store, "It's really polite he's waiting for us in his super secret laboratory, you know! I thought we'd have to chase him down... getting involved in boring and predictable fights in the process..."

"... and upsetting Lady Ragyo when he fakes his death a second time," Amu concluded, ignoring the rain trickling down the back of her neck. It would be troublesome if they allowed Kisuke Urahara to escape, especially after all the horrible things he did to Lady Ragyo and the Original Life Fiber. A small tremor coursing through her fingers as lightning flashed in the heavens, Amu Harime looked at her sister and asked, "So what do you want to do to him first?"

"Hmm..."

Nui blinked owlishly at the question, one finger tapping cutely against her chin despite knowing exactly what her sister was thinking. Boy, sometimes she could be awfully envious of her sister's vivid imagination. Tilting her head sideways, blonde pigtails bouncing from the movement, she lowered her hand and smiled, "That's a really good question! Do you think we should start with his arms or legs?"

"Legs," Amu answered, her attention briefly drawn towards a burst of spiritual pressure in the distance, "We don't want him running away again."

"Good point!"

The Grand Couturier swept the Needle Blade around her body, the hardened Life Fiber weapon effortlessly slicing through several shelves, and pouted, "But I don't think Lady Ragyo wants us to waste too much time torturing Kisuke Urahara. While I really want to make him suffer, there are other things we need to do before leaving!"

"We should be careful," Amu stoically chastised her sister, who stuck her tongue out childishly in retaliation, "His knowledge on Life Fibers is dangerous. He did weave a Kamui like Junketsu, after all. Kisuke Urahara might be an annoying man but..."

"... underestimating him would be really stupid. Gosh, it's almost like you forgot what happened the last time I fought the man," Nui joked as she skipped behind the register, gripped the door with her manicured fingers and ripped the reinforced metal off its hinges, narrowly missing her unflinching sister as the bent frame crashed into the building across the street.

A tense breath left the Grand Couturier's lips as she cautiously strolled into the former living quarters, the bedrooms and kitchen having long been converted into a storage facility for Nudist Beach's Anti-Life Fiber weaponry. She couldn't believe her sister once lived in such squalor. It was disgusting! Frowning as she lightly kicked a metal box, the power enough to send it flying across the room, Nui's fingers curled tightly into a fist. That settled it! She was going to torture Kisuke Urahara until he couldn't even scream for mercy. And then she would make him suffer .

Nobody treats her sister like a pathetic human.

"This is new..."

Amu, only superficially aware of her sister's rampaging emotions, stared inquisitively at the elevator sitting in the middle of the living room. How odd... Nui hadn't mentioned this in her report to Lady Ragyo. Perhaps Kisuke Urahara constructed it after her sister nearly killed him? Her expression etched into an emotionless facade as she effortlessly sliced through the equipment, shards of metal and plastic bouncing harmlessly against her skin, she watched the lift fall into the dark abyss stretching below and muttered, "I can sense him..."

The Grand Couturier entwined her fingers with Amu's, an unnerving smile on her face, "So let's not keep that annoying man waiting even a second longer!"

Without another word the sisters leapt into the darkness, drill-like pigtails fluttering lightly in the rushing wind as they breached the secret underground training room. Simultaneously holding one hand against the hem of their dresses for decency as the ground rapidly approached, pupils dilating in the artificial sunlight permeating the chamber, they waited until the last second before flipping forward, Needle Blades flashing into existence as their boots tapped softly against the floor with nary a sound.

"How odd..."

Nui Harime ignored the expensive equipment scattered across the newly converted Nudist Beach underground base as she searched for Kisuke Urahara, her expression growing darker when she couldn't sense the man. Looking over her shoulder at Amu, who was equally annoyed with the shopkeeper's cowardice, she pouted, "Can you sense -"

"Greetings and salutations, valued customers!"

Sitting comfortably in a very familiar chair perched upon one of the few remaining outcroppings of rock he successfully convinced Olivier Mira Armstrong not to destroy, megaphone in one hand and Benihime's released form in the other, Kishie Urahara waved enthusiastically at the two slightly annoyed teenagers. Raising the megaphone back to his mouth when the spiritual pressure began increasing, he cheerfully continued without missing a beat, "If I knew the Grand Couturier of Revocs wanted to pay my humble shop another visit I would have ordered Yoruichi to clean up the place. And it looks like you brought a new friend! How very interesting... not to mention exciting! But I'm afraid your rambunctiousness is too much for me to handle! So please vacate the premises or I'll be forced to call the police!"

"Humph! We weren't born yesterday, you know!"

Nui smirked at the atrocious man despite the undying hatred bubbling deep within her soul, "As if we're just going to let you escape! Not when..."

"... you need to die," Amu stoically finished the moment her sister trailed off, lips curling into a smile at Kishie Urahara's growing frown, "Do you think your tricks are going to work this time? It took everything you had to escape my sister. And we've gotten a lot stronger thanks to Lady Ragyo. So there's only one thing we're really curious about..."

The Grand Couturier grinned at the shopkeeper, purposely drawing his full attention, before vanishing in a burst of speed alongside her sister. Crossing the immense distance between them in the blink of an eye before a flash of purple severed Kishie Urahara's right arm, the limb flying away in a spray of blood, Nui laughed sadistically when Amu stabbed her own weapon into the annoying man's chest, "Did you honestly believe we'd let you sit around and think of a plan? We're not -"

She blinked in confusion, a surprised gasp leaving her mouth, when the dying shopkeeper's body suddenly inflated before popping, showering them with pieces of colored plastic and clothing. Her ears ringing when the sudden shift in momentum caused the Needle Blades to scratch against the chair, the hardened Life Fiber weapons leaving jagged streaks of sparks yet failing to damage the strange material, Nui furiously gnashed her teeth. What just happened?! There's no way that annoying man managed to avoid their attacks! She saw muscles and bone when she severed his arm!

So why... why did he explode like an overinflated balloon?!

Blonde pigtailed bouncing as she landed next to Amu, her sister's growing frustration with the shopkeeper added to her own tempestuous emotions, the Grand Couturier twitched when a familiar voice yelled encouragingly in the distance, "Great coordination! If I wasn't this handsome and smart I surely would have been killed by your impressive teamwork!"

The former exiled shinigami didn't react when the two sisters launched into another attack. Waiting patiently when the Grand Couturiers charged forward with apparent recklessness and insanity, Kisuke grinned when a crimson barrier of rapidly circulating Life Fibers spun into being repelling their weapons in a display of vibrant colors. Holding a hand against his forehead when the synchronized twins crashed into the ground, their simultaneous impacts kicking up large quantities of dirt and smoke, the shopkeeper couldn't believe his luck.

And to think Isshin said his invention only had a ten percent chance of working!

Walking forward until he reached the edge of the Life Fiber barrier, one hand pressed firmly against the side of his mouth, Kisuke waited until the Grand Couturier emerged relatively unscathed from the rubble before shouting, "I know this might sound cliché and totally familiar... but did you honestly believe I'd let you attack me without having a plan in mind?"

Nui Harime sneered murderously at the shopkeeper as the abrasions blemishing her prim and proper appearance regenerated. She wasn't going to fall for his stupid tricks! Puffing her cheeks at the ridiculousness of the inverted situation, she stabbed the purple Needle Blade into the ground and pouted.

"Gosh! That sounds like something a nerdy know-it-all like you would say!"

She giggled excitedly when an extremely loud boom echoed in the background not a moment later, one leg curled backwards as the Life Fiber barrier protecting Kisuke Urahara from their attacks flickered out of existence, "But it looks like your little barrier wasn't any good! Breaking down after one measly little attack? And you call yourself a scientist?"

"Now that wasn't very nice," Kisuke sighed at the smoking remains of the Life Fiber emitter. It appeared miniaturizing the technology necessary to weave a stable personal Life Fiber barrier remained outside the realm of possibility for the time being.

"After all, I'm just a handsome candy-store owner who researches Life Fibers as a hobby," he ran a hand through his light-blond hair, the familiar bucket hat absent, "But it was still a good test run!"

Kisuke clapped his hands together before looking over his shoulder at the stoic visage of Ururu, a goofy smirk on his face, "So I'm curious about its effectiveness. When you attacked just now, did you experience any negative side effects?"

The subsequent silence, broken only by the dusty wind blowing through the mostly empty underground room, was all he needed to understand how much his deliberately childish and annoying mannerisms bothered Nui Harime and Ururu. From a cursory examination of their spiritual pressure, which possessed a quality unlike anything else, it appeared his previous hypothesis concerning Nui's psychological desire for a family, a dependency that could be attributed to her connection with Ururu, was completely on the mark.

His lips pursed into a frown as he tapped Benihime against the ground, priming the Anti-life Fiber explosives throughout the underground base, Kisuke sighed under his breath.

"But I think that's enough fooling around..."

A serious glint appeared in the shopkeeper's eyes as he focused his attention upon Nui Harime. As the Grand Couturier's expression tightened, rage and fury building underneath her saccharine façade, he slowly raised his zanpakuto, "When Orihime healed your eye back to its original state it appears she also restored your mind and spiritual pressure. Fighting both you and Ururu will be difficult, if not impossible. In fact, I dare say this battle might actually be too much for Benihime to handle."

"However..."

Kisuke didn't flinch when the Grand Couturier stiffened, her fingers twitching at her sister's other name, "I've seen both your fighting style and technique. During our last battle I not only memorized how your doppelgangers fought but also the movements required for summoning them. Every subtle twitch of your muscles when using the Scissor Blade was broken down and studied. Your body might be comprised of Life Fibers but you still move like a human. I've even accounted for the distinct possibility you possess abilities similar to Ragyo Kiryuin - including Mental Refitting."

Staring coldly at the Grand Couturier, her face hidden in shadows, he finished, "This is reality, Nui Harime. There is nothing you can do to surprise me. So I strongly recommend you surrender."

"That was a great speech..."

The shopkeeper frowned when Ururu appeared next to the Grand Couturier, her emotionless sapphire eyes staring into his soul as her sister finished with a condescending smirk, "But gosh, do you hear yourself when you talk? Surrender to you? Boy, you sure have the annoying ability of knowing just how to piss us off! Especially when you're bluffing, you know!"

Leaning against Amu, their cheeks pressed tightly together, she stared intensely at Kisuke, "Like you really intend to use those pesky Anti-Life Fiber bombs on us! There's no way you would dare harm a single hair on my adorable sister's head!"

Kisuke tensed when the Grand Couturier cheerfully called his bluff, an unfortunate reaction that wasn't missed by either sister. As identical smiles pulled at the corners of her lips, the Needle Blades shining brightly in the artificial daylight, Amy tilted her head curiously at the shopkeeper, "We've learned a lot from Lady Ragyo over the last few weeks..."

"... just to kill you!"

Nui Harime laughed as they dashed across the underground chamber towards the infuriating man, his transforming blade ready to counter their attacks. How cute! He honestly thought his strange weapon could stand against Lady Ragyo's special Needle Blades! Leaping upwards while Amu continued forward, their eyes locking for a fraction of a second, she smiled manically at the shopkeeper, "So try not to die too quickly or this won't be fun at all!"

---

...

---

Satsuki Kiryuin couldn't restrain herself from grimacing as the massive eruption of spiritual energy shook the entirety of Tsubakidai Park, the immense shockwave nearly sending her flying backwards. Yet as she stabbed the auburn Scissor Blade into the ground, armored fingers curled around the weapon's handle while Junketsu's heels dug sharply into the muddy soil, the intelligence her mother praised, the mannerisms she was forced to learn, focused upon one point of contention. It was a simple notion, born out of necessary paranoia.

What abilities did this shinigami's zanpakuto possess?

Her brow creased into a perplexed frown at the pertinent question. The proper name of the weapon used by shinigami - the spiritual soldiers protecting the Soul Society and World of the Living from Hollows and other supernatural creatures - was familiar, a foregone conclusion given the unique population of Karakura Town. Kisuke Urahara had demonstrated the initial release of his zanpakuto during their single training session, a phrase he called 'Shikai.' Zanpakuto were truly remarkable weapons. And given their versatility, the shopkeeper's detailed explanation of their abilities and the events that recently transpired, only one conclusion explained her mother's erratic behavior.

His zanpakuto could confound one's senses, tricking them into attacking illusions.

What else could explain why Ragyo Kiryuin, a woman capable of detecting a single errant stitch in an otherwise perfect article of clothing, attacked and conversed with someone who didn't exist?

Scowling when she attempted to contact the Elite Four only to realize the receiver in her ear was gone, destroyed during her mother's assault, Satsuki reflexively removed the Scissor Blade from its unconventional scabbard when the shinigami appeared at her side, his body blurring into existence. As lightning flashed through the skies, painting the rain with streaks of purple, she held her tongue when he politely inquired, "Your Kamui is rather extraordinary. From the subtle distinctions in its spiritual presence I'm assuming Ragyo Kiryuin's Life Fibers were used to create it?"

An unexplainable sensation of disgust pulsed through Junketsu's threads at the man's close proximity, the intensity of the emotions enough to penetrate the barrier between the Kamui and her mind. Noting the Kamui's rampant distrust of the shinigami, the minute writhing of her Life Fibers growing somewhat uncomfortable, Satsuki begrudgingly responded, "Your assistance against my mother is appreciated... Sosuke Aizen."

The formerly unnamed shinigami smirked at the suspicious undertone, "Oh? I'm honestly surprised Ichigo Kurosaki told you about me."

Satsuki frowned at the smugness permeating Sosuke Aizen's incendiary comment. Closing her eyes and breathing deeply as Junketsu reverted from Zenkan in a flash of brilliant blue stars, the exhaustion of maintaining the advanced configuration abating, she ignored Junketsu's unending disgust for the shinigami, "Ichigo and his friends spoke in great detail about his time as a shinigami, including the battles against your arrancar army in Hueco Mundo..."

Pointing the Scissor Blade at the man, its auburn surface shimmering wetly in the rain, she defiantly shouted, "So explain your presence in Karakura Town, Sosuke Aizen!"

"Do you need to ask such a simple question?"

Aizen continued smirking despite the hardened Life Fiber weapon aimed at his heart, "We share the same objective - destroying both Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber. Any reprehensible actions I might have done in the past have no bearing on the present. All that matters is preventing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet from commencing. This, of course, requires your cooperation."

"You may have a point. Perhaps we do share the same goal," Satsuki suppressed an imperceptible shiver when Junketsu's disgust for the shinigami intensified, her Life Fibers rippling against her skin, before steeling her gaze, "But I do not trust you! It does not matter if you're cooperating to defeat my mother! One false step and I will personally end your life!"

"Of course."

The treacherous shinigami smiled at the teenager's spiritual energy - its potency comparable to Ichigo Kurosaki's after preventing Rukia Kuchiki's execution. Returning his attention to the smoke and dust obscuring the Kiryuin matriarch, he brushed imaginary dust off his clothing before calmly adding, "But your trust is not required, Satsuki Kiryuin. Simply know that I have no intention of betraying Nudist Beach or your childhood allies. Furthermore..."

His smirk broadened at the familiar shade of sapphire in Junketsu's multicolored eyes, "It appears Ichigo Kurosaki's Life Fibers have grown quite powerful."

Satsuki stiffened at the underlying meaning behind the shinigami's comment, his condescending expression hinting at the full breadth of his knowledge. But as she pointed the Scissor Blade at his face, Junketsu's shifting emotions pressing against her mind, a familiar voice drew her complete and undivided attention.

"Merde..."

Ragyo Kiryuin staggered forward, wisps of smoke rising from her burnt body. Gasping deeply, bringing air into her non-existent lungs, the Kiryuin matriarch's fingers trembled at the state of her flesh. Her favorite dress was tattered, reduced to mere scraps of burnt cloth barely covering her damaged body. And her left arm was simply gone, blasted into oblivion by the man's attack. Glaring venomously from her single remaining eye at the source of her current appearance, blood oozing from her right eye socket, her breathing steadily improving with every passing second, "How dare you! You insignificant speck of a man!"

"It's fascinating you're still able to speak, Ragyo Kiryuin."

A hint of genuine disappointment crossed Sosuke Aizen's face at the woman's injuries. He honestly believed Goryutenmetsu would inflict significantly more damage, enough to force the Kiryuin matriarch onto the defensive. Shrugging his shoulders at the completely infuriated woman, Kyouka Suigetsu gently dragging across the surface of a puddle as he marched across the destroyed landscape, Aizen smirked pleasantly, "A truly remarkable feat. I suppose I'll just have to stop holding back during my next attack."

Ragyo laughed at the empty threat, a menacing sound that sent shivers down her daughter's spine, as the damage to her body regenerated, flesh and clothing stitching themselves back together out of nothingness. Sighing as she folded her arms, the posture accentuating her bosom, Ragyo glared suspiciously at the approaching shinigami, her intense gaze never once shifting to her rebellious daughter. She had already underestimated his intelligence and cunning, a tragic mistake that cost her no small amount of pride.

But his psychological tactics would only work once .

"I'll admit the breadth of your scheme was surprising," Ragyo's lips curled softly into a smile, hatred and disdain bubbling just beneath the surface, "But do you believe illusions cast by your zanpakuto will be sufficient to defeat me?"

The arrogant man's perturbed expression caused a pleasurable shudder to ripple down her spine, "Dearest Nui reported extensively on Kisuke Urahara's weapon. But I assumed some of the more fanciful details were the result of an artiste's imagination. Clearly I owe the Grand Couturier an apology..."

Aizen felt a hand clamp around his face, the soft fingers digging harshly into his skin, when Ragyo Kiryuin crossed the vast distance between them in a single step. His eyes widening at the Kiryuin matriarch's sadistic smirk, her expression twisting malevolently at his surprise, he felt gravity temporarily invert itself when the woman pushed spiritual energy through the palm of her hand, sending him soaring backwards with a supersonic eruption of rainbow light. Crashing through one building after another as his trajectory sent him flying across Karakura Town, Aizen stiffened at the sound of a heel clacking against solidified air.

Looking over his shoulder in mild bewilderment at the Kiryuin matriarch, her heels clacking loudly with every purposeful step, he wheezed when she spun around and drove her hand into his stomach. His body bending around the outstretching limb from the sudden shift in momentum, several ribs breaking or shattering from the physical force, Aizen momentarily hovered in the rain before crashing into the middle of Karakura Community Park, his impact kicking up a large cloud of dust.

"How annoying."

Ragyo quirked an eyebrow when the dust dissipated, revealing the shinigami standing in the middle of a crater appearing little worse for wear. This was starting to get ridiculous. The man was persistent in his efforts, she would grant him that, but his illusions were the current problem. It was frustrating knowing she couldn't trust her eyes, ears, and, if his technique was as thorough as she assumed, the rest of her senses. But that wasn't what she loathed about the man. His zanpakuto might not possess the slightest chance of ending the fight in his favor - a victory impossible even if she allowed him to attack dozens of times - but the embarrassment of letting him blemish her appearance was unforgivable.

There was only one man allowed to caress her skin. And this annoyance... this insignificant and disgusting human... was not Isshin.

"That was the second time someone threw me across Karakura Town using nothing but physical strength," Aizen backhandedly complimented. Turning his attention back to Ragyo as lightning flashed through the skies, illuminating the outline of her body against the clouds, he brushed dust from his sleeves, "It's a rather ugly way to fight."

"Fitting words..."

Multicolored spiritual energy coalesced around her outstretched fingers as she scoffed at the shinigami's unimaginative critique. It didn't matter if the man could weave illusions from nothingness, confusing her senses with basic tricks. If she was unable to trust her eyes or ears, than she simply needed to destroy everything . And for that, she was immensely grateful the man was currently standing to the south, "But I'm afraid these games, as fun as they might be for you, must come to an end..."

"Does something feel off to you, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

A sensation best described as vertigo overwhelmed her senses when the world abruptly inverted, leaving her floating in the air upside-down above Karakura Town. Looking around in utter amazement, maroon eyes desperately trying to comprehend the bizarre situation, she stiffened when the shinigami took advantage of her confusion, appearing in front of her with Shunpo, standing upside-down by her perspective.

"Welcome to the Inverted World."

Ragyo raised her stolen sword to counter the man's painfully obvious strike only to gasp wetly when her neck was sliced open, blood spurting through the rain. Gasping as the wound regenerated, leaving her skin once more perfectly flawless, she sneered venomously when she noticed the bastard out of the corner of her eye, his mouth curled into an arrogant smirk before turning around. Rushing forward in a burst of speed, Isshin's blade aimed squarely at the shinigami's neck, she twitched angrily when her attack passed through empty air.

"Up is down... left is right... back is front..."

Aizen concisely reiterated Shinji Hirako's boast as he stabbed the Kiryuin matriarch, his zanpakuto cleanly piercing her throat, "But that's not all to the Inverted World. Not only are your senses of direction reversed, so are your reactions and movements..."

He leaned to the right, avoiding Ragyo Kiryuin's leftward swing, before firing a Byakurai through the woman's heart. As the smoking wound regenerated seconds later, but not before causing her to stagger backwards, Aizen finished, "How do you intend to fight me in your condition, Ragyo Kiryuin? Your power as a Life Fiber Hybrid is formidable but within the Inverted World all of that is meaningless.

The skills and techniques you've learned - all to fight Isshin Kurosaki - are useless."

A strike at his neck, lethal in any other circumstance, was easily dodged when he reverted left and right back to normal in the illusion. Smirking in response to the unadulterated anger in Ragyo Kiryuin's eyes, the multicolored radiance from her hair shining ominously, he deftly leaned away from her second swing, "And in the likelihood you grew accustomed to the Inverted World, it's a simple matter to reverse individual directions."

Ragyo remained silent while the man explained his abilities, her lips pulled into annoyed snarl as the wounds adorning her flesh regenerated. His condescending behavior was starting to grow intolerable. Did he truly believe his so-called Inverted World was the perfect trump card? That it would turn the tides of battle in his favor? How foolish. There was nothing in his repertoire - no secret techniques or abilities - that granted him the capability to defeat one blessed by the Original Life Fiber. That he managed to extend the battle this long was a miracle.

But miracles, as they say, only happen once .

"An appropriate name for a fanciful technique."

Her breath hitched when the world shifted once more, up and down reverting back to normal without warning. Immediately concealing her surprise at the sudden inversion underneath annoyed indifference, Ragyo sighed wistfully as the streets of Karakura Town were once more underneath her heels, "But your constant posturing has grown tedious and boring. I did not willingly move this farce of a battle away from my foolish daughter only to fight a coward who relies upon illusions and tricks."

"A coward, you say?"

Aizen vanished in a step of Shunpo, his zanpakuto cleaving through Ragyo's taut stomach as the woman twisted in the opposite direction. Frowning imperceptibly at the angle behind her counterattack, how she swung upwards rather than downwards, he watched the blood coating Kyouka Suigetsu dissolve into its composite Life Fibers before inquiring, "What an oddly hypocritical observation, Ragyo Kiryuin."

He accentuated his response by severing the Kiryuin matriarch's right arm several inches above the elbow, blood spurting through the rain before multicolored Life Fibers stitched the limb back together. Propping a hand against Kyouka Suigetsu's blade when Ragyo countered with an ominously accurate strike, sparks flashing from the point of contact as he gently redirected her sword's momentum, Aizen retreated with Shunpo before continuing, "After all, the action you took regarding Isshin Kurosaki displayed a level of cowardice far beyond anything I could have possibly achieved."

An incredulous scoff escaped Ragyo's throat at the asinine comment, "How I chose to deal with Isshin is hardly any of your business."

"Now that's an interesting answer..."

The treacherous shinigami's smile broadened at the minute fluctuations in Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual energy, "How long did it take you to decide to nearly kill the only man you loved with the most powerful Anti-Life Fiber weapon on the planet?"

A sound akin to cracking glass pierced through the deafening storm when the illusion controlling the Kiryuin matriarch's senses shattered, the subsequent backlash of spiritual energy burning his exposed skin. Immediately leaping away at the subtle twitches in Ragyo's muscles, a jagged tear opening across his uniform when the woman covered dozens of meters in a single step, he expertly parried the succeeding thrust to the heart, his mouth pursed into a grimace at the unfortunate turn of events. His expression twisting into a frustrated scowl at the ferocity behind Ragyo's emotional yet focused assault, her unrelenting attacks preventing him from countering, Aizen waited until she extended her arm backwards before silently rereleasing his zanpakuto.

The manipulation of Ragyo Kiryuin's human senses held momentarily - just long enough to confound her into believing he would counter her subsequent assault through an elaborate series of parries instead of strategically retreating - before shattering in a vibrant display of multicolored light. Surprised by the suddenness of the failure, Aizen's head snapped to the right when the Kiryuin matriarch's foot smashed into his cheek.

"How tragic."

Crimson momentarily stained her exquisite attire when Isshin's hardened Life Fiber blade blurred around the man's nearly perfect guard, cutting deeply into his forearm. Chuckling as she gracefully leaned around his vicious counterattack, lips twisted into a pleased smile when the shinigami's zanpakuto passed harmlessly several inches from her face, Ragyo's eyes widened sadistically at his frustrated expression, "It would appear you're nothing without those annoying -"

A thick gurgle prematurely ended the Kiryuin matriarch's comment when the man's zanpakuto sliced deeply through the side of her neck, torrents of pressurized blood spraying from the gaping wound. Glowering in disbelief at his audacity as her Life Fibers rapidly knitted faux flesh and muscle back together, Ragyo didn't hesitate to return the shinigami's flagrant blasphemy with interest, the shocked expression in his previously condescending eyes causing her heart to skip a beat. Caressing her cheek when the annoying excuse for a man leapt away in a burst of speed, one hand tightly gripping the tattered shreds of the uniform covering the bleeding wound on his chest, she removed his filthy blood from Isshin's sword with a flick of her wrist and sighed pleasurably.

"Fighting you has been an interesting experience..."

Ragyo's heels clacked loudly as she purposely turned away from the wounded shinigami, her attention drawn toward the thousands of brilliant explosions showcasing Nudist Beach's ongoing battle against her magnificent COVERS, "But I do have a schedule to keep... and it unfortunately does not involve continuing this farce of a battle."

"It appears my initial assessment was mistaken."

Aizen ignored the subtly threatening undertone in the Kiryuin matriarch's response as he held the tattered edges of Kisuke Urahara's specialized cloak over his chest, rivulets of blood seeping from between his fingers, "A naïve underestimation. But I suppose that's really my fault. Once I released my zanpakuto it was simply a matter of time before your Life Fibers adapted to Kyouka Suigetsu's perfect hypnosis. There was nothing I could have possibly done to prevent this inevitable outcome. Yet I'm still disappointed."

Ragyo frowned at the nonsensical statement, "Disappointed?"

"It took your Life Fibers approximately five minutes to adapt themselves to Kyouka Suigetsu's illusions," Aizen pleasantly explained without the slightest trace of concern. Allowing his focus to momentarily be drawn towards Kisuke Urahara's residence, the familiar spiritual energy escaping from the cracks in the man's nearly perfect barrier bringing a smug grin to his face, he turned back to Ragyo Kiryuin when her spiritual pressure pulsed with annoyance, "I projected at least ten minutes before immunization. Oh well..."

Rain dripped from Kyouka Suigetsu as he shifted stances, crimson staining the front of his uniform, "I'll simply need to defeat you the hard way."

"How amusing," Ragyo deadpanned, any lingering interest in the conversation disappearing under the weight of her busy schedule. There was no doubt in her mind the shinigami was planning to continue opposing the Original Life Fiber despite the grievous wound barely concealed beneath the tattered pieces of his atrocious uniform. But she would not succumb to any further embarrassing taunts.

Not even about that woman .

"But let's be honest..."

Ragyo's voice was frigid, containing the sum total of her overwhelming disgust for the shinigami, as she raised her left hand, multicolored spiritual energy rapidly coalescing between her outstretched fingers. Smiling coldly as shadows danced across her body, painting her immaculate dress in shades of violet and green, she chuckled at the man's silence, "This fight won't end until someone is dead. And despite your best effort, a truly laudable performance, you simply cannot compare to someone blessed by the -"

She was unprepared when it pulsed through the deepest recesses of her mind - an overbearing sensation that caused her Life Fibers to shiver in absolute disgust. Mouth slightly agape when the man's bloodstained cloak fluttered open in the wind, exposing the glowing multicolored sphere embedded in his sternum, Ragyo felt the Original Life Fiber's inhuman anger permeate every thread of her body, twisting her shocked surprise into unadulterated hatred.

"What... is... that... thing ?"

Rendered speechless by the disgust radiating from the abhorrent object, quivering manicured fingers clenched furiously around Isshin's blade, Ragyo watched in complete bafflement when the sphere pulsed with tainted energy. How dare he! Restraining herself from immediately destroying the shinigami when multicolored cracks spread across his body, flesh and muscle regenerating and leaving his skin unblemished, she furiously gnashed her teeth.

"You... insolent... man!"

The shinigami's startled expression when she vanished, multicolored spiritual energy enveloping her body in a brilliant aura as she stepped between successive raindrops, brought the Kiryuin matriarch neither comfort nor pleasure. Human emotions could not convey her unmatched loathing for the profanely insulting man. Perfectly manicured fingers curled around Isshin's shimmering blade as she smashed her knee into the shinigami's exposed stomach, her body twisting counterclockwise as the subsequent explosion of spiritual energy repulsed the surrounding storm, Ragyo ignored the zanpakuto slicing diagonally down her chest. Pirouetting as the wound regenerated in a flash of rainbow light, Isshin's sword arcing through the rain with the intent of severing the man's head, she scowled when he ducked and pressed a hand against her stomach.

"Bakudo Number Seventy Nine - Kuyo Shibari."

Her muscles convulsed when nine spheres of pulsing spiritual energy flickered into existence, the high-level Bakudo completely arresting her ability to move. Fingers tightly gripping Isshin's sword as she strained against the invisible bonds, indignant fury causing the multifaceted brilliance from her silver to exponentially multiply, Ragyo focused her unadulterated hatred upon the muttering shinigami, "How dare you tarnish the Original Life Fiber! Do you think this will -"

"Bakudo Number Sixty One - Rikujokoro."

An exorbitant amount of blood spewed from between her clenched teeth when six thin shafts of golden light skewered her waist at alternating angles. Loose bangs of silver hair falling over her face as she hunched forward, large blotches of crimson staining her flaunting dress, Ragyo felt an eldritch rage building in the depths of her soul. Her plans... dealing with the Grand Couturier's artistic whims... none of that mattered. All she wanted to do... all the Original Life Fiber wanted to do... was tear this abhorrent man to pieces. And as multicolored light enveloped her constrained form, bathing Karakura Town in ominous colors, Ragyo's heel clacked as she took a single step toward the shinigami.

"How did you obtain my Life Fibers?!"

Ragyo Kiryuin's regal voice warbled, the distinctly inhuman tone causing her opponent to stiffen when it shifted, "I remember you ! You... who interfered with the sacred ritual! What did an insignificant creature like you do to my Life Fibers?! Something like that shouldn't exist by human hands! Tell me how you stole -"

"Bakudo Number Ninety Nine, Part One - Kin."

His hands clasped together, fingers intricately interlocked despite the modest desperation when the Kiryuin matriarch shattered through the first two Bakudo, Aizen grimaced from the strain on his soul as cords of spiritual fabric spun into existence. Weaving more spiritual energy into the technique when Ragyo's movement was arrested, her stolen blade halted only inches from his heart, he watched as her arms were painfully wrenched behind her back, muscles quivering against the unnatural constriction. An uncomfortable coldness racing down his spine at the expression in the Kiryuin matriarch's eyes, the inhuman hatred and loathing disturbing on several levels, he deliberately raised a finger skyward as an aura of darkness surrounded his body.

"The oozing crest of corruption! The arrogant vessel of madness! Deny the seething urge to let things stun and flicker! Disrupt the sleep! The crawling princess of iron!"

"YOU DARE!"

An aura of multicolored light flared brilliantly from Ragyo as she tore through the spiritual constraints, the scraps of fabric previously binding her limbs disintegrating underneath the sheer majesty of her spiritual pressure. Steam wafting from Isshin's sword as she crossed the vast distance to the shinigami within a single flash of lightning, her departure kicking off multiple consecutive supersonic explosions, Ragyo snarled at the serene expression in his eyes. Her fingers twitching as she vertically bisected the man before he could react, the force behind her fully-powered swing carved a massive trench across the streets of Karakura Town hundreds of feet below, the Kiryuin matriarch gasped when the shinigami burst apart in a shower of colored plastic.

"The eternally self-destruction doll of mud! Unite! Repulse! Fill the earth and know your own powerlessness!"

Looking over her shoulder, eyes fixated upon the man standing unharmed in the rain, Ragyo stiffened when he dramatically declared, "Hado Number Ninety - Kurohitsugi!"

The already tumultuous skies darkened when gravity flexed, pulling simultaneously on her body in multiple directions. Staggering heavily under the immense pressure as thousands of shadowy boxes coalesced into existence, space and time warped by their very presence, Ragyo slammed a defiant heel against the air with a resounding clack. Her mouth twisted into an infuriated snarl as she swung Isshin's sword, intent on destroying the technique before it could form, she gasped in astonishment when her arm disintegrated upon touching one of the walls, dissipating in a spray of blood.

"Farewell, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Aizen smirked in mild amusement at the Kiryuin matriarch's furious expression as the obscenely difficult Kurohitsugi enclosed around her body, dozens of spiritual lances perforating the enclosed space. It had been concerning when Ragyo Kiryuin - or rather the Original Life Fiber - reacted poorly to the Hogyoku, granting her enough spiritual energy and strength to finish the battle, an ending that could not be allowed. However, the primal hatred displayed by the eldritch creature controlling the Kiryuin matriarch's body like a puppet gave him an advantage he used to devastating effect - clarity of mind.

Still, it wouldn't be acceptable to become complacent simply because he momentarily stalled Ragyo Kiryuin. Even a fully incanted Kurohitsugi lacked the necessary requirements for destroying someone twisted by the Original Life Fiber. It would take a more... direct approach.

But unfortunately he remained unable to properly wield hardened Life Fiber weapons.

Winding streaks of white and purple illuminated the overcast skies as he patiently awaited Ragyo Kiryuin's emergence from the Kurohitsugi, senses strained to their absolute limits to prevent any surprises. It took an exorbitant amount of spiritual energy for high-level Hado to overwhelm the natural absorption of the woman's powerful Life Fibers. But with her Life Fibers having adapted to Kyouka Suigetsu's illusions, more brutish tactics were necessary. And if that failed? If Ragyo Kiryuin's synchronization with the Original Life Fiber proved more than tactics and countermeasures could handle?

Well... he could always release his Bankai.

Strategically furthering himself from the constrained woman when minute cracks began spreading across the Kurohitsugi, thin clouds of water splashing beneath his boots with every step, he only had a moment to comprehend the Hado shattering like glass before a hand was thrust into his chest.

"W-What?"

Ragyo breathed heavily, her blood-filled mouth clenched tightly, as she plunged her sole remaining hand into the abhorrent man's sternum. She couldn't remember experiencing such humiliation! It almost put that woman's actions to shame! But as she stood before the shocked shinigami, more than half of her body simply gone and blood dripping from what limbs and faux organs remained intact, the Kiryuin matriarch allowed a brief but tense smirk to grace her bloody lips.

"La vie est drôle..."

Multicolored spiritual energy flared brightly in the rain, blinding anyone foolish enough to witness their battle, as Ragyo callously removed her arm from the shinigami's body.

The Hokyoku clasped possessively in her fingers.

---

...

---

"MEN! DOU! KOTE!"

Uzu Sanageyama shouted passionately at the top of his lungs as he attacked Yukio Hans Vorarlberna's final remaining Life Fiber creation, his shinai smashing into the wyvern's head, claws and stomach. Steam blasting forth from the cracks covering his Blade Regalia Mark III as he continuously attacked the creature, its scales and bones shattering under the intense assault, he promptly jumped away when jets of crimson flames erupted from the wyvern's jaws, the heat transforming the pavement into molten tar. Armored fingers tightly clenching the shinai when the creature growled, the damage to its body regenerating, he clenched his teeth as emerald light shone from his regalia.

"Shingan... TENSENZUKI!"

The former Athletic Committee Chair's body shimmered brightly before vanishing, leaving the wyvern looking around in confusion before thousands of lightning-fast blows slammed against every visible inch of its body. Pushing his Blade Regalia even further beyond its limitations when the Life Fiber creature weathered the storm, its claws cutting through several afterimages while leaving a series of rending trenches in the ground, Sanageyama avoided another blast of superheated flames and cursed. Damn it! This wasn't working! But like hell he was going to let an overgrown lizard beat him!

"I'm not done with you yet!"

Leaping high into the rain as lightning flashed overhead, Sanageyama slammed his arms together and shouted, "TAKE THIS! Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken!"

The two-handed strike tore through the Life Fiber creature's incredibly tough defenses without slowing down, first shattering its skull into dust before severing it completely down the middle. Panting heavily from exhaustion as he landed back on the ground, the shinai in his hands shattered down to the hilt, Sanageyama grinned when the wyvern collapsed with one last defiant roar, its body dissolving into Life Fibers.

Whoever said regalia couldn't stand against raiment was talking out of their ass.

Sanageyama's mood soured as he tossed aside his shattered shinai, the wooden blade bouncing against the street. It was sheer luck that his Blade Regalia was still in one piece, minus several cracks and scratches. Nobody, especially Jakuzure, could know an overgrown fire-breathing lizard had almost eaten him... twice .

"You sure took your sweet time..."

An eyebrow twitched when Yoruichi Shihoin playfully bypassed his Shingantsu like it was nothing. He could sense spiritual pressure now, damn it! So how the hell did Yoruichi still manage to slip through his guard? His Blade Regalia creaking as he faced the woman, her confident posture and cocky attitude saying enough, Sanageyama grumbled when a group of nudist soldiers appeared carrying Yukio's unconscious naked body, "Come on! Don't tell me you already beat that snot-nosed punk!"

"Ha!"

Yoruichi leaned back and laughed, "After all the times I've beaten you into the ground you think an overconfident brat wearing fancy clothes could take me down?"

The former Athletic Committee Chair refused to fall for the woman's painfully obvious taunt. He couldn't let Yoruichi Shihoin get under his skin, especially after what happened last time. Flicking his wrist as Jakuzure flew overhead, dozens of musical explosions singing in his ears, Sanageyama hefted the newly formed shinai onto his shoulder, "Tch... like there's anyone in Xcution that could kick your ass! You went toe-to-toe with the freaking Grand Couturier!"

"That's right," Yoruichi proudly folded her arms at the compliment, "But you've gotten better, Sanageyama. Your speed is far above the average lieutenant shinigami."

He smirked beneath his regalia's enclosed helmet at the hard-earned praise only for Yoruichi's next words to completely shatter the mood, "But Ichigo's at least six times faster."

"Like hell he is!"

Sanageyama pointed his shinai at the dark skinned shinigami, the subtle threat only causing her cheshire grin to broaden, "Ichigo Kurosaki is the final stepping stone! The last person I need to defeat before facing Lady Satsuki! There's no way I'm slower than him! Not after your training, Yoruichi Shihoin!"

"That's the spirit!"

Yoruichi chuckled at the teenager's easily manipulated frustration when it came to Ichigo's rate of progress, her smile only faltering when something flickered across the periphery of her senses. That was Junketsu's strange spiritual pressure, which could only mean Satsuki was fighting her mother. This was bad . She might have trained under Isshin, learned how to work alongside her Kamui, but Satsuki didn't have the slightest chance of defeating Ragyo Kiryuin.

She was going to die... or worse .

"Sanageyama..."

The teenager frowned at the unusual seriousness in her voice, "Don't let a single COVERS into Karakura Town. Understood?"

An excruciating long moment passed in absolute silence, broken only by the pattering of rain upon the drenched cityscape, before everything was illuminated beneath an intense burst of light. Time screeching to a halt as she looked over her shoulder, amber eyes narrowing to pinpoints, Yoruichi stared in astonishment at the serpentine spiritual dragon coiled through the skies to the west. Goryutenmetsu? But that was impossible! There wasn't anyone in Karakura Town remotely capable of casting that Hado!

Yoruichi quickly braced herself, arms crossed over her face, when the crackling technique roared loudly over the torrential downpour and slammed into the ground, its impact sending a shockwave rippling across the city. Did the Soul Society finally arrive to deal with Ragyo Kiryuin? Could Kisuke have discovered why they hadn't stopped her sooner? As the light from the Hado lessened, bathing the city in a temporary glow, the familiar spiritual pressure accompanying the technique caused her stomach to sink. No... it couldn't be! How did he escape from Muken? But more importantly...

Why was he fighting Ragyo Kiryuin?!

"What the hell was that?"

Sanageyama's mouth hung open beneath his Blade Regalia's helmet, a single bead of nervous sweat sticking to his cheek at the monstrous spiritual pressure washing across Karakura Town. He hadn't the slightest clue what the hell just happened but it was powerful enough to overwhelm his Shingantsu, leaving him effectively blind. His jaw clenched tightly in pain as his enhanced senses slowly returned, driving what felt like nails into his skull, he staggered backwards when Yoruichi Shihoin's cell phone rang, the piercing ringtone agony to his eardrums.

Searching through her pockets as the teenager cursed profusely, an eyebrow twitching as his opinion of her ringtone, Yoruichi raised the cell phone to her mouth before shouting at the top of her lungs, "What the hell were you thinking?!"

"I take it things are going well?"

Kisuke Urahara grimaced comically at the sharp ringing deep within his ear, courtesy of Yoruichi shouting directly into the phone. Now that was quite rude. Preemptively holding the phone at arms length when she furiously rebutted his question, her annoyance echoing across the underground chamber, he patiently waited until she finished before replying, "I have no idea what you're talking about, Yoruichi."

A conniving grin stretched across his face at Yoruichi's flustered response. Sitting with his back propped against an overturned Nudist Beach truck, columns of smoke rising from the burning vehicle, he ignored the blood oozing from his grievously wounded shoulder and chuckled cheerfully, "Goryutenmetsu, you say? I'm flattered, but you're looking at the wrong guy! Right now I'm playing a high-stakes game of hide and seek with Nui Harime and Ururu. And let's just say they don't play fairly..."

"You know that's not what I meant!"

Yoruichi resisted the desire to crush the phone in her hand at Kisuke's half-hearted excuse. Stiffening when another eruption of spiritual pressure caught her attention, she caught only a glimpse of flickering rainbow light beyond the rooftops before shouting into the phone, "Why is Sosuke Aizen fighting Ragyo Kiryuin?!"

"Oh... that..."

Kisuke scratched his chin at the question, one finger tapping against the phone as he looked around the back of the burning truck, "Well... it's actually very simple. It was obvious that Ragyo Kiryuin would use a Bleach Bomb against Isshin. But luckily I planned for this scenario the moment I learned of his relationship with the woman! So relax, Yoruichi! If there's anyone that hates Ragyo Kiryuin more than her own daughter... it's Aizen."

It took Yoruichi a moment to process the absurdity behind her friend's reasoning. She'd known Kisuke for hundreds of years, fought alongside him through thick and thin, but freeing Sosuke Aizen, one of the worst criminals in the history of the Soul Society, made no sense! Angrily turning around when she noticed Sanageyama eavesdropping on her conversation, she lowered her voice to a hushed whisper and seethed, "Why didn't you get the Gotei 13? The Captain Commander would have -"

"The Gotei 13 won't be coming to the rescue."

"It's quite difficult to explain over the phone," Kisuke momentarily paused, his attention shifting towards something in the background, before continuing, "But something's stopping the Soul Society from moving against Ragyo Kiryuin or Life Fibers. And it works both ways. If I hadn't installed a secret backdoor into Muken, freeing Aizen would have been all but impossible."

Yoruichi stiffened at the explanation, the reflexive tightening of her fingers further cracking the phone. Isshin had known about the Soul Society's problem from the very beginning. It made perfect sense. His warning when she attempted to investigate the Soul Society, why she hadn't sensed any shinigami for several months and why the Gotei 13 refused to respond against Ragyo Kiryuin had been suspicious at the time. But if Life Fibers somehow severed the World of the Living and Seireitei, preventing the Jigokucho from traveling through the Senkaimon, it was possible the Gotei 13 were fully aware of Revocs...

She disappeared in a flicker of Shunpo, Sanageyama dodging in the opposite direction, when a massive white fist smashed into the ground, the impact sending a large plume of smoke rising above the skyline.

Reappearing moments later on a building down the street, the eight nudists she rescued disoriented but otherwise fine, Yoruichi glowered at the colossal COVERS looming above the rooftops. Her mouth twisted into a disgusting sneer when the Life Fiber creature turned around, displaying the thousands of innocent victims fueling its power, she raised the phone to her ear when another two COVERS landed nearby, their attention completely upon her .

"I'm going to kick your ass for this, Kisuke."

Kisuke's mood soured despite Yoruichi's playful, and expected, death threat. The inhuman roar in the background was far more important and concerning. He might have utmost faith in her fighting prowess but one shouldn't become complacent when dealing with Life Fibers. That was simply asking for trouble. Ragyo Kiryuin's monstrous spiritual pressure, which he could sense through the barriers built into the underground chamber, was proof that releasing Aizen from Muken, thereby earning the Captain Commander's legendary wrath, was the pragmatic and right decision.

It was necessary if humanity and the World of the Living were to survive.

Still, it wouldn't hurt to research whether normal Life Fibers could withstand Ryujin Jakka's flames.

He sighed in resignation when the proximity Bakudo centered on his current location detected two sets of synchronized moments. It appears his belligerent guests already learned how to partially suppress their spiritual pressure, which complicated things. They should have fallen for a few more of his tricks before reaching this point. Tucking his phone away before vanishing in a flash of Shunpo, his body flickering away moments before the purple Needle Blade cleaved through the burning vehicle, Kisuke grumbled at the subsequent eruption of spiritual energy tearing lengthwise across the ground.

At this rate his candy store would be destroyed!

Frowning slightly when a twisting crescent of purple spiritual energy exploded from the flames, a dull thump reverberating across the underground chamber when he redirected it back towards the Grand Couturier using the Anti-Life Fiber material coating his geta, Kisuke grunted when another Needle Blade slashed deeply into his leg. As he retreated away from his daughter, Benihime lightly cracked from extensive contact with the hardened Life Fiber weapon, he pondered how Ururu slipped through his guard so easily. Contrary to expectations he wasn't playing with Nui Harime or Ururu. Yet strangely he hadn't sensed her spiritual pressure until after she attacked.

Grey eyes narrowing when Ururu spun the Needle Blade around her wrist, the purple weapon twisting around Benihime in a shower of sparks, he promptly ducked and placed his left hand against her stomach, "Hado Number One - Sho."

A concussive explosion of kinetic energy accompanied Ururu's involuntarily descent, her body first slamming into the ground before crashing through several vehicles. Staring grimly at his daughter when she leapt out of the smoke and dust, her appearance unblemished despite the intensity of the impact, Kisuke quickly switched Benihime to his left hand and spun around, parrying Nui Harime's weapon in a flash of light. His arm quivering from the superhuman strength coursing through the Grand Couturier's Life Fibers, the strained saccharine smirk twitching at the corners of her mouth somewhat unsettling, he attempted to strategically retreat only for the teenager to immediately close the distance.

"Gosh, you don't look so good!"

Nui Harime laughed at the shopkeeper's cowardly behavior, the sound hollow and mirthless, as she struck his zanpakuto again and again, sparks illuminating her manic eyes in shades of purple. Smiling psychotically at the visible cracks adorning the man's blade, she leaned forward and exclaimed, "And your sword seems awfully fragile, you know! It looks like it's about to shatter in your hand!"

"Oh... you think so?"

Kisuke braced his left hand against Benihime, the additional leverage halting the Grand Couturier's relentless advance, "It's hard to compare Benihime to your Needle Blade. But she still has a few tricks up her sleeves. Nake, Benihime."

"Golly, you don't need to tell me twice," Nui giggled as she twirled around the crimson wave of energy, manicured fingers curled through the Needle Blade's handle. Humming softly when the technique collided with the ground, creating a massive explosion that rustled her blonde pigtails, she tilted her head to the side and pouted, "But that sure was unexpected!"

"Why thank you," Kisuke smirked, traces of crimson clinging to Benihime, "Now if it's not too much trouble, could you apologize to Benihime? Your comment hurt her feelings."

"You've got quite a few screws loose, you know!"

Nui clapped her hands together at the shopkeeper's audacity, the Needle Blade awkwardly propped against her shoulder. Pursing her lips cutely, the façade of mirth barely concealing the utter contempt she felt, the Grand Couturier mulled over the comment before smiling darkly, "But non !"

Pain blossomed through Kisuke's body when the muscles and ligaments in his right shoulder were severed. Staring in disbelief when he noticed Ururu standing at the periphery of his vision, blood dripping from her Needle Blade, he grimaced as everything came together, seemingly uncorrelated pieces of evidence making perfect sense in his mind. At their level of synchronization Nui Harime and Ururu possessed identical spiritual pressures. There was no distinction between them, making it impossible to sense Ururu whenever he was fighting the Grand Couturier and vice versa.

But in his defense, most of what he knew about Twin Life Fiber Entanglement came from second-hand sources.

"Kamisori, Benihime."

An arc of wavering crimson energy exploded against the twin sisters as Kisuke took advantage of their childish delight at rendering his right arm useless. Immediately retreating from the Grand Couturier using Shunpo, his body flickering with every step across the underground chamber, Kisuke frowned when he touched down on the ground only to noticing Ururu and Nui already waiting for him.

"Gee, just how many attacks do you have up your sleeves?"

Nui Harime giggled at the shopkeeper's bloody condition, his ragged appearance causing her heart to flutter, "Because your sword is just full of surprises!"

"Don't sell yourself short, Nui Harime."

Kisuke sighed dramatically while switching Benihime to his other hand, "Twin Life Fiber Entanglement is a rather useful ability. It's virtually impossible for me to tell you and Ururu apart."

"Flattery will get you nowhere!"

Nui entwined her fingers with Amu's, their Life Fibers pulsing in synchronization as she cheerfully threatened, "But calling Amu by that ugly and atrocious name is just rude! It's like you didn't kidnap her! So if it's not too much trouble..."

"... could you just shut up and die?" Amu finished, her mouth twisting into a faint scowl, "It's really annoying listening to you talk..."

"... but we should be super careful," Nui interrupted with a dramatic flourish. Smiling widely while pointing the Needle Blade at Kisuke's heart, its purple coloration shimmering with a bright metallic luster, she enthusiastically added, "Giving this guy any time to think is just asking for trouble!"

Amu looked off into the distance, dulled eyes focusing on Lady Ragyo's moving presence, "This has been a lot of fun but we should just kill him. I'm sure Lady Ragyo will be happy when we bring back his head."

"I'm starting to think you two don't like me very much..."

A breeze gusted through the underground chamber as Kiseki collapsed onto the ground, the apparently defeatist behavior causing the Grand Couturier to blink in confusion. Stabbing Benihime between his feet despite the threat poised by the sisters, he raised a finger in front of his face and smirked, "But you shouldn't celebrate just yet, Nui Harime. There's quite a lot you don't know about me... including the secret behind my zanpakuto."

"That's really interesting."

Sarcasm dripped from the Grand Couturier's voice as she marched towards the shopkeeper, "But nothing you say will -"

"Every zanpakuto possesses a Shikai - initial release - which gives their wielder access to several unique abilities. I'm sure you're more than familiar with Benihime by now," Kiseki motioned to his zanpakuto as a faint crimson aura caused his coat to gently flutter, "But shouldn't something with an initial release also have a final release ?"

Nui and Amu vanished before the enigmatic shopkeeper finished speaking, the ground cracking beneath their feet. They refused to let Kiseki Urahara pull another cowardly trick! Not when they were so close to making him pay for everything! Her mouth twisting into an ugly expression of utmost hatred, the Grand Couturier felt her sister's Life Fibers resonating in her soul when they attacked the man, Needle Blades shining brightly in the artificial daylight. Sapphire eyes, which previously gleamed with an unholy mirth, widening when spiritual pressure exploded from his body, Nui froze when Kiseki Urahara grabbed his zanpakuto.

"Sorry, but you had your chance," Kiseki somberly muttered, the crimson aura surrounding his body growing deeper, "Bankai:

Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame."

---

...

---

Ragyo callously tore her sole remaining arm out of the shinigami's chest in a shower of blood, the multicolored sphere of Life Fibers glowing brightly in her charred fingers.

"La vie est drôle..."

The phrase contained not a trace of mirth, emerging from her bloody lips with a snarling lisp. Panting heavily as the battle arrived at the predestined conclusion, the burns and wounds adorning her flesh glowing with multicolored radiance, she smirked haughtily at the man's agonized expression. How appropriate. Already she could feel the righteous anger and fury at his blasphemous transgressions against the Original Life Fiber fading away, replaced with simple indignation. Standing tall as her body regeneration, flesh and clothing weaving out of nothingness, Ragyo narrowed her eyes when something emerged from the sphere clenched in her fingers.

"Quelle..."

Confusion etched itself upon her features at the white material flowing from the Life Fiber sphere, coating her fingers and hand in skin-tight clothing that accentuating every curve. As the substance moved towards her wrist, flowing like water across her skin, Ragyo's bewilderment was rapidly replaced by fury and loathing. How dare something so ugly and tainted adorn her! Her lips twisted into a snarl at the sphere's arrogance, that it dared cover one blessed by the Original Life Fiber with such atrocious and grotesque clothing, her eyes briefly flashed before the clothing shattered into dust.

"Nothing so unseemly has the right to adorn my body."

She sneered at the Life Fiber sphere, its multicolored luster dimming beneath her willpower, before returning her attention to the heavily injured man standing at death's door. That he was still standing despite the gaping wound in his chest was impressive. But his refusal to die was beginning to wear on her nerves. Heels clacking softly as she folded her arms under her bosom, Isshin's sword momentarily misplaced following the shinigami's previous technique, Ragyo smirked condescendingly, "As for you... it's remarkable you were able to use this thing's power, however corrupted and vile it may be. So I suppose congratulations are in order..."

Smug arrogance crept into her voice at the shinigami's defiant expression, a stark contrast to his current condition. Momentarily glancing at the three massive COVERS attempting to deal with Yoruichi Shihoin, the woman's power and ability deserving no less, Ragyo chuckled with barely repressed pleasure before continuing, "Yet you never stood a chance. This thing was the only reason you managed to last so long. But much like someone passing off faux designs as Revocs' latest fall fashion apparel, the power you stole was a pale mockery of someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber!"

Her fist smashed against Aizen's face before the shinigami could muster a defense, the manic look in her eyes noticeable within the accompanying flash of lightning.

"SO HOW..."

She punched him in the nose, breaking cartilage in a spray of blood.

"... DARE YOU..."

Ragyo shouted at the top of her lungs as she kept punching the shinigami, droplets of blood intermingling with the falling rain.

"... USE SUCH A THING..."

The multicolored undertone shining from her hair brightened immensely when she grabbed the shinigami's face and squeezed .

"... AGAINST ME!"

Her mouth twisted into a snarl as the man was sent spiraling to the ground in an eruption of power, his undignified impact kicking up an enormous plume of smoke that rose above the rooftops of Karakura Town. Streams of water trailed down Ragyo's face as she stared at the destruction far below, her exasperation at the man's blasphemy slowly abating. Grimacing at the Life Fiber sphere resting in the palm of her hand, the dulled orb desperately trying to shimmer with its previous radiance, she sighed deeply and flicked her right hand outwards, multicolored Life Fibers weaving from her fingers.

A pleased sigh escaping her throat when Isshin's sword returned to her grasp, Ragyo glowered at the shinigami standing in the devastated park, "And with that being said..."

Ragyo crossed the distance separating them as she trailed off, her heels clacking next to the shinigami in the blink of an eye. Holding Isshin's blade directly above the annoying man's neck, the sword poised to skewer his throat from back to front, she grinned sadistically, "Give my regards to Kisuke Urahara when -"

She effortlessly dodged the concentrated bolt of lightning fired from the shinigami's finger, the corners of her mouth twitching at being interrupted by someone who didn't know their place. Glaring at the man when he leapt off the ground faster than someone with lethal wounds had any right to move, electricity crackling sharply around his zanpakuto while another annoying spell formed on his opposite hand, Ragyo patiently waited until the very last second before raising her forearm, the blade shattering against bare flesh.

"Pathetic..."

Sadistic amusement flashed through Ragyo's eyes as she smashed her heel into the shinigami's torn stomach, the accompanying pulse of spiritual energy sending him bouncing out of the crater. Would he ever learn? Running a finger down her dress, the living fabric responding perfectly to her touch, she slowly marched after the shinigami, "But you brought this on yourself. Your blasphemy against Life Fibers... against the Original Life Fiber... for daring to create something so abhorrent and vile cannot be tolerated. And while I certainly enjoyed our time together I do have a schedule to keep..."

The surrounding storm vaporized as multicolored spiritual energy enveloped Isshin's sword. She was finished fooling around with the shinigami. Every time she gave the man an inch he took a mile and then some. Which is why she decided to simply destroy every trace of his miserable existence. It would be a poetic and ignominious death for someone who defiled the Original Life Fiber, "Of course, you could continue your futile resistance. But I'm afraid without your tiresome illusions you're nothing more than another pathetic human."

"What a fascinating statement..."

Aizen chuckled despite his broken nose as he slowly staggered back onto his feet, the limp from his fractured leg barely noticeable. As the laughter reached a crescendo, he smirked at the bemused matriarch, "... Ragyo Kiryuin."

Blood sprayed through the rain before Ragyo could comprehend the familiarity of the phrase, maroon eyes widening as Satsuki severed her left arm with the Scissor Blade. Staring at her daughter crouched at her side, Junketsu's advanced configuration once more adorning her undeserving flesh, Ragyo snarled when Satsuki reached for the Life Fiber sphere. Heels clacking as she quickly recovered from the dismemberment, Isshin's blade arcing towards her surprised daughter's neck, Ragyo stiffened when a light green hexagonal barrier formed in front of Satsuki.

"What!?"

Her arm quivered under the abrupt resistance when the barrier expanded, its surface pulsating as the immense energy coiled around Isshin's blade was dispersed away from her foolish daughter. Glowering at the shinigami's satisfied grin, the amusement in his pained expression annoyingly obvious as the surrounding landscape was enveloped in a massive explosion of light, Ragyo's eyebrow twitched when he had the audacity to speak.

"You seem shocked, Ragyo Kiryuin," Aizen smirked pleasantly at the infuriated woman, "Did you believe my repertoire was limited to illusions and a few offensive techniques?"

Ragyo snarled at the condescending explanation, annoyance in her eyes when Satsuki retreated with the Life Fiber sphere moments before the hexagonal barrier shattered beneath her power. This was getting ridiculous . Staring at her daughter in frustration as her arm was drawn back into proper alignment with a wet squelch, blood and visceral blemishing her dress rapidly vanishing, Ragyo frowned at the shinigami's smug arrogance, a bloody grin that should be ground into the mud. Of course the man placed an illusion on Satsuki. Why on earth wouldn't he?

It certainly explained why she hadn't felt Junketsu until after Satsuki severed her arm.

"This is quite the surprise."

She quirked an eyebrow curiously when her daughter landed next to the insignificant speck of a man. Illusions or not... annoying abilities that could destroy her flesh aside... there was nothing to worry about Satsuki's sudden interference. Chuckling as she brushed aside a strand of loose silver hair, the amused laughter gaining her daughter's attention, Ragyo folded an arm across her chest, "A few weeks ago you would have severed my head without hesitation, allowing thoughts of petty revenge for Souichiro's death to cloud your judgment. But I'm curious... just what do you intend to do now?"

The brief hesitation in Satsuki's eyes, the subtle tensing of her taut muscles beneath Junketsu's fabric, warmed Ragyo's heart, "You must realize the Life Fiber sphere you risked your life stealing is completely worthless. It wouldn't dare allow a human to use its power against the Original Life Fiber's chosen servant. It knows its proper place in the grand scheme of things... unlike you ."

Ragyo shook her head, "If only you were more like Ryuko..."

Satsuki snarled in righteous fury, her mouth twisting into a sneer at her mother's tainted words, "What did you say?"

The Kiryuin matriarch smirked arrogantly at her eldest daughter's hate-filled expression, the loathing everything she hoped to accomplish with such an incendiary statement. Placing a hand against her cheek, eyes briefly focusing on the shinigami bleeding to death several feet from Satsuki, Ragyo sighed in mock disappointment, "It should be obvious, Satsuki. As a Life Fiber Hybrid, Ryuko is capable of making that sphere obey her fanciful teenage whims. You, on the other hand, are nothing more than a confused little girl who has forgotten her place."

"You only survived this long because of Junketsu, not the other way around," Ragyo basked in Satsuki's growing anger, the trembling of her daughter's muscles filling her heart with pleasure, "Which is highly disappointing. To think I raised such a rebellious and disrespectful daughter."

She turned her attention to Junketsu, the Kamui's multicolored eyes quivering slightly under her gaze, "It's honestly embarrassing that Isshin, despite his childish mannerisms, taught Ichigo proper discipline. Mais telle est la vie. Now... I think it's time I -"

"HOLD YOUR TONGUE!"

Satsuki shouted passionately over the torrential downpour, sapphire light blazing into existence as the force of her willpower and spiritual pressure overwhelmed her mother's derisive mockery, "Your words mean nothing to me, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

The intense aura enveloping Satsuki's body, tinting Junketsu a vivid shade of azure and causing the Kamui to tighten, pulsed when the Hōgyoku clasped in her fingers burst back into life, shining with a familiar shade of sapphire that immediately caught both Aizen and her mother's attention. Unconcerned when the Scissor Blade slowly shifted colorations, auburn replaced by brilliant cerulean, Satsuki felt a mote of pride at Ragyo's shocked expression. She could feel Junketsu's child-like presence in her mind, the previously inaudible whispers now understandable in a way that defied comprehension.

"All of my mistakes..."

Satsuki's hair whipped frenziedly within the intense aura as she pointed the Scissor Blade at her mother, "Every decision that harmed others in the name of stopping you... of stopping the Original Life Fiber... will need to face the light of day! There's not a trace of doubt or indecision in my mind about such things! I will gladly face judgment for my actions! But at this moment that does not matter! Everyone in Karakura Town is fighting against you, Ragyo Kiryuin! They are risking everything to destroy Xcution and your COVERS! To destroy Life Fibers and shatter their hold upon humanity's fate!"

"AND THAT..."

Junketsu's eyes widened as the aura exploded into a beacon of light visible across Karakura Town, "... IS WHY I WILL DEFEAT YOU... RAGYO KIRYUIN!"

"No! This cannot be..."

Ragyo couldn't understand the event transpiring before her eyes. No... she adamantly refused to believe it! Such a thing was impossible! Yet a cold shiver raced down her spine when thousands of inaudible roars merged into a cacophony, the result of her COVERS simultaneously disintegrating into their constituent Life Fibers.

"Comment pourriez..."

She involuntarily stepped backwards, mouth slightly agape in growing shock and disbelief, when the countless Life Fibers floating above the city streamed towards her daughter. Lips quivering in unadulterated loathing at Junketsu absorbing her COVERS, making their power and strength her own, Ragyo clenched her teeth in mounting frustration! This couldn't be happening!

"Impossible!"

Multicolored spiritual energy exploded from the Kiryuin matriarch's body, bathing the surrounding landscape with enough light to rival her foolish daughter, as she shot forward with all the speed she could muster, "You are unworthy of wearing such clothing!"

Satsuki watched her mother's inhuman breakdown with passive detachment as she calmly placed her left hand upon the cerulean Scissor Blade, the Hōgyoku clasped firmly within her fingers. She could feel Junketsu transforming, immersing her body with the strength of every COVERS in Karakura Town. Breathing deeply as Junketsu's synchronized power pulsed outward, dispelling the surrounding rain and causing Ragyo Kiryuin to momentarily falter, Satsuki scowled before shouting at the top of her lungs.

"JUNKETSU... SHINZUI!"

Fly Like An Eagle

Here's Chapter 56 of my story and let me state right off the bat - I'm proud of everything that happens. It's the culmination of years of work, constantly making sure to not screw anything up. It was difficult, I'll admit, but I believe it was worth it in the end. Some parts of this chapter took longer to write than others, but that was only to ensure the quality of everything - fight scenes or not - were up to my standards. So I hope you enjoy the chapter!

Oh! I also highly recommend AFTER finishing the chapter to visit that-booky-chick15 on deviantart. She's done a lot of fanart for my story. I don't want to spoil anything but one of her newest artworks is a picture of Junketsu's fashion week apparel, colored using the scheme I chose for this story.

---

...

---

Chapter 56 - Fly Like An Eagle

Kugo Ginjo grimaced, eyes narrowed as he raised a hand to block the blinding light filtering through the rain-soaked kitchen window, "Was that... a Hado?"

His skin nearly itched from the potent spiritual energy composing the technique, a testament to its sheer magnitude. It was mind-boggling. He knew the higher-level Bakudo and Hado would be incomparable to the basic Kido he learned during his time as a substitute shinigami but this... this was unbelievable. Was every captain capable of casting such devastatingly powerful techniques? The incantation must have been enormous. But that was the least of his concerns at the moment. Leaning forward when Isshin's house shook, the entire structure shaking under the Hado's shockwave, Ginjo frowned when he tried identifying the shinigami fighting Ragyo Kiryuin.

He didn't recognize their spiritual pressure.

Then again, that was somewhat expected. As the newest human to miraculously obtain shinigami powers he had been stationed in the World of the Living. The only times he met with the Gotei 13 were during his reports and when Jushiro Ukitake gave him the so-called combat pass, smiling while lying to his face about the badge's true purpose. And after countless years of loyalty and dedication they had the audacity to frame him for murder?

The Seireitei could rot in hell for all he cared.

Still, he wouldn't care if the Captain Commander personally confronted Ragyo Kiryuin. The woman was an inhuman monster attempting to sacrifice humanity to Life Fibers. It didn't make any sense why the old bastard hadn't already killed Ragyo.

"Boy, that's some serious firepower!"

Kon jumped onto the countertop with a soft plop, his plushie body squeaking as he walked closer to the window. Raising a stubby arm over his beady eyes, completely ignorant of the thoughts coursing through Ginjo's mind, the Mod Soul turned autonomous COVERS whistled at the already fading explosion of light and spiritual energy, "You have any idea who's fighting Ryuko's crazy mom?"

The former member of Xcution frowned, "No."

"Well, it's giving me the creeps," Kon huffed with an exaggerated flourish, one plushie arm pointing out the window, "And those things are still freaky!"

The massive weapon strapped across Ginjo's back shifted when he noticed the hundreds of COVERS floating overhead, flickering crimson light heralding their arrival as they poured from the east. Damn it! How did Ragyo's army of COVERS break through Nudist Beach's defenses? Fingers twitching as he resisted the urge to confront the Life Fiber beings, Ginjo stormed out of the kitchen, leaving Kon alone to threaten the COVERS. This wasn't right . Coming back to Isshin's house at the last minute, disregarding any orders from Satsuki and Nudist Beach, was his decision but he couldn't ignore the guilt welling in his chest.

He wanted to personally take down his insane colleagues, if only to alleviate the immense guilt of standing on the sidelines for seventeen years. It was his fault Ragyo Kiryuin was not stopped years ago. If anyone died their deaths would fall on his shoulders. Yoruichi Shihoin was strong but the Elite Four's regalia, no matter how improved by Kisuke Urahara, could not match Xcution's raiment in terms of power. He wasn't even sure Ichigo's friends would stand a chance if Ragyo ordered Xcution to massacre everyone that moved.

Especially if she had the Grand Couturier reweave their raiment before invading Karakura Town.

"I hope dad's ok..."

His mouth tightened into a grimace at the fearful voice. The floorboard creaking loudly as he hesitantly continued walking into the living room, Ginjo nearly stopped when he noticed Yuzu and Karin staring through the window at the COVERS floating overhead, the former's hands nervously clenched over her chest. Giving a half-hearted greeting when they turned around, the friendly gesture briefly faltering at Karin's suspicious scowl, he tensed when Yuzu desperately asked, "Mr. Ginjo, do you think our dad's alright?"

"Don't worry about Isshin. I'm sure he's perfectly fine."

Ginjo chuckled even as he lied directly to Isshin's daughters, "Ragyo Kiryuin might be strong but even she fears your old -"

There was a deafening thump when several COVERS simultaneously landed outside the house, pavement and concrete shattering beneath the massive Life Fiber beings as they began smashing apart the neighborhood. Her heart beating rapidly at the sight of the monsters, the crimson light shining from within their bodies causing her to feel nauseous, Yuzu flinched away from the window when one of the COVERS turned in her direction.

"Don't worry, Yuzu," Ginjo attempted to reassure the terrified girl, drawing a scowl from Karin, "Isshin installed an Anti-COVERS barrier around this place over the summer. We're practically invisible to those things. Ragyo Kiryuin might know this address but your old man's smarter. He made sure not a single COVERS could get through the front door."

"Is that why I couldn't go outside?! I literally burst into flames when I tried escaping through the back door, you bastard!"

Kon's angry shouting cut through the tension when the Mod Soul sprinted into the room, an annoyed expression on his face. Leaping onto the coffee table before throwing everything he had at the former substitute shinigami, fully intent on decking the guy in the jaw for his previous humiliation, his plan fell comically apart when Ginjo grabbed him without turning around. As he struggled within the man's grip, muffled curses causing Ginjo to tighten his fingers, Kon suddenly stopped. Of course! How could he not see it earlier? Finally realizing that the atrocious dress Yuzu stitched onto his beautiful body, he freed his mouth and huffed, "On second thought give my thanks to Isshin, will ya?"

"Huh?"

Quirking an eyebrow before releasing Kon, the possessed stuffed animal landing in a somewhat dignified manner before shuffling back toward the kitchen, Ginjo's mouth drew into a grimace when a derisive snort caught his attention. Arms trembling with barely restrained anger, fingers clenched into quivering fists, Karin's dark grey eyes narrowed as she glared at the former shinigami, "Why are you here? If the old goat turned this place into a fortress then why the hell are you standing around here doing nothing?"

"Karin!"

Weeks of frustration and fear caused Karin to lash out, furiously pulling away from Yuzu when her sister tried comforting her. She couldn't stand it! All of her friends left weeks ago, right before Ragyo Kiryuin's monsters swept across most of Japan. She didn't even know if any of them were still alive! Grabbing Ginjo's jacket, her knuckles turning white from the pressure, tears welled in Karin's eyes as she shouted, "Why aren't you out there fighting that woman's army of monsters!?"

"It's not that simple..."

A flash of lightning accompanied the half-hearted response, painting the living room in shades of purple and white. Ginjo knew there weren't any excuses for his actions. He selfishly retreated from the front lines to protect Isshin's daughters, allowing dozens of men and women to fall against Ragyo Kiryuin's army of COVERS. Their deaths, or worse, would be on his hands.

"Of course it's simple!"

He refused to meet Karin's eyes as she continued shouting, her accusations containing several words someone her age shouldn't know. Turning toward the window as Yuzu moved to calm her sister down, the rain-soaked landscape offering him very little solace, Ginjo stiffened when something moved across the street, darting rapidly from rooftop to rooftop before stopping several blocks away. Strange... there shouldn't be anyone this far away from the front lines. And most of the civilians fled to Osaka and other cities days ago. Wait... he knew this spiritual pressure.

Quickly grabbing Yuzu and Karin when light flashed from the figure's position, Ginjo leapt into the kitchen seconds before the living room exploded, showering everything in shards of splintered wood and glass.

Ginjo grunted when his head smashed through the table before slamming against the far wall of the kitchen, his back immediately flaring in pain from the impact. Ignoring the ringing in his ears, he sighed in visible relief upon noticing Yuzu and Karin were mostly unharmed by the explosion. Bruised and disoriented but nothing serious. Blood trailing down his face as he slowly stood back on his feet, a light squeak barely grabbing his attention when he accidentally stepped on Kon, Ginjo tensed when the normally invisible barrier around Isshin's house shimmered brightly before shattering.

Of course the rocket had an Anti-Life Fiber warhead. Why wouldn't it?

"It appears I've overestimated the potency of Isshin's Anti-COVERS barrier."

His eyes widened as a figure calmly strutted through the smoking hole in the living room, their footsteps measured and precise. Angrily reaching over his shoulder for Ragnarok when the figure noticed his presence, their purple metallic armor glistening wetly from the storm, Ginjo clenched his teeth and sneered, "I should have known..."

Ominous multicolored light pierced through the acrid smoke and dust, dissipating the residual particulates as the petite figure removed the violet visor covering her amber eyes, "Your presence is unexpected, Kugo Ginjo. Lady Ragyo presumed someone with your history would be fighting on the front lines against Xcution and her COVERS."

"Is that right?"

Ginjo shifted his footing as he unsheathed Ragnarok, the massive weapon pointed threateningly at the dark skinned woman. This wasn't good. He could sense the spiritual pressure of her Excussion Raiment, restitched in the aftermath of the Great Culture and Sports Festival by the Grand Couturier. It seemed Ragyo Kiryuin truly wasn't holding anything back when it came to wiping out Karakura Town. Glancing over his shoulder, Yuzu and Karin's terrified expressions causing his hands to clench tightly around Ragnarok, he nevertheless smiled arrogantly at the woman, "You must be losing your touch, Hououmaru. Nineteen years and you still don't know anything about me? I'm almost insulted."

The leader of Xcution frowned at his arrogance, "Lady Ragyo was suspicious of your true allegiance for many years."

He tensed when several COVERS landed outside, their monstrous forms glowing with a bright crimson light, "Why did you betray Isshin?"

"I don't understand the question," Hououmaru responded, her eyes momentarily drifting to Isshin's daughters.

"I thought it was odd when I sensed your spiritual pressure near Isshin... or at least someone similar to you," Ginjo scoffed, which elicited nothing more than a quirked eyebrow out of curiosity from the secretary, "Heh... I bet you're confused by what I'm talking about, Hououmaru. So let me break things down for you..."

Multicolored light shimmered around Ragnarok, drawing the woman's attention as he finished, "Isshin was talking to someone right before the Bleach Bomb exploded in his face. But that person wasn't you. Their spiritual pressure was different... almost unnatural. If I had to guess, I'd say someone created a Life Fiber clone with your memories."

"Your knowledge of Lady Ragyo's techniques remains frighteningly accurate, Kugo Ginjo."

Hououmaru permitted the slight trace of annoyance to mar her otherwise stoic façade. Kugo Ginjo's unexpected presence in Isshin's house made obtaining her objective exponentially more difficult. His knowledge concerning Life Fibers - learned over the course of nearly two decades of traitorous service to Lady Ragyo - meant she couldn't afford to simply attack without forethought. Clacking an armored heel against the floor upon deciding the most expedient course of action to eliminate the threat posed by Ginjo, she ignored the loud impacts of the COVERS landing outside, "However, your loyalty to Isshin Kurosaki is quite suspect."

Ginjo was taken aback by the comment, "What?"

"You mentioned sensing something strange about my clone, which placed you in a position to counter Lady Ragyo. Yet you decided not to act," Hououmaru smirked in satisfaction as shocked realization slowly dawned upon the traitorous employee, "Your presence at the crucial moment in Operation Laissez Faire could have derailed Lady Ragyo's plans. All of her strategies depended upon incapacitating Isshin Kurosaki. Yet your inaction allowed the operation to proceed. Isshin Kurosaki is currently unable to muster the strength to oppose Lady Ragyo, leaving the naked apes and her rebellious daughter without protection."

She mockingly bowed at the waist, a faint smirk pulling at the corners of her mouth, "And for that you have my sincerest gratitude, Kugo Ginjo. Your continued service to Revocs has been -"

An intense burst of multicolored light caused Hououmaru to reflexively unsheathe her black trench knife, the obsidian weapon barely parrying the massive sword aiming to cleave off her head. Rapidly dodging the rest of Ginjo's subsequent attacks, flickers of purple electricity highlighting her movements, her eyes widened when he suddenly released his grip upon Ragnarok, the blade spinning twice through the air before embedding itself into the floor. Caught off guard by the absurdity of Ginjo's action, she was sent flying out of the house when he punched her squarely in the jaw.

"Kon!"

Ginjo retrieved Ragnarok from its impromptu perch before Hououmaru even cleared the sidewalk. The floor creaking underneath his combat boots as he swung his massive weapon at the COVERS attempting to enter the living room, the Life Fiber creatures freezing when he flashed through their bodies before scattering into strands of crimson fibers, he grimaced before looking over his shoulder. Rain soaking his hair when he saw the Mod Soul standing in front of Karin, Ginjo shouted at the top of his lungs, "Take Yuzu and Karin as far away from here as possible! Don't stop for anything!"

"R-Right!"

The plushie nodded fervently before pressing the large button on his stomach. Sharpened tailor claws raking across the kitchen floor as he transformed into his awesome and powerful COVERS form in an outburst of multicolored stars, Kon chuckled with a metallic undertone before quickly stopping. This was no time for laughing. His glowing crimson eyes locked on Ginjo as Yuzu and Karin climbed onto his back, their hands grabbing bundles of his Life Fibers for support, the Mod Soul turned COVERS saluted the former substitute shinigami with his tail before bounding out the back door.

Smirking as the Mod Soul escaped, his spiritual pressure disappearing into the distance, Ginjo's momentarily relief vanished at the sound of rapidly approaching footsteps.

His raiment fluttering as the rest of the COVERS began pursuing Kon, he waited just a moment before slammed his sword into the street, the subsequent explosion of spiritual energy forcing Rei Hououmaru backwards. Rain mixing with the sweat dripping down his face as the secretary landed on her feet, random bursts of purple electricity arcing from her raiment, he hefted Ragnarok across his body and grimaced. This wasn't good. Hououmaru possessed the highest Life Fiber resistance in Xcution. He didn't know if his Cuirasse Raiment could take her down.

"What's wrong, Hououmaru?"

Ginjo smirked at the woman's confused expression, a stark departure from her earlier stoicism, "You seem surprised. Didn't Riruka mention anything about my new raiment?"

"Do not confuse surprise with frustration, Ginjo."

Rei Hououmaru flipped her trench knife into a reverse grip, the blade glistening in the pouring rain. Thunder roaring overhead as she started at her traitorous comrade, muscles tensed in preparation for anything and everything, she frowned when Ginjo scoffed under his breath, "You never leave Ragyo's side. The fact she sent you here means you're after something important. Why are you here? What do you want?"

"It's not what I want..."

Information pertaining to Kugo Ginjo's rewoven Cuirasse Raiment streamed down her visor's screen, "It was never what I wanted. All that matters is helping Lady Ragyo achieve her dreams. And one thing she deeply desires is your death, Kugo Ginjo."

Ginjo rolled his shoulders before sliding one foot outwards, gloved hands tightening around Ragnarok's handle. Smirking as multicolored light shone from his raiment, its brilliance a vivid contrast to his surroundings, he chuckled mirthlessly, "You're really a bitch, aren't you Hououmaru? But don't think I'm anything like Isshin! I know how you fight!"

The dark skinned secretary stepped forward in the middle of Ginjo's monologue, vanishing in a flash of electricity. It was incredibly foolish to speak with such a carefree and arrogant attitude in the middle of a fight, especially against someone of her caliber. He should have known better. Small puddles of water rippling when she reappeared behind Ginjo, crackling arcs of electricity gathered in her hands as she thrust the trench knife at his spine, "Électrocution Valse."

A metallic clang reverberated throughout the streets, shattering the nearby windows, when Ginjo spun around, Ragnarok blocking her attack in an intense burst of sparks and spiritual energy.

"I know all your tricks, Hououmaru!"

Ginjo grunted as he turned around, his massive sword aiming for the secretary's neck. Cursing when she disappeared at the last possible moment, vanishing nearly too fast for his eyes to track, he tensed in preparation for her subsequent series of attacks only to scowl when nothing happened. His head snapping back and forth, drops of rain falling from his hair as he searched for the woman, Ginjo briefly stiffened when Hououmaru's spiritual pressure reappeared on the roof of a nearby house. Pivoting on one foot, Ragnarok raised in preparation for her next attack, his eyes narrowed when she simply stared passively from the rooftop, an unreadable expression on her face.

Something wasn't right.

A flash of lightning illuminated Hououmaru's raiment as he flexed his fingers around Ragnarok. What was she planning? He knew from experience that Hououmaru's preferred tactic was quick surgical strikes enhanced by her Excussion Raiment's incredible speed and reflexes. It was something the Grand Couturier actually praised. Yet she wasn't doing that! She allowed him to talk. Purposely wasting any chance of catching him off guard until the very last moment. It made no sense! What the hell was going on?

"Damn it!"

The answer came almost immediately. He wasn't the target! Turning around, thoughts of killing Ragyo's second-in-command forgotten, Ginjo rushed to leave only for Hououmaru to suddenly block his path, the black trench knife in her clawed fingers aimed at his throat.

"Your interference will not be tolerated, Kugo Ginjo. Electrocutation Étape."

Hououmaru's amber eyes narrowed, the purple visor shimmering with a multicolored light as electricity crackled around her Excussion Raiment. Breathing steadily when Ginjo hefted his massive weapon, wisps of spiritual energy wafting from the blade, she shifted one foot backwards. Traitor or not, Kugo Ginjo was still wearing raiment. And as one of the original members of Xcution brought into the organization by Isshin Kurosaki, he knew her raiment's abilities and techniques. Victory could not be presumed until his heart stopped beating.

And she would sacrifice her life to ensure Lady Ragyo's dreams became reality.

---

...

---

"JUNKETSU... SHINZUI!"

Shimmering fragments of sapphire twinkled around Satsuki Kiryuin as the outpouring of spiritual energy disintegrated the surrounding landscape. Standing several feet away, maroon eyes staring at the intense light enveloping her undeserving daughter's hidden form, Ragyo Kiryuin gnashed her teeth in building frustration. This was impossible! How could Satsuki, a failure incompatible with Life Fibers, synchronize with Junketsu to such an extent? Humans were incapable of donning a Kamui's ultimate configuration! A snarl pulling at her lips, twisting her features into an ugly mask unbefitting for a woman of her stature, Ragyo growled at the atrocious blue glimmer.

Bien sûr... that insignificant speck of a man's Life Fiber sphere.

Her eyes widened, muscles instinctively tensing beneath her flaunting dress, when the sapphire light surrounding Satsuki shattered. Sneering as the torrential downpour resumed over the park, droplets of cold rain running down her arms, Ragyo found herself enraptured by the marvelous Kamui adorning her daughter's undeserving flesh.

" Incroyable... "

Junketsu's beautiful white form, which she painstakingly stitched alongside Isshin so many years ago, was now dyed a deep and majestic sapphire. Streams of silver energy constantly wafted from the Kamui's grandiose pauldrons, surrounding Satsuki like a lustrous quilted blanket. It was beautiful, a work of art unmatched by anything created by humanity. A fully ascended Kamui, even one adorning her miserable daughter, was simply stupéfiant .

"Oh?"

Ragyo quirked an eyebrow, her stunned silence replaced by faint amusement, "Oh dear... that's quite the attitude. You really believe that, don't you? It appears you've adopted quite a few of Satsuki's more annoying mannerisms."

She raised Isshin's hardened Life Fiber weapon, the blade glistening in the rain. Ignoring Satsuki's expression, her daughter's eyes narrowing at the seemingly one-sided conversation, Ragyo sighed wistfully. She wasn't in the mood to deal with an overconfident Kamui. But petulant outburst or not, Satsuki was wearing Junketsu's fashion week apparel. It was not a configuration she could take lightly. La vie est drôle. To think her eldest daughter, a failure from birth, would be the first to push their Kamui to such a transformation.

Somewhere Isshin was laughing at her.

Her heels clacked ominously as she vanished, disappearing into the rain when Satsuki rushed forward without pontificating. Did her daughter honestly believe she wasn't devoting her full attention? How naïve. Fighting Junketsu Shinzui with anything less than the majesty of her full strength would insult all Life Fibers. Maroon eyes narrowing slightly in frustration when her daughter closed the distance in a flash of silver light, Scissor Blade raised over her shoulders, she growled before blocking the attack, an annoyed scoff leaving her lips even as the ground shattered underneath her heels. Was this the full extent of Junketsu's power? Satsuki would need far more power to -

Ragyo froze when something nearby caught her attention.

The strength pressing down upon her sword increased returning Ragyo to reality as silver and sapphire burst from Satsuki's prone form. Snarling as spiritual energy erupted from the hardened Life Fiber weapon, the matriarch could not believe this was happening. She was actually being pushed back? HER?! Heels digging into the ground for support when Satsuki pushed forward, silver spiritual energy mixing with the pure essence of her daughter's indomitable willpower, Ragyo cursed as her guard broke, blood spewing from multiple wounds as she was sent flying away, her body crashing unceremoniously through building after building.

"That's an interesting form, Satsuki Kiryuin."

Satsuki frowned, an annoyed scowl pulling at the corners of her mouth, when the heavily bleeding shinigami appeared at her side. Unconcerned by the gaping wound in the middle of his chest, only a thin layer of sweat in the rain hinting at his current level of discomfort, Sosuke Aizen stared at Junketsu's configuration with a discerning eye, "Junketsu Shinzui, was it? Remarkable. I was unaware Kamui were capable of achieving such transformations."

She carelessly tossed the Life Fiber sphere at the shinigami, discarding the invention without acknowledging the compliment. The artifact might be extraordinarily powerful, its power drawn directly from the Original Life Fiber, but it was unnecessary, an unwanted burden compared to Junketsu. Staring northward when a pulse of malignant spiritual pressure pushed against her mind, the once overwhelming sensation barely registering, Satsuki glowered as her hair shifted softly in the wind. She wasn't foolish enough to presume breaking through her mother's guard was enough to put down such a monstrous being. Yet her lips nevertheless curled into a faint smirk, the blanket of silver wrapped around her body brightening as a single thought crossed her mind.

Her mother had been overwhelmed by Junketsu's newfound strength.

Staring at the shinigami when he carefully placed the Life Fiber sphere against his chest, multicolored cracks instantaneously spreading across his injured body as the damage incurred fighting her mother regenerated, Satsuki frowned thoughtfully. She could feel Junketsu's intense disgust for the invention. Yet her mind was focused upon a single question. How did the man acquire part of the Original Life Fiber? Given the disproportional longevity of shinigami could he have created the Hogyoku decades before her mother's existence? Scowling when Junketsu's multicolored eyes swiveled upward, the Kamui's intent understandable despite her inability to hear her voice, Satsuki waited until Aizen finished regenerating before bluntly asking, "Why did you not use your Bankai against my mother, Sosuke Aizen?"

"I'm afraid it's impossible to activate Seirei-no-Makoto in the middle of battle."

Aizen motioned with his shattered zanpakuto when Satsuki turned around, her Kamui's expressive eyes shimmering intensely within the silver aura of spiritual energy, "Unlike Ichigo Kurosaki's fake Bankai - Tensa Zangetsu - Seirei-no-Makoto requires several minutes of intense preparation to minimize unwanted consequences. While it's certainly possible to use my Bankai without proper planning against Ragyo Kiryuin, doing so will undoubtedly affect every person remaining within Karakura Town."

A massive pulse of her mother's monstrous spiritual pressure drew Satsuki's attention before she could respond to the inane explanation. He needed time to prepare his Bankai? Than for what reason did he refrain from activating Seirei-no-Makoto when her mother was ensorcelled by his illusions? She did not expect the man who singlehandedly defeated the entire Soul Society to express such cowardice .

Turning away from the shinigami, wisps of silver spiritual energy rising from the cerulean Scissor Blade, Satsuki scowled and looked over her shoulder, "You claim Seirei-no-Makoto requires several minutes of preparation to focus its effects upon my mother. Your hypocrisy is insulting, Souske Aizen! If that is indeed necessary why did you not use the time before confronting my mother to do so?"

"An interesting observation but unimportant at the moment," Aizen smirked at the teenager's deduction. Motioning to the Life Fiber sphere embedded in his sternum, its once brilliant glow faded to almost nothing, he allowed Satsuki several seconds to ponder his explanation before continuing, "Ragyo Kiryuin's brief theft of the Hokyoku temporarily disabled most of its abilities. As a shinigami I'm unable to wear Life Fibers or properly use hardened Life Fiber weapons like the Scissor Blade. The Hokyoku was the necessary bridge that afforded me the opportunity to fight your mother. Without its inhuman power any further involvement on my part will only hinder your efforts against Ragyo Kiryuin."

Lightning flashed across the heavens as Satsuki vanished, her body flickering out of existence before the vibrant purple faded back into dreary darkness.

Her heels clacked with every purposeful step, Junketsu's childish thoughts impressing themselves upon her mind, as she flew across the drenched city. Muscles growing taut when she instinctively twisted sideways, avoiding the hardened Life Fiber weapon passing inches from her stomach, Satsuki ignored the alien expression of inhuman anger on her mother's face as she shouted at the top of her lungs, "Tenrai Kagai!"

There was a brief moment of respite before a supersonic explosion rippled across Karakura Town, the tumultuous thunderstorm violently repulsed as mother and daughter unleashed a flurry of strikes against each other. Streaks of silver intermingling with rainbow as Satsuki frowned, irritation and frustration building within her chest at the ease in which her mother halted Tenrai Kagai. Refusing to allow such simplistic matters to determine the victor, Junketsu tightening around her body as she grabbed the sapphire Scissor Blade with both hands, Satsuki snarled defiantly and swung downwards, the force connecting against Isshin's weapon sending Ragyo Kiryuin plummeting uncontrollably through the rain.

" Merde... "

Sarcasm dripped from her lips as Ragyo retreated from Satsuki, her flaunting dress fluttering gently in the wind. This was no longer amusing. Furiously parrying her daughter's strikes as Satsuki caught up in a burst of silver light, eyes narrowed at the stolen power fueling Satsuki's current configuration, she stiffened when a long-forgotten presence impressed itself upon her mind. It couldn't be... she was so close! Her attention flickering to Karakura Town far below, maroon eyes desperately searching the ruined city, Ragyo gagged when Satsuki took advantage of her preoccupation, silver energy exploded out of her back as a heel slammed into her stomach.

"You've underestimated Junketsu!"

Satsuki flickered out of sight, silver light hiding her movements as she avoided her mother's retaliation, "You presumed Kamui could never stand against the power granted to you by the Original Life Fiber! But I intend to prove you wrong! For it will be Junketsu's power, tempered by my unyielding willpower, that shall end your insane tyranny over humanity!"

Ragyo snarled at her daughter's arrogance. How dare Satsuki speak to her with such insolence and disrespect! Her hair fluttering gently as she countered her daughter's technique, the spiritual energy contained within the Scissor Blade deflected toward the cityscape hundreds of feet beneath her heels, she ignored the anticipatory sensation pulsing against the corners of her mind. Such things could wait until after she finished addressing Satsuki's unbecoming behavior. Lips twisted sadistically as rainbow light coalesced across her fingertips, wisps rising from the extended digits, Ragyo's mocking laughter ended prematurely when Satsuki reached out and caught her hand.

"That will not work, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

Lightning illuminated the heavens as Satsuki's knee connected against the underside of her mother's chin. Blood mixed with spittle as the matriarch's head snapped backward with an audible crack, the faux bones in her neck briefly shattering from the force, Satsuki wasted no time when Ragyo's heel clacked loudly against solidified air. Spiritual energy coalescing around the Scissor Blade, blue eyes locking with angry maroon, she snarled viciously and swung downward, severing Ragyo's right arm at the elbow.

This was it!

As blood spurted from the glowing wound, the limb immediately dissolving into its composite threads, Satsuki's attention was focused completely upon the hardened Life Fiber blade spinning away from her mother's possession. Grasping it tightly in her left hand, the multicolored hue almost instantaneously shifting to a vibrant sapphire, she crossed the weapons in front of her body and vanished. She only had one chance. Her mother would never allow a second opportunity. A brief flash of silver light heralding her movements as she reappeared behind Ragyo, Isshin's sword and the Scissor Blade poised above her neck, Satsuki's heart stopped when two pairs of perfectly manicured fingers gripped her wrists.

"Come now, Satsuki..."

Ragyo struggled, actually struggled, to hold back the hardened Life Fiber weapons. It appeared someone learned the single weakness of her regeneration. How insulting. Her daughter was a failure unable to merge with Life Fibers. It was blasphemous Satsuki thought she was worthy to wear Junketsu's fashion week apparel! Such glorious clothing was reserved for those blessed by Life Fibers, not some child who didn't know her place in the world. Her arms shaking as the blades slowly moving toward her neck stopped, Ragyo couldn't suppress an arrogant smirk at her daughter's frustrated expression, "Did you really... think it would be... that easy?"

"Enough!"

The blanket of silver light enveloping her body brightened as Satsuki matched her mother's monstrous strength, the hardened Life Fiber weapons once more moving forward, "Do not presume victory, Ragyo Kiryuin! Your battle against Sosuke Aizen proved your strength is insufficient to overwhelm Junketsu Shinzui!"

"Oh? Was that his name?"

Satsuki's breathing stilled when the blades poised inches from her mother's neck slowly reversed course. Her arms quivering under the strain, steam blasting from Junketsu's vents as the Kamui granted her more power, she stiffened when the monster disguised as her mother laughed sadistically, "I take it back, Satsuki! For the first time in your pathetic excuse of a life I'm actually proud of you!"

"I presumed Ichigo or Ryuko would be the first to achieve their Kamui's ultimate configuration," Ragyo grinned despite Satsuki's equal and growing strength. Her silver hair glowing brightly in the dreary rain as she clenched her hands, eliciting a barely repressed grunt of pain from her daughter, she psychotically added, "But you proved me wrong! So allow me to grant you one piece of advice. You might have reached a level of power equal to my own. However..."

Blood gushed when Ragyo pulled Satsuki forward, her head smashing into her daughter's face, "You're still only HUMAN!"

Ragyo chuckled as she tore Isshin's blade from Satsuki's undeserving fingers. A change of plans was required. She no longer wished to reweave Junketsu's dress pattern, turning the Kamui into a loyal servant. It would be a grave insult. A Kamui able to achieve such a glorious transformation, ascending to their fashion week configuration, was to be cherished not disciplined. And best of all, it was Junketsu, not Souichiro or Kisuke Urahara's Kamui, which first reached such a marvelous state! Her wonderful mood only slightly worsened by her daughter's defiant expression, which clashed heavily with the blood oozing from her nose, she shook her head and sighed.

"Your determination is admirable..."

As much as she wished to caress every inch of Junketsu she was running behind schedule.

"But this highly entertaining fight has lost its luster."

An insane smirk twisted the corners of Ragyo's mouth, twisting the matriarch's expression into malevolent pleasure as she smashed Isshin's sword against the Scissor Blade. Grinning when Satsuki blocked the strike, heels digging against solidified air for purchase, she flexed her fingers and pushed a little harder, sending her disrespectful daughter flying backwards through the rain. Heels clacking softly as she pursued her daughter, eruptions of spiritual energy illuminating Karakura Town in vibrant hues with every clash, Ragyo chuckled despite the current standstill.

La vie est drôle.

Dancing around another Tenrai Kagai with barely any effort, Ragyo grinned at the sweat dripping down her daughter's face, "What's wrong, Satsuki? Don't tell me you're going easy on your mother..."

Satsuki panted heavily as she leapt away from her mother, arms trembling slightly, "Enough of your nonsense!"

"Nonsense? Au contraire..."

"You might have exceeded even the paltriest of my expectations but I'm afraid you've reached your limit. Junketsu Shinzui is simply putting too much strain upon your body," Ragyo fixed a strand of silver hair, pleased chuckling escaping her lips at Satsuki's unadulterated and childish anger, "Don't deny it, Satsuki. You've already grown slower, your movements ragged and predictable . I'll confess you've lasted longer than I anticipated but humans were not meant to wear such glorious clothing."

"How dare you!"

Her hands tightly gripped the Scissor Blade at the infuriating comment, spiritual pressure exploding from Junketsu despite her growing and noticeable exhaustion. It would be naïve to deny her mother's words when she spoke the truth. The strain of wearing Junketsu's ultimate configuration, of truly becoming one with the Kamui, was already taking its toll upon her body. Yet she would not allow shattered bones and torn muscles to stand in her way! Such injuries were irrelevant when the fate of humanity rested on her shoulders! Darting forward without provocation, the silver blanket of spiritual energy enveloping her body brightening with every step, Satsuki scowled when Ragyo disappeared at the last second, her psychotic laughter fading into the wind.

Turning around as she tracked her mother's spiritual pressure, she gasped when something cold pierced through her stomach.

"Do I have to repeat myself?"

Ragyo grinned as blood trickled down Isshin's blade, the pained gasp coming from Satsuki's clenched teeth causing her heart to flutter in ecstasy. Lightly caressing Junketsu's sleeve, the Kamui panicking beneath her pure touch, she leaned forward and sensually whispered into her daughter's ear, "You came far, Satsuki, but I'm afraid you've reached your limits as a human. So please give my regards to Souichiro... when you meet him in the deepest bowels of Hell."

"That's right... I'm only human..."

A hand lashed out, tightly grabbing the matriarch's wrist. The taste of copper filling her mouth as she caught her breath, the excruciating pain from the grievous injury tempered by its familiarity, Satsuki glared venomously at the monster in the guise of her mother, "But I will endure even the harshest of punishments to save humanity from Life Fibers!"

"Is that so?"

The Kiryuin matriarch chuckled at her daughter's defiance. It was a childish display of ignorance suited for one on the brink of death. Leering maliciously as she twisted the hardened Life Fiber weapon in Satsuki's stomach, earning a marvelous yet disappointingly muffled grunt of pain, Ragyo raised her other hand, multicolored spiritual energy already coalescing between manicured fingers, "Your determination is admirable but I'm running behind schedule. And it's about time Junketsu returned to her creator..."

Her voice trailed off when the world abruptly inverted. As the sound of wind whistled past her ears, an expression of confusion spread across Ragyo Kiryuin's features.

Had she fallen prey to another one of that insignificant speck's illusions?

As lightning reflected off a bloodstained blade held by a hooded figure, the pealing of thunder accompanied by the fluttering of fabric, her bewilderment was quickly replaced by fury and indignation.

Standing behind the beheaded CEO of Revocs, blood dripping from his reforged zanpakuto, Sosuke Aizen smirked beneath the hood of the spiritual concealing cloak. He could never understand the level of paranoia necessary for Kishime Urahara to conceal multiples cloaks throughout Karakura Town. But who was he to complain?

Strategically retreating when the woman's headless body moved, tearing the stolen blade from her daughter's stomach in the process, he quirked an eyebrow at the expression of unadulterated hatred in her eyes as she finished regenerating.

"How..."

"Since when were you under the impression, Ragyo Kiryuin," Aizen interrupted, his pleasant tone never wavering, "That you could afford to forget about me?"

---

...

---

"Bankai: Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame."

The Grand Couturier stiffened, her widening eyes drifting upwards, when an enormous construct materialized behind the heavily wounded shopkeeper, mannequin-like fingers resting softly upon the ground. With its expression permanently etched into feminine delicacy and braids of long black hair falling across its shoulders, concealing any indecency exposed by the revealing crimson robe, the Bankai appeared perfectly it felt horribly wrong. And the crimson energy surrounding the puppet, wafting from its thin frame like wisps of smoke, was causing her fingers to clench around the Needle Blade.

How could the stupid shopkeeper have something like this hidden up his sleeves?

And why did she feel so nervous?

"She does look rather frightening..."

Nui's attention snapped towards Kisuke Urahara at the vague comment, the shinigami's mouth stretched into an annoying smirk despite the blood covering his clothes. How was he so calm? Amu destroyed every ligament in his shoulder! He should be screaming in pain, not grinning like nothing was wrong! Tensing when the shopkeeper raised a finger, his massive spiritual construct moving slightly in response, her confusion turned into frustration at the insufferable expression on his face, "But that's a perfectly normal reaction. Most people are rendered speechless the first time they see a shinigami's Bankai."

"Humph! You really think your ugly Bankai will change anything?"

Her eyes darkened in vitriolic hatred as she pointed the Needle Blade at the shopkeeper, its purple surface gleaming menacingly in the artificial sunlight. Golly, he must think she was born yesterday to fall for such an obvious trap! Only an idiot wouldn't realize there was something special about his Bankai! Smiling broadly, the expression strained by her complete hatred of the man, she waited until Amu landed at her side before finishing, "Bigger isn't always better, you know! Especially if you're fighting someone faster than you! It may look strong but..."

"... there's no way your Bankai can touch us," Amu raised her Needle Blade, effortlessly continuing the Grand Couturier's train of thought, "After all, we've already injured you quite a bit..."

"... which means all that extra power is completely useless!"

The Grand Couturier's smile widened despite the ominous sensation radiating from the mannequin, "You can hide it all you want... but we can tell you're in a lot of pain! How do you expect to stop us if you can't even hold your stupid zanpakuto?"

"You're absolutely correct."

Kisuke rested his forehead against Benihime's hilt as he conceded the Grand Couturier's point, his bloodstained fingers leaving imprints on the temperamental zanpakuto. Turning his attention to Ururu when her spiritual pressure changed, synchronizing perfectly with Nui Harime's after their brief separation, he pedantically explained, "Despite their overwhelming power Bankai are inherently dangerous. The immense spiritual pressure heavily strains the shinigami - both physically and mentally - which is why Bankai are usually seen as a final resort. While training can minimize the negative effects, activating Bankai while injured usually leads to a proportional decrease in its power."

"However... Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratama is different from most Bankai."

Nui Harime stiffened at the additional piece of information, her expression faltering when the spiritual construct slowly imperceptibly opened its eyes, disturbing crimson light shining from within the empty sockets. His forced smile straining at the Grand Couturier's reaction, the equal yet subdued response from Ururu causing him to briefly reconsider what he was about to do, Kisuke narrowed his eyes and muttered, "She might be strong but my zanpakuto is more of a... supporting hand."

Before she could think about the annoying shopkeeper's answer Nui gasped when portions of her body unraveled, purple Life Fibers spilling out of the open seams covering her arms and legs.

"W-What?"

An uncomfortable fear plucked at her inhuman heart when she noticed the same thing happening to Amu. Trembling eyes staring at the open sutures on her arms, familiar purple light shining brightly in the sunlight as Life Fibers spewed from the wounds, Nui Harime froze in growing terror at the slow rate of her regeneration. Her blonde pigtails fluttering when she leapt away despite her unraveled state, the lack of muscles and bones making the retreat easier, she couldn't suppress a shuddering sigh when the unnatural wounds began healing, the seams closing in a matter of seconds.

Shaking fingers nervously gripped the Needle Blade as she examined the unbroken skin on her arm. She couldn't understand what happened. There was no warning from the man. No hint apart from his stupid comment. And that sensation when her body started falling apart at the seams... that strange feeling quivering in her Life Fibers felt familiar. Almost like his Bankai could...

She nearly dropped the Needle Blade.

No... it couldn't be...

"I see you've figured it out."

Concealed within the protective embrace of his Bankai, the mannequin-like woman delicately clasping her jointed fingers around his body, Kisuke Urahara noted the massive spiritual energy engulfing Karakura Town before continuing, "But that's not surprising. After all, someone with your experience should easily understand the extent of my Bankai's abilities."

She stopped paying attention to the shinigami when a second pair of arms emerged from his Bankai's bare back, the puppet-like arms hanging limply for a fraction of a second before stabbing into the ground. No... this was impossible! Her eyes swiveling momentarily towards Amu, her sister's nervousness and apprehension synchronized with her own, Nui Harime was rendered speechless when the limbs pulled two bundles of Life Fibers from the ground. As the spiritual construct slowly wove the crimson threads between its jointed fingers, the eerily familiar motion disturbing every Life Fiber in her body, Nui's shock twisted into hatred.

"This shouldn't be possible!"

Nui Harime didn't care about the unladylike outburst as she shouted at the shopkeeper, "There's no way your stupid Bankai can manipulate Life Fibers!"

"It's strange how some things in this world just seem to come together..."

Kisuke sighed as his Bankai's original pair of arms receded, allowing his honored guests to see the freshly sewn stitches covering his shoulder and leg. Casually patting down his coat as he stood up, streams of blood trickling from the closed wounds, he frowned at the Grand Couturier's conflicted expression, "But to be perfectly honest I'm not someone who enjoys using Bankai. It's simply too much of a hassle. I'd much rather rely on Benihime's Shikai and my own wits given the opportunity. In fact, over the last few decades I couldn't fathom any situation where using Bankai would be advantageous."

"But I suppose you're rather curious about my Bankai."

His faint expression of amusement faded as he changed the subject, "Well... in any other situation I wouldn't even consider explaining my Bankai's ability. Telling your secrets to the enemy is rather stupid. However, I suppose you've earned a small reward for your hard work."

Taking a single step forward, the spiritual construct rising to full kneeling height behind him, Kisuke stoically raised his zanpakuto, "It's actually very simple. Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame has the ability to restructure anything within an arbitrary radius. In other words, my Bankai allows me to weave and unravel whatever I choose, which includes Life Fibers to a small extent."

He allowed himself to smile despite the hatred radiating from Nui Harime and Ururu, "You know, I suppose that makes us quite alike, miss Grand Couturier."

"No it doesn't!"

Nui Harime didn't care that she shouted at the top of her lungs, causing her synchronized connection with Amu to falter. She didn't care that her hand was clenched tightly enough to nearly draw blood. There was no way this stupid man was at her level! It was impossible! She was trained by Lady Ragyo since the day she could walk to become the Grand Couturier of Revocs! She bled learning the intricacies of weaving Life Fibers into clothing! Her creations and cute outfits were worn by ninety percent of humanity! Her name was mentioned in every corner of the fashion industry! That this man... this monster... who kidnapped Amu and raised her as a pathetic human could even say such a thing was unbelievable!

There was no way his stupid Bankai made them equals!

She barely reined in her anger as she sprinted towards Kisuke Urahara alongside Amu, purple spiritual energy writhing around their Needle Blades. There was no way she would give him the satisfaction of pissing her off! Covering the appreciable distance in the blink of an eye, her body blurring as she swung the hardened Life Fiber weapon at the man's neck, Nui gasped when a shimmering barrier of Life Fibers stopped her attack. What!? How was this possible? Eyes widening as she traced the threads to the Bankai's puppet-like arms, jointed fingers dancing nimbly through the air, she had only a moment to comprehend the impossibility of the situation before her body once more began unraveling.

Pink boots stepped lightly upon the ground when the Grand Couturier retreated from the shopkeeper, her teeth clenched in growing frustration and hatred. This wasn't supposed to be happening! Not to her! Ignoring the sensation of her body stitching closed, a feeling that reminded her of that night nine months ago, she angrily lashed out when the Bankai pointed a jointed hand in her direction. As the purple energy surrounding the Needle Blade collided with the invisible stitching, destroying the attack in an explosion of light, she froze when the shopkeeper's voice echoed across the underground chamber.

"Have you ever wondered how I, a lowly and humble candy-store owner, created Mugetsu?"

Kisuke granted Nui Harime a moment to ponder the question as he tracked Ururu's changing position. Carefully observing the honest bewilderment in the Grand Couturier's eyes, her tempestuous anger replaced by outright jealousy, he subtly shook his head and tapped Benihime against the ground, "Due to the unique nature of my Bankai I've obtained what could best be described as perfect knowledge in the field of stitching. Give me a piece of clothing and I'll tell you the stitching and dress patterns. But unlike a normal couturier my skills are not limited to simply clothing . With a single observation I can determine the suturing necessary to maximum one's potential... or limit their power and mobility."

"Of course, your physiology renders you highly resistant to that particular aspect of my Bankai."

He frowned when Ururu landed next to the Grand Couturier, her emotionless expression twitching from unadulterated hatred. As their nearly identical spiritual pressures synchronized once more, disturbing the delicate imbalance he'd carefully cultivated, Kisuke closed his eyes, "I suppose you find this information troubling, Nui Harime. But I'm sure someone with your knowledge understands what I'm saying. My Bankai allowed me to compress what it took Souichiro Kiryuin and his friends in Nudist Beach nearly a decade to create into only a few months. I'll confess it was frustratingly difficult to create Mugetsu. My abilities with Life Fibers pale in comparison to Isshin's and Ragyo Kiryuin's. Even with my humble skills it took three attempts to get it right..."

Benihime's bloodstained blade gleamed darkly in the artificial sunlight as he coldly added, "But I'm sure as the Grand Couturier of Revocs you're more than aware of the difficulty in creating Kamui."

Nui Harime stiffened at the comment, her eyes widening at the implications behind the man's words, before rage overwhelmed any semblance of sanity. No! It wasn't fair that Kisuke Urahara, an insignificant human, created a Kamui when she couldn't! Nothing about that made sense! She tried for years, using every skill Lady Ragyo taught her about weaving Life Fibers, only to fail over and over again! Every Kamui she wove never opened their eyes! They never spoke to her! None of her beautiful creations possessed the same spark of life she saw in Junketsu or Mugetsu or any of the other Kamui! Why couldn't she do it? She could weave raiment with both arms tied behind her back. Her eyes were good enough to spot the Banshi in Satsuki's cheap and mass-produced Goku Uniforms!

So why couldn't she weave a Kamui?

She instinctively raised the Needle Blade when the shinigami vanished, sparks illuminating her face as the hardened Life Fiber weapon clashed against his zanpakuto. Pushing angrily against the shopkeeper's increased strength, pulses of spiritual energy whipping across the underground chamber while her pink boots dug into the ground for support, Nui growled at Kisuke Urahara's expression. Why was he smiling? Did he honestly believe he could win just because he got stronger? She wasn't stupid ! So what if his Bankai could briefly unravel her Life Fibers. It didn't matter ! None of what he did mattered! He was going to die, bleeding out on the ground like a naked ape for daring to stand in Lady Ragyo's way!

He would never harm another hair on Amu's head!

"What's wrong?"

Nui laughed, the melodious sound concealing her growing instability as she repulsed the shopkeeper's zanpakuto. Leaning forward when Amu appeared on the edge of her vision, her sister poised to skewer the shopkeeper through the spine, she grinned broadly, exposing her sharpened teeth, "Did you honestly think your ugly Bankai would change anything?"

"Of course I did..."

Kisuke returned the Grand Couturier's smirk right before his arms unraveled, flesh and bone exposed for a brief instant before stitching back together. Noting the fear in Nui Harime's eyes when his strength matched... then exceeded... her own, he reached out and grabbed the Needle Blade, "After all, I've already restructured my arms!"

"W-What?"

Nui gasped when her arms buckled under the shopkeeper's monstrous strength. How was he so strong!? Teeth clenched as her pink boots dug into the ground, rock and dirt shattering beneath her heels, her hate-filled expression twisted in fear when Kisuke Urahara reached out and grabbed the Needle Blade. This was impossible! No! She refused to let a stupid man defeat her! Not this time! Not again! Hands shaking from exertion as she desperately tried slicing apart the shinigami's fingers, sapphire eyes widening when that failed, Nui screamed when the shopkeeper thrust his arm forward, sending her flying uncontrollably halfway across the underground chamber.

"That's one down..."

Blood dripped from the former captain's restructured fingers, the expected consequence of grabbing a hardened Life Fiber weapon with his bare hands. Briefly pondering the limits of the Grand Couturier's strength before ducking sideways, strands of light-blond hair passing across his vision as the other half of the Needle Blades came precariously close to severing his head, Kisuke grimaced at his estranged daughter's uncharacteristic vitriol. That was close. Another second and he might have actually died. Vanishing in an exceedingly rapid step of Shunpo, sparks dancing across his vision as he blocked Ururu's furious assault with more effort than anticipated, he frowned when he sliced into her shoulder only for the wound to regenerate in a flash of purple light.

This wasn't good. Despite Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame's ability to restructure his body to maximum effectiveness, boosting his power beyond a Life Fiber Hybrid like the Grand Couturier, the effects were only temporary. Soon he would no longer be able to match Nui Harime or Ururu's strength. And their subconscious regeneration was turning the fight into a battle of attrition, one he couldn't win through conventional methods.

Twisting clockwise when Ururu broke through his guard, the purple Needle Blade slicing harmlessly through his favorite coat, he swiftly reached into his pocket and removed a small device. It was unfortunate things progressed to this point but Ragyo Kiryuin's actions left him no alternative. As he held the slightly glowing weapon, an interesting thing he borrowed from Isshin's car, Kisuke purposely ignored the fear in Ururu's eyes before depressing the Bleach Grenade's trigger. Now wasn't the time for sentimentality. Adhering the device onto his daughter's dress, he forcibly kicked her away as the Anti-Life Fiber weapon timed down, exploding in an intense burst of white light.

"I'm sorry, Ururu."

Guilt twisting through his heart like a knife as the explosion faded, allowing him to see Ururu's heavily damaged and burnt body. Visibly flinching when his daughter desperately tried pushing herself off the ground, shaking arms barely functioning before she collapsed with a pained cry, he looked over his shoulder and vanished as a thoroughly enraged Nui Harime crashed through the air.

"How DARE you hurt, Amu!"

The ground shattered under the unrelenting spiritual energy exploding from the Needle Blade, metal plating and reinforcements disintegrating as she desperately tried wiping the man from existence. He would pay for hurting Amu! Breathing heavily as she searched for the cowardly shopkeeper, Twin Life Fiber Entanglement making sure she felt her sister's agony and pain, Nui Harime screamed incoherently at a familiar wooden clomp. Fingers furiously clenched around the Needle Blade, her once immaculate and perfect pink dress covered in tears and rips, she spun around and slammed the purple weapon against the shinigami's zanpakuto.

"You seem a tad upset, miss Grand Couturier," Kisuke offhandedly commented, pushing away the teenager's weapon before quickly retreating.

"Y-You... bâtard!"

Nui Harime spat out the curse, a stark departure from her normal rejection of such crass language. She was going to kill him! Her body flickering as she chased after the shinigami, his insufferable expression twisting her mind until nothing remained but anger and hatred, the underground chamber exploded every time she smashed the Needle Blade against his cheap and ugly zanpakuto. How dare Kisuke Urahara lay a finger on her sister! Amu was the only person in the world who understood her feelings! Ichigo and Lady Ragyo might be family but Amu was her other half! She filled in the emptiness and constant loneliness in her heart!

She wouldn't let Kisuke Urahara take that away!

Snarling when the shopkeeper avoided her attack, vanishing before the Needle Blade bisected his body from shoulder to waist, Nui's anger lessened at a familiar whimpering. Turning around, sapphire eyes locked onto the unconscious form of her sister lying nearby, Nui Harime felt a chill course down her spine. Impossible! How did she not realize Kisuke Urahara was leading her in a complete circle? Stiffening when something familiar prickled against her senses, feeling her mind with dread, she tried retreating only to gasp as hundreds of Life Fibers wrapped around her body. The Needle Blade clattering to the ground as her arms and legs were tightly bound, the glowing threads preventing her from moving a muscle, only a single thought pierced the overwhelming veil of confusion and shock.

How was this happening? There was no way the shopkeeper could have planned everything out! He couldn't have foreseen she would stand in this exact spot!

"There's no point trying to break those Life Fibers."

Kisuke casually walked around the ensnared Grand Couturier as she collapsed onto the ground, her face impacting the dirt with a sickening thud, "Thanks to Houka Inumuta's almost perfect surveillance of Honnouji Academy I've learned the limitations of your strength. From the video evidence of your battles against Ichigo, Satsuki and Ryuko I've determined the maximum output your Life Fibers could exert... and then increased that estimation by twenty percent. It was a precaution, one that took into account Orihime regenerating the damage to your eye. I'm also aware of the hooks underneath your fingernails, designed to remove Banshi from Life Fiber clothing."

The Grand Couturier's heart stopped when a familiar purple sword was placed underneath her chin, the cold material lightly caressing her skin. Her eyes shaking at the second Needle Blade in the shopkeeper's left hand, she couldn't think... couldn't breathe... as he raised the weapon above her neck, the emotionless expression on his face never wavering. S-She was going to die...

"It would be rather simple to kill you with these blades."

Stunned when Kisuke Urahara turned around, removing the Needle Blades from her neck in the process, Nui Harime only managed to emit a choked gasp, "W-What?"

The former captain walked away from the terrified teenager, his wooden geta clomping softly against the ground. Switching the awkward Needle Blades for Benihime, the familiarity of his zanpakuto rather comforting, he paused before looking over his shoulder, "You have quite the body count, Nui Harime. I'm sure there are thousands of people more than willing to kill you. After all, your death would end Ragyo Kiryuin's plans to feed humanity to the Original Life Fiber. Not to mention stopping construction of Shinra Koketsu. However, that would greatly upset Ururu..."

"Her name is Amu!"

Nui Harime struggled against the Life Fibers binding her movements, sapphire eyes never straying from the shinigami's emotionless expression, "I won't let you kill her!"

"Why would I kill my own daughter?"

The Grand Couturier's eyes turned upward when the enormous form of Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame loomed over the shinigami, standing to its full unrestricted height. Watching in horror when the construct's hands danced through the air, dozens of Life Fibers coaxing themselves from its jointed fingers, she stiffened at Kisuke Urahara's next words, "Perhaps you misheard me, Nui Harime. I have no intention of killing you or Ururu. However, I would recommend you remain absolutely silent. Unless, of course, you wish for Ururu to die."

An ominous echo radiated throughout the underground chamber as he tapped Benihime against the ground, Nui Harime's desperate cries falling upon deaf ears. His expression etched into solemn resignation when the Life Fibers woven around his Bankai's fingers shot forth, snaking through the air before piercing Ururu's skull, it took every ounce of self-control to not turn away when his daughter began screaming .

---

...

---

Things weren't going as she anticipated.

Ragyo Kiryuin snarled when the shinigami's sword carved into her stomach, blood spraying through the rain before the wound rapidly sewed itself closed. How was this possible? She destroyed his precious zanpakuto only a few minutes ago! The blasphemous sound of torn clothing fueling her loathing of the man as she furiously countered his successive strikes, the deafening clash of their blades driving away the surrounding storm, she feigned bafflement when Sosuke Aizen's sword stabbed through her heart. Did he honestly think she would be inconvenienced by such pathetic injuries?

Reaching out, fingers tightly clasping the shinigami's vestments when he attempted to retreat, she prepared to return the favor only to quickly turn around, Isshin's sword deflecting the cerulean Scissor Blade swinging towards her neck.

This was getting agaçant .

"I was wondering where you were hiding, Satsuki."

She smirked at her daughter's expression, childish hatred and misplaced feelings of guilt twisting her features into something ugly and atrocious. How appropriate for one unworthy of being a child of COVERS. Gracefully moving away from the shinigami, each successive clack of her heel covering hundreds of feet, Ragyo chuckled when Satsuki rushed forward, her movements precise despite the blood oozing from her stomach. Oh... now that was interesting. It seemed Junketsu was actively staunching the bleeding. Flexing her wrist when Satsuki finally caught up, bursts of energy illuminating the heavens with each clashing of their weapons, Ragyo chuckled upon noticing Junketsu's growing nervousness.

Even the Kamui instinctively understood the insurmountable gulf between their powers, a lesson her foolish daughter appeared intent on ignoring.

Her actions were flawless, each footstep properly measured, as she gracefully avoided the Scissor Blade before reaching out and grabbing her daughter's wrist. Fingers gently caressing the remarkable fabric composing Junketsu's fashion week apparel, her motherly touch earning a disrespectful shiver from the ungrateful Kamui, Ragyo didn't hesitate to smash her knee into Satsuki's stomach. Taking extra care to hit exactly where Isshin's blade already pierced taut muscles, she sighed wistfully at her daughter's anguish.

Fashion week apparel or not, it was impossible for a human to stand against one blessed by the Original Life Fiber.

"I will not... yield to you... Ragyo Kiryuin!"

Her mouth twitched in annoyance when Satsuki endured the attack, grunting painfully but not flinching. An imperceptible hint of pride tainting her thoughts as she grasped her daughter by the throat, squeezing just hard enough to make her struggle for every breath, she glared into Satsuki's defiant eyes, "Yield? This isn't some childish schoolyard skirmish. Your valued Elite Four won't be saving you at the last second. This is reality, Satsuki. So I'm afraid you -"

She instinctively released her coughing daughter when a familiar presence imposed itself upon her subconscious. Damn that man! Strands of silver hair floating across her vision as she narrowly avoided Sosuke Aizen's zanpakuto, the blade coming embarrassingly close to severing her head a second time. Growling in frustration at the constant interruptions, spiritual pressure exploding from her body, she rushed forward, slamming her hardened Life Fiber weapon against the shinigami's zanpakuto with enough force to send him skidding backwards across the sky.

Spiritual energy illuminated the heavens as she clashed furiously with the shinigami, her offensive only faltering when Satsuki had the audacity to attack at the same time. But the brief moment required to correct her daughter's foolish behavior, sending her crashing through several buildings before slamming into the ground, gave Sosuke Aizen enough time to vanish in a burst of speed. Covering his movements with several low-level Hado, the worthless techniques granting him valuable time, his expression shifted in surprise when she parried his sword.

How insulting! Did he think she wasn't paying attention ?

Snarling as she countered the man's subsequent attacks, the randomness in which he switched tactics highly infuriating, Ragyo gagged when his sword abruptly twisted around Isshin's blade, impaling her throat in a small spurt of blood.

"I've grown tired of your foolishness..."

Ragyo's voice was clear despite the blade lodged through her throat. Blood lips twisting into a psychotic smile as she grasped the zanpakuto, fingers tightly clenched around the metal when he attempted to retreat like a coward, she barely cracked the spiritual weapon before a massive explosion of sapphire crossed her vision. Jumping backwards as her daughter flew upwards, the hole in her throat closing upon the removal of the man's blade, she sneered at the... camaraderie... between Satsuki and the abhorrent shinigami.

That could not be allowed to continue.

"Lumière Divine."

The shinigami's eyes widened at the lack of forewarning behind her divine attack before vanishing... just as she expected. Only a suicidal imbécile would dare attempt to withstand the power of someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber. Smirking when her daughter rushed forward without thinking, streaks of sapphire light trailing from Junketsu's glowing form, she waited until the Scissor Blade was inches from her neck before stepping away, avoiding the straightforward attack. Her serene expression tightening as she parried Satsuki's subsequent strikes, sparks illuminating her face with every redirection of the cerulean weapon, the satisfying crack of her foot against her daughter's chest caused her to smile.

It didn't matter if Junketsu granted Satsuki superhuman endurance. Her daughter was still human . And that meant...

"Bakudo Number Sixty One - Rikujokoro."

Ragyo barely shuddered when six thin shafts of golden light pierced her body for the second time. Damn that pathetic man! Her heels clacking against platforms of spiritual energy as the technique abruptly shattered, dissolving into nothingness before the arrogant shinigami lowered his hand, her eyebrow twitched when Satsuki vanished, allowing Isshin's sword to carve harmlessly through the rain. His arrogance was wearing on her nerves! Yet she couldn't deny the effectiveness of his cowardly actions. The brief moment of immobilization was all her daughter needed to retreat, forcing this ridiculous battle to continue for another few seconds.

"To think you would become such an annoyance..."

Her dress rustled as the spiritual energy writhing around Isshin's sword cleaved through the abandoned streets hundreds of feet below, destroying everything in a massive explosion of light. This was getting annoying. She could not afford wasting any more of her precious time fighting her petulant daughter and the atrocious shinigami. The corners of her lips curling upwards at Satsuki's labored breathing, the pained grimace offering some modicum of satisfaction, Ragyo shook her head and sighed, "Perhaps holding back at Honnouji Academy was a mistake. Making sure you were dead would have save me so much grief."

"Your words fall upon deaf ears!"

Lightning flashed behind Satsuki as the glowing blanket of sapphire energy enveloping Junketsu overwhelmed her mother's unholy radiance, "I may be human and perhaps I will never truly wear Junketsu Shinzui. But it is your strength that has faltered, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

Her amusement faltered at the childish outburst. Did her daughter honestly believe she could hide something so obvious from her own mother? How pathetic . It was apparent from the slight quivering of the Scissor Blade that Satsuki was suppressing the intense pain radiating from her perforated stomach and broken ribs. Junketsu might have stopped the bleeding but her daughter was still human, a problem no amount of Life Fibers could fix. Shaking her head in mock pity before vanishing, closing the distance between them in a single step, Ragyo had only a moment to savor Satsuki's astonishment before she was forced to once again lean backwards, narrowly avoiding the zanpakuto carving through the rain.

"Impressive reflexes, Ragyo Kiryuin..."

Sosuke Aizen adjusted Kyouka Suigetsu's direction mid-swing, severing the matriarch's arm at the shoulder, "But you left your guard wide open."

Maroon eyes narrowed at the shinigami's unwarranted smugness as blood gushed from her shoulder. She refused to acknowledge that such an inferior being could stand against someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber. It was impossible! That abomination fused with his chest was the only reason Sosuke Aizen remained among the living! Yet her rage was tempered by reality. She never imagined Satsuki transforming Junketsu into her fashion week apparel. Such a miraculous possibility never crossed her mind! But Junketsu Shinzui alone wouldn't change anything. No... it was dealing with both her daughter and the loathsome shinigami that was causing her to experience something she hadn't felt since that night seventeen years ago.

Exhaustion.

The satisfying crunch of bones echoed hollowly over the rain as she snapped her leg upwards, redirecting the shinigami's grasping fingers away from the hardened Life Fiber weapon still clasped by her severed arm. Did they really think she wouldn't notice their goal? Darting forward as blood streamed into her shoulder, Life Fibers pulling taut during the second it took her body to regenerate the damage, Ragyo scowled when Satsuki appeared at her side, spiritual energy writhing around the Scissor Blade swinging towards her wrist.

Her chest rose and fell rhythmically as she pirouetted counterclockwise, driving the back of her heel directly into Satsuki's exposed stomach. Yet neither the pained grunt escaping her daughter's mouth or the subsequent impact of her body against the ground brought her any comfort. She did not have time for this! Unadulterated hatred pulsing in the darkest depths of her heart as she turned around, eyes widening when the shinigami unleashed a torrent of electricity and spiritual energy from his hand, Ragyo quickly raised Isshin's sword to block the attack only to realize it wasn't enough .

What!?

Teeth clenched as she struggled against the technique's power, heels skidding backwards through the rain, Ragyo stiffened at the thought of this man blemishing her appearance. Fury driving her actions when electricity arced around Isshin's blade, burning her hand nearly to ash, she was forced to wait until the technique finally faltered. Breathing deeply as several flickers of spiritual energy crackled around the hardened Life Fiber weapon, her jaw clenched tightly at the unbothered expression etched upon the shinigami's face.

"You... arrogant... man!"

She snarled viciously as smoke rose from her body, intermingling with the fading traces of spiritual energy from her opponent's attack. How dare he! The hardened Life Fiber weapon shaking vigorously in her hand, electricity briefly arcing between her fingers as multicolored light flowed down the shimmering blade, Ragyo seethed at Sosuke Aizen's expression. It was inconceivable that Satsuki and this... this... man pushed her this far! She refused to allow such a lower creature to insult her - and the Original Life Fiber - any longer!

Growling as strands of silver hair fell across her vision, water dripping from the disheveled and frayed locks, Ragyo forced herself to ignore the minuscule tears adorning her flaunting attire. She had enough of his arrogant behavior!

Her shoulders loosened, the previously burning hatred coursing through her Life Fibers lessening into mere irritation, before she crossed the seemingly insurmountable distance to the shinigami with a single clack of her heel. Fingers curled into claws as she reached for the abhorrent device embedded in the man's sternum, blood mixing with rain when he countered by stabbing his blade through her palm, Ragyo grinned at Aizen's amateurish mistake. Fingers gently squeezing the weapon, shattering the reforged sword into shards of metal, her brief elation disappeared at his reaction.

Something wasn't right.

The man's bewildered surprise towards the destruction of his zanpakuto was too emotional, a reaction at odds with his behavior thus far. That only meant one thing. Leaping away upon catching a glimpse of flickering sapphire upon the shattered remnants of his blade, Ragyo found herself unceremoniously thrown backwards by the shockwave heralding her rebellious daughter's return, spiritual energy caressing her skin as the Scissor Blade came precariously close to severing her arm.

Merde !

Breathing heavily upon regaining her balance, silver hair laying matted against her forehead from the pouring rain, Ragyo's eyebrow twitched when the shinigami mockingly clapped his hands, "Exhaustion must be a peculiar sensation, Ragyo Kiryuin."

His insufferable smirk broadened as he walked forward, fingers loosely holding his shattered sword, "But that's understandable. For most people, the concept of feeling exhausted is an evolutionary advantage designed to prevent meaningless injuries. But as someone tainted by the Original Life Fiber, flesh and bone transformed into something alien yet still familiar, you cannot be described as 'human.' A rather interesting sacrifice, would you not agree? By casting aside your humanity, discarding whatever drew Isshin Kurosaki's naïve attention in the first place, you've become one of the most powerful beings in existence. However, this power possesses limitations. Your regeneration, for example, is linked to -"

The pleasing crunch of cartilage shattering beneath her fist was acceptable compensation as she broke the shinigami's nose, ending his insulting explanation before her daughter could blink. He dared utter Isshin's name with such flagrant disrespect!? Enough was enough! She was past the point of humoring Sosuke Aizen! All that mattered was ending his abhorrent existence and -

Ragyo's train of thought was interrupted when the Scissor Blade cleaved through the shinigami, cutting him in half before severing her head in a spray of blood.

"What!?"

She was baffled by Satsuki's surprisingly vicious action as her body tilted backwards, the Life Fibers connecting her head and neck glowing brightly in the rain. She never expected her daughter to wantonly sacrifice the shinigami's life, especially considering Ichigo and Ryuko's somewhat positive influence on her childish demeanor. Maroon eyes widening when the man's corpse exploded, disintegrating into pieces of rubber and clothing, her disbelief devolved into unbridled hatred . Puppeteering her headless body when Satsuki rushed forward to take advantage of her supposed handicap, Isshin's sword smashing into the Scissor Blade hard enough to send her overconfident daughter careening off balance, Ragyo snarled as her head rejoined her body with a sickening squelch .

Damn it! She was running out of time!

"Come now, Satsuki," Ragyo scoffed as her daughter continued her foolish assault, "Cutting off my head won't get you anywhere, even if you are wielding a Scissor Blade."

"Do not lecture me!"

Satsuki panted heavily, the autumn cold burning her lungs with every breath, when her mother effortlessly parried the Scissor Blade. Staggering backwards, hands shaking around the hardened Life Fiber weapon's curved handle, she granted each word equal weight and passion as the pain emanating from her stomach worsened, "I, more than anyone else, am aware of your monstrous power. But even so... I will push forward! Breaking through any limitations and barriers to ensure YOUR demise, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"Oh? And what does Junketsu have to say about your suicidal behavior?"

She chuckled softly at her daughter's shock, an honest reaction only surpassed by her Kamui's, "Don't look so surprised, Satsuki. Surely you didn't think Junketsu would allow you to callously throw your life away? The moment remaining in her fashion week apparel endangers your life she'll automatically revert to her basic configuration, leaving you on the verge of death."

"What are you talking about!?"

Her daughter's growing nervousness, hidden beneath a cracking veneer of stoicism, was truly a sight to behold, "I'm afraid your body simply can't withstand the majesty of Junketsu's fashion week apparel. And that's the only thing keeping the wound in your stomach closed. So the moment Junketsu transforms back to normal - voluntarily or otherwise - you're going to bleed to death."

"An astute observation."

Sosuke Aizen smiled as he stood an appreciable distance from the matriarch, narrowed eyes observing her muscles for the slightest hint of movement, "However, that line of reasoning raises an interesting question. Your confidence surrounding Satsuki's mental fortitude and spiritual energy, both of which are necessary for her Kamui to stay in its current configuration, suggests the existence of an ulterior motive."

The Hōgyoku shone with a dull light, flickers of blue appearing within the sphere as he swept a hand through the rain, "One might assume through simple observation that your current actions might be motivated by growing desperation. Despite evidence to the contrary your vaunted regeneration isn't limitless. Every lethal or debilitating injury, no matter how minor, causes your spiritual energy to decrease, suggesting your growing frustration with this battle comes from your weakening power. Yet that conclusion would be wrong. For despite your labored breathing and disheveled appearance the odds of victory remain in your favor. Therefore, a simpler conclusion must exist."

His smirk broadened at the matriarch's rising spiritual pressure, "But I don't think I should waste another three minutes of your precious time explaining something you already know."

"How dare you!"

Ragyo snarled at the shinigami's blasphemous mockery, her eyes never drifting away from his arrogant expression as she effortlessly dodged Satsuki's sneak attack. Leaning sideways when the traitorous captain vanished, Isshin's hardened Life Fiber weapon parrying his zanpakuto before proceeding to carve a deep gash in his arm, blood trailed down her fingers as she reached out and grabbed the Scissor Blade. This was unacceptable! Momentarily struggling against her daughter's undeserved strength, teeth bared in growing hatred when she lost track of Sosuke Aizen, Ragyo panted heavily before retreating, the damage to her body already regenerating.

How dare they stand in her... no... the Original Life Fiber's path! Merde... she was running out of time ! She refused to allow the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to fail, not at this crucial stage! And certainly not at the hands of her pathetic daughter and the blasphemous shinigami!

Maroon eyes widening when something caught her attention, a presence in the distance which filled her heart with unholy anticipation, Ragyo's lips curled into a smirk.

"Your camaraderie is impressive... but I'm afraid my patience has reached its limit."

She didn't give her daughter the chance to argue before ascending vertically into the sky, an explosion of spiritual pressure and multicolored light accentuating her movements. It was time to end this farce of a battle. Locks of disheveled silver hair whipping in the rushing wind upon breaking through the clouds, melodious laughter escaping her throat when she sensed Satsuki and Junketsu's presences rapidly growing closer, Ragyo sighed deeply at their commitment. It appeared her troublesome daughter was determined to end her life. And judging from his atrocious power the shinigami wasn't far behind.

Perfect .

"I won't allow you to escape, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

The Scissor Blade carved harmlessly through the rain when she dodged her daughter's straightforward attack, vanishing with a soft clack of her heel. Moving once again as the shinigami attempted the same feat, Isshin's hardened Life Fiber weapon parrying Sosuke Aizen's zanpakuto in a shower of sparks, Ragyo smirked despite her labored breathing, Satsuki's foolish announcement overriding the exhaustion plaguing her body. Allowing her daughter to briefly believe victory was within reach, a fleeting sensation she would quickly tear apart at the seams, she raised her left hand above her head and grinned .

"My dearest daughter... you have so much to learn."

Spiritual energy rapidly gathered between her fingers as she laughed, basking in the nervousness stretching across her daughter's face. How absolutely wonderful ! Her smile widening when the contemptible shinigami swung his blade horizontally through the rain, several techniques erupting from its surface, she refused to acknowledge the futile and pointless effort as they slammed into her body, doing little more than rustling her dress.

"For in what universe..."

Ragyo's eyes locked firmly upon her daughter as the spiritual energy floating within her hand pulsed, bathing the surrounding storm with its majestic radiance, "... were you under the assumption that I was running away?"

Her laughter turned increasingly unhinged when the shinigami leapt backwards, spheres of pink spiritual energy forming out of nothingness around his body. Pathétique ! It didn't matter that he was casting one of his annoying techniques. Nothing he... or her daughter... did at this point would change anything ! Sighing sensually, shimmering hues of light dancing across her face from the sphere of spiritual energy, Ragyo stared directly into Junketsu's quivering eyes, "You have my deepest gratitude, Satsuki! It would have been impossible doing this in the middle of Karakura Town. But thanks to your foolish bravado that's no longer a problem!"

"Éclat Divine!"

---

...

---

"Soten Kisshun, I reject."

Twin streaks of orange light spun into existence from Orihime Inoue's hairpins, dancing gracefully around the teenager as she raised her arms. Swallowing the lump in her throat at the blood dripping from Chad's body, the liquid mixing with the puddles of water pooled underneath his chair, she ignored the astonished whispers from the two nudists across the hospital's lobby and took a deep breath. As a familiar golden barrier enveloped her friend, immediately healing some of his less severe injuries, Orihime felt the faint shaking of her hands abate, the tension leaving her shoulders with every passing second.

"Wow!"

A comical amount of water fell from her Goku Uniform as Mako Mankanshoku appeared next to Orihime. Ignorant of her friend's startled reaction, nor how the nudist soldiers looked around in confusion, she poked the humming shield with a finger, "How does your awesome power heal grotesque or otherwise horrifying wounds, Orihime? It is why there's no longer a weird chain on my chest no matter how hard I look?"

"Um... well..."

The awkward silence was nearly stifling as Orihime trailed off, unsure how to properly explain her Shun Shun Rikka to Mako. While her friend was smart... in a way... there were some things that went over Mako's head. And it was getting difficult thinking of new excuses. Luckily she was saved the effort when Uryu, who had been staring through the lobby's windows deep in thought, turned around, his sneakers squeaking against the floor. Silhouetted against the scintillating spiritual barrier surrounding Karakura General Hospital, tinting everything a pale shade of green, he adjusted his glasses, "I'm impressed you made it here so quickly, Mako. It couldn't have been easy hiding from Ragyo Kiryuin's army of COVERS or Xcution."

"It sure wasn't!"

Mako tilted her head sideways while turning away from Orihime, one finger pressed innocently against her chin, "Karakura Town is much bigger than Honnou City! I kept getting lost and turned around! But thanks to Chad's awesome sense of direction I found this place without any problems! Even if it took longer than expected!"

"She ran halfway across Karakura Town before I caught up," Chad corrected with a small amount of embarrassment when everyone, including the nudists on the other side of the lobby, looked collectively in his direction, "Then she tried heading back to Kisuke's store. The third time I gave her directions she ran right past this place."

Uryu didn't bother putting any effort into understanding Chad's explanation other than a small sigh of annoyance. Of course Mako would run past his father's hospital without slowing down. But her terrible sense of direction, which was easily on par with Kenpachi's, was currently the least of his concerns. Staring through the double-plated windows into the storm, a faint nausea building in his stomach when he concentrated upon the spiritual pressures in the distance, he focused on the rain streaking down the spiritual barrier, "It's lucky the COVERS disappeared a few minutes before you arrived, Chad. I don't think Tessai would have opened the barrier with those things still floating outside."

"But it was strange," Chad grunted, the uncomfortable pain from his broken ribs fading, "One moment they were chasing us and the next they just... fell apart."

The bespectacled Quincy frowned, his mind struggling to make sense of the confusing situation. Why did the COVERS vanish? It couldn't be a coincidence they disappeared at roughly the same time Satsuki Kiryuin's already impressive spiritual pressure abruptly increased. There had to be a connection. Concealing his building disgust when several concussive bursts of spiritual energy assaulted his senses, timed nearly perfectly with the explosions of multicolored light hundreds of feet in the sky, Uryu stared at his reflection in the window, "It's a long shot but their disappearance might be related to Satsuki's fight against Ragyo Kiryuin."

"WHAT!? Lady Satsuki's fighting her mom?!"

Uryu ignored Mako's exaggerated outburst as he turned around, "You probably didn't notice, Chad, but when the COVERS fell apart their Life Fibers began streaming towards a single point in Karakura Town - Ragyo Kiryuin. But I find it difficult to imagine she would destroy her army, which means Satsuki must have discovered a method to absorb the COVERS, using their Life Fibers to boost Junketsu's power."

A blinding flash of lightning illuminated the hospital's lobby, answering the unasked question with silence, as Orihime slowly lowered her arms, the golden-orange barrier surrounding Chad dissipating with her next breath. Yet despite healing his injuries, including the damage to his clothes, the strange unease bubbling within her chest hadn't lessened. Something was wrong. Forcing herself to smile when Chad nodded in appreciation, the gesture strained despite her best efforts, she clenched her hands together, "Ragyo's power is incredible, isn't it?"

"Yes... but I'm concerned about that other spiritual pressure."

The unspoken name garnered identical looks of acknowledgement from Chad and Orihime, leaving Mako the only one innocently left in the dark. Sitting down as the menacing ticking of the clock above the receptionist's desk filled the lobby, permeating the tense silence and magnifying even the smallest noises, Uryu furrowed his brow in thought, "Still, it's difficult to fathom Satsuki's newfound strength. How could absorbing the COVERS increased Junketsu's spiritual pressure to such an extent? But more importantly... I don't know why Sosuke Aizen is here... or why he's decided to help fight Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Hold on just a second! Isn't Aizen that genius super villain Ichigo fought when he was a soul reaper, romping around the afterlife without a single care in the world?"

Uryu rubbed the bridge of his nose as the question cut through the tension like a knife, "Mako, for the last time it's shinigami not 'soul reaper.' But yes, Aizen was the one..."

His exasperated explanation faded into the background as Orihime stood up, arms folded across her chest. It wasn't right. She had to do something. But no matter how hard she attempted justifying her actions, Ryuken Ishida's barking orders from only a few minutes ago echoing through the recesses of her mind, nothing placated her immense guilt. It didn't matter if he was their enemy. She didn't care if he'd murdered dozens, if not hundreds, of people working for Ragyo Kiryuin. She refused to let Moe Shishigawara die simply because he was part of Xcution. Walking slowly across the lobby, careful not to draw attention as Chad took over explaining things to Mako, she flinched in surprise when the two nudists appeared in her path.

"Apologies, Orihime Inoue, but Ryuken Ishida ordered you not to leave the lobby until the prisoner has been secured."

Information streamed down his Probe Regalia's visor as Houka Inumuta momentarily disconnected himself from Ishida Pharmaceutical's servers and satellites, tapping into Karakura General Hospital's intercom system with a simple press of a button, "The member of Xcution captured by Mako Mankanshoku poses a substantial risk. cursory inspection of his wounds revealed dozens of Life Fibers, each woven around vital organs and tissue. If for some reason you're worried about his health, he's currently suffering from multiple broken bones and internal bleeding. Nothing life threatening."

Orihime wrung her hands together, "But..."

" Your concern for his health is noted, Orihime, but allow me to put things in perspective. Ragyo Kiryuin is fully aware of the effects your Shun Shun Rikka has on Life Fibers," Inumuta interrupted, ignoring Orihime's distraught expression when something across Karakura Town caught his attention, "And while observing your healing capabilities frame by frame would be fascinating, the risk outweighs the benefits. The information Nudist Beach gathered from Jackie Tristan's battle against Kinue Kinagase proves Ragyo Kiryuin can track the implanted Life Fibers. And while Tessai Tsukabishi's spiritual barrier conceals anyone inside the building, the limitations of her powers remains unknown. But given what we DO know, it's safe to assume Ragyo Kiryuin can sense anyone in proximity to Moe Shishigawara."

Uryu's eyes widened at the implications, "Which means she might be able to sense Orihime."

" Given the requirements necessary for hardened Life Fibers weapons to achieve their full effect, her Shun Shun Rikka is the most dangerous threat to Ragyo Kiryuin," Inumuta paused when Gamagori's battle against Riruka Dokugamine took an unexpected turn, "Which makes your safety our top priority. But if it makes you feel better, once Ryuka Ishida removes the Life Fibers from Moe Shishigawara you'll be allowed to heal his injuries, which shouldn't take more than thirty minutes. So please try and relax."

The intercom died with a soft click as Inumuta returned his full attention towards coordinating the forces scattered throughout Karakura Town. Left standing alone in the middle of the lobby, the nudist soldiers relaxing when she made no effort to disobey their orders, Orihime gasped indignantly when Mako's arms wrapped tightly around her waist. Nearly pulled to the ground by the hyperactive teenager, arms twirling through the air in a desperate attempt to keep her balance, she blinked in surprise as Mako reached out and grabbed her hands.

"You should stop worrying, Orihime!"

Mako posed dramatically, one hand waving back and forth in front of her face, "Uryu's dad is a world-famous doctor, which automatically makes him super awesome! There's no way he would let anything happen to that guy! Not when he promised to make him all better! And your magical powers can bring him back to life if Uryu's dad screws up... which means there's absolutely nothing to worry about!"

She puffed her cheeks alongside the last exclamation, innocently ignorant of the surprised cough coming from Uryu, "So cheer up, Orihime! Because right now Lady Satsuki is fighting her mom alongside a total stranger! They probably didn't even exchange names or anything! Being sad will only make Ichigo and Ryuko feel super bad when they come back with lots of souvenirs and food! And I know better than anyone that cheering for someone guarantees they'll win! It's a proven fact! So let's cheer for Lady Satsuki! That way Ichigo and Ryuko won't have to fight a climactic battle at Honnouji Academy!"

"Thanks, Mako," Orihime forced herself to smile, the strained gesture lost on her friend, "That makes me feel better."

Orihime wanted to feel better, truly she did, but the strange feeling of guilt had only grow worse over the last few minutes. Why did she feel this way? Uryu's dad was one of the best doctors in the world. She trusted him to help someone like Moe Shishigawara despite the atrocious actions he committed working for Ragyo Kiryuin. It only made sense. So why were her hands shaking? Staring at the floor as she turned around, hands clasped tightly against her chest, Orihime's spiraling thoughts ground to a halt when a massive explosion shook the building.

"What the hell!?"

Uryu's glasses slipped down the bridge of his nose when the fluorescent lights in the lobby flickered, the eruption of multicolored spiritual energy overwhelming everything else in the process. Time slowed to a crawl, his senses working quickly as the source of the explosion dawned upon him. Only one being possessed such nauseating and terrible spiritual pressure and it was taking a considerable amount of effort simply resisting the urge to throw up. Holding a hand against his mouth, the vile taste of bile nearly causing him to gag, Uryu tensed when the shockwave from Ragyo Kiryuin's attack smashed into the barrier surrounding the hospital. Eyes widening at the cracks rapidly spreading across the green surface, streams of multicolored light piercing through the buckling barricade, he reached for Orihime's arm only to freeze when orange flashed across his vision.

"Santen Kesshun, I reject!"

The triangular shield flashed into existence moments before the barrier shattered, protecting everyone in the lobby from the ensuing explosion of glass. A ragged breath tearing its way out of his throat as he looked around, attention shifting between Chad's imposing form in front of Mako to the nudist soldiers crouched behind a vending machine, Uryu's mouth dried at the sunlight shining through the expanding hole in the clouds. Incredible. That was the only word he could think to describe Ragyo Kiryuin's power. Nothing he'd encountered could compare to what he just witnessed. The only attack that came close was Ulquiorra's technique back in Hueco Mundo... but this attack originated from a greater distance. And it still had enough power to shatter a barrier created by a shinigami captain?

It was absolutely terrifying.

Just how much was Ragyo Kiryuin holding back at Honnouji Academy?

He walked forward as the Santen Kesshun dissipated, sneakers crunching lightly against shattered glasses. Squinting through narrowed eyes at the darkened clouds on the horizon, the bitter autumn wind causing his skin to break out in goosebumps, Uryu staggered under the full weight of the situation. Ragyo Kiryuin's attack shattered the spiritual barrier. There was nothing stopping the woman from sensing their spiritual pressures. They were no longer safe. Twisting around, the abrupt movement catching everyone by surprise, he opened his mouth to speak, to warn Orihime that she needed to leave, only for something to crash into the parking lot at nearly terminal velocity.

"Lady Satsuki!"

Uryu didn't know who shouted as he leapt through the broken window, scattered droplets of rain falling upon his face. The cold November air burning his lungs with every breath as he ran across the parking lot, Heilig Bogen materializing in his right hand as puddles of water splashed against his pants, he threw caution to the wind when he saw how badly Satsuki was injured. Junketsu's tattered uniform did little to conceal the extensive burns covering her body. Blood oozed freely from her mouth and stomach, pooling on the ground and mixing with the rain. Yet Satsuki was still conscious, harsh coughs wracking her throat as she noticed his presence.

"ORIHIME!"

His panicked voice disturbed the eerily quiet afternoon as Orihime rushed outside, the two nudists only a few steps behind. Glancing down the abandoned streets when she pressed two fingers against her hairpins, the fairy-like creatures enveloping Satsuki within their golden-orange barrier, he ignored Mako's aggressively loud outburst in order to focus on the greater threat - they weren't safe. Only an idiot wouldn't think Ragyo Kiryuin would notice the sudden presence of several spiritual pressures, which meant it was only a matter of time before she found them. They needed to get back inside the hospital. If they could reach his father's underground training room than perhaps they had a chance to -

"So that's what healed dearest Nui's eye..."

Ragyo Kiryuin's heel clacked against the pavement as she decapitated the two nudist soldiers with a casual sweep of her arm.

Finalement ! She was finally finished with that farce of a battle! Leaning sideways to avoid the filthy blood spurting through the air, mouth curling upwards at Orihime's horrified scream, her marron eyes narrowed when Uryu appeared in her path, a Heilig Pfeil aimed at her throat. How disappointing. Did the young Quincy think his pitiful arrows could leave even a scratch upon her glorious body? Exhausted or not, such a being could never hope to stand against someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber.

"Come now, Quincy."

She grinned at Uryu's sneer, fingers grabbing the Heilig Pfeil inches from her face. Just what did the Quincy expect to accomplish with such a pathetic act of resistance? Snapping the spiritual arrow without breaking her stride, the measured clacking of her heels causing the youth's fingers to twitch nervously, she purposely raised her other hand as slowly as possible, the newly acquired Scissor Blade shimmering with a multicolored hue "Such arrogance from a lowly being. You Quincy seem utterly incapable of understanding your place in the grand scheme of the world. It's disappointing that I have no intention of..."

"GET AWAY FROM HER, URYU!"

Tessai Tsukabishi's booming voice interrupted the matriarch, earning an irritated glower as she looked over her shoulder at the former captain standing on the roof of Karakura General Hospital. Meeting her gaze without blinking, the freshly drawn black tattoos covering his arms shining with a bright crimson light, he waited until Uryu was safely out of range before shouting at the top of his lungs, "SŌDAI KŌGŌ KAKOI!"

"That's quite enough of that ."

Spittle flew from the former captain's mouth when a concussive wave of spiritual energy slammed into his stomach, tearing a hole through his shirt and apron. Smirking when the man's feet left the rooftop, his body momentarily hovering in the air before crashing headfirst into a building several hundred feet away, Ragyo lowered her hand and chuckled, smoke rising from her curled fingers. Honestly, did every shinigami have to announce their techniques before attacking? It was simply poor etiquette. Such foolish behavior in the middle of a battle was liable to get someone killed.

But back to the business at hand.

She snapped her fingers as Yasutora Sado leapt into the air, spiritual energy writhing around his transformed arm. Calmly tucking a lock of disheveled silver hair behind her ear as Life Fibers emerged from her body, the threads immediately drawing everyone's collective attention, she chuckled at the subsequent choking gasps. It didn't matter if Isshin informed Nudist Beach of their abilities. No human or Quincy could hope to stand in her shadow. The rhythmic clacking of her heels echoing beautifully as the magnificent Life Fibers wrapped around the three teenagers, binding their limbs yet allowing them to continue breathing, her smile tightened imperceptibly at a very specific motion.

Now that simply would not do...

It required only a single, immeasurably slow step to clasp her fingers around Orihime's wrist, preventing the horrified teenager from activating the single technique capable of damaging her body other than hardened Life Fiber weapons. Gently lowering her arm, maroon eyes softening at the girl's terrified expression, Ragyo stared at the barrier surrounding her eldest daughter with something akin to pride, "A most magnificent ability. But the method of activation could use some work. Your name was Orihime, correct?"

She relaxed her fingers, allowing Orihime to escape without resistance. There wasn't any need for violence. Not when she was so close. Chuckling lightly when the terrified girl raised shaking hands to her temple, the orange light radiating from the hairpins causing her heart to flutter, Ragyo ignored the unwarranted shouting from the humans and sighed, "La vie est drôle! Despite going through all the trouble of escaping to Karakura Town... of hiding under Isshin's protective embrace... Sora didn't have the audacity to change your name!"

"W-What?"

The question escaped Orihime's mouth as little more than a whisper before she collapsed to her knees, the mental strain of Ragyo Kiryuin's words too much for her mind to bear. How did the woman know her brother's name? And why... why did she speak about Sora with such familiarity and contempt? Flinching away in fear when Ragyo reached forward, perfectly manicured fingers tracing paths down her cheek, Orihime's breath caught in her throat when the woman gently hummed, "When dearest Nui reported about what happened at Honnouji Academy I was ecstatic! Beyond words! It was simply inconceivable that after all these years you were still in Karakura Town..."

Ragyo's expression turned motherly as she cupped Orihime's chin, "... my precious weaving princess."

---

...

---

Orihime [織姫] - Weaving Princess

---

...

---

Kamui Tales [Alternate Weave #4 - Déjà Vu]

Isshin Kurosaki groaned as he slowly pulled himself out of the ground. Getting hit pointblank by a Bleach Bomb hurt like hell. And Ragyo's punch hadn't helped. Brushing dust and pieces of crushed rocks from his shoulders, the powdered material falling easily from his white lab coat, he grumbled under his breath before freezing. Wait a second... something about this wasn't right. Grabbing the front of his coat, which he hadn't been wearing several minutes ago, the shinigami turned doctor turned Life Fiber hybrid found himself completely and utterly baffled.

When did he change clothes?

Deciding to solve the mystery after returning to Karakura Town and putting an end to Ragyo's insane plans to feed humanity to Life Fibers, Isshin took a single step before pausing for a second time. Nothing about this made sense! Somehow, against all odds, he ended up landing in Honnou Town... and it was sunny . Utterly confounded, one hand scratching the back of his neck, Isshin stiffened when a familiar and highly annoying sensation plucked at the far corners of his mind. Glancing upwards at the thousands of COVERS floating listlessly in the sky, he realized there was only one logical explanation.

"I've somehow travelled to another dimension."

It wasn't an impossible scenario. The captain of the Twelfth Division bragged about creating a machine capable of opening portals to different universes. For weeks he claimed to have finally surpassed Kisuke Urahara. Well... he had until the accident that caused half of his division to vanish from the Soul Society, destroyed his laboratory and left him glowing for two weeks.

"Well, there's no point getting upset."

He frowned at the spiritual pressures inside Honnouji Academy before snapping his attention back to the COVERS. This was something he hoped to never experience again. He could feel their alien emotions and incessant desire to devour humanity. They were simply waiting for the order to consume the people inside the stadium. But even in an alternate dimension the connection to the Original Life Fiber remained, transcending the boundaries of space and time. It took nothing more than a minor application of willpower, forged and tempered by seventeen years of parenthood, to freeze the COVERS in place.

"That was too easy..."

Isshin scratched his chin in confusion. The last time he visited Honnouji Academy it had taken a considerable amount of effort to keep the COVERS at bay. He had constantly fought Ragyo for dominance. There was something off about this universe. If he knew Ragyo... and he did... she would never hold herself back like this, not when he was nearby. This version of Ragyo, if it was Ragyo, probably hadn't expected someone to take control of her COVERS, which meant he, or another version of himself, didn't exist in this universe.

He shook his head, ignoring the building migraine, and turned back to Honnouji Academy, "It won't be easy dealing with Ragyo. She probably already knows I'm here."

Ragyo Kiryuin found herself experiencing a peculiar series of emotions as she held her long-lost daughter's glowing heart, the organ pulsating gently in her hand. The ecstatic pleasure she previous felt, the sensation of overwhelming joy unfathomable to mere humans, had disappeared, replaced by confused uncertainty. Someone had taken control over the COVERS with contemptible ease, preventing her from regaining superiority. But such a feat was impossible. Only she was blessed with the power to command such Life Fiber creatures. Her intimate connection with the Original Life Fiber meant only she could control the COVERS with naught but a cursory thought.

Yet someone, against impossible odds, had superseded her control in the blink of an eye.

"How very strange..."

She turned away from her hyperventilating daughter, maroon eyes narrowed at the familiar presence. Traitors to Life Fibers could not be tolerated. They needed to be purged, destroyed down to the dress patterns. That someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber... by that marvelous primordial being... would side with humanity, using their magnificent power to control her COVERS was blasphemous! Once she finished dealing with dearest Ryuko and Satsuki's rebellion was crushed beneath her heel she would hunt down this being. Yet one question remained in her thoughts, twisting her mouth into a scowl.

How did this being encounter the Original Life Fiber?

"NO!"

Blood dripped onto the walkway when Ragyo lashed out, screaming as she sliced off her hand with the Scissor Blade, "I'm Isshin Matoi's daughter, got it? You're not my mom! You can't be!"

The matriarch couldn't help but sigh at the unnecessary shouting. Must her daughter express herself with such vulgarity and rudeness? It was simply unbecoming for someone blessed by Life Fibers, especially if they were her daughter, to behave in such a childish manner. Ignoring the remainder of Ryuko's outburst as she leaned over, fingers reaching for her severed hand, Ragyo stiffened when someone appeared on the walkway, their clothing ruffling briefly before stilling.

"Heh... looks like I haven't lost my touch."

Isshin greeted the astonished woman like an old friend, ignorant of the way her eyes focused on his silver hair. At this range he could sense the extent of Ragyo's, this Ragyo's, spiritual pressure. Even wearing Junketsu she paled in comparison to the intelligent woman from his dimension. And to think he'd been legitimately worried for a moment about having to fight her. That was a massive load off his shoulders! Perhaps this strange alternate dimension wasn't as horrible as he initially thought.

But he still needed to figure out a way back to his universe.

He turned his attention away from the baffled matriarch when Ryuko's heart was drawn in her chest with a sickening squelch, the glowing organ returning to its proper position in her body. A frown, barely visible underneath his childish veneer of flamboyant amusement, developed at the barely contained outrage and disbelief in the teenager's eyes, how her muscles quivered with every breath. This wasn't good. It didn't take someone with Kisuke Urahara's level of intelligence and situational awareness to understand how this would likely end.

"Judging from your expression I'm guessing you've just received some rather startling and world-shattering news," Isshin muttered while brushing some dust off his lab coat.

"Shut the hell up!"

Senketsu's voice fell upon deaf ears as Ryuko pointed the Scissor Blade at the strange man, "Who the hell are you!? And why do you look like her !?"

"That's a long and boring story," Isshin looked at his watch, the action disguising the thoughts rapidly coursing through his mind. The situation was worse than he expected. This version of Ryuko was still an emotional wreck, barely holding herself together. And thanks to Ragyo tearing out her heart, something that never happened in his dimension, she was beginning to question her humanity. With the Original Life Fiber's hold on his mind as strong as ever, perhaps even stronger, deescalating this situation would require finesse, "But right now you need to take a deep breath and relax. It's not every day you discover your body is made of Life Fibers."

"That's obvious, you silver haired bastard!" Ryuko growled, fury etched across her face, "Now tell me something useful before I beat the living shit out of you!"

"You remind me of my son," Isshin folded his arms, maroon eyes tracking the Grand Couturier in the background. "Ichigo's always scowling, which makes it difficult for him to find a girlfriend. It's quite an embarrassment, really. To think my own son didn't inherit any of my charm and personality. But I'm sure you two would get along perfectly!"

Ryuko couldn't take the bastard's apparent stupidity for another second, "What the hell are you talking about!?"

"Yes... what are you talking about?"

Ragyo refused to listen to the traitorous being's constant drivel for another second, his annoying answers causing her eye to twitch. Blessed by the Original Life Fiber or not, his wasn't a match for Junketsu's power. She would have plenty of time to correct his life choices after finishing her surprising reunion with Ryuko. There was simply so much she needed to find out from her long-thought-dead daughter. Smiling as she stepped inside the man's guard, one arm cocked over her shoulder, Ragyo laughed as she punched his squarely in the face, the resulting explosion of multicolored energy sending Ryuko soaring across the stadium. Now that the traitor to Life Fibers was taken out of the picture she had time to -

"Ouch."

Her eyes widened at the man's halfhearted and dull response. She was at a loss for words, her mind unable to comprehend the utter impossibility of the situation. How could this man... this traitor to Life Fibers... take her attack without flinching? How could Junketsu's full power, which she barely used against her own daughter, only force him back a few inches? It didn't make any sense! Yet a smirk nevertheless slowly stretched across her face. This was unexpected. Something she never fathomed in the darkest recesses of her soul. This had the potential to change everything .

With an exaggerated sigh she lowered her arm and stepped away from the man, "Nui, be a dear and keep Ryuko occupied for the next few minutes. It seems dealing with this man will require more effort than expected."

Ragyo waited until the Grand Couturier left, the sound of Scissor Blade against Scissor Blade music to her ears, before frowning, her eye twitching in annoyance at the man's constant rubbing of his nose. Why was this infuriating man - a Life Fiber Hybrid - pretending her punch broke his nose? It was both rude and insulting! Forcing the thought from her mind, she folded her arms across Junketsu and sighed, "It's obvious from your marvelous appearance you've made contact with the Original Life Fiber. There's no point denying it. Yet I cannot remember anyone other than myself giving themselves to that primordial being. So perhaps you can enlighten me... just who are you?"

"The name's Isshin Kurosaki."

He sagely rubbed his chin as an explosion tore through the stadium, "And perhaps I'm just out of touch with today's trends and fashions but should a middle-aged woman be wearing a school uniform?"

Ragyo felt her eyebrow twitch again, the embarrassing gesture unbelievably lost on the ignorant man. It was... infuriating... that Isshin Kurosaki viewed her with such contempt, that his actions contained the appearance of superiority. She wanted nothing more than to wipe the annoying smirk from his face. Yet she quickly discarded the notion, instead sighing wistfully at her misfortune. Why, just why, couldn't she have met this man instead of her pathetic husband? Souichiro might have possessed some intellect but marrying him had been simply for convenience, a method of gaining an heir worthy of Life Fibers. This man on the other hand, beneath his childish yet somehow strangely endearing personality, had been deemed worthy by the Original Life Fiber!

She refused to allow such a valuable opportunity go to waste!

"It appears we've reached an impasse... my dear Isshin."

The sudden but brief tensing of the man's shoulders didn't escape her notice. Nor did the single bead of nervous sweat trickling down the side of his face. Strutting forward, Junketsu's heels clacking with every step, her grin widened at his faltering bluster, "The COVERS won't descend as long as you're here. In any other situation I would be quite... displeased... by such traitorous behavior. However, I'm not someone to look a gift horse in the mouth."

She looked Isshin squarely in the eyes, basking in her brief dominance over the man, "Your foolish behavior aside, you are someone the Original Life Fiber found worthy of its glorious power. You ! Not my pathetic excuse of a husband! I wish to know what makes you so special, Isshin Kurosaki!"

Overwhelming despair and panic flooded Isshin's mind at the familiar look in Ragyo's eyes. He recognized that terrifying look! What god did he piss off for Ragyo to always fall head over heels for him? Swallowing the lump in his throat when she leaned forward, her chest pressed against his own, Isshin mentally begged Masaki to grant him the strength and mental clarity to survive what was about to unfold.

Can't Stand Losing You

Here's the next chapter of my story, right in time for Christmas. A lot happens in this chapter. There's several battles being fought across Karakura Town, characters undergoing personal development, etc. So I hope you enjoy reading the chapter. And when you're done, the poll between Satsuki and Ryuko is still on my author page. I haven't forgotten about that.

So enjoy the chapter and check out the tvtropes page if you have the time. Things are reaching a climax in To My Death I Fight.

---

...

---

Chapter 57 - Can't Stand Losing You

[November, 1988]

" Commencing Experiment O-LF5."

The tension in the darkened room, illuminated by the faint glow from dozens of monitors, was palpable as Sora Inoue stared intently at the scrolling data. Frowning introspectively as his colleagues initiated the boot-up sequence, klaxons barely audible through the subbasement's reinforced walls, he nodded when several lights above his desk turned green. This was the moment, the point where weeks of work paid off. Breathing deeply as patented machinery whirred to life, the constant electric hum causing his fingers to twitch, Sora momentarily hesitated before typing the final required commands.

" All systems are stable, Ma'am," he announced, aware of the woman standing silently behind his chair, "The subject's vitals are stable. No sign of Life Fiber desynchronization. Heart rate and blood pressure are elevated but within acceptable boundaries. Increasing level of anesthesia. No indications of abnormal reactions."

" Very good, Mr. Inoue," Ragyo Kiryuin's eyes narrowed, concealing her growing anticipation, "Proceed to Phase Two."

He nodded as the other researchers worked to bring the remaining systems online, "All subsystems operational. Commencing with Life Fiber infusion in twenty seconds. Engaging all containment seals. Disabling anti-tailoring protocols alpha and delta. Secondary safety restraints engaged. Priming Life fiber suppression systems. Switching from passive Life Fiber infusion... now."

A flash of golden-orange light slammed into the bulletproof glass across the room. The already dimmed lighting flickered under the deluge of energy, monitors shaking as the protective material visibly shuddered. Sweat dripped down Sora's face, a combination of the sweltering heat within the room and his own nervousness, as he stared at the real-time image of the young girl sitting in the other room, her body convulsing as Life Fibers threaded themselves into her bound arms and legs. Leaning forward, his throat dried as he waited for any signs of success. But as the seconds dragged into minutes, the silence growing increasingly uncomfortable, the young researcher became aware of the fingers crushing the back of his chair.

" Yet another failure."

Ragyo sighed, the multicolored light shining from her silver hair dimming. She didn't have the patience to waste twenty minutes watching Sora Inoue and his team search for meaningful results. It was obvious the experiment was a failure, the fifth over the last year. Their constant lack of success... and endless excuses... were beginning to wear upon her nerves, something she didn't think possible.

With well-practiced grace Ragyo marched towards the window separating the two rooms, removing her sunglasses in a flourish that concealed the frustration and annoyance building inside her Life Fibers. Staring at her daughter's tear-stricken face, blood oozing from Orihime's half-conscious form as densely-woven Life Fibers callously removed themselves from her punctured limbs, the matriarch's fingers twitched at the pathetic display.

" Bon sang..."

It was inconceivable that Orihime, incubated within an artificial womb inside the Original Life Fiber alongside her sisters, was an absolute failure like Satsuki and her nameless second-born daughter. Such a blasphemous notion was absurd! Orihime should have been perfect! A true daughter of Life Fibers! Her body wasn't tarnished by Souichiro's inferior genetics like Satsuki. So why were her precious weaving princess's Life Fibers refusing to function, rendering her little more than a pathetic human? It didn't make any sense! From the moment of their birth both Nui and...

She shattered that thought in a heartbeat. Merely thinking about Nui and her other, lost daughter, was... absolutely infuriating.

" Mr. Inoue, please inform Orihime's physician that my daughter requires her assistance."

Ragyo's callous tone betrayed nothing of her inner annoyance as the research made the appropriate call, his voice slightly flustered. There was no point working herself into a frenzy over the horrifying fate of Amu. To think Isshin, of all people, would commit such a horrible crime, all to spite the Original Life Fiber. It was inconceivable! The foolish man wouldn't harm anyone! But with any luck she could still salvage the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet using her two remaining daughters.

All she required... needed... was finding the source of Orihime's lamentable condition. And fixing it.

Her heels clacked softly as she turned around, the fading golden-orange light absorbed by her multicolored backdrop. There was another, more important, matter she needed to address at the moment. Souichiro was growing increasingly suspicious of her actions, investigating the millions of dollars spent on equipment necessary for the experiment. And if Hououmaru's reports on his inquiries were accurate, her husband was beginning to piece together Nui and Orihime's existences. And that simply couldn't be allowed. Especially not for a traitor like her husband.

After all, he was the 'secret' leader of that laughable anti-Life Fiber resistance growing in the Kansai region.

" I'm disappointed by your team's continued failure, Mr. Inoue."

The abruptness took the researcher, one of her more promising employees, by surprise, "When I hired you last year, it was under the presumption that you would live up to your rather commendable résumé. However, your inability to successfully remedy Orihime's condition has raised doubts concerning that my initial decision. I DON'T appreciate losing any sort of investment, Mr. Inoue. Several of the best minds in the world, concentrated within this room, yet you consistently fail to achieve any sort of progress?"

" I expect a full report on my desk by the end of the week," Ragyo walked away from the man, annoyance tainting her features, before looking over her shoulder, "And unless you can convince me otherwise... your letter of resignation."

" Perhaps..."

Spinning around, sweating at Ragyo Kiryuin's unnervingly cold glare, Sora cleared his throat, "Kazashi, can you bring up the data from Experiments O-LF3 and O-LF4?"

He tapped a finger during the several seconds it took Kazashi, an older woman in her mid-thirties, to find the required information, "Our initial calibrations used Nui's Life Fibers to limit possible fluctuations in the experiment. As the only other naturally born hybrid, her Life Fibers proved valuable as a working baseline. It allowed the procedure to move forward without starting from scratch. However, we determined that Orihime and Nui's Life Fibers possess noticeable differences despite their identical genetics."

Sora leaned forward, typing rapidly as the images on the monitor changed, "These variations might be causing unexpected feedback, preventing the system from properly synchronizing with Orihime. It will take some time but rerouting the Life Fibers through a tailoring convertor should eliminate the issue. But..."

The sudden hesitation drew the woman's curiosity, "But what, Mr. Inoue?"

" During our analysis of Experiment O-LF4, I discovered that Orihime's Life Fibers actively radiate an unknown form of energy," Sora coughed as the graphs changed, shifting into a picture of Orihime, "Spectrographic testing of her Life Fibers, comparing them against Nui's, proved inconclusive. This phenomenon is unique to Orihime. Further experimentation of her Life Fibers, with appropriate changes to the equipment, should narrow down the likely -"

" That's quite enough."

Ragyo was mildly impressed by the young man's analysis. Brushing off his remaining concerns with a discerning glare, she sighed under her breath, "You've made your point. I shall grant your team another three months to reverse Orihime's intolerable condition."

She took another few steps before stopping, eyes narrowed over her shoulder, "However, there's still the matter of your obtrusive empathy for my daughter."

" Empathy?"

" Don't think I didn't notice your hesitation before starting the procedure," Ragyo smiled, a mirthless expression that doubled the tension in the room, "How I treat Orihime is none of your concern. I recommend discarding such notions if you wish to keep your current position. My daughter cannot achieve her full potential with sacrifice. Do I make myself clear, Mr. Inoue?"

" Yes, Ma'am."

A sharp hiss of pressurized air interrupted any further discussion when Rei Hououmaru marched into the room, fresh rips and tears blemishing her once immaculate uniform. Bowing to the matriarch, her manners unaffected by the bloodstains covering her clothing, the secretary smoothed a crease on her skirt, "Please excuse my interruption, Lady Ragyo, but there's an urgent matter that requires your immediate attention."

Ragyo closed her eyes, mentally sighing, "Nui, I take it?"

Hououmaru adjusted her aviator sunglasses with a quick flick of her finger, "Yes. I'm afraid she accidentally injured another caretaker during her scheduled play time. I attempted to intervene but her strength proved too much."

" Oh dear..."

Ragyo sighed as she followed Hououmaru out of the room, any lingering thoughts concerning Sora Inoue's employment already forgotten. It was getting increasingly difficult keeping Nui from accidentally harming those assigned to keep her entertained. As a precocious three-year-old-girl, her developing mind constantly craving new information, Nui was prone to erratic outbursts. This was merely the second incident this month, "Nui must be lonely without a playmate her own age. Perhaps I should reconsider introducing her to Satsuki. Heaven knows my daughter could use the company..."

---

...

---

Kisuke Urahara's fingers twitched as Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame extracted the Marionette Threads around his daughter's mind.

He observed Ururu violently convulse against the ground, her heart-wrenching screams long since replaced by faint whimpering. Frowning as numerous crimson threads spun from his Bankai's puppet-like hands, weaving around his daughter before pulling taut, the former captain turned shopkeeper steeled himself against the guilt welling in his chest. It appeared the Bleach Bomb worked perfectly. Ururu's regeneration had slowed to a crawl, giving him more than enough time to finish. But despite knowing his actions were the primary cause of his daughter's suffering, he didn't deserve all the credit.

None of this would have been possible without Ragyo Kiryuin's loathing of his accomplishments and general misanthropy.

His grey eyes narrowed imperceptibly, shoulders slumping from weariness. Something about the woman's handiwork didn't feel right. There were too many questions. The information Houka Inumuta obtained from Revocs suggested Life Fiber Hybrids were naturally immune to Mental Refitting. No matter the source, the Life Fibers within Ichigo, Ururu, Ryuko and even Isshin should assimilate the Marionette Threads, breaking any mental control in seconds .

It explained Kinue Kinagase's immunity to Shukuro Tsukishima's Mémoire Raiment.

Yet Ragyo Kiryuin somehow bypassed that unsurmountable barrier.

He grimaced when Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame removed the final Marionette Thread. Unlike the crude version of the technique used by her former employee, the matriarch didn't require physical contact to stitch Life Fibers into her target's mind. It was frightening to say the least. Her tailoring skills were impossibly complicated, possessing inhuman nuances he couldn't comprehend. Simply attempting to analyze the weaves and cross-stitching composing Mental Refitting strained his prodigious talents. However, his constrained understanding granted him some clarity.

From a purely scientific point of view Ragyo Kiryuin was brilliant... if one ignored the ethical and moral ramifications of her actions.

But sending Nui and Ururu to his humble candy-store? That was suspiciously short-sighted, even accounting for the former's single-minded determination to ending his life. They were both crucial for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Losing either daughter would prove disastrous to Ragyo Kiryuin's plans. Without Nui and Ururu's synchronized cooperation Shinra Koketsu could never be finished, which begged the question why she risked everything bringing them to Karakura Town. And the only answer that came to mind was rather disturbing.

It was frightening but Ragyo Kiryuin believed nothing - Nudist Beach, Satsuki or even his own appreciable efforts - posed any risks to her plans. The thought of losing either daughter was inconceivable. But Kisuke couldn't fault the woman's overwhelming arrogance. With Isshin out of commission, she was the most powerful being in Karakura Town. Thanks to her monstrous spiritual pressure, high-speed regeneration and repertoire of dangerous techniques, defeating Ragyo in straightforward combat was nearly impossible. It would take someone with equivalent strength, possessing minimal moral compunctions about collateral damage, simply to keep the woman's attention.

Fortunately for humanity's long-term survival, his plans took all these variables into consideration.

By focusing her attention on something dangerous, such as a former captain with an artifact made from the Original Life Fiber, Ragyo would never think about the handsome shinigami who stitched Mugetsu and broke into her manor unraveling Ururu's Mental Refitting.

"Amu!"

Nui Harime's voice cracked as she struggled against the unyielding Life Fibers wrapped around her body. Sapphire eyes burning with murderous intent towards the shinigami standing in front of Amu, the pink bow keeping her blonde hair prim and perfectly curled unraveling, she snapped angrily, "What did you do to her!?"

"Oh, nothing much..."

Kisuke patted down his dusty sleeves as Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame dissolved into motes of spiritual energy, "I simply used my Bankai to unravel your Ragyo Kiryuin's work."

He ignored the Grand Couturier's understandable reaction when pain lanced through his arms and legs, causing him to nearly stumble before recovering his balance. He underestimated the extent of his wounds. Without his Bankai sustained the stitching, the temporarily restructured sections of his body were reverting to their original states. Eyes narrowed at the feeling of warm liquid trickling down his fingers, staining Benihime crimson. There wasn't much time before the rest of his injuries, self-inflicted or otherwise, reopened, resulting in a relatively minor case of exsanguination.

"It was actually very difficult. But thanks to your cooperation I successfully extracted the Marionette Threads she implanted into Ururu."

The torn ligaments and muscles in his shoulder screamed as he cautiously approached the ensnared teenager, the clomping of his geta catching her attention, "From your expression you probably believed Mental Refitting was permanent. And normally you'd be correct. But allow me to apologize, Nui Harime. Because I'm sorry to say that Ururu's original personality and memories will return once she regains consciousness."

"I'm going to kill you..."

Nui seethed at the sociopathic shopkeeper, her voice little more than a whisper. With a repressed sneer her fingers convulsed, the hooks coating the underside of her fingernails unable to grasp the shimmering Life Fibers only inches away. Words couldn't describe her contempt for the atrocious shinigami. Everything he said simply pissed her off! Bristling at Kisque Urahara's uncaring expression, every fiber of her being quivering at his lack of empathy, she snarled, "Amu was the only person who understood me! And you killed her!"

"That's a rather serious accusation."

He stared thoughtfully at the Grand Couturier, the contours of his face etched into a frown, "I seem the remember promising not to kill you or Ururu."

"She's not Ururu!"

The Grand Couturier's fervent denial was overshadowed when she attempted to physically tear through the Life Fibers only to slip, smashing her face against the ground with a sickening thud . Breathing heavily as blood trickled down her forehead, Nui clenched her teeth in frustration, "Stop calling her that stupid name!"

"I see..."

Kisque trailed off, leaving Nui Harime shaking furiously as he withdrew another bucket hat from the folds of his coat. Carefully examining the green and white stripped fashion statement for damage, he sighed at the tears making it almost unwearable. Fate was indeed a cruel mistress. It seemed every time he fought a Life Fiber Hybrid, whether they were Ichigo, Ryuko or the Grand Couturier, his favorite hat was destined for an unusual and torturous death, "Well then, it appears I've overestimated your connection with Ururu. After all, only someone who cared about their sister would have prevented Ragyo Kiryuin from weaving Marionette Threads into _."

"That was your fault!"

Nui spat at the shinigami, the effort required to shut him up causing her voice to rise several octaves, "You did something to her! Amu should have been happy when Lady Ragyo saved her! Everything should have been perfect! But she wouldn't listen to Lady Ragyo! S-She..."

Her voice devolved into a harsh whisper, "Amu only wanted to see you ! She wouldn't even talk to me! You convinced her she was nothing! That she was only a stupid human! Bu Lady Ragyo fixed everything! I finally had my sister back... and you killed her!"

An eerie wind coursed through the underground chamber, dust devils mixing with pillars of acrid smoke, as Kisuke allowed the Grand Couturier to finish speaking before calmly placing the damaged bucket hat on his head, "This might sound rather insulting... but I really don't think you know anything about Ururu."

"Shut up!"

Kisuke wasn't bothered by Nui Harime's resentment nor the subtle shifting of her spiritual pressure. The Grand Couturier was someone who wore their emotions on her sleeves, which balanced Ururu's quiet and shy disposition. But her denial of reality despite evidence to the contrary was interesting, "You first encountered Ururu during No-Late Day when you broke into Ichigo's dormitory at Honnouji Academy. It was your first meeting in almost seventeen years. Yet for some reason you failed to initially realize she was your sister. This is all just speculation, but you only started treating Ururu as a member of your family after speaking to Ragyo Kiryuin. Am I wrong, Nui Harime?"

He stabbed Benihime into the ground, the zanpakuto piercing several inches of rock and steel, "I would be lying if I claimed to fully understand Twin Life Fiber Entanglement. Perhaps on some level you did recognize Ururu. An inherent and unshakable mental connection would certainly explain your growing fascination with my daughter over the subsequent months."

"However, the being you call 'Amu' never exist."

Blood dripped from his fingers as he observed Nui Harime's fluctuating emotions, his shadowed eyes narrowing at something shimmering beneath her hatred, "As the Grand Couturier of Revocs you should have recognized 'Amu' was nothing more than a puppet. It's not something a person of your prodigious talent would have missed. Your Life Fibers are identical to Ururu's, meaning it's impossible you didn't notice anything wrong."

The subtle twitching of the Grand Couturier's eyes underneath her disheveled hair didn't escape his notice, "The notion that Ragyo Kiryuin would weave Marionette Threads into your sister must have been horrifying. You probably couldn't believe she would do something so heinous. So tell me..."

"... when did you convince yourself nothing was wrong with Ururu?"

Nui refused to believe anything Kiskeya Urahara said about Amu, her jaw clenched at the shopkeeper's lies. He didn't know anything about her relationship with Amu! Even Lady Ragyo admitted their synchronization was a miracle from the Original Life Fiber! So why couldn't she tell the stupid man he was wrong!? There was no way the shinigami knew what he was talking about! The Amu she met at Honnouji Academy, her stoic and adorable sister who hung out with Ichigo and Ryuko, was the same! She hasn't changed at all!

"There's nothing wrong with Amu!"

She struggled against the Life Fibers, the pain from her shoulders nearly dislocating only fueling her determination to kill Kiskeya Urahara. All Lady Ragyo did was undo the damage to Amu's mind, fixing everything this human did to her sister! Panting heavily as bangs of curled blonde hair obscured her vision, hiding the blood oozing down her face and stinging her eyes, Nui tensed when the shinigami stepped forward, his expression unreadable.

"Now this is a surprise..."

The number of times he could remember being genuinely surprised was notoriously small. He prided himself on taking into account hundreds of possible variables, preparing multiple strategies. Yet he hadn't anticipated something like this . It was subtle, undetectable to anyone familiar with the technique. Even with the knowledge from his Bankai, he almost missed the fluctuations in Nui Harime's spiritual pressure. Superficially it resembled desynchronization, the consequences of her connection with Ururu breaking, but closer inspection revealed something worse .

Somebody had used Mental Refitting on the Grand Couturier.

Kisuke pressed a finger against Nui Harime's temple despite her objections. Only someone on the same level as Ragyo Kiryuin, possessing an unbreakable connection with the Original Life Fiber, could have successfully pulled this off. But despite his reservations, he didn't believe she used Mental Refitting on her daughter, not when Nui was already completely loyal and dedicated. And there was something else. He could sense the lingering presence of Marionette Threads yet the Life Fibers themselves were missing. Her personality and memories were also unaltered, which implied adjusting the Grand Couturiers behavior wasn't his goal.

The only question was why -

An explosion of spiritual energy shattered the specialized barrier surrounding the converted training ground, tearing the former captain from his worsening thoughts. What was happening in Karakura Town? He had anticipated an event of this caliber occurring if, or rather when, Sosuke Aizen sufficiently infuriated Ragyo Kiryuin. But nothing of this magnitude. Looking over his shoulder as the lights flickered, failing under the deluge of energy, it took him seven seconds to mentally calculate the woman's location relative to his store.

The next fraction of a second he shifted his weight when Nui Harime finished chewing through the Life Fibers.

"Nake, Benihime!"

Crimson energy rippled down his zanpakuto, arcing towards the Grand Couturier still recovering her balance. How could he have been so shortsighted? Adjusting his hold on Benihime when Nui Harime danced around the destructive column of spiritual energy, her body flickering from precise and chilling bursts of speed, Kisuke pushed aside the pain coursing through his leg, jumping away moments before her fist smashed through the ground.

This was his own fault. Given the Grand Couturier's physiology he should have expected her teeth were capable of manipulating Life Fibers.

An obnoxious rip reached his ears as he twisted sideways, Nui Harime's fingernails tearing through the high-quality fabric of his coat. With instincts honed from years of fighting and stealth he countered the Grand Couturier's attack, blood spraying through the air as Benihime carved into her shoulder. Something was off about her tactics. This wasn't the same person who chased him halfway across Karakura Town. Frowning introspectively as he evaded another wildly thrown punch, the power coursing through the deceitfully petite fist buckling the metal plating covering the floor, Kisuke stiffened upon realizing where they were standing.

His nose burned with the acrid smell of cleaning products when the Anti-Life Fiber armament throughout the area detonated. One hand cupped over his mouth as explosions shook the foundations of his store, destroying multiple Nudist Beach vehicles and needle stockpiles, he grimaced when Nui Harime emerged from the smoke, both Needle Blades clasped tightly in her trembling hands.

"That was quite clever, miss Grand Couturier."

He matched Nui Harime's contemptuous glare with mirthless amusement, Benihime shimmering as he took stock of the situation. This was the worst-case scenario. Despite the tattered dress clinging to her body, blood streaming down her face and arms, the Grand Couturier's strength and spiritual pressure still exceeded his own. Even with her regeneration suppressed by Twin Life Fiber Entanglement, in his condition he couldn't afford taking any unnecessary risks.

It appears luck simply wasn't on his side today.

He tensed when the Grand Couturier raised the Needle Blades. Prepared for absolutely everything, strategies for countering her repertoire of techniques without Kannonbiraki Benihime Aratame forming in his mind, Kisuke was caught off guard when she turned around, seething impotently before running away.

"Huh?"

The overbearing tension dissipated as the teenager fled towards the exit, his bucket hat blowing away a moment later from an exceptionally strong gust of wind.

"Well, I didn't see this coming..."

Relief coursed through the beleaguered shopkeeper once Nui Harime's spiritual pressure vanished. He was fortunate she suspiciously decided to escape his humble shop. The remaining Anti-Life Fiber explosives strewn throughout the converted training ground wouldn't be effective against an infuriated and vindictive Life Fiber Hybrid. Reaching down to pick up his hat, exacerbating the wounds sustained fighting Nui and Ururu, he dusted off the damaged article of clothing while pondering the Grand Couturier's surprising retreat. But as exhaustion reared its ugly head, Kisuke looked at his blood-covered hands.

"Oh well, I'm sure Yoruichi can handle her."

Spiritual energy curled around his fingers, coalescing into a translucent orange barrier as he limped towards Ururu's prone form. Nui Harime might have escaped with the Needle Blades, but it was a pyrrhic victory. Without his daughter's assistance - Mental Refitting or otherwise - she couldn't finish weaving Shinra Koketsu. And that meant Ragyo Kiryuin's overarching plans for humanity, the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, would never come to pass. Still, he hoped Tessai and the others could stall her long enough for Isshin to recover or the Life Fiber Barrier to come back online.

Because he had the suspicion Ragyo Kiryuin was going to be furious when Nui Harime told her what happened.

---

...

---

Ragyo Kiryuin's mouth curled into a warm smile as she cupped her daughter's chin, "... my precious weaving princess."

There was an ear-wrenching screech of metal when she flicked her wrist, the Scissor Blade spinning twice through the air before stabbing into the ground near her feet. She could hardly contain the excitement thrumming throughout her body. Stroking a finger down her daughter's cheek, the ignorant muttering from the humans and Quincy eliciting not a single mote of her valuable attention, Ragyo frowned at Orihime's confusion, "It appears you don't know the significance of your own name. Didn't he tell you anything?"

She lowered her hand, smiling as she stepped away from her shivering daughter, "Oh? Sora Inoue didn't tell you anything ? How quaint. That contemptible man truly thought one small action would undo years of mistakes, even if the guilt existed only in his mind. But we both know the world doesn't work that way. One cannot simply develop a sense of guilt. Nor can they discover their conscience. It's something Sora Inoue knew quite well during -"

"Koten Zanshun, I reject!"

Ragyo didn't visibly react when something emerged from her daughter's flower-shaped hairpins. Watching as the phantasmal construct fluttered around Orihime, golden spiritual energy enveloping its metaphysical form, she closed her eyes and sighed. This ? This was how Orihime activated her abilities? It was a complete mockery of the Original Life Fiber, demeaning the magnificent being's powers underneath human sentimentality. Anyone else attempting such blasphemous actions would have perished. But she could only feel disappointment and pity for her daughter. Opening her eyes when the projectile shot forth, ripples of spiritual energy following in its wake, Ragyo resisted the reasonable temptation to blame Isshin.

The man might play the fool but he did not lack an imagination.

With minimal effort she reached across her waist and tore the Scissor Blade from the ground. Casually swinging the appropriated hardened Life Fiber weapon at the projectile rocketing towards her neck, its lethal power filling her heart with unadulterated excitement, she smirked as golden-orange sparks danced across her vision. As the muscles in her arm shook slightly from the effort of countering Koten Zanshun, its divine strength threatening to sever her Life Fibers, she chuckled at her daughter's horrified reaction.

It was charming Orihime believed the Scissor Blade couldn't withstand the offensive manifestation of her powers.

"Dearest Nui informed me you're convinced that man was your brother."

The projectile ricocheted harmlessly off the Scissor Blade with an exaggerated twisting of her wrist. Unsatisfactory appearances aside, it was something that could hurt her. But to think her daughter's abilities developed so magnificently despite her absence. Evolving without her guidance. Thrusting the hardened Life Fiber weapon back into the ground while Orihime collapsed onto her knees, the last dredges of resistance shattered, Ragyo strutted forward, a smirk twisting the corners of her mouth, "Do you believe Sora Inoue cared about you? That his affection wasn't merely an act? Some self-serving fantasy he deluded himself into believing existed?"

Her fingers twitched at the coarse cotton threads composing Orihime's sweater, "After all, he lied to you about your parents... about your mother ."

Orihime couldn't look away, Ragyo Kiryuin's monstrous spiritual pressure stifling her thoughts, "N-No..."

Ragyo smiled at her daughter's horrified reaction to the truth of her existence. Leaning forward while gently stroking Orihime's hair, the orange bangs falling silkily between her fingers, she stared disinterestedly at the flower-shaped hairpins, the plastic accessories serving as a conduit for her true powers, "To think my daughter would grow into such a beautiful young woman."

"I-I'm not your..."

"You look just like your sisters," the Kiryuin matriarch added, ending her daughter's whisper of defiance without even trying, "Surely you've noticed the resemblance? But while dearest Nui and Amu were born perfect, true daughters of the Original Life Fiber, somehow your Life Fibers were weak and defective."

"What did she say?"

Uryu Ishida couldn't believe what he just heard. Orihime was a Life Fiber Hybrid like Ichigo and Ryuko... and Ragyo Kiryuin was her mother ? How was that possible? Flinching when the Life Fiber wrapped around his body tightened, eliciting a grunt of pain while Mako Mankanshoku gnawed at the alien threads, he grimaced, "Orihime's her daughter? But that's..."

"Impossible? I'm sure you find nothing in this world is impossible, Quincy."

She snapped her fingers, the threads wrapped around the young man tightening until he could hardly breath, "But awakening her Life Fibers proved more difficult than expected. Despite my best efforts they simply refused to properly function."

A shifting of the wind briefly caught her attention, "Unfortunately, I couldn't dedicate time to such a valuable task. Revocs had recently entered the international market. Not to mention Nui was quite the precocious young girl. So I entrusted the task to a particular man, someone lacking my former husband's sense of morality."

"S-Sora... wouldn't..." Orihime stammered, memories of her older brother flashing through her mind, "He... wouldn't... do..."

Ragyo grinned at the tears running down her daughter's cheeks, "I did not care what he did to achieve success... and Sora Inoue did not allow human morality or sentimentality to cloud his judgment."

She reached out, stroking her nearly comatose daughter's hairpins, "I assumed his experiments to awaken your Life Fibers failed, a product of his wavering dedication. But from your magnificent abilities it seems his research was successful after all!"

"Don't listen to her, Orihime!"

Uryu swallowed the bile in his throat, a byproduct of Ragyo Kiryuin's monstrous spiritual pressure, and shouted, "Even if she's telling the truth, your brother risked everything rescuing you from Revocs!"

"I did not ask for your opinion, Quincy ."

Glaring over her shoulder she flicked a finger at the discourteous teenager, the shockwave of pressurized air sending Uryu crashing through the façade of his father's hospital. Callously turning back to Orihime without a second thought, her daughter's frantic cries for the Quincy barely registering in her mind, Ragyo tucked a strand of disheveled silver hair behind her ear, "Sora Inoue's selfish actions removed all meaning from dearest Nui's existence. Without your presence she was left purposeless, unable to understand the emptiness growing within her heart. Yet even if you were lost to me, I was not about to let him escape without punishment..."

Orihime's breath hitched in her throat, "You didn't..."

Ragyo cupped her daughter's tear-stricken chin, "It took nine years but Sora Inoue paid the price for betraying me! For betraying Life Fibers and Revocs!"

She didn't bother waiting for her daughter's response, instead gently pulling Orihime off the ground. It was time for them to leave. The sounds of battle once common throughout the city had nearly disappeared, replaced by an eerie and satisfying calmness. Of course, she could still hear the occasional explosion from the south - Isshin's household if she remembered correctly - which meant Hououmaru encountered something unexpected. But that did not matter. The fate of her secretary - of all Xcution - was unimportant in the long run, sacrifices to ensure the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet became reality. And with her daughter recovered, Kisuke Urahara slaughtered by Nui and Amu, she couldn't care less if Hououmaru survived whoever she was fighting.

Reaching for the Scissor Blade, the weapon shimmering in the afternoon sunlight, Ragyo's eyebrow twitched when an annoyingly familiar arrow shot over her shoulder.

"Leaving already, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

Smoke drifted from his Heilig Bogen as Ryuken Ishida stood upon his hospital's roof. Narrowing his eyes when the woman looked over her shoulder, the monstrous and vile spiritual pressure radiating from her body causing his stomach to churn, he allowed himself a succinct moment of satisfaction. As the technique implanted into the Heilig Pfeil activated, trapping both Ragyo Kiryuin and Orihime Inoue within a pentagram-shaped barrier, the self-proclaimed 'Last Quincy' glared disdainfully at the matriarch.

"Kirchenlied: Sinne Zwinger."

Her indifference shifted into outright annoyance at the Quincy's cavalier behavior. She would not grant the man the honor of an answer. He didn't deserve one. No Quincy were worthy of her attention. Closing her eyes with a tired sigh as she tore the Scissor Blade from the ground, the force behind the seemingly lazy action shattering the surrounding pavement, Ragyo listened impatiently to Ryuken Ishida's ongoing explanation. An impenetrable barrier? An archaic technique designed to imprison Quincy for insubordination? How laughable! In any other situation she would react cautiously. Especially after fighting Satsuki and that contemptible shinigami.

But she was running out of time. And Ryuken Ishida was a Quincy .

"Is that right?"

The barrier shattered, dissolving into shards of spiritual energy with naught but a flick of her wrist. Smirking as the Quincy tensed, his muscles and raised bow signifying the nervousness coursing through his soul, Ragyo chuckled before turning around, her heels clacking against the ground. Did he honestly think she would take the bait? That she would lose her temper so easily? La vie est drôle. What could he, a mere Quincy, possibly hope to accomplish other than an early death? He might possess some interesting abilities and a modicum of strength but he was nothing compared to that woman .

And she was dead .

Ignoring the Quincy's predictable response to her silence she stepped over the bruised and battered form of her eldest daughter, the wounds covering both human and Kamui a warning to anyone daring to stand against the Original Life Fiber. Yet she felt a twinge of pride when Satsuki somehow returned from the brink of unconsciousness, bloodied fingers clenching the pavement while convulsions wracked her body. Failure or not, she had to give her daughter credit. Satsuki managed to accomplish a truly miraculous feat - ascending Junketsu into her fashion week apparel. It was an unexpected and dangerous development which could have changed everything... if Ryuko or Ichigo had been in her place.

The irony of that fact was not lost upon her.

With a resigned sigh she grabbed Orihime's arm, her daughter too emotionally devastated by the truth of her existence to resist. She was done. Karakura Town had worn out its welcome and she did not want to deal with Sosuke Aizen, whenever he decided to return. But as she walked away, her heels clacking with every step, Ragyo's eyebrow twitched when the Quincy continued, "You're not paying attention, Ragyo Kiryuin. Therefore, I will repeat my previous statement. Those trapped within the double-layered barrier of Sinne Zwinger are rendered spiritually blind."

She scoffed at Ryuken Ishida's arrogance, a trait seeming possessed by every Quincy, before her eyes narrowed.

Wait... double-layered?

Her fingers twitched when the previously invisible second layer of Sinne Zwinger shimmered faintly, glowing translucently in the late autumn afternoon. Snarling at the sudden deluge of spiritual pressure assaulting her senses when the barrier shattered, raining shards of spiritual energy upon the ground, time slowed to a crawl as she twisted around, eyes locked upon Yoruichi Shihoin floating only a few feet away. She was fast... but not fast enough! Sunlight refracting off the Scissor Blade when the shinigami avoided her initial strike, leaving behind an afterimage as she dodged to the left, Ragyo's façade of smug arrogance shattered upon the lightning-coated fist smashing into the right side of her face.

There was a sickening crunch as every bone in her neck shattered, blood spewing from her mouth in response to the crackling lightning coating the former captain's hand. As her eyes quivered at the shinigami's audacity, her cheek rippling around the clenched fist, Ragyo snarled when she inadvertently allowed Orihime to slip free from her grasp. No! Reaching for her daughter as her broken neck repaired itself, bones and muscles regenerating with a nauseating squelch, her vision briefly swam when she was launched away from Karakura General Hospital, courtesy of Yoruichi Shihoin's subsequent eleven punches.

Merde !

Ragyo recovered her balance after only a few seconds of flight, smoke drifting from her heels as they skated angrily against streams of solidified spiritual energy. A single breath leaving her throat as she came to a halt, the abandoned landscape of Karakura Town hundreds of feet below stretching to the horizon, she growled in frustration. This was insulting! She refused to allow this shinigami to ruin everything! Not when she was so close! How could this shinigami possibly understand the effort required to incapacitate Isshin? Glowering when Yoruichi Shihoin reappeared in a flash of speed, her eyes betraying an expression unsuited for someone of her lowly status, she took note of the lightning surrounding the woman's body.

"How rude..."

With eyes half-lidded, displaying her true lack of interest in the fight, she caught the former captain's hand, the electricity crackling harmlessly against her palm. Lightly squeezing the impertinent woman's fingers, the sound of cracking bones granting her some pleasure from this unwanted distraction, Ragyo smirked at the bewildered woman's reaction, "Your strength is impressive, Yoruichi Shihoin. However, compared to someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber you're nothing more than an insignificant insect!"

"HAH!"

Lightning crackled around Yoruichi's body as she ignored the Kiryuin matriarch, choosing instead to concentrate her efforts on more proactive solutions. The muscles in her arm shaking as she punched the Scissor Blade, seeking to destroy the sinister weapon instead of allowing Ragyo Kiryuin to continue using it, her eyes widened when dozens of small wounds opened across her hand. Retreating the instant her opponent's attention wavered, she stared at her quivering hand, blood dripping from between her numbed fingers. What the hell just happened? Kisuke never mentioned the Scissor Blade could dissipate spiritual energy!

How was she supposed to counter a weapon capable of tearing through Shunko?

"You know," Yoruichi grumbled, lightning arcing between her fingers, "I never had this much trouble fighting Satsuki. And it's nearly impossible to read a Kamui."

A single bead of sweat trickled down her cheek at Ragyo Kiryuin's blasé reaction, the malevolence shimmering beneath the woman's stoic exterior unnerving. She had a feeling things were about to get worse . Grunting as she switched into a familiar stance, strands of purple hair hovering in the aura of lightning enveloping her body, Yoruichi's face scrunched before she flexed her knees and moved .

"RAIOKEN!"

The former captain didn't hold anything back as she furiously assaulted the Kiryuin matriarch, each punch containing enough spiritual energy to vaporize an Adjuchas. Shouting loudly, her hair whipping frenziedly back and forth under the barrage of supersonic blows, Yoruichi's breath hitched when Ragyo Kiryuin vanished, disappearing in the gap between successive punches. What !? She hadn't even seen the woman move ! Tensing at the faint clack of a heel, blood spraying from her shoulder despite dodging the Scissor Blade at the last second, she glared angrily at the blood-stained weapon poised inches from her neck.

A gash opened across her cheek as she instinctively pirouetted around the hardened Life Fiber weapon, accentuating her retreat with judicious bursts of Shunpo. Gripping her bleeding shoulder, crimson oozing between her fingers, she grimaced at her opponent's spiritual pressure. Even after fighting Satsuki and Sosuke Aizen she still had this much power? Spitting angrily as the white lightning circulating around her body coalesced into a pair of wings jutting from her shoulders, destroying what remained of her jacket in the process, she stiffened when Ragyo Kiryuin calmly asked, "You wouldn't happen to still be holding back, would you Yoruichi Shihoin?"

Yoruichi caught the subtle twitch of Ragyo's fingers before a heel planted itself in her stomach. Doubling over, several ribs breaking under the spiritual energy exploding from the small of her back, she watched helplessly as the matriarch swung the Scissor Blade, bifurcating her body from shoulder to waist.

"Damn it..."

Ragyo twitched when the shinigami's corpse vanished, leaving behind only the tattered pieces of her shirt. She had nearly forgotten about the Grand Couturier's confrontations with the woman, two embarrassing encounters that earned dearest Nui's enmity. But she didn't have time to waste fighting someone without the slightest chance of winning. It was clear Yoruichi Shihoin was aware of this fact, which is why she was stalling for time. Only a naïve fool wouldn't realize the shinigami was hoping to keep her busy long enough for Orihime to escape into the shadows.

She would not let that happen!

It took less than a second to track down Yoruichi Shihoin, her eyes narrowing at the shinigami's suspicious behavior. Slowly looking over her shoulder, determined to understand why she only retreated a few hundred meters, Ragyo caught the tail end of the nearly topless former captain rotating her hands before lightning exploded from her body, forming a pillar that stretched into the cloudless skies.

" Qu'est-ce que c'est ? "

An eruption of wind rustled the matriarch's hair as she watched the white lightning enveloping Yoruichi Shihoin collapse, twisting into a concentric ring emanating from the center of her back. As several drum-like spheres formed upon the structure, their phantasmal nature verified when the shinigami slowly passed her rotating arms through them, Ragyo scoffed at the dark skinned woman's arrogance. Why did Yoruichi Shihoin believe she would stay her hand, allowing her to finish charging what was obviously a powerful attack? Even if it didn't possess the slightest chance of succeeding, her opponent's gall was insulting.

Ragyo disappeared with an annoyed snarl, the characteristic clack of her heels absent as she reached Yoruichi Shihoin in only a few steps. She was done fooling around! Thrusting her arm forward, intent on tearing out the shinigami's heart, her eyes widened when the former captain's fingers curled into claws, bangs of purple hair transforming into glowing horns as she shouted at the top of her lungs.

"SHUNKO: RAIJIN SENKEI!"

---

...

---

Electricity sparked around Rei Hououmaru, the force emitted by her Écusson Raiment Mark II cracking the glass façade as she vertically ascended the building. With a sharp intake of air, punctuated by the vivid taste of copper in the back of her mouth, she sheathed her trench knife and grabbed the edge of the roof, vaulting over the multicolored-tinted blade awaiting her arrival. Landing behind the insufferable traitor in a tightly controlled spin, she lashed out as Kugo Ginjo turned around, her leg snapped towards his chin.

"Électrocution Marche!"

The former substitute shinigami leaned backwards, nearly losing his footing when electricity burst from Hououmaru's heel. Jumping away from the woman, briefly skidding against the rain-soaked rooftop before regaining his balance, Ginjo tensed when the lightning coiled around her leg didn't dissipate. Wait... she wasn't going to try something that stupid a second time? As Hououmaru scowled, shifting her center of gravity with a soft clack, his eyes widened when the electricity crackling around her raiment transformed from a light purple-white to dark violet.

Damn it, she was!

The commander of Xcution drove her heel into the rooftop with a dull thump, sending shockwaves of lightning rippling through the structure. As the building immediately shook, cracks spreading beneath his feet, Ginjo moved, twisting Ragnarok around his wrist while backpedaling across the roof. Accompanied by the ear-splitting screech of shattering glass and metal as the building collapsed floor by floor from the power of Hououmaru's rewoven raiment, he briefly stumbled when something sliced through his forearm. Pushing aside the pain, Ginjo ignored the slickness between his fingers and jumped, cursing when he looked over his shoulder.

Why the hell did Hououmaru look so smug?

Blood trickled down Ragnarok, staining the broadsword as he landed upon a gravel-covered roof down the street. Fighting Hououmaru was proving to be a pain in the ass. Not only was her restitched Écusson Raiment faster, it was also stronger than he remembered. And that ignored whatever other features Ragyo and the Grand Couturier wove into her new uniform's Life Fibers. He grunted when an explosion of dust and smoke washed through the streets, gravel crunching beneath his boots. While this made stopping Hououmaru significantly more difficult, dealing with her improved raiment wasn't impossible.

Twenty years of working with the woman meant he knew how she fought. He knew her weaknesses and strengths. And if the Grand Couturier hadn't changed too much, every attack at her -

His train of thought ground to a halt as he swung Ragnarok, intercepting the black trench knife with a resounding clang .

"You're getting predictable, Hououmaru!"

Ginjo grinned, the muscles in his arms trembling while slowly pushing the woman's trench knife away from his neck, "But third time's the charm, right?"

"Your arrogance is unfounded, Kugo Ginjo," Hououmaru retorted, gravel crunching underneath her heels when the pressure doubled, driving the traitor's blade several inches closer to her face, "Someone like you should know the follies of preemptively presuming victory."

Her arms buckled with a flourish of electricity, unable to continue resisting the greater physical strength of Kugo Ginjo's Sauvegarde Raiment. Shifting her center of gravity as Ragnarok slammed against the roof with a deafening thud, the subsequent shockwave rustling her hair, Hououmaru glowered at the multicolored light emanating from the newest fissure blemishing her raiment. Electricity surged alongside her righteous indignation, crackling as she backflipped, clearing the twenty-foot gap to the adjacent building in a single bound. Seething when the traitor followed suit, his raiment granting him agility he should not possess, she snapped her fingers, vanishing in a shimmer of purple light.

"Damn it!"

Ginjo cursed when Hououmaru faded from existence. He should have seen this coming. Of course her restitched Écusson Raiment possessed the same version of optical camouflage as Houka Inumuta's regalia. Why wouldn't it? There was not a chance in hell Ragyo wouldn't weave something that useful into her secretary's uniform. Cautiously stepping forward onto the roof, he tensed when something besides the oppressive silence became obvious. He couldn't sense Hououmaru's spiritual pressure. But that was impossible. Ragyo might be brilliant but she shouldn't know anything about spiritual pressure.

This was just perfect .

"I didn't think Ragyo found regalia worthy of her attention," he called out, glancing around the seemingly abandoned roof, "So why the sudden change of heart? Did she finally run out of ideas? Or maybe she's not nearly as good a couturier as she -"

There was hardly any warning, a puddle rippling across the roof, before Hououmaru reappeared in a shimmer of light, electricity crackling around her raiment.

He backpedaled to avoid the enraged woman's initial strike, wincing when blood sprayed from a jagged gash across his forearm. Swinging Ragnarok in a tight circle when Hououmaru reversed her grip upon the trench knife mid-slash, pirouetting on her back foot before thrusting the weapon at his heart, he snarled as their blades clashed in a shower of sparks. Something was off about her expression. The hatred on her face didn't look right. It was too... perfect. Instinctively leaning sideways, pushing off the roof as Hououmaru flicked her wrist with an almost lazy effort, his eyes widened when lightning exploded from the edge of her trench knife.

Since when could her Écusson Raiment do that ?

A strange warmth trickled down his face, stinging his right eye as he backed away from Hououmaru. What the hell just happened!? Holding Ragnarok stiffly against his back when she tried severing his spine, their weapon colliding with an ear-splitting clang, Ginjo grunted at the awkward position. Maybe pissing off Hououmaru by insulting Ragyo wasn't the smartest decision. Especially since the Grand Couturier added some nasty surprises to her new raiment. Still, it managed to accomplish one very important goal.

Pivoting sharply, his knuckles bleeding white as Ragnarok scraped against the roof, he smirked when Hououmaru dodged, backflipping out of range, "What's wrong, Hououmaru? You seem to be having trouble blocking my attacks."

The mockery earned an angry twitch from the dark skinned woman, "Maybe I should start holding back. Pulling my punches might help even the odds."

"Do not confuse frustration with weakness!"

Hououmaru crossed the roof before he could blink, slamming the pommel of her trench knife against Ragnarok. Forced off balance by the unexpectedly powerful blow, Ginjo's attention shifted as he staggered backwards, moving from the insane woman towards the Life Fiber weapon conveniently poised overhead. Grinning when Hououmaru realized the depths of her folly, blinding pulses of multicolored spiritual energy enveloped Ragnarok as he slammed the broadsword against the roof.

"Cross Slash!"

The air trembled as spiritual energy surged forth from Ragnarok, the ever-growing wave of multicolored destruction enveloping Rei Hououmaru. For a brief moment Ginjo contemplated stopping the technique, sweat already dripping down his face from the exertion, before changing his mind. With a defiant shout spiritual energy exploded from Ragnarok, doubling the width of the beam already demolishing everything in its path. This wasn't some friendly spar. He wasn't going to take any chances against someone like Hououmaru.

His arms trembling when the energy cutting a swath of destruction dissipating, Ginjo cursed as a purple-clad figure leapt from the tinted smoke, "Damn... I missed."

"Riruka's report downplayed the strength of your raiment."

Blood slowly dripped onto the ground from the fingers on Hououmaru's left hand, leaking out of the glowing cracks covering her Écusson Raiment. She could not blame anyone other than herself for the agony encompassing every part of her body. Arrogance and falling prey to his taunts allowed Kugo Ginjo to land such a devastating blow, damaging the raiment the Grand Couturier spent hours weaving. It was a mistake she would not repeat. Yet her hatred was tempered by the source of the traitor's replacement raiment. For no human could have stitched such a well-crafted and marvelous uniform.

That was the only reason Kugo Ginjo's new raiment hadn't already fallen apart at the seams.

"However, the outcome of Operation Laissez Faire... of this battle... has already been determined," she added, unconcerned by the small puddles of blood around her heels, "You might have damaged my raiment, but I still hold the advantage."

"... the advantage, huh?"

Ginjo mulled over the words before smirking, "It must be one hell of an advantage to offset that fractured arm."

"Your audacity is noted," Hououmaru retorted, electricity coiling around her damaged raiment at his flagrant mockery, "Électrocution Glissando."

A wispy smile threatened her stoic façade, electricity sparking beneath her heels as she appeared behind Kugo Ginjo in the blink of an eye. Spinning tightly at the waist, fingers dragging against the rooftop, Hououmaru nearly cursed at the lack of blood staining her trench knife. That technique was woven into her Écusson Raiment by the Grand Couturier after the Great Culture and Sports Festival. It should have severed the Life Fibers composing his raiment, leaving him choking on blood while dying of asphyxiation. Amber eyes flickering behind her raiment's visor at the rapidly approaching footsteps, the commander of Xcution scoffed derisively.

It appeared she needed to strike a little harder to penetrate something woven by Isshin Kurosaki.

She countered Kugo Ginjo's laughably telegraphed attack with discernable effort, trench knife deflecting both the initial strike and subsequent swings from his broadsword. The corners of her mouth twitching as she stabbed her blade into his stomach, earning little more than a pained grunt when it failed to penetrate the densely-woven Life Fibers, Hououmaru did not hesitate to throw herself backwards, leaping off the rooftop before the traitor could retaliate.

Breathing deeply as she landed in the middle of the street accompanied by the metallic clack of her heels, Hououmaru glanced upwards, glaring at the rapidly descending figure.

This was getting ridiculous. She couldn't afford wasting any more time fighting someone who simply would not learn their place!

The street buckled, rippling beneath the tidal wave of multicolored energy as Kugo Ginjo smashed his blade against the ground. Electricity coiling around her body, temporarily boosting her Écusson Raiment's already impressive speed, Hououmaru nimbly danced between the pieces of flying asphalt, purple afterimages following every measured step, "Predictable and pathetic. Those two words describe you, Kugo Ginjo. Raiment are designed to cover the body, leaving only the barest traces of flesh visible. That your rewoven Cuirasse Raiment leaves your arms exposed..."

Her expression shifted into faux disappointment as the smoke settled, heels clacking softly in the middle of the destroyed street, "... suggests Isshin Kurosaki doesn't trust you to properly wear such extravagant clothing. Any normal raiment would -"

"It's just clothing ."

Ginjo callously yanked Ragnarok from the ground, dust clinging to the blade's surface, and scoffed, "Sorry for interrupting your clichéd speech explaining how I'm not 'worthy to wear raiment,' but insane discussions about Life Fibers just aren't my thing. It might look strange... and its speed and durability are lower than your raiment... but my Sauvegarde Raiment is certainly stronger ."

He grinned at the renewed twitching of Hououmaru's cheek, "I guess that makes Isshin a damn good tailor. Well... either that or Ragyo's nowhere near as good as she -"

"Do not finish that thought, Kugo Ginjo."

"Fine," Ginjo clenched his fingers, spiritual energy enveloping Ragnarok. Defeating Hououmaru was taking too long. Given the sudden change in Karakura Town's weather, if the fight dragged out any longer he might find himself facing Ragyo or worse... the Grand Couturier, "You sound rather confident about your Écusson Raiment's power. So let's see what it can really take!"

Using reflexes honed by decades of experience wearing raiment, allowing its Life Fibers to encompass her body, Rei Hououmaru pushed off the ground, scarcely avoiding the tsunami of spiritual energy disintegrating everything in its path. With another kick, her heel cracking the concrete façade of a building, she leapt into the air, electricity coiling around her Écusson Raiment. Isshin Kurosaki was truly worthy of Lady Ragyo's affection if Kugo Ginjo's raiment was this powerful despite its scandalous appearance. Her lips pursing as she cleared the skyline, landing on the nearest building with a light wince, Hououmaru flinched at the pervasive emptiness she earlier tried ignoring.

What happened to the COVERS!?

"Électrocution Valse!"

Anger twisted her features when Kugo Ginjo's broadsword blocked her punch, sending the subsequent eruption of electricity dissipating harmless into the air. Damn it all! Where were the COVERS!? She was neither blind nor dumb. She had witnessed the majestic Life Fiber beings fraying apart at the seams, streaming into the distance... towards Lady Ragyo. Yet it was Junketsu's power which grew exponentially stronger in the aftermath! How could Lady Ragyo's failure of a daughter have controlled the COVERS? She was human, unworthy of wielding such a marvelous ability! That was...

She quickly ended that traitorous line of thought, snarling as she leapt beyond the reach of Kugo Ginjo's weapon.

It didn't matter whether Junketsu evolved, miraculously gaining control over the COVERS. Without Isshin Kurosaki's interference - betraying the very being that bestowed upon him immeasurable power - Lady Ragyo's glorious strength was unsurmountable. All that remained was her mission... her part of Operation Laissez Faire.

And she refused to allow Kugo Ginjo's frustrating inability to die stand in her way!

"Électrocution Marche!"

Her leg snapped backwards in a wide arc, electricity curling between the armored plating of her Écusson Raiment. Planting both hands onto the roof for support, the clawed digits tearing into the concrete, Hououmaru smashed her heel against Kugo Ginjo's weapon, instantly arresting its momentum mid-swing. Content with her minor accomplishment, she allowed him a moment's reprieve before nimbly flipping away, smirking as the lightning generated by her raiment exploded at point-blank range.

"Shit!"

Ginjo felt something in his knees pop as he stabbed Ragnarok into the roof, the soles of his boots skidding harshly against the surface. With traces of electricity still coiling throughout his body, muscles twitching from Hououmaru's attack, he dashed forward with snarl, glaring at the woman desperately fleeing across Karakura Town. Like hell he was going to let her escape!

It took shorter than expected to catch the normally quicker woman, the damage sustained by her raiment reducing her mobility. Swinging Ragnarok over his shoulder in a single-handed grip, releasing a wave of spiritual energy that forced Hououmaru to stop running, Ginjo half-smirked as he landed in front of the enraged woman, "The commander of Xcution running away from a 'traitor' to Life Fibers? If I didn't know better, I'd say you're afraid, Hououmaru."

"You think raiment woven by Isshin Kurosaki concerns me, Kugo Ginjo?"

Hououmaru's tone was measured, lacking any irritation or anger, as her visor deconstructed in a flash of multicolored light, "Riruka might have underestimated your raiment's strength but her report, on the other hand, was quite detailed. Électrocution Épée."

The emotional vacancy of her voice momentarily took Ginjo by surprise before he moved, leaning sideways when she viciously slashed her trench knife through the air. As the spaulder of his Sauvegarde Raiment disintegrated, fraying under the surging column of lightning, he flexed his fingers around Ragnarok and swung, intercepting Hououmaru when she sprinted around her own attack. Immediately forced on the defensive by the sheer randomness of her strikes, sparks dancing across his vision with every clashing of their blades, Ginjo couldn't help but smirk at Hououmaru's desperation.

Fighting him instead of pursuing her original objective was driving her insane.

"What the hell!?"

Ginjo wasn't sure who asked the question - Hououmaru or himself - when an immense pillar of white electricity flashed into existence, causing the entire city to tremble. He recognized this spiritual pressure. How could he forget? But to think Yoruichi Shihoin had something like this hidden up her sleeves. Relief spreading throughout his body, he turned around, rolling his shoulders at Hououmaru's expression of utter bafflement, "It looks like Ragyo finally met someone besides Isshin who can kick her ass."

"Your words hold no meaning!"

"You seem rather pissed off over a 'meaningless' comment," Ginjo swung Ragnarok, blocking Hououmaru's increasingly erratic attacks, before countering with a downward slash that sent her stumbling, "Don't tell me you're starting to doubt Ragyo?"

"My faith in Lady Ragyo has never wavered!"

Hououmaru pressed a hand against her bleeding chest, the result of Kugo Ginjo's recent stroke of good fortune. Glaring at the blood staining her raiment with quivering eyes, the liquid seeping thickly onto the ground, electricity crackled dangerously around her body as she sarled, rushing forward without the slightest hesitation. As her trench knife slashed downward through the air, embedding itself deeply into Kugo Ginjo's forearm when he covered his face, she backed away, avoiding his retaliatory punch, "Even Junketsu's new strength couldn't measure against Lady Ragyo's divine power!"

"... it's funny."

Ginjo watched Hououmaru retreat, his right hand trembling, "If Isshin were here, he'd probably say something like 'don't kill Hououmaru.' But that doesn't work for me."

He briefly hesitated, fingers hovering over the trench knife stabbed through his forearm, before grabbing the blade and pulling . Throwing the blood-covered weapon off the side of the building, his vision clouding from the pain, spiritual energy exploded from his Sauvegarde Raiment, "Because you're insane ! Helping Ragyo sacrifice humanity to Life Fibers? I don't what's worse. That you're willing to die... or that you don't care . But it doesn't matter! You won't survive to see Ragyo's plans fall apart! Xcution dies with you, Hououmaru!"

"Gosh, now that's just rude !"

Everything came to a sputtering halt at the saccharine tone. Blood dribbling from the corner of his mouth, the spiritual energy coiled around Ragnarok dissipating as the weapon clattered onto the roof, Ginjo stared at the purple blade protruding from his chest, "W-What?"

"You can still talk, huh? I must be out of practice..."

The Needle Blade was callously yanked backwards, pulled at an angle that skewered his lungs. Gasping wetly, blood spurted from his mouth as he took a single step before collapsing onto his knees, cold numbness already spreading throughout his body. His Sauvegarde Raiment deactivating in a flash of stars when something plucked at his back, Ginjo fell face-first onto the roof with a boneless thud as a pair of pink boots strolled around the blood pooling underneath his body.

"I was not expecting your assistance, Grand Couturier."

Rei Hououmaru straightened her posture, the injuries accumulated confronting Kugo Ginjo ignored for the moment. Brushing a hand against her raiment as the Grand Couturier walked silently around the dying traitor, she couldn't help but notice the teenager's disheveled appearance. The tears blemishing her pink dress, the way her blonde hair bounced in curled bangs instead of drill-like pigtails, indicated something transpired during her mission to eliminate Kisuke Urahara. Noting a peculiar absence, tensing at the Grand Couturier's distinct lack of a smile, she gently inquired, "Forgive me for asking, but where is -"

"Shut up."

A thin cut appeared across Hououmaru's cheek, her eyes widening at the Needle Blade poised inches from her face. Staring into the Grand Couturier's vacant eyes, subtly aware of the other hardened Life Fiber weapon's location, she momentarily paused before repeating the question, her tone brooking no arguments, " Where is Amu?"

"You're sure asking a lot of annoying questions..."

She did not falter under the veiled threat, meeting the enraged Grand Couturier with calm detachment befitting the commander of Xcution. Nevertheless, the implications were enough to send a shiver down her spine. Something had gone wrong during their mission. The combined power of Amu and Nui should have overwhelmed Kisuke Urahara, their knowledge of Life Fibers countering whatever traps he prepared. That the teenager returned alone from her mission, apathetic about her disheveled and unprofessional appearance, would undoubtedly displease Lady Ragyo, "Very well, I'll let you explain Amu's absence once Lady Ragyo concludes her business and returns to Honnouji Academy. Now if you'll excuse me, I must -"

"... kill that silly old goat's stupid children?"

Nui looked over her shoulder as she turned around, the blood-stained Needle Blades glistening ominously, "You're kidding. In that beat-up uniform? Don't make me laugh. Just run along back to Honnouji Academy. I'll take over from here."

Rei Hououmaru was shocked by the Grand Couturier's blasé disregard concerning Operation Laisse Faire. Despite her carefree personality - the whims of an artiste - she never ignored her mother's orders. This was an unequivocal disaster. If Kisuke Urahara somehow captured Amu, or worse, Shinra Koketsu would remain unfinished, preventing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet from reaching fruition. It explained why the Grand Couturier was dérangé . The loss of her sister against the shopkeeper meant her purpose, the only reason she existed, was gone.

"Grand Couturier, what do you hope to accomplish by disobeying Lady Ragyo?"

Despite the teenager holding a higher position within Revocs, she was still the commander of Xcution and Lady Ragyo's most dedicated servant, "Don't forget that your part in Operation Laisse Faire was simply to eliminate Kisuke Urahara. You failed... losing Amu in the process. You must return to Honnouji Academy before that man's allies realize the precariousness of our position. Determining how to finish Shinra Koketsu without Amu's assistance takes priority over everything -"

"Say her name again and I'll kill you."

The pitter-patter of the Grand Couturier's boots as she marched towards the edge of the roof, head tilted slightly to the right, drew Hououmaru's undivided attention, "I don't care what Lady Ragyo said. Amu is gone... and it's all his fault. So just shut up and leave. Your voice is getting annoying."

"... as you wish."

Hououmaru bowed her head, sighing at the teenager's rebellious behavior. Turning around as the Grand Couturier leapt away without another word, vanishing faster than her eyes could follow, she walked across the rooftop towards the somehow still conscious Kugo Ginjo. Her heels clacking, gaze petrifying from righteous indignation, she reached down and grabbed Ragnarok, the weapon fitting perfectly in her hand.

"Farewell, Kugo Ginjo. Your service to Lady Ragyo is no longer required."

Pieces of her Écusson Raiment flaked away, dissolving into wispy strands of multicolored threads as Hououmaru callously left the dying traitor to drown in his own blood. The seconds passing in silence as he watched her leave through half-lidded eyes, Ginjo's fingers twitched, grasping weakly at the rooftop. If the Grand Couturier was meeting Ragyo... and Hououmaru heading to Honnouji Academy... that meant only one thing. Coughing harshly, blood oozed from where the Grand Couturier stabbed the Needle Blade as he mustered the final dredges of his strength and smirked.

" I really screwed things up, didn't I Isshin?"

It was getting difficult to breath, his collapsed lungs filling with blood, "Ichigo... Masaki... Genesis. I couldn't save anyone. I should have... done something... anything..."

His arm fell limply onto the roof, bloodied fingers splayed across his darkening vision, " But Yuzu and Karin... I kept them safe. That's all... that matters. Ragyo won't lay... a hand... on them..."

---

...

---

Yoruichi Shihoin panted heavily, her chest rising and falling as Ragyo Kiryuin was engulfed within the column of spiritual electricity.

Blood dribbled from her fingers, squeezing between the clenched digits, as she staggered, Shunko dissipating in an underwhelming flicker. Staring at the devastation caused by Shunko: Raijin Senkai, entire neighborhoods reduced to smoking rubble from its destructive power, she winced when her broken ribs shifted. Never in a hundred years would she imagine using the technique inside Karakura Town. It was simply too powerful, the collateral damage immeasurable in populated areas.

But she couldn't afford holding anything back against someone like Ragyo Kiryuin. Especially after the woman walked away unscathed from a fight with Sosuke Aizen .

With a casual application of Shunpo the self-professed Goddess of Flash reappeared on a building several hundred feet away, one hand pressed against her broken ribs. She had placed everything into that technique, drawing on reservoirs of spiritual energy she didn't know existed, but Yoruichi highly doubted it killed Ragyo Kiryuin. That would be far too easy. The woman was a monster. The most she could hope to accomplish was keeping Ragyo's attention focused on anything but Orihime.

A task far easier said than done.

Yoruichi ignored the pungent taste of copper as Shunko: Raijin Senkai dissipated, exposing the heavily smoking and ruined streets of Karakura Town. Staring into the rubble, the former captain frowned. Something didn't feel right . Eyes narrowed, senses pushed to their limits in preparation for anything Ragyo Kiryuin might attempt, an annoyed curse escaped her lips when she felt nothing . She couldn't sense a trace of the woman anywhere .

Stepped backwards, boots crunching against the gravel-covered roof, Yoruichi stiffened at the familiar sound of a heel clacking . Time slowing to an agonizing crawl, eyes widening in realization, she looked over her shoulder, cursing at the Scissor Blade swinging towards her neck.

How did Ragyo Kiryuin slip completely through her senses!?

Spiritual energy transformed into crackling lightning encompassed her body as she twisted, spinning beneath the hardened Life Fiber weapon. Her leg arcing backwards, smashing into the descending wrist with a resounding crack, Yoruichi barely caught Ragyo Kiryuin's taunting grin. Vaulting backwards, desperately weaving between the matriarch's following seven attacks, spittle mixed with blood when a heel slammed into her broken ribs. Teeth clenched as she bounced off the roof, boots skidding against solidified platforms of spiritual particles, the former captain grimaced, blood trickling from the corner of her mouth.

This wasn't good.

"Heh... this really isn't good," Yoruichi crossed her arms, Shunko: Raijin Senkai reactivating alongside an explosive burst of spiritual energy. Switching stances, the drum-like constructs encircling her body crackling from the intense power, she forced herself to grin, "I should start training harder. I'm the Goddess of Flash and I couldn't even sense your movements."

"Your ability to dodge is impressive. That attack should have severed your head from your shoulders."

Ragyo sighed indifferently, fingers splayed as she slowly raised her left hand towards the approaching shinigami, "I can see how the Grand Couturier had trouble dealing with you."

The former leader of the Onmitsukido immediately stiffened at the innocuous movement. Boots skidding against platforms of spiritual particles as she halted mere feet away from the woman, Yoruichi retreated backwards without hesitation, apprehensive eyes narrowed as she reappeared back in the sky. A strange sensation coursed through her body, growing dread sending goosebumps racing down her arms. Was Ragyo Kiryuin preparing the same attack she used against Satsuki and Sosuke Aizen? No, that was impossible. At this range Orihime and half of Karakura Town would be vaporized.

So what the hell was she planning?

" Nerveux, Yoruichi Shihoin?"

Ragyo rotated her wrist, curling all but one perfectly manicured finger, "Retreating at the slightest perception of danger is unbecoming of a shinigami. You fought the Grand Couturier to a standstill, most likely defeated one of my hard-working employees and wasted several minutes of my valuable time . Did you honestly believe you could do all that... and not suffer the consequences?"

A light breeze accompanied the matriarch's question, gently rustling her silver hair, before Yoruichi flinched, gasping when something stabbed into her left arm. First once than dozens of times. Eyes widening in stunned horror, aware of the other woman's broadening smile, she watched as multiple Life Fibers angrily wove their way into her skin, "W-What!?"

"Marionette Threads are far more versatile than you people can imagine."

With a twitch of her finger, eliciting a pained grunt from the shinigami, Ragyo allowed herself to feel some satisfaction from this unnecessary interruption, "After all, the body is nothing more than a plaything of the mind!"

There was a sickening squelch when Yoruichi Shihoin's threaded arm abruptly snapped clockwise, blood gushing as muscles and ligaments tore themselves apart. Her bones crunched loudly, cracking despite the supernatural resilience granted by Kisuke Urahara's special Gigai. Gasping, eyes quivering at the misshapen lump of flesh, the former captain reacted when the intrusion began spreading. Lightning crackling around her right hand, Yoruichi sliced downwards, severing the infected limb just before the Life Fibers reached her shoulder.

"Oh?"

Ragyo hummed at the shinigami's lack of hesitation. This was unexpected. Eyes widening as the Marionette Threads abandoned the shredded flesh, blood spurting through the air when the limb fell towards the ground, she observed the panting woman with faux curiosity, "You severed your arm without hesitation, saving your life in the process. Your reflexes must be superb to counter my Marionette Threads. Perhaps I've underestimated your power."

"I guess I'm just full of surprises," Yoruichi commented, sweat dripping down her face.

"Indeed," Ragyo concurred as the shinigami tightly gripped her bleeding stump of a shoulder. It seemed the woman was far tougher than expected. But spending any more time torturing Yoruichi Shihoin, discovering the limits of her endurance, was pointless. This was a frivolous battle with little reward outside personal satisfaction. And while she could easily eliminate the shinigami, a quick death just wouldn't suffice. Yoruichi Shihoin needed to suffer .

She needed time to contemplate her many mistakes.

"But let's be honest..."

A breathless sigh whispered through the autumn wind as she turned away from the heavily wounded shinigami, "Shinigami simply cannot compare to one blessed by the Original Life Fiber. Even after dealing with my troublesome daughter and that atrocious man, the difference between our powers is comparable to heaven and earth. Farewell, Yoruichi Shihoin."

It took less than three seconds to return to Karakura General Hospital, leaving the impotent shinigami bleeding to death on the adjacent rooftop. Her heels clacking softly as she landed in the empty parking lot, Ragyo ignored the headless corpses, staring past the dead nudists at the bloodstained crater where Satsuki had been laying only a few minutes ago. It appeared her daughter recovered faster than anticipated, no doubt due to the efficiency of Orihime's abilities. Casually looking around the deserted streets, acutely aware of the silence, she turned back towards the hospital's shattered façade, smirking at a familiar presence.

Her daughter couldn't escape so easily.

"Do you intend to stop me?"

The arrogant Quincy standing to her right, blue eyes reflecting the spiritual energy gathered within his hands, didn't respond, eliciting an amused smirk. Adorned by an extremely tacky suit of glowing white armor, Ryuken Ishida stood unflinching, his white hair rustling slightly in the wind. How laughable. Did the man believe changing clothes would level the playing field? An idiotic notion born from the mind of a lesser creature. Only clothing woven from Life Fibers - Kamui - could claim such a blasphemous boast.

She stopped short, however, of presuming the man posed no threat, "You Quincy simply refuse to accept the basic truths of this world."

"I'm curious, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Ryuken pushed aside the growing nausea, the overwhelming disgust towards the Kiryuin matriarch's existence. Eyes narrowing behind designer glasses as the ambient spiritual energy throughout Karakura Town was absorbed by the Reishi Heiso, fingers tightening around the taut drawstring of his Heilig Bogen, he politely inquired, "Were you aware that Masaki told me everything about your confrontation seventeen years ago?"

A single Heilig Pfeil left his bow, crossing the relatively large distance to Ragyo Kiryuin before she could mount an unsuccessful argument. Energy exploded from the antiquated Reishi Heiso as the accompanying shockwave rippled through the streets, wiping the pretentious smirk off the woman's face. Remaining steadfast when the matriarch raised the Scissor Blade, her mouth twisted into a snarl, multicolored light enveloped everything as his arrow directly struck the hardened Life Fiber weapon.

Just as he expected.

Observing the woman's twisting expression as she was forced backwards, crashing through multiple buildings from the abrupt transfer of momentum, Ryuken slowly lowered his bow before retroactively announcing, "Reinigung Pfeil."

"Bon sang..."

Her heels dug into the ground, asphalt vaporizing as she angrily twisted her wrist, deflecting the spiritual arrow skyward off the Scissor Blade. Slouched forward when her momentum reversed, bangs of silver hair falling across her face, Ragyo scoffed in annoyed contempt. Staring at the multicolored sword, smoke wafting from its unmarred and polished surface, she sighed, adjusting her disheveled appearance with nothing more than a thought. These Quincy were just full of surprises. Every time she figured out their abilities, someone like Ryuken Ishida announces something new. Yet her irritation was tempered by a very simple fact.

Despite his best efforts, the pitiful Quincy simply didn't possess the required uniqueness necessary to damage her marvelous body.

Standing tall, the Scissor Blade resting delicately within her manicured fingers, she took a moment to calmly assess the situation. Ryuken Ishida was a businessman possess ruthlessness and acumen rivaling her own. Ishida Pharmaceuticals was, after all, the only conglomerate on the planet with more money... more power... than Revocs. So of course watching the same man who rejected her generous proposal to supply his hospitals with tailor-made uniforms behaving so strangely garnered her suspicions. He couldn't honestly believe his strength was sufficient to overcome the divine power of the Original Life Fiber?

Her lips curled into a malicious smirk at the answer.

Ryuken Ishida assumed his strength - that of a mere Quincy - could successfully occupy her attention. She chuckled at the absurdness, laughing before vanishing, flying back towards Karakura General Hospital.

If the Quincy wished to pointlessly sacrifice his life, she was more than happy to oblige!

She danced through the ensuing onslaught of Heilig Pfeil, twisting around the spiritual arrows. The Scissor Blade blurring when the deluge intensified, streaks of blue-white shattering against the hardened Life Fiber weapon, Ragyo smirked at the azure glow radiating from Ryuken Ishida's armor just before he disappeared. Displaying dissonant serenity befitting one of her stature she pivoted with a single, soft clack of her heel against ephemeral platforms of spiritual energy, crumpling the pavement into a deep crater as she flew towards the escaping Quincy.

La vie est drôle!

With a single swing of the Scissor Blade she shattered the Seele Schneider in Ryuken Ishida's left hand, the spiritual energy composing the sword-like arrow dispersing into shards that glimmered in the sunlight. Her smirk broadened at the Quincy's subsequent retreat, thousands of arrows blanketing the growing overcast skies in hues of blue and white. Moving forward without stopping, the spiritual storm shattering against her skin, maroon eyes narrowed when the man reached into his belt, fingers looping around several Seele Schneiders. She laughed upon instantly closing the distance, grasping Ryuken Ishida's neck through the armor's collar.

Ragyo grinned as she continued squeezing the Quincy's windpipe. Pirouetting while ignoring the faint pattern flickering across his bruised skin, sending the man rocketing back towards the ground with a casual flick of her wrist, she calmly raised the Scissor Blade before vanishing in a flash of speed.

Her heels clacking upon the pavement outside Karakura General Hospital, she chuckled as blood dripped from the Scissor Blade.

"Au revoir, Ryuken Ishida."

The obstinate Quincy slammed into the ground with a sickening thud, blood oozing from the wounds covering his nearly naked body. Briefly amused when Ryuken Ishida struggled to move, strands of glowing energy connecting various limbs before snapping, Ragyo walked away without a second thought, flicking the Scissor Blade to remove his ugly blood. It was astonishing the man was still conscious, but determination and willpower simply weren't enough.

After all, he was a Quincy .

A faint sheen of multicolored energy enveloped the Scissor Blade as she marched towards Karakura General Hospital, her eyes shifting downwards. After all that nonsense, forcing her to deal with shinigami and Quincy, this is their plan? Carelessly swinging the hardened Life Fiber weapon, destroying the already damaged building's façade and sending shockwaves rippling across Karakura Town, Ragyo's smirk slowly shifted into an annoyed frown.

"Today's youth..."

Faux disappointment filled the matriarch's sultry voice as she gazed into the darkness resting beneath the hospital, platforms of varying height rising from the floor. Now why on earth would Ryuken Ishida have something like this built underneath his property? Her footsteps echoing softly as she strutted forward, the rhythmic clacking of her heels overwhelming the surprised whispers from the humans, Ragyo shook her head at the golden-orange barrier enveloping her eldest daughter.

"... and after I went through so much trouble teaching Satsuki to respect her elders."

She momentarily focused upon Moe Shishigawara lying trussed and unconscious, naked apart from the ropes binding his limbs, before swiveling past Satsuki and Junketsu, their well-deserved injuries healed. Staring at the otherwise nondescript human next to Ryuken Ishida's son, the strange raiment adorning her flesh woven with a peculiar stitching, Ragyo smirked at her eldest daughter's frustration, "Satsuki, I was under the impression your little Sewing Club was incapable of weaving such marvelous clothing. I suppose Kisuke Urahara or Isshin completed its stitching?"

"This is bad," Chad tensed, grimacing as Brazo Izquierda del Diablo flowed down his left arm, "How did she find us?"

"She must have sensed Orihime through the sperrschicht," Uryu flinched when Ragyo Kiryuin appeared several feet away, the woman grinning as she marched towards Satsuki. After Yoruichi intervened, Ryuken ordered them underground while he confronted the matriarch using the Reishi Heiso. It was all to buy enough time for Orihime to finish healing Satsuki's wounds.

Yet her mother was standing here... and he couldn't sense Ryuken's spiritual pressure.

Fingers clenched as muted shock transformed into seething hatred, Uryu stiffened when the woman chuckled, "Do you intend to fight me?"

Ragyo arched an eyebrow, half-heartedly watching her eldest daughter emerge from Orihime's barrier, Junketsu's activated configuration already gracing her body. While the venomous expression tainting Satsuki's otherwise flawless features was more than enough to force lesser individuals into submission, she simply didn't have time for such foolishness. Staring at her errant daughters, their rebellious behavior mildly embarrassing, she sighed when Junketsu decided to speak her part, "Oh? Well, I can't deny you've synchronized with Satsuki far beyond my expectations. However, in my personal opinion..."

Planting her fist deep within Satsuki's exposed stomach, Junketsu accentuating every taut muscle, she smirked as her bewildered daughter gasped in agony, "... nothing is uglier than a person wearing clothes that don't fit them."

A muffled bang rustled her flaunting attire as Satsuki flew across the chamber, heels scraping against the bone-white platforms before slamming into the far wall. Smirking as the entire building shook, Ragyo's eyes widened in fascination when her eldest daughter extracted herself from the wall, blood trailing from her hairline. Even after expending most of her power ascending into her fashion week apparel, Junketsu's divine endurance hadn't decreased in the slightest!

Her heels clacked softly as she grabbed Orihime's wrist, vanishing in a flash of speed before the other annoyances could blink. She already suffered too many delays to her schedule to humor the humans with another farce of a battle. Reappearing outside the hospital without breaking her stride, Orihime's horrified gasp upon noticing Ryuken Ishida bleeding to death truly pleasurable, Ragyo looked over her shoulder when a familiar presence burst from the darkness.

"Your tenacity is nearly as impressive as Ichigo's..."

Satsuki landed outside with a soft clack, superheated steam erupting from Junketsu's vents as she seethed at her mother, "I won't allow you to leave, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"What you allow doesn't matter, Satsuki," Ragyo lamented her daughter's adamant refusal to understand the absolute truth of the world, smirking when the traitorous Kamui expressed her opinion rather vocally, "On the contrary, your declaration holds absolutely no weight."

An astonished grunt escaped her daughter's mouth when Junketsu transformed back to normal in a flash of muted sapphire, "What did you do to Junketsu!?"

" I didn't do anything."

She wrapped her arm around Orihime's neck, fingers caressing the threads composing her daughter's atrocious sweater. Was Satsuki really this dense? Basking in her eldest daughter's bewilderment, lips twisting into a smirk at the confused quivering of Junketsu's eyes, Ragyo lightly chastised, "This is all your fault, Satsuki. The overwhelming strength you acquired by absorbing my COVERS strains Junketsu's Life Fibers. Even Orihime's marvelous abilities cannot reject such callous damage so easily. It's simply the price one must pay for wearing Kamui that don't belong to them."

" Ryuko, on the other hand, would have no such issues..."

The unspoken threat lingered, mixing with her eldest daughter's combination of impotent hatred and childish ignorance. Despite all claims to the contrary, she wasn't lying. There really wasn't anyone Satsuki could blame for Junketsu's pitiful condition. It was a miracle the Kamui managed transforming into her active configuration after straining her Life Fiber to such an extent. Turning around with a regal flourish, the final blemishes adorning her body and clothing fading, Ragyo subconsciously tightened her hold upon Orihime's neck, mouth pursed in parental disapproval.

"I assure you, my dear weaving princess, that using your powers will end with everyone you care about - including my troublesome daughter - dying a cruel and pointless death."

Orihime flinched, the golden-orange light shining from her plastic hairpins fading, "W-Why are you doing this?"

"Such a ridiculous question," Ragyo marched away from Satsuki, dragging her terrified daughter along without hesitation, "The beginning and end of all things can be found within the Original Life Fiber."

"RAGYO KIRYUIN!"

Her arm blurred as she effortlessly deflected the barrage of Heilig Pfeil, each spiritual arrow shattering against the Scissor Blade. Oh dear... it seemed Ryuken's son discovered the fate of his father. She sighed when the young Quincy's presence increased, sending hundreds of projectiles screaming towards her location. How annoying. She could deal with the Quincy's pathetic attacks. After all, they posed absolutely no threat to someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber.

Orihime, on the other hand, was a different matter. Due to the nature of her powers, there existed the possibility her daughter didn't possess regeneration like Amu and Nui.

She frowned, attention shifted from the apoplectic Quincy, when a shimmering green barrier encompassed the street. These shinigami were truly beginning to test her patience. Glaring over her shoulder at Tessai Tsukabishi, eyes narrowing at the lightly injured man once more standing upon the hospital's roof, Ragyo scoffed in audible irritation, "You again..."

Her eyebrow twitched when Yoruichi Shihoin appeared next to the former captain, a makeshift tourniquet wrapped around her shoulder. Damn! The shinigami should have bled to death by now! Heels clacking softly as she turned around, energy wafting from the Scissor Blade clasped within her tightening fingers, Ragyo scowled when the dark skinned woman clenched her remaining hand into a fist, "Let go of Orihime!"

"Or what? You'll kill me?"

Ragyo smirked at Ryuken's son, the young Quincy conflicted between helping his dying father and fruitlessly attempting to end her life. Stroking a finger across Orihime's cheek, the motherly gesture drawing the attention of everyone's presence, she chuckled under her breath, "I'm afraid you already had your chance, Yoruichi Shihoin. And you failed. Even that man couldn't defeat me! Neither human nor shinigami can stand against the power of one blessed by the Original Life Fiber!"

"That's where you're wrong!"

Ira Gamagori landed outside the spiritual barrier with a resounding crash, the ground shaking from the impact. Arms spread wide, chains of purple electricity coiling around his Shackle Regalia Mark II, the former Chair of the Disciplinary Committee glowered upon noticing Orihime. With cracks and dents covering his Goku Uniform, damage sustained battling against the inhuman abilities of Riruka Dokugamine, he bellowed at the top of his lungs, "And no amount of bluffing will save you from our righteous fury!"

"Sorry we're late, Lady Satsuki!"

Uzu Sanageyama grinned beneath the helmet of his Blade Regalia Mark III as he appeared in front of Satsuki, shinai pointed at the Kiryuin matriarch, "But dealing with Xcution wasn't easy!"

"There's nowhere to run, Ragyo Kiryuin," Satsuki's tone was unyielding, lacking the fatigue and exhaustion plaguing her body, as Jakuzure hovered overhead, the musical cannons of her Symphony Regalia Mark III aimed at her imprisoned mother, "Your army of COVERS are unraveled! Xcution lies defeated by those you deemed inferior! And despite your callous disregard, your power has weakened! Release Orihime Inoue! It's over!"

"... is that right?"

Multicolored light enveloped the Kiryuin matriarch as her presence blanketed the area, causing the very atmosphere to tremble .

Smirking when the shinigami's spiritual barrier shattered beneath the divine weight of her power, Orihime gasping lightly at the majestic display of the Original Life Fiber's might, Ragyo chuckled as every Quincy, human and shinigami were driven to their knees, some requiring more effort than others. It filled her with pride watching Satsuki struggling to stand, her eldest daughter quivering from the strain. Such determination was truly inspiring. But without Junketsu's magnificent power, the immense strength flowing through the Kamui's Life Fibers, her petulant daughter simply couldn't withstand the full presence of the Original Life Fiber.

Slightly widening her eyes, increasing the pressure enough for Yoruichi Shihoin and Tessai Tsukabishi to collapse, inhuman pleasure coursed through the matriarch's soul when Satsuki crashed face-first onto the ground. Marching around the struggling members of her daughter's Elite Four, their Goku Uniforms affording them no protection, Ragyo paused at a familiar pitter-patter, manicured fingers tightening around Orihime's limp wrist.

"So you're the reason we came to this stupid city..."

Nui Harime slowly walked across the parking lot, completely unaffected by the immense spiritual pressure pinning everyone else to the ground. Staring curiously at Orihime, her head tilted slightly to the right, she blinked at the familiar sensation pulsing in her chest, "Gosh, I knew there was something special about you."

Ragyo's smile disappeared at the Grand Couturier's unexpected arrival, replaced by growing apprehension in the pit of her stomach. Something happened. There was no other explanation for dearest Nui disregarding her orders to immediately return to Honnouji Academy upon eliminating Kisuke Urahara. Eyes widening at her daughter's haggard appearance, the lovely blonde pigtails lying in limp curls against her back, she felt the multicolored undertone from her own hair diminish, "Nui... where's Amu?"

"Amu's gone, Lady Ragyo," Nui's voice contained little inflection, darkened sapphire eyes swiveling from Orihime towards Satsuki,

"That stupid man took her away... he killed her..."

"What!?"

Her façade cracked, eyes twitching at the Grand Couturier's answer. Impossible! Kiskeya Urahara couldn't have killed Amu! No... the peculiarities of Nui's response implied her daughter was still alive. Relief coursed through her Life Fibers, the overwhelming dread replaced with righteous indignation. She would not allow the shopkeeper to take Amu. Not before Shinra Koketsu was finished! Snapping her head towards the shinigami's place of business, the Scissor Blade shimmering dangerously in her trembling fingers, Ragyo stiffened when something pulsed against her mind.

"Isshin..."

She frowned, tensing angrily at the unexpected and unwanted development. Isshin should have been rendered impotent by the Bleach Bomb for another twenty minutes. His Life Fibers couldn't have possibly recovered so quickly! Unless... merde, he was truly one resilient man, "Nui, can you finish Shinra Koketsu without Amu?"

"W-What?"

Nui's dulled expression shifted, genuine confusion appeared in her eyes. The Needle Blades trembling beneath her mother's stern gaze, shaking as flashes of anger towards that shinigami pierced through her mind, she quietly muttered, "Only the finishing touches are left. And I still have to double-check the stitching from top to bottom. I can do it! But without Amu I'm all -"

"I suppose that's good enough."

A faint breeze accompanied the Kiryuin matriarch's annoyed sigh as her heels left the ground. The loss of Amu was a tragic setback. But the fate of her daughter wasn't relevant as long as the Grand Couturier could finish Shinra Koketsu. Nothing mattered without the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Wrapping her arm around Orihime's waist, protectively embracing her previously lost daughter, Ragyo stared into the steadily growing overcast skies, "Come Nui, we're leaving."

The Grand Couturier stiffened, her voice momentarily cracking, "But what about Amu!?"

"I'm afraid rescuing your sister is all but impossible," Ragyo frowned at Isshin's growing presence. Judging from the sensation radiating through her Life Fibers, the man was genuinely furios, "However, all is not lost. Kisuke Urahara might have kidnapped Amu but Operation Laissez Faire was a complete success. I trust you can delay seeking retribution against that contemptuous man until after finishing Shinra Koketsu?"

"... of course, Lady Ragyo," Nui hesitated before ascending towards the matriarch, pink boots tapping softly against invisible platforms.

"Oh, and Satsuki..."

Ragyo grinned at the defiance etched across both her daughter and Junketsu's expressions, their seething hatred filling her soul with pleasure. As the Grand Couturier loyally floated at her side, strangely silent and contemplative, she laughed, "Please give my regards to Isshin once he returns. Tell that exaspérant man I'm truly grateful. After all, the power dwelling in Orihime's Life Fibers wouldn't have matured without his assistance!"

In a blinding flash of multicolored light Ragyo vanished into the darkening skies, disappearing over the horizon alongside Orihime and the Grand Couturier. As the overbearing spiritual pressure upon her shoulders lessened, dissipating alongside her mother's departure, Satsuki snarled, slamming her clenched fist against the ground, "Damn you, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"Lady Satsuki!"

Satsuki remained silent as she stood up, focusing her anger upon the battles waiting in the future. She couldn't allow the hatred of Ragyo Kiryuin cloud her judgment, not at this crucial junction. Scowling when the Elite Four gathered at attention, their Goku Uniforms signifying the hardships and difficulties experienced within the last thirty minutes, she subconsciously smoothed the creases blemishing Junketsu, "Your concern is appreciated, Gamagori. What's the status of Karakura Town?"

"Riruka Dokugamine has been successfully neutralized... with my father's assistance. Her Duveteux Raiment was collected by Nudist Beach and awaits transportation towards a secure facility," the massive teenager reported without hesitation, "Jakuzure's past background with Dokugamine proved invaluable in countering the enemy's self-proclaimed 'Dollhouse.'"

"That arrogant bitch deserved getting her face plowed into the ground," Nonon snarled.

"Yoruichi took down Yukia while I fought his stupid imaginary friends," Sanageyama scoffed, his sewn eyes narrowing at the woman's spiritual pressure. Even he could sense something was wrong, "... damn. She must have seriously pissed off Ragyo Kiryuin to lose her arm."

"How can you see anything!?"

"Yoruichi Shihoin's intervention bought enough time for Orihime Inoue to heal my wounds," Satsuki admitted, unconcerned when Gamagori tried chastising Nonon about her indignant outburst. Somberly watching Uryu kneel at his father's side, Tessai Tsukabishi creating a glowing yellow barrier around the heavily wounded Quincy, she turned back towards the Elite Four as thunder rolled over the horizon, "However, the strain of Junketsu Shinzui proved greater than expected, allowing my mother to kidnap Orihime Inoue."

"While a previously unknown third configuration for Junketsu is interesting, the salient question involves our next course of action," Houka Inumuta sat on the ground, a laptop between his legs, "It's clear our original hypothesis concerning your mother's objective was incorrect. Orihime Inoue wasn't targeted because of the threat posed by her powers. Rather, judging by Ragyo Kiryuin's single-minded determination, it would seem Orihime is somehow necessary for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. How she's important, on the other hand, remains uncertain."

Satsuki's fingers twitched at the phantasmal pain radiating from her stomach - where Isshin Kurosaki's weapon pierced flesh and bone - before regaining her composure, "Nui Harime's behavior in front of my mother suggests Kisuke Urahara successfully rescued Ururu Tsumugiya. And without Ururu's assistance, weaving the finishing touches on Shinra Koketsu will take exponentially longer."

"So even if Orihime's necessary for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to reach fruition, we have time to regroup and strategize," Inumuta contemplated, fingers typing across his laptop.

"I suppose that's some good news."

Yoruichi winced as she leapt off the roof, blood dripping from the impromptu tourniquet around her left shoulder. Landing on the ground, briefly stumbling from her changed sense of balance, she asked, "How long do we have until Shinra Koketsu's complete?"

"It's difficult to say," Inumuta stopped typing long enough to adjust his glasses, "There's very little data on Shinra Koketsu, which makes determining an accurate timeline concerning the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet nearly impossible. However, I'm fairly confident we don't have much time."

"Then our choice is clear."

Satsuki's hair rustled as storm clouds, previously dispersed by her mother's overwhelming attack, covered the heavens once more. As rain fell upon her face, the autumn wind causing Junketsu to shiver around her bruised body, she focused on the inaudible whispers in the back of her mind. Fingers twitching, searching for a weapon no longer in her possession, blue eyes narrowed furiously, "We shall not allow my mother to emerge victorious! She might have dealt with Isshin Kurosaki... but such miracles only happen once!"

Her passion pierced through the pouring rain, the sapphire-tinted backdrop of light illuminating her determined features. Scowling as she watched Uryu kneel by his father, the spiritual barrier healing the older Quincy's wounds at an excruciatingly slow pace, she turned towards Yoruichi Shihoin and her Elite Four with a loud clack, "Kisuke Urahara's victory over the Grand Couturier and Ururu Tsumugiya shall not go to waste! Inumuta, Osaka might be compromised but our options are not limited! Can you contact London?"

"Of course, Lady Satsuki," the blue haired youth leaned forward, slouching to keep his laptop safe from the rain, "Unfortunately your mother destroyed my remote access to the Ishida Pharmaceutical communications network. I'll need to manually reconnect my Probe Regalia with the servers inside Karakura General Hospital. That's assuming, of course, they weren't destroyed."

Satsuki frowned at the unwanted news, her attention drawn towards the damaged Denreishinki in Yoruichi Shihoin's remaining hand. Her mother might have won the battle, successfully kidnapping Orihime Inoue despite their best efforts, but Ragyo Kiryuin overplayed her hand! The war wasn't over, "Kisuke Urahara was constructing a device to bypass the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier. It should be nearly finished, allowing a full-scale assault upon Honnouji Academy once Ichigo and Ryuko return from London. With the power of four Kamui my mother won't survive to witness her plans come to fruition!"

"That's quite the interesting plan, Satsuki Kiryuin."

Sosuke Aizen marched down the street, mouth curled into an amiable smirk. Ignoring the shocked expressions from the few people aware of his past actions, Yoruichi Shihoin's widened eyes proof enough that Kisuke Urahara hadn't told his colleagues anything, he looked to the east before asking, "But what do you intend to do about the Original Life Fiber? The creature that, as we speak, is awakening in response to your mother's actions?"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #34 - The New Student Council President

Ryuko Matoi glared at the closed entrance to Shin'ō Academy, her eyes wandering towards the massive gateway barring their path. Arms folded across Senketsu, the normally talkative Kamui strangely silent, she grumbled for the third time since arriving in the Soul Society, "Why do we have to check on Satsuki?"

"Because my old man wanted someone to check on her," Ichigo answered, standing at her side with the same annoyed expression on his face.

"Then why couldn't Hat-and-Clogs? It's HIS damn fault!"

Ichigo thought back to the twitching heap lying on the floor, smoke wafting from Kisuke's body as a furious Yoruichi punched him repeatedly. He remembered the shopkeeper's frantic cries for assistance after "accidentally" giving Satsuki shinigami powers. Mugetsu's, and surprisingly Senketsu's, amused laughter hadn't helped, "Tessai said he's still recovering after eating some bad food. Apparently healing Kido can't help with food poisoning."

" Something about this place rustles my Life Fibers," Senketsu shivered, staring at the feudal architecture throughout the Seireitei, "It feels like somebody's watching us. Can we go home, Ryuko? It's Wednesday. You forgot to iron me. I'm getting wrinkles."

"Ichigo?"

Renji Abarai leapt off the wall across from the academy, one hand resting upon Zabimaru's hilt. Confused by the former substitute shinigami's presence, the lieutenant briefly stared at Mugetsu, the Kamui's shifting eyes sending shills down his spine. Since when could clothing move ? It had to be a trick of the light... or something Kishu Urahara invented during his spare time, "Aren't you a sight for sore eyes. And who's your friend?"

He looked at Ryuko, gaze momentarily settling on her revealing Kamui, before grinning, "Don't tell me you've got yourself a girlfriend."

"What the hell did you just say!?"

Stunned by the strangeness of Ryuko's spiritual pressure, the eye on her uniform's lapel moving, he quickly backpedaled, "Err... sorry. Anyway, I'm guessing Kishu informed you of the situation?"

"Situation?"

Renji stared at Ichigo and Ryuko, shoulders slumped in confusion. They seriously had no idea what happened? The only reason Ichigo would come back to the Seireitei after losing his shinigami powers - and with a friend - was if Kishu Urahara somehow thought he would be useful in solving the problem. Pointing vigorously at Shin'ō Academy, the looming gates extruding a sense of foreboding, the lieutenant shouted, "That! Can't you feel it?"

Head cocked sideways, arms folded across Senketsu, Ryuko listened patiently for anything before scoffing, "Are you insane? I can't feel anything. Ichigo, you can talk to Mr. Pineapple but I'm going to see Satsuki."

"Hold on!"

Dramatically sliding in front of the teenager, Renji's eyebrow twitched at the girl's obnoxious nickname. His hair only superficially resembled a pineapple, "I'm sorry Ichigo but nobody can enter Shin'ō Academy. At least until Captain Kurotsuchi develops a countermeasure against that Kido."

A feeling similar to déjà vu washed over Ichigo, bringing up unpleasant memories, as Renji continued, "Three weeks ago someone infiltrated the academy. Posing as a new student they overthrew the instructors. Captain Zarakī was the first one to respond. When I arrived several minutes later the captain was lying unconscious outside the academy. Apparently the last thing he remembers after kicking open the doors was an overwhelming blue-white light."

"We don't know who we're dealing with, but they've created Kido powerful enough to knock out captains."

"Hey," Ryuko leaned over, jabbing Ichigo in the ribs before whispering, "Yoruichi brought Satsuki to this crappy place three weeks ago, right? You don't think..."

"Yes, she probably did," Ichigo groaned, rubbing the bridge of his nose as Mugetsu snickered. Of course his Kamui would find the situation hilarious, "So why are you here, Renji?"

"Because I drew the short straw," Renji grumbled, remembering the exact sequences of events that led to the current situation, "Ikkaku was ordered to patrol today but Rangiku convinced him to go drinking last night... where he accidentally unleashed his Bankai in the middle of the Third Rukon District. After he landed in jail, Momo and Kira were next on the list. But they both vanished. Apparently some clothing company in the World of the Living is having a big sale. Isane volunteered... but she's stuck helping Captain Unohana keep Captain Zarakī away from the academy."

"Are you kidding me!? I'm NOT putting up with this shit a second time!"

Ryuko angrily stormed towards Shin'ō Academy, planting her fist squarely in Renji's face when he stupidly tried stopping her. Bringing her leg up, Senketsu's lower half accentuating every shadowed curve, she kicked the door, sending the metal structure crashing to the ground with a screeching bang . The dust settling as she stomped into the academy's front grounds, she scowled when an overwhelming blue-white light assaulted her senses. "Of freaking course..."

" We probably should have expected something like this, Ryuko ."

"You're right about that, Senketsu," Ryuko scoffed, more annoyed than frustrated, at the silhouetted figure across the courtyard. She made a mental note to kick the old goat's Life Fiber ass upon returning to Karakura Town. Sending them to check on Satsuki because he was worried she was having trouble? What a load of bullshit! Kisuke probably paid Ichigo's dad to make up that stupid excuse!

"I see you've been busy, Satsuki," she folded her arms, sneering at the students wearing the standard shihakusho of Shin'ō Academy's lining both sides of the entrance. Leave it to her sister to take over an academy... in the freaking afterlife .

"Oh great," Ichigo sighed at the silhouetted figure marching through the rows of obediently standing students, Mugetsu sharing his tired resignation, "Here we go again..."

"The hell does that mean!?"

Renji grabbed Mugetsu, pulling Ichigo until the former substitute shinigami was inches from his face. Unaware of the Kamui's annoyance, the feminine growling reverberating through her Life Fibers inaudible, he pointed at the overwhelming blue-white light, "You know about her !?"

" Ichigo, tell him to let go. My threading's getting ruffled."

Ignoring his Kamui's rapidly growing level of annoyance, her growling falling upon deaf ears, Ichigo grabbed Renji's shihakusho before shouting at a slightly higher volume, "Yeah, I know Satsuki! What I'm really curious about is how you people managed to LOSE the academy!"

"Satsuki, or whatever the hell her name is, took over the academy using that powerful Kido," Renji remained unable to hear Mugetsu's intensifying hatred as she clenched his hand into a fist, earning a strangled curse from the Kamui, "But you seem awfully familiar with her methods, Ichigo. So why the hell didn't you warn us about her!?"

" Ichigo, he's getting sweat and oil in my Life Fibers," Mugetsu's eyes twitched, her sleeves shifting angrily around Ichigo, "I'm going to need a good scrubbing tonight."

Ichigo raised his voice, accidentally ignoring Mugetsu's righteous indignation, "Because I didn't think someone like Byakuya would let this happen!"

"So it IS your fault!"

Satsuki Kiryuin smirked as the holy backlight representing her unyielding determination faded into nothingness. Her zanpakuto slammed against the ground with an echoing clack, the bone-white sheath shining brightly in the sunlight, she listened to Ichigo's redundant argument with Renji Abarai before addressing Ryuko's concerns, "I'm assuming Isshin Kurosaki tricked you into visiting the Seireitei?"

"Yeah, the old goat tricked us," Ryuko grumbled, eyes drifting towards Satsuki's red and white shihakusho.

" Satsuki's zanpakuto looks familiar, Ryuko," Senketsu focus on the spiritual weapon, the faint shimmer of metal causing him to shiver, "I don't think Junketsu will be happy about this. Perhaps we should let Mugetsu break the news? Last time I told"

Junketsu something new about Satsuki's shinigami powers she wouldn't stop crying! I still have water in my Life Fibers!"

"Tch... was ruling over Honnouji Academy not good enough for ya?"

Ryuko ignored Senketsu's whining about Junketsu to focus on something actually important. Alright, maybe the Kamui became a little clingy over the last few weeks. And maybe she tended to mope around Ichigo's house. But she'd never seen Junketsu cry, "Wait just a damn second! Does this place even have a student council!?"

An explosion of light reappeared behind Satsuki as her heel, an accessory not part of the standard academy shihakusho, clacked against the ground. As Ichigo rolled his eyes, the sudden illumination blinding Renji, she passionately declared, "The academy's curriculum was insufficient! Upon my enrollment I found this place lacking both discipline and motivation. Half the student body relentlessly sought the slightest taste of POWER with aggression akin to Hollows! Those left behind in the gutters were too cowardly to address their grievances! They feared retribution from the entrenched and decadent nobility!"

"So I took control over this derelict institution!"

Satsuki's eyes shone with determination and conviction, her black hair rustling in the breeze, "As the first Student Council President of Shin'ō Academy I shall work diligently to train my fellow students! Transforming them into shinigami WORTHY of joining the Gotei 13!"

Subconsciously smoothing the wrinkles covering Mugetsu as Renji grabbed his watering eyes, the Kamui greatly annoyed by the red-haired shinigami getting dirt and sweat in her Life Fibers, Ichigo frowned at Satsuki's amused smirk. He knew that look, "However, taking control of Shin'ō Academy without forewarning would be dishonorable. It took Kisuke Urahara considerable effort to authorize my enrollment. So I worked inside the system! Gaining approval for my actions from the highest authorities!"

"I see things are progressing quite splendidly, Miss Kiryuin. Excellent work."

Ryuko twisted sideways, instinctively reaching for the Scissor Blade she left in Karakura Town, when the captain-commander appeared out of nowhere, an approving expression on his face. Taking a moment to register the situation, eyes widening comically as the elder shinigami walked into Shin'ō Academy unbothered by the blinding Kido, Renji stared into the holy backlight, "C-Captain-Commander!? You know about Satsuki?"

"Miss Kiryuin came to the First Division three weeks ago with a single proposition - restructuring Shin'ō Academy into an institution second-to-none," Yamamoto's gnarled cane tapped with every purposeful step into the blinding backlight, "She argued with inspiring conviction that the teaching methods - first implemented by myself - were antiquated. Upon reviewing the evidence, I conceded she had a point."

"She knocked out Captain Zaraki!"

"Such a powerful technique should be honed, Renji Abarai," Yamamoto ignored Renji's incoherent flustering, his perpetually closed eyes somehow narrowing, "That is why I allowed Miss Kiryuin free reign over the academy and its students."

"Your approval is greatly appreciated, Genryusai Yamamoto," Satsuki stood firmly, addressing the strongest shinigami with respect worthy of his station.

Unconcerned by Renji's sudden unconsciousness, induced upon hearing her speak with the captain-commander as an equal rather than a subordinate, Satsuki began discussing how to further improve the institute's curriculum. Watching the exchange through resigned eyes, Mugetsu laughing at Renji's twitching form, Ichigo sighed. This was going to be a long three days.

Stairway to Heaven

Aftermath chapters are interesting to write. On the one hand, they take place in a period of 'cooling down,' where the characters are coming to terms with what happened. On the other hand, it's a grace period. A reprieve before the next arc/battle starts. And sometimes - as in this chapter - it's the merging of two simultaneous arcs coming together - the Karakura Town Assault Arc and the Hellsing Arc. Which means, of course, that Ichigo and Ryuko are back in Karakura Town. It took some time - more than expected - getting back into the feel of writing their personalities after dealing with Aizen, Satsuki, Ginjo, Ragyo and the other characters of the previous arc.

Enjoy the chapter and leave a review. And if you have questions about anything - even old material - feel free to PM me.

---

...

---

Chapter 58 - Stairway to Heaven

The familiar presence of Life Fibers penetrated the filtration mask covering Kisuke Urahara's face, causing his nose to slightly itch. Resisting the urge to scratch - which would require removing the only thing preventing the Life Fibers from entering his Gigai's lungs - the former captain turned shopkeeper reached to the left, grabbing the tattered remnants of Riruka Dokugamine's confiscated Duveteux Raiment. Pulling a single Life Fiber from the crumpled uniform's sleeve, the multicolored glow betraying its origins, he carefully wove the thread into the disassembled circular device scattered across the workbench.

His eyes narrowed when the computer beeped, the information scrolling down the screen disappointing. This wasn't working. The inclusion of Life Fibers from Xcution's raiment only marginally improved compatibility between Kamui and the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier. Sighing hard enough to fog the inside of his mask, the needle in his bandaged fingers fell onto the workbench with a metallic clatter.

What was he missing?

He suppressed a yawn, weary eyes examining his invention for mistakes. The lack of discernible progress was concerning. Introducing Life Fibers from Xcution's raiment were helpful, increasing the strength of the Elite Four's Goku Uniforms as a beneficial side effect, but replicating the results for Mugetsu and the rest of the Kamui was proving difficult. Their unique physiology and sentience prevented him from considering the same approach. Satsuki Kiryuin demonstrated quite clear during her little field trip what happens when foreign Life Fibers are involuntarily woven into a Kamui's stitching.

Yet without extensive testing and unrestricted access to Ragyo Kiryuin's barrier designs, completing everything within the next twelve hours was virtually impossible.

"Couldn't sleep, Isshin?"

Kisuke recognized the spiritual pressure before Isshin Kurosaki entered the refurbished Nudist Beach medical tent, the former shinigami unaffected by the Life Fibers floating throughout the enclosed space, "This must be important."

Isshin didn't initially acknowledge the greeting, the multicolored light emanating from his silver hair dimming when he noticed the small figure sitting on the nearby cot. Arms clasped around her knees, half-lidded sapphire eyes staring at the ground, Ururu's emotionless expression caused his heart to sink. Brushing Life Fibers from his clothing, the unnatural silence making things difficult, he steeled his gaze, "I finished checking over Junketsu. It looked bad... but luckily the strain from fighting Ragyo didn't damage her Life Fibers."

The seconds passed in silence, interrupted only by the consistent clicking of industrial tailoring equipment, before Isshin asked, "Will they be ready in time?"

"... no."

The chair creaked as he swiveled around. Unconcerned by Isshin's lack of a reaction to the otherwise worrisome answer, he muttered, "I analyzed the data Yoruichi gathered on the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier."

Kisuke's shadowed eyes narrowed, "We already know Ragyo Kiryuin used the information Satsuki's obtained during her field trip to replicate your barrier. But I'm convinced she took things several steps further. The random fluctuations of the high-velocity Life Fibers and shifting spiritual energy density suggests Ragyo Kiryuin anticipated someone would eventually attempt to penetrate her barrier's security measures."

"That does sound like Ragyo. She's always been a brilliant woman."

Isshin chuckled, attempting to drive some humor into the conversation, "So where's Aizen? I thought you two were working together."

"Sosuke believes an external device capable of tricking the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier is currently impossible. And I completely agree," Kisuke glanced out of the corner of his eyes at Ururu, his expression tightening, "The problem isn't bypassing Ragyo Kiryuin's IFF protocols. That's relatively easy for Goku Uniforms. Allowing the Kamui to enter Honnou City without compromising their mental stability? That's a little more difficult. At this point, spending days solving the problem when we might only have hours remaining before the Grand Couturier finishes Shinra Koketsu seems counterproductive."

"Olivier won't be happy about this."

Kisuke stiffened at the name. The leader of Nudist Beach was one of the most terrifying women in existence, second only to the normally amiable captain of the Fourth Division, "Dying at the hands of the infamous General Armstrong would be horrible. However, I have the strangest feeling you already knew my invention wouldn't be ready."

"Pretty much..."

Isshin shrugged his shoulders, ignoring the clicking of the industrial sewing machines across the repurposed pavilion. Even without looking he could instinctively sense the mistakes in the Sewing Club's work, the surviving members of the club creating moderately well-stitched Goku Uniforms despite the early hour, "Nothing gets into Honnou City without Ragyo's permission. I should know... she copied my designs. It took Hououmaru..."

He trailed off with a grimace, the sting of betrayal still strong, "Getting Mugetsu and the others into Honnouji Academy will be difficult without taking down the barrier."

"And creating a Bleach Bomb requires more than a week of preparation even for someone deeply influenced by the Original Life Fiber."

Kisuke allowed the comment to sink into Isshin's subconscious as he returned to work, the circuits comprising the disassembled device's systems emitting curling wisps of purple and crimson smoke, "This plan also depends upon Ragyo Kiryuin allowing the Bleach Bomb - one of the only weapons capable of negating her regeneration - through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier in the first place."

"You're right, Kisuke. I screwed up badly."

Isshin looked away from Kisuke, yesterday's events still fresh in his mind, "I trusted Hououmaru. She risked everything passing along enough information to keep Nudist Beach ahead of Revocs for years . I never thought she'd remain loyal to Ragyo. After what happened to Xcution... and Ichigo... it never crossed my mind she was playing me for a fool."

"Sometimes people aren't who they claim to be..."

The needle in Kisuke's hand twitched when Ururu shivered, dulled eyes sinking beneath raised knees. He felt his heart sink, guilt clawing down his spine. The abrupt desynchronization with the Grand Couturier caused lingering effects, symptoms he had not expected. His mouth pursed into a pained grimace. Hours after regaining consciousness, memory and personality restored, Ururu remained unresponsive. Nothing Yoruichi or Tessai said could get his daughter to open up, to say something. Even his attempts as her father - and he was her father no matter what Ragyo Kiryuin claimed - couldn't break through her shell.

"Why did you come here, Isshin?"

Flickers of crimson mixed with purple and blue flashed across his face, "You wouldn't leave Yuzu and Karin alone unless there was something important on your mind."

"I wanted to apologize."

Maroon eyes narrowed in disgust - at himself, his naïve trust in Hououmaru and Ragyo - while fingers strong enough to shatter concrete clenched into fists, "I sent Ururu to Honnouji Academy to protect Ichigo and Ryuko. But I wasn't blind. It was only a matter of time before Ragyo realized the truth. I thought I could handle whatever she was planning. Maybe if I said something to Yoruichi. Or told Ichigo..."

"We both know the Original Life Fiber would have made that virtually impossible."

Turning around, a mirthless grin twisting the corners of his mouth, Kisuke noted Isshin's surprised reaction, "It wasn't difficult piecing everything together. Your explanation on the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet lack specifics, details that could have given Nudist Beach the advantage long before Ragyo went on the offensive. Your answers were rehearsed, as though you couldn't say too much. Someone in your position - with your history and background - wouldn't hold secrets. Yet everything you say involving the Original Life Fiber requires an audience capable of filling in the blanks from minimal information."

Kisuke hummed under his breath, shadowed eyes narrowing, "If this wasn't true, you would have gone straight to the Captain Commander years ago."

"The old man wouldn't have believed me," Isshin scowled, remembering how stubborn the Captain Commander was before Ichigo defeated Aizen and 'saved' the World of the Living and Soul Society, "Alien threads working to devour humanity? That doesn't exactly sound believable. Besides, I had basically betrayed the Seireitei to marry a Quincy only to become an immortal servant of that thing underneath Ragyo's house. He would have incinerated me to ashes. Or worse... given my body to Mayuri."

The shopkeeper smirked at the mental image, "I'm sure Sosuke had a plan to rescue you from my former assistant."

His smile vanished when Ururu moved for the first time in hours, tired eyes briefly glancing at Isshin before returning to the empty spot between her feet. Sighing, the protective mask hiding his pained expression, he removed his hat, shredded Life Fibers falling from the damaged accessory, "I never expected someone quite like the Grand Couturier visiting my store."

The remains of his invention crackled softly, acrid smoke drifting upwards into the ventilation system. Frowning at the loss of progress, however minimal, Kisuke placed his bucket hat on the workbench, "I have contingency plans for every possible scenario. Faking my death using a portable Gigai should have been relative straightforward. But her connection to Life Fibers and Revocs piqued my curiosity. Once Nui Harime left Karakura Town I went into hiding, using the information from Souichiro's journal to track down the source of Life Fibers beyond the Kiryuin Conglomerate. Speaking of which, Ragyo Kiryuin really should improve security at the Tokyo Distribution Facility."

"I'll give her the message."

Isshin glanced away, pausing momentarily before his voice hardened, "What did Aizen tell you, Kisuke?"

"Everything."

That single word - short and concise - meant far more than emotions could effectively convey. Simply knowing Kisuke knew everything about the Original Life Fiber's plans lessened the burden on his shoulders. Years of being unable to directly warn anyone - even Nudist Beach - about the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet had been torturous. But no matter how much Aizen told Kisuke, the weight from the knowledge wouldn't disappear. Not only that thing was permanently stopped, "That saves me the trouble of leaving subtle clues throughout our conversation."

"True..."

"Although I can't help but feel somewhat embarrassed," Kisuke sighed, the sound muffled by the air-tight mask, "I spent decades preparing countless plans for defeating Aizen. I was ready for anything. Yet he successfully tricked me into believing that 'mastering' the Hogyoku made him throw caution to the wind. In hindsight, the subtle chances in his behavior after speaking with you were obvious. It was too forced. If the circumstances were different I would be ashamed of myself. But falling for your plan perhaps saved humanity in the long run."

Isshin snorted, "It was actually Aizen's plan."

Kisuke nodded, half-listening to Iori Shiro barking orders in the background. As fully-suited members of the Sewing Club marched back and forth, some carrying spools of Life Fibers while others vacuumed loose threads into special containers, he watched their president adjust the stitching on Ira Gamagori's new Shackle Regalia with growing appreciation. Several bones in his Gigai popping when he stood up, hands pressed against the edge of the workbench, he thought on what he learned from his discussion with Aizen. The depth of the man's knowledge on Life Fibers was impressive, the culmination of nearly two centuries of diligent study and experimentation.

To think his Hogen was created from the Original Life Fiber.

"Ishtar, there's something I need to know..."

He ignored the man's reaction when Ururu finally succumbed to exhaustion. Her eyes slowly closing, head tilted forward onto her knees, Ururu breathed steadily as the previous day's events were forgotten, lost in her first sound sleep in weeks. His expression unreadable, Kisuke walked towards the slumped form of his daughter, the light clomping of his wooden geta echoing with every step. Gently tucking Ururu beneath the thick blankets, the bandages around his fingers making the normally simple task painful, his voice noticeably hardened when he finished, "I'm aware your connection with the Original Life Fiber prevents you from destroying it. What I'm asking is entirely different..."

"Are you willing to kill Ragyo Kiryuin?"

A moment passed... and then another... before Ishtar somberly answered, "If it comes to that, I'll put Ragyo out of her misery once and for all."

---

...

---

Ichigo stared at the large iron-wrought gates barring his path. Constructed from stainless steel, hints of rust just beginning to creep around the welded joints, the massive entrance loomed imposingly over the otherwise normal suburban street. He snapped his head downwards when an electric buzz pierced through the air, the following metallic creak masking the whirring of helicopters overhead. Hands folded inside his hoodie as he walked into the Ishida Estate, damp leaves crumpling beneath his sandals, he stopped when the front door opened. Frowning at the white bandages wrapped around Uryu's arms, he hesitated before offering a half-hearted greeting.

"Hey, Uryu."

"Forgive the mess," Uryu ignored the debris scattered throughout his father's estate with practiced indifference, "Ryuken sent what few servants he employs overseas on extended paid vacation."

"I don't blame him."

Ichigo shrugged, his mind focusing on something more important. The Ishida's were supposed the richest family in the world, exceeding the Kiryuin's. Yet for some strange reason his first visit to Uryu's house, and not the apartment closer to Karakura High School, felt severely... underwhelming. While the estate was breathtaking, it wasn't the largest he'd seen over the last few months. Sparing one final look around the normally well-groomed landscape, he scoffed under his breath, "This place is a lot smaller than I expected."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

He pointed over Uryu's shoulder, fresh cracks covering the estate's white façade, "Isn't it obvious? You're richer than Satsuki but I'm pretty sure your house could fit inside her garage."

"My family has owned this property for several generations. Even after making his fortune, Ryuken saw no point in flaunting his wealth to the world."

Uryu found himself irritated and insulted by Ichigo's bunt and highly ignorant comment. As the eventual heir to Ishida Pharmaceuticals, including every daughter company within the medical conglomerate, he was aware of the world-renowned Kiryuin Manor. Several floors with hundreds of rooms, an all-inclusive bath house and an estate covering more than three thousand acres. It was the largest private residence in the world, a masterpiece of structural engineering first built during the Edo period, "But more to the point, we don't need the extra space. Because we're not harboring an eldritch creature in our basement."

An awkward silence followed the mentioning, however indirectly, of the Original Life Fiber before Uryu decided to change the subject, "I'm surprised Ryuko's not with you."

"She's hanging out with Mako."

Ichigo pointed in the general direction of Mako's house, which miraculously emerged from Ragyo Kiryuin's attack completely undamaged. Mako had been waiting for them when their helicopter landed, waving enthusiastically while standing on Gamagori's shoulders. After attempting - and failing - to tackle Ryuko into a hug, knocking over Gamagori in the process and sending what remained of their luggage scattering, she'd insisted on going back to her place. Apparently, her mom returned from her 'vacation' in Osaka several hours after Ragyo Kiryuin's attack, bringing back food and souvenirs for them to enjoy.

How Mako still didn't realize Sukuyo was one of the deadliest snipers in the world - and was working for Nudist Beach - gave him a headache.

His expression tightened upon remembering Ryuko's relieved reaction to seeing Mako alive and well. Yoruichi's call hadn't done anything justice. During the flight from London they had planned on interrogating Kisuke and his old man about Ragyo Kiryuin. But after everything that happened - fighting Millennium, Alucard's rampage and Anderson's death - Ryuko deserved the chance to relax, at least for a few hours. He glanced aside, fingers clenched tightly within his hoodie. Seeing Osaka burning as they descended through the clouds, half the city covered in jagged spikes of ice, had reminded him of London.

And then he found out from Olivier Armstrong that Rei Hououmaru had tried killing Yuzu and Karin.

Turning back to Uryu, Ichigo stared at the leaves rustling around his feet, "I heard about Ginjo."

"He gave everything protecting your sisters," Uryu parsed his words carefully, the memory of the former substitute shinigami's body still fresh.

"I know..."

The response was barely louder than a whisper. Despite everything, Ichigo didn't know what to think about Ginjo. Even after a few weeks, learning how he obtained shinigami powers and fought Hollows in the World of the Living, Ginjo always gave the feeling he was hiding something. But he never tried getting answers because it didn't seem important. What was the point? If he needed to know something, anything, he would have tracked down and beaten the information from his old man.

A heavy sigh left his mouth.

He had half-expected his old man to be waiting when they landed, prepared to ambush him despite the seriousness of the situation. It was simply something his dad would do, using the assault as an excuse to explain Ragyo Kiryuin's motivations. At least, that was what he expected. Instead, after Mako unsuccessfully tackled Ryuko and smashed head-first into the side of the helicopter, he found himself standing face-to-face with Satsuki, her posture unyielding despite not wearing Junketsu. He knew she wanted to speak. But when she remained silent while Yuzu and Karin hugged him, the former nearly in tears, he'd noticed her seemingly permanent scowl being softer than he remembered.

"Yoruichi didn't say much over the phone," Ichigo frowned as the sun vanished behind a cloud, "Nudist Beach told me about Hououmaru. And Satsuki..."

There was a measured pause before he finished, "Satsuki... she explained what happened to Orihime."

Uryu grimaced at the nightmarish details of the previous day, the memories fresh in his mind. Ragyo Kiryuin's amusement when she confessed to orchestrating the murder of Orihime's brother, her monstrous spiritual pressure that surpassed anything he experienced in Hueco Mundo, was something he could never forget, "It seems almost impossible to imagine. I never expected Orihime to be related to the Grand Couturier."

"But there's something else."

His expression shifted as he turned back to Ichigo, "I've thought about what Ragyo Kiryuin said. Her exact wording. If she wasn't lying about Orihime's relation to Nui Harime, then we must consider the possibility her Shun Shun Rikka is somehow connected to Life Fibers."

"Yeah..."

Ichigo remembered the aftermath of his battle with Ulquiorra, brow furrowed in confusion, "But if that's true, why didn't you react to her Soten Kisshun? Orihime's healed your wounds several times."

"I don't know," Uryu painfully confessed, shaking his head in resignation, "As a Quincy I should have noticed something off with her Shun Shun Rikka, Yet Orihime's spiritual pressure always felt human, if a little strange. But nothing warranting suspicion."

Ichigo stared at the ground, nodding without really paying attention. Whether he liked it or not, Uryu had a point. There was something special about Orihime's abilities. Healing wounds by rejecting the damage wasn't exactly a common ability, even in the Soul Society. Yet he never bothered thinking too much about it. But if Orihime was related to Ragyo Kiryuin, then she was just like Ururu and Nui Harime... just like Ryuko and himself. His mouth twisted into a frustrated grimace. Did this mean she was a Life Fiber Hybrid?

He remembered when Yammy attacked Orihime and immediately all doubt left his mind.

"It doesn't matter."

The autumn wind coursing through Karakura Town, whistling around the damaged and destroyed buildings, ineffectively battered his hoodie as his expression hardened, determination filling his eyes, "No matter what, she's still our friend. This doesn't change anything. Satsuki said her mother probably brought Orihime to Honnouji Academy. So we'll just storm the school and take her back."

Uryu listened attentively, his eyes narrowing by the time Ichigo finished speaking. It was a reckless plan, something he honestly expected from Ryuko. Attacking the academy without accounting without a fool-proof plan was suicidal. But he knew, with clarity born from experience, that Ichigo was fully aware stopping both Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber was far easier said than done. Breaching the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier surrounding Honnou City aside, getting to the woman meant fighting the remnants of Xcution, the Grand Couturier and whatever COVERS remained in the city. It would be difficult, bordering on impossible, to defeat the matriarch when she knew they were coming.

But at least this time they weren't going alone.

"I'm sorry."

The apology left a bitter taste in his mouth, "But I can't fight with you this time."

"I figured you would say something like that."

Ichigo rubbed his neck, attention focused on the strange landscaping of the Isshin Estate, before shrugging his shoulders, "After all, Quincy are weak against Life Fibers. Your arrows didn't work against Junketsu during the Raid Trip and Ragyo Kiryuin is certainly stronger than her. So even if you wanted to come, I would have refused your help."

"That's not what I meant."

Sunlight reflected off his glasses, turning the square lenses opaque, as Uryu matched Ichigo's annoyed scowl, "I'm painfully aware my skills pale in comparison to the Grand Couturier and her mother. But just because I cannot fight at your side does not mean I'm completely useless. Ragyo Kiryuin brought thousands of COVERS yesterday, but Nudist Beach estimates another half a million are spread across the country. What do you think will happen if she summons them to Honnouji Academy... while you're fighting her?"

He waited a moment, allowing the point to sink in, before continuing, "COVERS might be woven from Life Fibers but they don't possess anything resembling Nui Harime's monstrous spiritual prowess. I might be a simple Quincy - a mere 'footnote' to Ragyo Kiryuin - but dealing with a few thousand COVERS will be child's play."

Ichigo scoffed at the pathetic excuse, "Then what was with that 'I can't fight with you this time' crap?"

Uryu chose not to answer, instead focusing his attention on the half-destroyed residences across the street from his family's estate. How dense was Ichigo? It should have been obvious he meant directly fighting Ragyo Kiryuin was out of the question. Of course he was going to help rescue Orihime! His pride as a Quincy demanded it! How could he possibly stand on the sidelines while everyone else -

Ichigo, Ryuko, Satsuki and even Chad - risked everything to stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet?

An eyebrow quirking upon finally noticing the lack of strangeness in Ichigo's clothing, the normalcy throwing him off balance, Uryu decided to change the subject. Pointing at the blue hoodie, the white shirt and pants clashing heavily with the open-toed sandals, he scoffed under his breath, "Wearing normal clothes now, Ichigo? And here I thought Mugetsu was your only set of clothing."

"I don't wear Mugetsu all the damn time!"

Uryu took Ichigo's unconvincing denial in stride, "Oh? Then I suppose she was content with not being worn?"

Ichigo refused to take the obvious bait. After a long night fighting undead Quincy in literal rivers of burning blood... and an even longer flight back from London... Mugetsu needed to be washed.

Thoroughly. And that meant finding another set of clothing while he cleaned her Life Fibers. Which was a major pain in the ass since everything he brought to England was either buried beneath several tons of rubble or burnt to ashes. Heading home after saying goodbye to Satsuki - and refusing Mako's invitation for lunch - was meant to salvage something from his closet. A single change of clothing he could wear long enough to properly wash Mugetsu.

It had taken her three seconds after walking into his room to piece together what he was planning.

He only avoided the oncoming argument, Mugetsu's tear-filled eyes and annoyed growling foreshadowing her intense displeasure at his 'betrayal,' by promising to give her a thorough ironing. And wash her Life Fibers with her favorite brand of detergent. It didn't make any sense to him, but for some reason London didn't have the detergent Mugetsu claimed 'removed even the deepest dirt and oil from her lapels'. Something that had given his Kamui endless frustration and grief.

Yet by the time he knocked on Mako's front door, his current ensemble tucked under one hand, Mugetsu had already begun backpedaling. If Ryuko and Senketsu hadn't distracted her at the last second, allowing him to escape to freedom through the bathroom window, his clothes would be lying in shreds across Mako's living room.

"What the hell do you think?"

"There you are, Uryu."

Ryuken Ishida didn't express his disappointment at Uryu leaving the front doors open in the middle of November as he walked outside. Covered in bandages, the gauze visible beneath the half-buttoned dress shirt, an expensive imported overcoat hanging from his shoulders, he pushed aside the numb pain running rampant throughout his body. A noticeable limp in his stride despite Ransotengai overcoming the temporary disability, he gave his son a brief but courteous nod before turning to Ichigo, "Forgive me, I did not realize you were still speaking with my son."

The cigarette between his lips fell to the ground, smoke curling upwards before vanishing beneath his heel, "I understand if you do not wish to speak about London. However, there is something I must ask you, Ichigo."

Ichigo frowned as the wind picked up, "Alright."

"I'll speak quickly in the interest of time. This morning I received a message from Nudist Beach concerning their newest prisoner, a Quincy going by the moniker 'the Doktor,'" Ryuken noted his son's genuine surprise at the admission. Uryu might know most of the details surrounding the events of London - no doubt from Satsuki Kiryuin's newfound relationship with Nudist Beach - but he remained in the dark. At his insistence. It was a matter of necessity. Weighing his son's shoulders, burdened by guilt after Ragyo Kiryuin's kidnapping of Orihime Inoue, with the more disturbing details of the clash between the creature known as Alucard and the Jahrtausendarmee was antithetical to good parenting.

"And while I'm confident the esteemed Olivier Armstrong can extract information from the man, my question does not involve the Wandenreich's rank-and-file soldats."

With a subtle sense of urgency missed by Ichigo and his son, Ryuken glanced aside, eyes narrowed in thought, "Ichigo, the man you confronted after Alucard's disappearance... was he the Father of the Quincy or merely someone pretending to be Yhwach?"

"I don't know."

Ichigo glowered at the memory of that man... Yhwach or whatever his name was... proudly announcing the deaths of millions of innocent people, his shadowed form silhouetted against the burning ashes of London. Yet even after more than a day, his dreams returning to the single moment he confronted the man, the disturbing sense of nostalgia upon seeing the Quincy King hadn't wavered, "He claimed to be Millennium's leader but I never got his name."

"I see..."

The unfinished phrase carried more weight than Uryu could understand as Ryuken contemplated the troubling information, his thoughts cycling around his purpose for assaulting both London and Alucard. Ignoring his son's suspicious frown when he abruptly turned around, the empty sleeves of his overcoat fluttering in the unending autumn wind, Ryuken marched back towards his estate, but not looking over his shoulder at Ichigo, "When you see Isshin, tell him to finish the job he started seventeen years ago."

"Wait... are you talking about Ragyo Kiryuin?"

The self-professed 'Last Quincy' didn't acknowledge the question as he tossed a set of keys at his surprised son, "I've taken the liberty of restocking the storeroom in the basement. Be sure to lock the door when you're done."

Uryu caught the brass keys - embossed with the Quincy Zeichen - without taking his eyes off Ryuken. There was no mistaking his father's motivation for awarding him something so valuable, even if his behavior suggested otherwise. Watching his father leave without speaking another word, goosebumps racing down his bandaged arms from something unrelated to the autumn weather, he turned back to Ichigo, "I don't need to tell you to be careful at Honnouji Academy, Ichigo."

He briefly paused, eyes narrowed at the memory of the Kiryuin matriarch's overwhelming and disturbing presence, "Mugetsu might be enough to defeat the Grand Couturier. But Ragyo Kiryuin's strength is on an entirely different level. Don't let your guard down."

Ichigo nodded, his thoughts still on Ryuken's parting advice, "Thanks, I'll keep that in mind."

Seconds passed in awkward silence, broken only by the almost clockwork rotation of Nudist Beach aircraft entering or leaving Karakura Town, before Ichigo's eyes widened. His mouth pursing into a grimace, heart rate rapidly increasing, he cursed. Damn it! How could he forget something so important? Rushing through the wrought-iron gates, waving over his shoulder at a thoroughly bewildered Quincy, he nearly stumbled when Uryu's voice pierced the tension, "Give my regards to Mugetsu."

"Like hell I will!"

Ichigo's vehement dismissal could be heard halfway down the block, "She threatened to destroy everything in my closet... again... if I didn't find her favorite detergent. And I actually like this shirt, damn it!"

"I wish you the best of luck, Ichigo."

Sunlight reflected off his glasses while a cruel, but entirely well-meaning smirk pulled on the corners of his mouth. As the gates automatically closed, shutting with a metallic clang, he listened attentively to Ichigo's subsequent cursing, "Because if you're referring to the brand of detergent Satsuki uses on Junketsu, I'm afraid it's been out of stock for days."

---

...

---

Ryuko stared at the clock hanging above the television, the cartoon dog's tongue wagging back and forth every second. Slouching further down the couch, Senketsu's lower half hiking several inches up her thighs, she yawned loudly, rousing the exhausted Kamui from his light slumber. This was her first peace and quiet in days. There weren't any Quincy or shinigami to fight. And not having to deal with bullshit supernatural powers that made no damn sense was a huge relief.

While Ichigo was... somewhere... in Karakura Town she could relax for a few hours and hang out with Mako.

She growled self-consciously at the idiotic thought. How the hell could she relax at a time like this!? Anderson was dead - murdered by the bastard Alucard. Millions of innocent people were killed by the Quincy. People she had desperately tried saving from the vampirized bastards only to fail. And she still had tons of questions for Heinkel Wolfe. Like how she grew up in an orphanage despite not remembering anything. The bang of crimson hair fell gently across her forehead as she leaned back and grumbled. Damn it! Why was everything getting so complicated? Ignoring Senketsu when he yawned, her eye twitched at the annoying muttering from across the room.

" Ichigo... "

Empty white sleeves pressed against the room's single window as Mugetsu searched the empty streets for any sign of her wearer, multicolored eyes on the verge of tears. Briefly gasping when someone walked into her field of view, causing Ryuko to preemptively lean forward on the couch, the fanged maw in the center of her body closed upon realizing the three Nudist Beach soldiers weren't Ichigo. Mouth pursed into an irritated scowl, Senketsu mimicking her displeased, Ryuko scoffed under her breath. She was going to kick Ichigo's ass when he got back! After more than half an hour - including five minutes spent rampaging throughout Mako's house - Mugetsu finally settled down only to become even more annoying!

Her eye twitched twice when the Kamui called out for Ichigo... again .

"Hey mom, where do I put the octopus?"

Ryuko frowned, looking over her shoulder as an explosion followed by a cloud of flour billowed from the kitchen. As Senketsu shivered nervously at the white powder slowly creeping down the hallway, she could sense her best friend's widening smile when Sukuyo Mankanshoku cheerfully replied, "It goes with the other special ingredients in the oven, Mako."

There was a noticeable pause before a loud crash shook the house's foundation, "Alright! These super special mystery croquettes will give Ryuko and Ichigo lots of energy! Enough to defeat her mom and save the world!"

" Your blood pressure is rising, Ryuko."

She grumbled at Senketsu's criticism, collapsing against the couch with an annoyed scoff. Did he really need to state the obvious? Refusing to look her Kamui in the eye, his concerned expression causing her to feel terrible, Ryuko groaned before angrily resting her head on the couch's plastic armrest, "Of course I'm upset."

Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a sigh at the answer, "Moping won't change anything. We were in London dealing with the Quincy when Ragyo Kiryuin attacked. There was nothing we could have possible done to prevent her from kidnapping Orihime."

"Yeah, I know..."

Her leg bounced irritably against the floor, "But how did she know to attack Karakura Town at -"

" What are you idiots mumbling about!?"

Mugetsu's upper half folded as she turned away from the window, one empty sleeve pointing furiously towards the front door. Motioning at the latch just out of reach, taunting her with delusions of freedom, she seethed at Ryuko with bloodshot eyes, "Stop talking about useless things and unlock the door!"

"Give it a rest, will ya!"

" It's your fault Ichigo's not wearing me," Mugetsu ignored the teenager, her voice full of desperation, "I have to find him!"

Ryuko refused to back down, Senketsu bolstering her resolve as she met the enraged Kamui's accusatory glare without flinching, "Like hell you are! You're not getting out of here! So don't try escaping or I'm going to lock you in the dryer!"

Mugetsu growled at the subtle threat to her happiness and safety. Twisting away from Ryuko with a taunting huff, she pressed her sleeves back against the window and sighed. Nothing made sense. Why did Ichigo betray her for other clothing? She was his Kamui, tailor-made for his body. There was nothing more fitting for him to wear than herself. Even if she needed a good pressing, dirt and oil scrubbed from her Life Fibers, it was depressing to know Ichigo would abandon her for second-hand store rejects at the first opportunity. Another miserable groan rippled through her threading.

She could sense Ichigo somewhere in Karakura Town, a faint presence that only made her feel worse .

Her sleeves dragged against the window. Wasn't she good enough for Ichigo?

" You should relax, Ryuko. As your Kamui, it's my duty to make sure you're in the best of health," Senketsu couldn't hide the smugness in his voice as he gave the Kamui equivalent of a smirk. His eyes shifting away from Mugetsu when she rustled, bristling at the thinly veiled insult, he hesitated before adding, "I can tell you're worried about Orihime. Or rather, what Ragyo Kiryuin plans to do to her."

"It's just... I heard what she did to Ururu," Ryuko stared at the floor, fingers trembling from a mixture of worry and anger.

" Don't worry. I'm more than confident we'll save Orihime from whatever plan Ragyo Kiryuin has in store," Senketsu paused, his attention drawn towards Mugetsu when the other Kamui stopped mumbling for a moment, "However, you shouldn't allow yourself to feel guilty over things you couldn't control. It's also apparent from your dwindling energy and constant yawning that you're still exhausted from London. Pushing yourself after fighting that horrible shinigami and her Bankai won't help rescue Orihime."

Ryuko rolled her eyes at Senketsu's advice, "Yeah, I suppose you're right, Senketsu."

" I also recommend eating more of Mrs. Mankanshoku's home cooking. Her mystery croquettes are full of nutrients and energy. Just don't overindulge yourself like last time."

Senketsu ignored Ryuko's flinching at the honest criticism of her dietary habits, humming thoughtfully as she fell onto the floor with a loud thump . While she was rubbing the back of her head, grumbling at his blunt but necessary commentary, he continued, "This shouldn't be surprising, Ryuko. All that extra salt and fat makes your blood taste horrible."

"Hey!"

Ryuko furiously grabbed her Kamui's neckerchief, pulling on the fabric hard enough to get his undivided attention, "What the hell do you mean by that !? You didn't say anything when I tried that strange English food!"

Senketsu grumbled at the rough way Ryuko was manhandling his delicate threading, "I did argue against eating such rich foods, Ryuko. But you were determined to spend every last cent of Nudist Beach's money on something that didn't taste dry and awful."

Ryuko's eye twitched alongside the corner of her mouth. After everything that happened in London she had completely forgotten about that argument. And Mugetsu's insistence about visiting every possible landmark in the city. But like hell would she admit being wrong to Senketsu! Pulling slightly harder on his neckerchief, which only caused the Kamui to reiterate his point with an annoyed huff, she stopped when a thin form draped itself over the couch, one sleeve floating onto the floor.

" Ichigo..."

The floor creaked as Ryuko stood back up, pushing Mugetsu's depression to the back of her mind. Letting go of Senketsu, her Kamui reflexively shaking away the new wrinkles in his Life Fibers, she collapsed with an exhausted groan onto the chair next to the television. As she involuntarily listened to Mugetsu's muffled sighing, the incessant ticking from the clock caused her scowl to grow with every passing second. Damn it... she still couldn't believe Orihime was related to Ragyo Kiryuin! Sure, she sounded a lot like Nui Harime. But she knew a lot of people with similar voices!

Wait a second...

Her mind ground to a halt, leaving Senketsu unsupervised to watch his fellow Kamui's embarrassing behavior. If Orihime was related to her bitch of a mom, then that meant they were sisters. A shudder raced down her spine, momentarily catching Senketsu's attention. Damn it! Why the hell was her family so complicated? Everything had been bad enough when she learned her mom wasn't actually dead but an insane sociopath bent on feeding humanity to Life Fibers. Then came the disturbing realization being Ragyo Kiryuin's daughter meant that she was also related to the Grand Couturier and Ururu.

And now Orihime?

A groan unrelated to Mugetsu's worsening depression filled the Mankanshoku's living room.

"Ryuko?"

Mako leaned out of the kitchen, her face covered in flour and several vegetables lodged in her hair, "Mom wants to know what vegetables you want baked in her croquettes. Asparagus and broccoli, right?"

"What? No!"

A disgusted shudder coursed through her body at the thought of eating asparagus, "You know I hate those things, Mako!"

"Oh... right!"

Mako nodded impishly, seeming to remember the same exact discussion they had several times over the last few months, "Sorry about that, Ryuko. Mom brought back lots of food from Osaka so we're going to have a little bit of everything for lunch. There's this weird purple vegetable that smells just like -"

The merciful sound of the doorbell cut her off midsentence.

Mugetsu was the first to react, excitement buzzing through her Life Fibers as she leapt off the couch. Hopping towards the front door, multicolored eyes fixated on whoever waited on the other side of the wooden frame, she had just enough time to gasp before smashing into Ryuko, who somehow managed to teleport across the room. How did she get there? Rubbing her lapels as everything came back into focus, she growled at the obstacle standing in her path. Ryuko and Senketsu were taunting her! Daring her to try and escape! But she refused to allow anyone, especially an annoying Kamui, stop her from finding Ichigo.

Even if that risked getting sent to the laundry room!

"Can you get the door, Ryuko?"

Ryuko resisted the urge to groan at the question, grumbling under her breath at Mugetsu's happiness towards Mako, "Sure..."

With a resigned sigh she unlocked the upper latch on the door, Mugetsu's lapels twitching from excitement right before she kicked the Kamui halfway across the living room. Like hell she was letting Mugetsu outside! Not after all her annoying crap! As the front door opened with a soft creak, Senketsu muttering something about Mugetsu, Ryuko stared at the massive figure blocking the sun, her eyes slowly tracking downwards from the imposing figure. Standing patiently in Gamagori's shadow, a black overcoat covering the normal-looking sweater and jeans, was Satsuki.

Yet before she could say anything - such as wondering why Satsuki's frown was way softer than she remembered - Ryuko flinched at the soft rustling of clothes.

"I told you to stay inside!"

Ryuko caught the white and black uniform attempting to leap over her shoulder without turning around. Struggling desperately as she was yanked backwards, her Life Fibers stretching from the teenager's rough and malicious handling, Mugetsu deflated upon noticing Satsuki, "You're not Ichigo."

The Kamui waved a sleeve at the former Student Council President, her eyes swiveling towards Ryuko, "Ichigo is out there wearing other clothing. Ask her where I can find him."

" Ryuko, I recommend taking Mugetsu's woes with a grain of salt," Senketsu's eye narrowed at his fellow Kamui's irritating behavior, "Allowing Ichigo to wear other clothing was her fault in the first place. Such clingy behavior is highly embarrassing."

Mugetsu redoubled her efforts to escape Ryuko's insanely strong grip, intent on unraveling Senketsu one Life Fiber at a time, "I'll show you clingy!"

Ryuko mentally groaned when Senketsu decided to needlessly antagonize Mugetsu. Why the hell did they always seem to fight? The muscles in her arm quivering when Mugetsu tried grabbing Senketsu's lapels, intent on carrying out her promised threat, she stared at Gamagori, the corners of her mouth quirking at the slight discoloration on his cheeks, "Hey, what's wrong with you, Maxwell?"

"Do not call me that name, Matoi!"

Despite the anger in his voice, the way his shadowed eyes gleamed with a malevolent yellow light, Gamagori couldn't conceal the faint tinges of red on his cheeks. It appeared her time away from Honnouji Academy destroyed the minuscule respect Matoi developed towards authoritative figures. Straightening his posture, adding another foot to his height, he brushed aside the deliberately antagonizing comment from Lady Satsuki's sister, "If circumstances were different I would punish you for such flagrant rudeness! With or without Lady Satsuki's permission! HOWEVER, considering the importance of this visit I shall excuse your intolerant behavior! But just this ONCE!"

"... so why are you here?"

His left eye momentarily twitched at Matoi's suspicious undertone, a loss of control thankfully unobserved by Lady Satsuki, "Despite whatever half-formed thoughts are running through your mind, Matoi, I remain Lady Satsuki's invincible shield! Sworn to protect her life! Yet I am not without faults. I do make mistakes. Yesterdays demonstrated that my previous way of thinking was... inadequate. If not for my father's sound, if somewhat eccentric and unorthodox, advice, defeating Riruka Dokugamine on my own would have been impossible."

Ryuko exchanged looks with Mugetsu, the Kamui briefly stopping her struggling, before asking in a completely deadpan tone, "You're here to see Mako, right?"

"M-Matoi! What the hell are you -"

"I see your mood's improved, Ryuko."

Satsuki ignored Gamagori's flustered denial, obvious to anyone with eyes, while staring past Ryuko into the Mankanshoku's household, the emptiness pervading the living room all but confirming her suspicions, "I take it Ichigo isn't here?"

"Nah," Ryuko ignored Mugetsu's exaggerated sigh while motioning down the street, "And I don't know where he went."

The former heiress absorbed the mildly surprising news. Given recent events, Ichigo was probably speaking with the rest of his friends, assuaging his mind about their safety. After the harrowing battles in London, his blade clashing against both vampire and Quincy, she couldn't fault his concern. Yet judging from Mugetsu's continuing struggle to escape her sister's grip, a stark contrast to Iori's recordings of the Kamui's independent behavior back at Honnouji Academy, his departure from the Mankanshoku household was less than cordial.

Her breath visible as a faint mist in the sunlight, bangs of black hair waving gently in the late autumn wind, she sighed, "Very well..."

Gamagori will simply inform Ichigo of the situation when he returns."

"Situation?"

Ryuko tossed Mugetsu over her shoulder without a second thought, the Kamui desperately moving her sleeves before slamming into the far wall of the living room, "What happened?"

A flash of guilt marred Satsuki's stoic features, dragging buried memories to the surface of her mind, before vanishing behind an emotionless façade, "Kisuke Urahara has abandoned his research into allowing our Kamui to safely pass through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier."

The front door shook when Ryuko slammed her hand against the wooden frame, faint cracks spreading from the point of contact. After everything that happened in London - failing to rescue more than a handful of people from that bastard Alucard and the Quincy, Anderson's death and Iscariot - she wanted to hear some good news! Like finding out Ichigo's dad had a secret weapon perfect for kicking her mom's ass! Wasn't Hat-and-Clogs the smartest person on the planet? How the hell were they going to rescue Orihime if he couldn't find a way to get Senketsu Into Honnouji Academy?

"You've got to be kidding me!"

Satsuki remained silent while Ryuko vented her frustration, refusing to bolster her sister's confidence with false platitudes and reassurances. This wasn't the time nor the place for such words. Her eyes narrowed, mouth pursing into a familiar scowl. Ragyo Kiryuin's recent unexpected actions had caught most of them by surprise. But the specific behind her desire for kidnapping Orihime Inoue was not important, a footnote in the grand scheme of things. If her mother required Orihime for some purpose, whether as a hostage against Isshin Kurosaki or ensuring the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet's eventual success, their path forward was clear.

"It is true the barrier surrounding Honnouji Academy is impermeable to everything - including our Kamui - without Ragyo Kiryuin's permission."

Stepping forward, heels clacking as she approached Ryuko, her expression hardened measurably, "But your frustration is not misplaced. On the contrary, it is the appropriate response to such a major setback. Everything was predicated on Kisuke Urahara finishing his invention. Yet it would appear to the casual observer that yesterday's events all but prevent us from stopping Ragyo Kiryuin and rescuing Orihime Inoue."

"Which is why Lady Satsuki developed a Plan B assuming Kisuke Urahara could not deliver on his promise," Gamagori announced, his voice booming down the street.

"Plan B?"

"There exists a drawback to the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, a flaw our mother cannot eliminate," Satsuki ignored the slightly crimson sunlight filtering through the clouds before her brow creased in steadfast determination, "When Ragyo Kiryuin departed Honnouji Academy she was forced to adjust the IFF protocols. According to Isshin Kurosaki and Kisuke Urahara, such a significant change requires several days to fully reverse. And therein lies our opportunity! For our mother misstepped in her haste to achieve victory!"

A backdrop of blue-white flared into existence as Junketsu's heel clacked against the sidewalk, "Despite selling herself mind, body and soul to Life Fibers, someone else also encountered the Original Life Fiber! Someone whose body is woven from the same Life Fibers as Ragyo Kiryuin!"

Ryuko smirked, her mouth twisting into a predatory grin, "I think I get what you're saying..."

Satsuki felt a slight hint of disappointment at her sister's overconfidence. Things involving their mother were never simple. Isshin Kurosaki might temporarily possess the unique ability to penetrate the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier yet Ragyo Kiryuin was undoubtedly aware of the weakness in the otherwise impenetrable design. They could not solely rely upon his strength - magnitudes greater than Junketsu's normal power - to defeat their mother. Such shortsighted plans were foolish after she effortlessly eliminated him by exploiting his childish naivety surrounding Rei Hououmaru's true allegiance.

She would not make that same mistake.

"Do not underestimate our mother, Ryuko."

Ryuko rolled her eyes at Satsuki's warning, earning a stern glare in return that she promptly ignored. What was the point of telling her something so obvious? She already knew Ragyo Kiryuin was insanely strong. Their bitch of a mom managed to kick everyone's asses without breaking a sweat. Even that smug bastard Ichigo told her about - Sosuke Aizen - couldn't even slow her down. Folding her arms across Senketsu when Gamagori's eyebrow started twitching, she tossed her head back and groaned, "... alright, fine! But there's something else that's been bugging me!"

Jabbing a thumb against Senketsu, she cocked her head sideways, "Junketsu's new form, the one you used to kick mom's ass, how do I unlock it for Senketsu?"

"You're referring to Junketsu Shinzui?"

Senketsu's eye widened as Mugetsu leaned around Ryuko,
"Shinzui?"

The former Student Council President didn't miss the sudden change in Mugetsu's behavior. She might remain unable to hear Kamui, only faint impressions of Junketsu's voice echoing in the recesses of her mind, yet their silent conversation was akin to an open book. They were curious about Junketsu's ascended configuration. An eagerness for answers whose blame was her own fault. Junketsu Shinzui accomplished the impossible feat of unnerving their mother, the Kamui's transformation stoking apprehension in Ragyo Kiryuin's heart, "If it were possible I would demonstrate not only to Senketsu and Mugetsu - but also Danketsu - how to acquire their most powerful configuration."

Goosebumps raced down her arms when the wind briefly picked up, "However, replicating the transformation is current impossible. Ascending Junketsu to Shinzui required absorbing tens of thousands of our mother's COVERS, far more than the amount of Life Fibers remaining in Karakura Town. Even if you or Ichigo used every last Life Fiber available, neither of you will possess the necessary power to reach the same level as Junketsu."

"Damn it!"

Ryuko cursed at the explanation, slamming her fist once more against the door, "Mako told me how you kicked mom's ass! I thought if Senketsu gained that same power we could -"

"Why hello there, Satsuki!"

Sukuyo Mankanshoku was unconcerned about the tense conversation she interrupted involving Ragyo Kiryuin as she appeared behind Mugetsu, the Kamui instinctively hopping back when a glob of thick batter nearly landed on her sleeve. Resting a hand against her cheek, splotches of miscellaneous food covering the white cat-themed apron, she smiled pleasantly at Satsuki and Gamagori, "Ryuko didn't mention she invited friends for lunch."

"I'm afraid we're here on official business, Mrs. Mankanshoku," Gamagori apologized while clearing his throat.

"Don't be ridiculous! Mako will be delighted to know you stopped by for lunch," Sukuyo brushed aside the teenager's excuse with a wave of her hand, sending small clumps of batter flying towards an increasingly terrified Mugetsu.

The former Chair of the Disciplinary Committee ignored the growing tightness of his collar. This was his punishment for absentmindedness! Given the developing situation involving Ragyo Kiryuin, he'd forgotten about his scheduled... date... with Mankanshoku. It was an unacceptable lapse in memory! His eye twitching at Matoi's smugness, the expression pushing the limits of his dwindling patience, he pulled on the cotton fabric constricting his airflow, "I'm sorry but Lady Satsuki doesn't have time to indulge in such -"

"Lunch sounds fine."

Satsuki returned Sukuyo's smile with a polite yet respecting nod, her heels clacking lightly as she walked around Ryuko into the Mankanshoku's household. Shivering under the sudden change in temperature as Gamagori closed the front door, stern eyes watching Mugetsu when the Kamui tried hopping to freedom, the corners of her mouth twisted downwards, shifting into a frown. As the woman returned to the kitchen she stepped aside, a reaction mimicked by Ryuko when Mako launched herself at Gamagori.

"W-Wait! Mankanshoku!"

Momentarily watching Gamagori chastise Mako Mankanshoku for staining his freshly-pressed shirt with batter, the absent-minded teenager apologizing profusely, she turned towards the window, frowning as the sun vanished behind passing clouds.

Her goal was within reach, giving purpose to everything sacrificed over the last thirteen years. Ragyo Kiryuin would suffer retribution for her crimes, paying for every life taken before their time. Yet she remained apprehensive and on guard, dark thoughts swirling around the battles still to come. She had no delusions - despite their comforting nature - that everyone would return from Honnouji Academy. Kugo Ginjo's death at the hands of the Grand Couturier drove that concept into her soul.

"Mako! Go wash your hands!"

She surfaced from her turbulent thoughts when Ryuko backpedaled from Mako, Senketsu's eye quivering at the batter dripping from the teenager's hands. One eyebrow quirking when Mugetsu hopped over to the window, sparing her an annoyed huff while maneuvering around the food splattered across the floor, she allowed her expression to soften, mild frustration vanishing as she cleared her mind of such dark notions. Smirking faintly when Ryuko grabbed the back of Mankanshoku's collar, dragging her towards the bathroom down the hall, she halted Gamagori's attempt to leave with a stern scowl.

"Gamagori, inform Iori we won't be joining him for lunch."

As he proceeded to flawlessly carry out her orders, fishing a small cell phone from his pocket, Satsuki hung her coat over the couch and sighed. From the aroma filling every room with its pungent yet familiar odor, it seemed octopus was the main ingredient for today's batch of mystery croquettes.

---

...

---

Nui shivered as she stepped outside, the winter chill easily passing through her thin jacket. That was odd... she couldn't remember the last time she felt cold. Something that debilitating to normal humans just didn't affect people like her and Lady Ragyo. Even when hunting stupid nudists and traitors to Revocs she never wore anything besides her cute dress, which she stitched herself! But still... this was it, wasn't it? Karakura Town. She found it difficult to believe it's been almost a month since falling unconscious. It was strange. Glancing back and forth down the street, her eyes widened at the strange stillness in the air.

She couldn't sense any spirits. Not a single one.

Her heart plummeted in mild panic. This was impossible. It shouldn't be happening! After she fought that dark skinned shinigami who refused to die, tracking down other people without using her vision felt completely natural. Like plucking the Banshi from Satsuki's badly-sown Goku Uniforms. Even Lady Ragyo figured out the secret after meeting that old goat during Parent Student Day. Yet she couldn't sense anything, not a single soul. Nui sighed gently when a strange girl appeared in the corner of her eye, the ugly black robes and weird sandals crimes against fashion.

*Even *****'s presence was starting to fade. It was true. Her spiritual powers were vanishing.*

*She ignored the faint buzzing piercing through her mind, the static rendering the name undecipherable. Noticing Orihime standing behind ***** alongside some familiar humans, the one with glasses reminding her of the thief who stole several spools of Life Fibers from Revocs, Nui couldn't understand what was happening. None of this made sense. She hardly knew any of them, especially the humans. So why did Orihime look so upset?*

*Unaware of the Grand Couturier's growing confusion, the strange yet familiar girl smiled sadly, "This is goodbye, *****."*

Nui returned the shinigami's gentle smile without knowing why, failing to conceal the sadness in her voice, "It looks that way."

" Hey, there's no use looking so sad, ok?"

\**** chuckled, a strangely annoying grin stretching across her face as she leaned closer. Slapping her playfully on the stomach, smirking smugly the entire time, ***** basked in the Grand Couturier's frustration, "Even if you won't be able to see ME anymore, I'll still be keeping a close eye on you."*

" Now that's just GREAT!"

*Nui leaned away from *****, rolling her eyes at the shinigami's annoying ability to get on her nerves. How could ***** possibly think joking was a good idea? She didn't know whether to be insulted or relieved! Rubbing a hand through her short hair, which was strange considering she usually had carefully maintained and cute pigtails, Nui narrowed her eyes before angrily countering, "You spying on me! And just so you know, I'm NOT sad, ok?"*

*She gasped in surprise when ***** started vanishing, the hems of her black robes slowly flickering out of existence one strand at a time. Refusing to meet *****'s eyes when the weight of the situation grew too much to bear, Nui cycled through several half-hearted excuses and phrases before settling on something meaningful, "*****, say bye to everyone for me."*

\**** hesitated, equally unsure how to respond, "... sure."*

*Nui found herself conflicted by the somber admission. How did she get all the way to Karakura Town from Honnouji Academy? There was no way Lady Ragyo would let her leave the school. The last thing she remembered was working on Shinra Koketsu, using her world-famous abilities as the Grand Couturier of Revocs to their fullest. Getting everything prepared for Lady Ragyo's big reveal. Yet she couldn't ignore the sadness in her heart. No matter what, THAT was real. She had willingly used the Final Getsuga Tenshou... Mugetsu... against *****, knowing the price of using something so dangerous.*

*But she wasn't, or rather couldn't be, upset about losing her shinigami powers. If becoming a normal human meant protecting her friends and family - and the rest of the world - from *****, then she would gladly make the same sacrifice a second time.*

*Ignoring the pressing silence as the final traces of her spiritual powers disappeared, ***** fading until nothing remained except a whispered farewell on the wind, Nui stared longingly into the afternoon skies.*

" Goodbye... Rukia."

Nui Harime blinked as she regained consciousness, the strange dream already nothing more than faint impression and blotchy shadows.

Picking her head off the table, irregularly-shaped patches of fabric clinging to her skin, the eerie light pervading the Sewing Club painted her favorite dress crimson as a brief flicker of pain coursed through her head. What happened? Dulled eyes staring blankly at the darkened walls, the slightly swaying industrial lights failing to illuminate the entire room, she wracked her mind for answers. The last thing she remembered was sewing some final adjustments on Shinra Koketsu after Lady Ragyo asked about her progress and then... nothing. Plucking a Life Fiber from her hair, the disheveled blonde curls laying against the small of her back, Nui's heart plummeted when she realized what happened.

Lady Ragyo would be furieux if she found out she slept on the job!

"I have to finish..."

She stumbled to her feet, stepping over the emaciated corpses of the Sewing Club. The Mentally Refitted members of Satsuki's little club were scattered like discarded pieces of fabric across the ground their bodies drained completely of blood. It was all Satsuki's fault! Her pathetic defiance at Karakura Town somehow disrupted Lady Ragyo's concentration, causing the Life Fibers to briefly rampage out of control. And without the stupid humans sewing patches of Life Fiber clothing until they dropped dead or were devoured by COVERS, weaving the final touches on Shinra Koketsu was taking longer than expected.

The Scissor Blade stabbed into the floor near the table, its coloration once more purple, garnered none of her dwindling focus.

With a flicker of her wrist she grabbed the specialized sewing needle dangling from Shinra Koketsu's expansive sleeve. As her trembling fingers clasped the metal object, sapphire eyes staring at the unmoving garment looming overhead in the darkness, Nui clenched her sharpened teeth at the intense migraine suddenly tearing through her mind. No! She couldn't forget the proper stitching to finish Shinra Koketsu! Not at a time like this! Grasping her forehead, eyes clenched shut from the blinding agony, she tensed when Shinra Koketsu's dress patterns came back into focus.

It was getting harder to remember. But she had no choice . She needed to finish Shinra Koketsu. And Amu... her sister was never coming back.

She was completely alone.

"He's going to pay. I'll make sure of that."

The sewing needle quivered against Shinra Koketsu's hem. That détestable shinigami needed to suffer for tricking Amu! To scream until he drowned on his own blood! But that wasn't going to happen. Not now... not ever. Nui flinched, a sob wracking her body at her failure to murder Kisuke Urahara, before her anger suddenly abated, replaced by an emotionless void bereft of anything resembling happiness. For some reason Orihime was upset with Lady Ragyo, which made her life more difficult. Because knowing her sister was depressed, even if it was over something as illogical as thinking she belonged with the naked pages, slightly affected her ability to finish Shinra Koketsu within Lady Ragyo's expected deadline.

But she couldn't stay mad at Orihime. After all, she was family. And finding out her long-long sister was one of Ichigo's best friends made everything special. Because family coming together... getting along despite good and bad... was how the world worked.

So why did Lady Ragyo abandon Amu?

Her fingers twitched, teeth clenching tightly as unwanted emotions tore through her mind. Why did they leave Amu behind? Rescuing her from that stupid shopkeeper would have been easy! His ugly Bankai was powerful but it was nothing compared to the Original Life Fiber! And the old goat was still weakened from the Bleach Bomb, his Life Fiber strong but unable to resist Lady Ragyo. It should have been impossible for anyone - not those pathetic shinigami or Junketsu's amazing fashion week apparel - to stop them! So why didn't Lady Ragyo even try saving Amu?

Why did she abandon her sister without a second thought?

"No... I can't think about Amu. Not now..."

Emotion bled from her façade, leaving sapphire eyes dulled and listless, as she placed the final touches onto Shinra Koketsu, the impulse whispering deep within her soul forcing her to continue despite the worsening migraine. Nothing in the world mattered other than finishing the ultimate Kamui. Not Amu... Ichigo... or even herself. Instinct guided her fingers as she tailored the Life Fibers. She was almost done, blood dripping from her trembling fingers onto Shinra Koketsu's billowing folds. Her pièce de résistance would be the last garment made on this miserable planet. Once Lady Ragyo allowed herself to be worn, willingly surrendering her body and soul to Shinra Koketsu, those stupid humans and shinigami were as good as dead.

The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet would make everything perfect .

"E-Everyone's going to be together," Nui's stammering voice carried ominously across the room, emotionless eyes never straying from her work, "We'll be a family again. And Lady Ragyo says you always look out for family..."

---

...

---

The wind whipped Olivier Mira Armstrong's shoulder-length hair as she leapt from the helicopter, ignoring the half-hearted protest from the pilot.

With the pain from her gouged left eye barely eliciting a grunt she kicked off the side of the aircraft, her scowling visage silhouetted against the full moon. Boots stomping against the dirt upon landing in a crouch, she scoffed in disapproval at the disorganized individuals standing across the burnt landscape of Tsubakidai Park. Life Fiber Hybrids, shinigami, vampires, Quincy and humans. Almost every type of spiritual being was present. But only one person earned her contempt. After years of putting up with Anderson's zealousness, Alex's standard foolishness and Aikuro's exhibitionist tendencies, only Kisuke Urahara managed to consistently test her patience.

Scowling at the shopkeeper, his atrocious bucket hat standing out like a beacon in the darkness, Olivier huffed before reaching for the rapier strapped to her belt, gripping the sweeping hilt when an annoying presence attempting to gain her attention.

"I could have handled this."

"What are you implying?"

"We suffered tremendous losses against Revocs. Hundreds of our men fell in the line of duty, countless civilians slaughtered by Esdeath Partas and Ragyo Kiryuin is preparing to enact the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet as we speak," Armstrong's boisterous personality was subdued, causing Olivier to retort with a haughty scoff, "Your presence at headquarters would boost morale, something sorely needed after Xcution's rampage."

"Don't patronize me, Alex."

The jagged scar tracing down the left side of her face, partially hidden beneath an eyepatch, itched at her brother's misplaced concern. Did he think losing an eye against Esdeath Partas prevented her from leading Nudist Beach, instilling respect and admiration into the men fighting Life Fibers? Spending time alongside her nephew undoubtedly softened his mind, "You must have suffered more than bruises to believe something so insane.

That I'm on the front lines after dealing with that arrogant woman is adequate enough to boost morale."

Her gaze hardened, annoyance transforming into contempt, "And you have the gall to presume I would leave headquarters without preserving the chain of command?"

Armstrong ignored Olivier's malevolent scowl, years of experience allowing him to bear the brunt of his sister's fury without consequence. Yet he couldn't hide the confusion stemming from her response. If she came all the way to Karakura Town to give the operation's briefing - likely in direct defiance of well-qualified medics - she left someone else in charge, most likely one of his fellow commanders. And there was only one man who immediately came to mind, "Surely you didn't leave..."

"Don't be dense," Olivier snapped, ending his idiotic inquiry with another glare, "I left Batou in command."

Despite his tactical brilliance and mechanical expertise, there was a greater chance she would surrender to Ragyo Kiryuin than ever allow Aikuro Mikisugi the privilege of temporarily over command of their Osaka headquarters. And the man knew it. Without her constant supervision and Tsumugu's disrespectfully lax behavior, there was a greater than average chance the man was prancing through the hallways of their underground base in a speedo... or worse. Pushing the disturbing mental image to the deepest, darkest corner of her mind, noting to reprimand Tsumugu upon returning to Osaka, Olivier clicked her teeth in frustration.

She should have ordered Batou to lock the man in the mess hall freezer if he so much as unbuttoned his pants.

"Hmm... understandable."

Olivier scoffed at her brother's acquiescence, annoyed by his lack of conviction. But critiquing Alex's lack of a spine - and determining the proper punishment for Aikuro - could wait until Ragyo Kiryuin was nothing more than a pile of dying Life Fibers. With the sharp crunching of burnt grass beneath her boots she marched forth, expression twisted into an irritated scowl at the overwhelming devastation. To think Bleach Bombs - something Professor Matoi proved incapable of safely developing despite years of expertise - were powerful enough to heavily weaken someone equal to Ragyo Kiryuin.

Knowing that Isshin Kurosaki purposely kept the knowledge of producing Bleach Bombs secret, refusing to divulge anything despite her organization suffering thousands of casualties over the years, made her want to beat the annoying man half to death.

Life Fibers and Ragyo Kiryuin be damned.

"Enough chattering!"

Her voice immediately ended every conversation, including the hushed discussion between Satsuki Kiryuin and her Elite Four. Shoulder-length blonde hair rustling as she stared at the former Kiryuin heiress, the teenager's conviction and sense of self-sacrifice earning more than a modicum of respect, Olivier stomped her foot against the ground, "Pay attention because I will not repeat myself! This operation will be two-fold! We will be striking multiple targets simultaneously! While the majority of you will be heading to Honnouji Academy, a small contingent will pursue the Original Life Fiber beneath the Kiryuin Manor!"

"Well, I think that's my cue..."

Kisuke Urahara ignored the scathing glare from the illustrious General Armstrong, her well-placed irritation sending cold chills down his spine. The woman was indeed terrifying. But she wasn't quite on the same level as the Fourth Division's captain, "I can tell some of you are wondering why we're suddenly prioritizing the Original Life Fiber. You might think that it's nothing more than an animal, capable of instinctively responding to threats yet incapable of independent action. Well... that's incorrect."

The bandages covering his fingers stung, digging into the recently closed self-inflicted surgical sutures as he clasped Benihime's curved handle, "The Original Life Fiber is intelligent to an extent. Under normal circumstances dealing with something powerful - but possessing limited intelligence - would be straightforward, perhaps even simple. But I can say without any doubt that stopping the Original Life Fiber is of equal importance to defeating Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Hold on a second!"

Ryuko frowned as she tried following the shopkeeper's train of thought, "I know the thing's dangerous, but why the hell didn't it do anything before now?"

"Because it was hibernating."

Kisuke observed and mentally noted Ryuko's subdued reaction, her expression failing to conceal the genuine surprise she felt, before continuing, "You already know how the Original Life Fiber arrived on the planet. However, traveling through deep space and forcibly accelerating humanity's natural evolution required most of its spiritual energy. It needed to regain its strength. But devouring a single human, even from a family possessing large spiritual reserves, every few decades wasn't sufficient. Something else must have sustained its existence."

The former Student Council President listened intently to Kisuke Urahara's explanation, her mouth pursing into a scowl, "Otherwise, the Original Life Fiber would have died millennia before being discovered by Ragyo Kiryuin's ancestors."

"Life Fibers absorb spiritual energy..."

Uryu's thoughts came to a screeching halt at the realization, "The Original Life Fiber must have done the same thing. But on a greater scale."

"Honshu is pockmarked by hundreds of square kilometers where the atmospheric spiritual density is minimal. It's a phenomenon that doesn't exist anywhere else on the planet," Kisuke lowered his head, the shadows from the resewn bucket hat shading his face from the moonlight, "If the Original Life Fiber has been absorbing spiritual energy over a period of thousands of years, it would have long-term effects on the environment. But a history lesson isn't important at the moment. Because if Aizen's information is correct..."

He raised his head, staring into Olivier Mira Armstrong's sole remaining eye, "... the Original Life Fiber is on the cusp of awakening."

Satsuki frowned at the information, brow creasing while apprehension rippled down her tensed limbs. Her mother had often spoken about the Original Life Fiber, her exaggerated fables influenced by the eldritch creature underneath their manor. But the true extent of their hold over humanity, the information Ragyo Kiryuin refused to divulge even while playing naïve to her rebellion, twisted her expression into a pensive scowl, "And there's no telling what it might do... can do... if my mother adorns herself with Shinra Koketsu. Is that correct, Kisuke Urahara?"

"Exactly."

A paper fan emerged from Kisuke's tattered sleeve, hiding the smile stretching across his face, "But thankfully I worked the bugs and kinks out of Kōgō Nuno Shīru. However, there is some bad news. Your mother probably reweave the Life Fiber wards protecting the Original Life Fiber after my unannounced visit, making it impossible for me to give sealing that thing a second try. Fortunately, there is someone nearly as smart and handsome as myself who could -"

" NOW is not the time, Kisuke!"

Yoruichi didn't hold back when she jabbed her elbow into the former captain's solar plexus. As Kisuke collapsed to the ground with a pitiful groan, one hand clutching his bruised ego and stomach, she immediately turned towards Sosuke Aizen. The sleeve of her skin-tight sweater tied below her left shoulder, dangling in the space formerly occupied by her arm, she scoffed at his annoying smile, "You already know Kisuke's sealing Kido, don't you?"

"Of course."

There was no uncertainty in the treacherous shinigami's voice, "I already memorized Kisuke Urahara's notes on Kōgō Nuno Shīru. It was quite straightforward despite the complexity of the incantation. I even took the liberty of correcting a few minor mistakes in the spiritual energy fluctuations."

"And after I went through the trouble of writing down detailed, step-by-step instructions."

Kisuke sighed at the lack of respect, brushing dirt off his shoulders as he stood back up. Even with the possibility of the World of the Living - and all spiritual dimensions connected to it - falling to Life Fibers, Aizen still felt it necessary to belittle his achievements, "Well then, I suppose I'll leave the task of sealing the Original Life Fiber to you, Sosuke. But are you certain you can pull it off?"

"A ridiculous question."

Aizen chuckled at the redundancy of Kisuke Urahara's inquiry, "Pull it off? That implies I'm leaving anything to chance. As you said, Ragyo Kiryuin altered the wards protecting the Original Life Fiber, making it impossible for anyone to approach the Kiryuin Manor. However, nothing is truly impenetrable. Even the most well-designed techniques have flaws that can be manipulated. In fact, a few unique beings could, in theory, shatter the Life Fiber wards through careful application of physical strength."

He watched the ephemeral darkness emanating from Seras Victoria's left shoulder with mounting fascination, the crimson shadows visible against the full moon. It appeared quite a lot of interesting events occurred during his brief imprisonment. He knew, of course, about the creature known as Alucard. A monstrous being working for the Hellsing Organization that even he dared not provoke. But he never imagined, even during his most thoughtful moments, the vampire would choose another protégé, "But penetrating the wards without attracting unwanted attention will require finesse."

"Finesse?"

Kinue Kinagase regarded the shinigami with suspicion. Even if Sosuke Aizen's goal was destroying the Original Life Fibers, sacrificing thousands of souls during his tenure as captain of the Soul Society's Fifth Division was disgusting. The man was a monstrous bastard, an opinion she fully shared with Danketsu and Tsumugu, "You fought Ragyo Kiryuin almost to a standstill. Even if you lost, that's still an achievement, something Satsuki Kiryuin only managed after Junketsu transformed into her most powerful configuration. At this point, I don't think Danketsu could scratch Ragyo Kiryuin."

" WHAT!?"

The muscles in her back twitched when Danketsu took offense towards her praise of Junketsu, the other Kamui preening at the compliment. Meeting her own Kamui's infuriated glare with cold dispassion, resisting the agitated emotions radiating across their synchronized connection, she added after a moment's deliberation, "I read Kisuke Urahara's report. Anyone can cast the technique providing they have enough spiritual energy. The Original Life Fiber might be dangerous but stopping Ragyo Kiryuin is more important. If she manages to wear Shinra Koketsu it won't matter if that creature is sealed."

A hint of annoyance, ephemeral in nature, crept into her voice, "So why aren't you going to Honnouji Academy?"

Aizen smirked as he gripped the collar of his jacket, tailor-made by Satsuki Kiryuin's assistant and modeled after the standard Arrancar attire, and pulled downwards, "Because Ragyo Kiryuin can neutralize the Hogen's power."

" No wonder I hated this man!"

Danketsu seethed at the Hogen embedded in the shinigami's chest, her multicolored eyes widening in absolute hatred . She could feel the sphere mocking her! Taunting her! Giving the Kamui equivalent of a snarl at the man's arrogance and sense of superiority, she bristled at Kinue's unbothered expression, "I know you can feel that thing! If you hadn't promised to tear out Ragyo Kiryuin's heart with MY power I would force you to slaughter this man! It's absolutely disgusting! My Life Fibers are wrinkling just LOOKING at that thing in his chest!"

"Calm down, Danketsu," Kinue chastised, pushing aside her Kamui's raging emotions with practiced ease.

" There's something strange about that thing, Ryuko," Senketsu shuddered around her body at the multicolored light shimmering across the Hogen's surface, "I don't like saying it but Danketsu has a point. I can feel this... Hogen... in my threading. It's a really weird sensation."

"Yeah, I feel it too, Senketsu."

Ryuko scowled when the Hogen's coloration shifted, momentarily changing into a deep crimson before returning to normal. So, this was the thing that helped Junketsu gain enough power to kick her bitch of a mom's ass. And for some reason it was really pissing her off! But at least she wasn't the only person disturbed by the Hogen. Ichigo and Mugetsu seemed confused by the stupid sphere but Danketsu was downright thinking about murdering the smug bastard.

"So that's the Hogen, huh?"

She reached for the miniaturized Scissor Blade resting comfortably within Senketsu's pouch, "You mind explaining why it's making me want to beat you senseless?"

" I see I'm not the only one wishing to slaughter this man,"

Danketsu glared at Ryuko, some of her anger twisting into sadistic amusement, "What are you waiting for? Use the Scissor Blade to cut him in half! Tear the Hogyoku from his chest!"

"I freaking hate agreeing with Danketsu," Ryuko spat on the ground, "So start talking!"

Aizen paid little attention to Ryuko Matoi's potent threat, choosing instead to listen to the inaudible conversation she was having with Senketsu and Danketsu. The concept of sentient clothing woven from Life Fibers was fascinating. That Kisuke Urahara created a Kamui, something he hadn't known existed until a few hours prior to his interference in Ragyo Kiryuin's plans, piqued his interest, specifically the involvement of his Bankai's unique abilities in the weaving process.

"Your desire for physical violence, Ryuko Matoi, comes from subconscious synchronization between your Life Fibers and the Hogyoku," Aizen smirked as he explained everything to the quick-tempered teenager. It was refreshing to speak so candidly after decades of plotting against the Soul Society, "Since it was created from the Original Life Fiber, the Hogyoku instinctively seeks to synchronize with nearby Kamui and Life Fiber Hybrids, an interesting fact I learned while fighting Ragyo Kiryuin."

Ryuko's eyes widened at the revelation yet it was Satsuki's voice that rang sharply through the night, " When did you break into my family's manor?"

"Roughly one hundred and fifty years ago. The acquisition was timed with the brief lull in the Original Life Fiber's hibernation cycle. Or to be more specific, the ritual sacrifice of the Kiryuin matriarch," Aizen closed his jacket as Satsuki Kiryuin inhaled deeply, taken off guard by the information regarding her family's disturbing history, "But that's beside the point."

He turned towards Kinue Kinagase as the last of the Hōgyoku's presence vanished, "Expanding upon my earlier answer, merging with the Hōgyoku has some benefits. But its intrinsic connection with the Original Life Fiber supersedes all other advantages. By taking care not to draw Ragyo Kiryuin's attention, this association should allow me limited manipulation of her wards, disrupting them long enough to reach the Forbidden Room beneath the Kiryuin Manor."

It was a high-risk gamble dependent upon a perfect sequence of events. When accounting for the innate ability of her Life Fibers to evolve in response to threats, which already rendered Kyōka Suigetsu's perfect hypnosis ineffective, Ragyo Kiryuin was one of the most formidable beings on the planet. A lesser individual would view the situation as hopeless, devoid of any chance of victory. Yet in her haste to acquire Orihime Inoue, sacrificing most of her COVERS and pawns in the process, the Kiryuin matriarch made several mistakes.

Such as assuming her final attack killed him. Or at the very least incapacitated him long enough for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to proceed without interference.

By immediately retreating to Honnouji Academy with her hard-fought prize - the third of her daughters born from the Original Life Fiber - Ragyo Kiryuin ignored any possibility that her eldritch master was endangered. And why would she indulge herself with such a ludicrous notion? The creature was in the final stages of awakening thanks to her actions in Karakura Town and Kisuke Urahara's failure during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. And having already rewoven the wards, stitching them from scratch to prevent the latter from correcting his mistake, she reasonably presumed the Original Life Fiber was protected.

Only a fool wouldn't take advantage of such an opportunity.

"But contrary to your expectations, I'm not capable of single-handedly accomplishing this task."

He motioned towards Seras Victoria, aware of Ichigo Kurosaki's mounting suspicions in regards to his genial behavior, "When Ryuko confronted the vampire Alucard her Life Fibers proved incapable of adapting defenses towards his natural abilities. Unlike Ragyo Kiryuin, who grew increasingly resistant to Kyōka Suigetsu, that never happened against Alucard. It is safe to presume this advantage extends to everything based upon Life Fibers - including the wards surrounding the Kiryuin Manor. As Alucard's newest protégé, Seras Victoria will significantly lessen the difficulty of sealing the Original Life Fiber."

"Hold on," Seras frowned, her blood-red eyes expressing confusion, "Master had someone before me?"

"Aside from minor embellishments, Alucard's exploits are well-documented."

The realization dawning in the vampire's crimson eyes was intriguing yet meaningless at the moment. Focusing on Kinue Kinagase when the blue and purple Kamui accentuating every curve of her body expressed its hatred by narrowing its eyes, he continued in the same friendly tone, "As for Kinue Kinagase... her nature poses an interesting conundrum. A Life Fiber Hybrid stitched into a Kamui? Bound together for the rest of their lives? Their presence will undoubtedly garner the Original Life Fiber's curiosity, minimizing its attempts at countering our efforts."

Kinue glared at the shinigami, taken aback by his blunt admission, "So you want me to be a decoy."

"If you wish to believe that, then by all means do so," Aizen responded, unconcerned by the woman's increasingly turbulent emotional state despite her impressive attempts at burying it underneath a veneer of stoicism, "I am the one person aside from Kisuke Urahara capable of casting Kōgō Nuno Shīru. And given the urgency of stopping Ragyo Kiryuin, you don't have any choice other than trusting me."

" This smug bastard," Danketsu growled at the shinigami, provoked by his notion of superiority over herself, "I take it back! I don't care about Ragyo Kiryuin any longer! Kill this arrogant man!"

Several feet away, mutters of annoyance rippling through her Life Fibers at Danketsu's vulgarity, Mugetsu tried to ignore the string of violent threats. While the other Kamui was mildly less insane than she remembered, she still found it hard to imagine they were both woven from Life Fibers, "It appears Danketsu hasn't changed. She's still the same obnoxious and vulgar piece of clothing that gives Kamui a bad name."

"Uh..."

Seras Victoria was confused, something that hadn't changed since leaving London with Sir Integra's blessing. Everything was so... different... in Japan. The whole concept of shinigami and the Soul Society was mindboggling. Dead spirits capable of giving Master trouble? Spiritual energy? In hindsight, she missed dealing with ghouls alongside Master while worried about Heinkel Wolfe firing another salvo of blessed silver bullets into her body. Dealing with those things was simple compared to saving the world from alien clothing.

Crimson eyes widening when Danketsu threatened Sosuke Aizen once again, earning an annoyed look from Kinue, she glanced at Ryuko, hesitation in her voice, "Is her Kamui always this... rude?"

"Yeah," Ryuko deadpanned, a reaction shared by Senketsu, "You get used to it."

"What the hell is he doing!?"

Olivier Armstrong's voice cut through the tension like a knife, interrupting Kinue's attempt at placating Danketsu. Overlooking Sosuke Aizen's amused reaction when one of the nudists standing at attention pressed a finger against his ear, leaning into the radio before shaking his head several seconds later, she scowled, sweeping her gaze across the darkened landscape before settling upon Ichigo, "Where is Isshin?"

"I don't know," Ichigo blustered, slightly unnerved by the malevolent yellow light in the woman's remaining eye, "I haven't seen the bastard all day."

"I spoke with Isshin early this afternoon," Armstrong barely grimaced when Olivier transixed the intensity of her frustration upon his broad shoulders, "He seemed distracted, his mind focused on other matters. I tried pressing for information but he remained steadfast as usual, claiming only that he needed to finish something important before leaving."

Olivier stopped listening to her brother halfway through his third sentence, cutting him off with an annoyed scoff. Their operation depended on Isshin keeping Ragyo Kiryuin occupied without falling for any asinine tricks. And the man selfishly refuses to arrive on time? After she ordered Alex to pass along her message? Sneering at the former captain's dereliction of duty, she decided to continue without his participation, "Kiryuin!"

"My mother might be arrogant but she is no fool."

There was the familiar sound of heels clacking against hardened dirt, sinking lightly in the packed earth, as Satsuki stepped forth, "Yesterday's events demonstrate that she will not fight Isshin Kurosaki without provocation. If he were to appear at Honnouji Academy, she would assume his actions were a diversion. Yet she cannot ignore him! He is one of the only beings capable of ending her tyranny! The moment Ragyo Kiryuin senses Isshin Kurosaki she will move to intercept him!"

"And that is when we shall make OUR move!"

Satsuki glared at those gathered in Tsubakidai Park, the stern expression etched across her features radiating unyielding focus and determination, "While Isshin Kurosaki shoulders the burden of my mother's assault, we shall pursue our true objective! The destruction of the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier!"

"If I may explain, Lady Satsuki?"

The collar of Houka Inumuta's upgraded Probe Regalia unzipped when she nodded in affirmation. Lady Satsuki might have developed this plan alongside Kisuke Urahara and Nudist Beach - with some adjustments from Sosuke Aizen - but it wasn't foolproof. No amount of data or information could fully guarantee victory against Ragyo Kiryuin. And with a tactical coward like Yuu Akiyama in her employ, even considering victory at this stage was audacious to say the least, "Sanageyama and myself will infiltrate Honnouji Academy once Ichigo's father successfully captures Ragyo Kiryuin's attention. Our new Goku Uniforms should convince the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier we're members of Xcution, allowing us to reach the academy without detection."

"But we're not going to even think about activating our Goku Uniforms," Sanageyama interrupted from his perch on the ground. Arms folded tightly across his chest, the golden bandana covering his sewn eyes fluttering in the wind, the former Athletic Committee Chair cursed, "Because we don't want to get Ragyo Kiryuin's attention."

"Yes..."

The former Information and Strategy Committee Chair ignored his friend's outburst with dignity and grace, deigning to acknowledge the 'useful' information by simply erasing it from his mind, "Stealth will be critical if we're going to reach the Underground Server Farm - the only place Lady Satsuki's mother could have installing the Life Fiber generator - without drawing unnecessary attention."

"I've never been to the place myself. Never saw the point. But I'm guessing it's heavily guarded," Sanageyama smirked as he propped his shinai into the ground, using the weapon as a crutch to stand up, "Inumuta might be good but without my Shingantsu the Grand Couturier will spot him before he can even sneak through the back door."

"Don't grow overconfident in your abilities, Sanageyama."

Satsuki closed her eyes, breathing deeply before continuing, "Shingantsu might have opened your mind to the world but don't forget your initial loss to Ryuko. This isn't a match where the stakes are merely loss of honor or Goku Uniform. If Nui Harime catches you within Honnouji Academy's halls, she will kill you."

"Don't worry about me, Lady Satsuki."

Sanageyama forced himself to continue smirking, a single bead of sweat trickling down his cheek at Lady Satsuki's disappointment. As if he would ever try to take on someone like the Grand Couturier. He might be cocky, but an insane psychopath was way out of his league, "Thanks to Yoruichi Shihoin's hellish training I'll be able to sense the Grand Couturier from a mile away!"

"Have you forgotten lesson number four!?"

Yoruichi slapped the back of Sanageyama's head faster than his Shingantsu could register her presence, sending him falling face-first into the dirt. As her newest student cursed, rubbing the bruise while Nonon Jakuzure watched with a mischievous grin, she narrowed her eyes, "What did I teach you? If you can sense Nui Harime's spiritual pressure, then she can sense yours! And she won't hold back. If you walk into Honnouji Academy with that cocky attitude, she'll stab the Scissor Blade through your throat before you can even blink."

The edges of her mouth curled upwards when Sanageyama didn't back down, "Which is why I'm going with you. Nui Harime might be fast but I'm the Goddess of Flash! Even with a single arm I'm still strong enough to deal with her nonsense. Besides, I didn't spend years as commander of the Onmitsukidō to not take part in perhaps the most important stealth mission in history."

Sanageyama grunted half-heartedly at the comment, "Fine... but only if Lady Satsuki -"

"You don't require my input, Sanageyama. Olivier Armstrong has already conceded Yoruichi Shihoin's new role in the operation."

Satsuki didn't need to hear the eldest Armstrong's response. The woman's tense visage expressed her true opinion on the matter concerning Yoruichi Shihoin. Allowing the shinigami to assist Sanageyama and Inumuta in dismantling the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier was tactically advantageous. Her prior experience leading the Onmitsukidō afforded her a level of subterfuge and stealth neither Goku Uniform nor simple intelligence could replicate. And if her assistance substantially increased the odds of Sanageyama and Inumuta walking away from the Grand Couturier with life and limbs intact, then she had no objections.

Noting Ichigo's consternation towards the announcement, the furrowing of his brow signifying the turbulent questions poised on the tip of his tongue, she sighed softly, flicking a bang of hair behind Junketsu's winglets, "The destruction of the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier will infuriate Ragyo Kiryuin, which makes Isshin Kurosaki's ability to keep her preoccupied critical for the next phase of the operation."

"Ryuko!"

Her heel clacked as Ryuko's expression hardened into a scowl, "Upon the barrier's dissolution you will hunt down and destroy Shinra Koketsu! The only location with the equipment necessary for creating Life Fiber clothing is the Sewing Club. Assuming our mother hasn't changed the security protocols, Inumuta will hand you the codes for opening the blast-proof doors without triggering the silent alerts connected to the Student Council chambers."

Fingers twitched, reaching for a weapon no longer in her possession when Ryuko nodded, slamming a fist into her open palm, "And if I run into Nui Harime?"

"You may do as you please if she interferes with your objective," Satsuki answered without hesitation, "As for rescuing Orihime Inoue, there are several possible methods of extracting her from Honnouji Academy without -"

"I'll rescue Orihime."

Ichigo glanced away, his brow furrowed into a uncertain frown, "I don't know where Ragyo Kiryuin is keeping her... but I have a few good ideas."

The single moment following Ichigo's promise to rescue Orihime Inoue felt like an eternity before she nodded. An inexplicable sense of guilt lifting from her shoulders at the relaxing of Ichigo's posture, Satsuki steadied her breathing, blue eyes snapping towards everyone else gathered in the park, "While Ichigo and Ryuko deal with their respective orders, everyone shall focus on stalling the COVERS! And if Xcution decides to interfere, show them no quarter! Destroy their raiment! Use every underhanded and cowardly trick you can imagine to bring them down!"

"Tch..."

Heinkel clicked her teeth, smoke wafting from the cigarette clenched between her lips. She heard rumors of Satsuki Kiryuin's charisma through the Vatican grapevine. Stories of Ragyo Kiryuin's only daughter that defied common sense. But hearing the confidence in the girl's voice as she authorized deadly force against their enemies numbed the residual burns covering her arm. Xcution wasn't Ragyo Kiryuin but she was more than content with personally sending them to the deepest bowels of hell. Anyone who surrendered their humanity for naught but power, a thought that provoked a single flinch of shame, deserved neither sympathy nor mercy.

The makings of a smirk pulled on the corners of her mouth upon remembering only two members of Xcution remain unpunished - Rei Hououmaru and Yuu. Despite warning Satsuki Kiryuin about the latter - something Ragyo Kiryuin's daughter not only knew but assumed to be an underestimation of his tactical cowardice - she was looking forward to confronting the bastard herself.

Because even if he placed countless traps in her path - created in a cowardly way to limit the chances of being forced into a straightforward fight - she wouldn't rest until he paid . Not simply for his monstrous actions after selling his soul to Ragyo Kiryuin but for betraying everyone at Harobaro House.

"The operation begins in fifteen minutes!"

Olivier finished the briefing with a wide sweep of her arm, the scar beneath her eyepatch itching as she stalked towards the waiting helicopters. Acknowledging the nudists surrounding the aircraft with a firm nod, she stopped midstride at the paladin's nearly inaudible declaration of frustration. The corner of her mouth twisted downwards as she glared at her younger brother, she pointed a finger over her shoulder, "Alex... provide our guest from Iscariot with appropriate weaponry. I don't want the trouble of explaining to the Vatican why their best agent died under my watch."

"Of course," Armstrong nodded, motioning towards the same nudists before politely adding, "But what about our other guest - Miss Victoria? Do you wish for me to -"

"She brought a single-shot, breach loader anti-tank cannon capable of firing depleted uranium shells from London," Olivier interrupted her brother with a derisive scoff, smirking faintly at the memory of Aikuro carrying the Harkonnen, struggling to hold the weapon without tripping over his own feet.

He still owed Nudist Beach for destroying one of their DTR Model Rays.

"So this is it, huh?"

Ryuko kicked the ground, sending a rock bouncing away into the darkness while a nudist handed Heinkel a large silver case. Damn it! Why the hell was she so freaking nervous? They were going to win! After all, what were the chances Ichigo's dad fell for Ragyo Kiryuin's tricks a second time? Her muttering devolving into a string of curses at the answer, she scoffed before grabbing Ichigo's wrist, "Make sure to save Orihime, got it? I don't want anything getting in the way of kicking my bitch of a mom's ass!"

"Ragyo went through a lot of trouble kidnapping Orihime," Ichigo ignored Mugetsu's grumbling as the Kamui complained about wrinkles in her Life Fibers, "But don't worry. I'll save Orihime, Ryuko. I promise."

"I know... but..."

She trailed off, words failing on the tip of her tongue, before angrily punching Ichigo in the shoulder, "Just don't go dying on me! Save Orihime and get the hell out of there, got it!?"

"I couldn't agree more, Ryuko!"

"What the hell!?"

Ryuko nearly leapt out of her skin when Isshin Kurosaki appeared out of nowhere. Damn it, where had the bastard been hiding all this time!? He couldn't still be this much faster than her and Senketsu! Her feet moving on their own, fingers removing the miniaturized Scissor Blade from her Kamui's pouch, she pirouetted on the hardened dirt as the weapon expanded to its full size in a screech of clashing metal. Pointing the hardened Life Fiber weapon at the old goat's face, her eyes drifting towards the long object in his left hand, moonlight reflected off the blade's polished crimson edge as she sneered, "You asshole! What's the big idea sneaking up on us like that?"

"Well, I couldn't just -"

Ichigo's eyebrow twitched as he interrupted his old man's attempt at rationalizing his behavior by punching him in the face. As his old man crashed to the ground, limbs twitching and a single moan escaping his lips, he clicked his teeth together in annoyance, "Where the hell have you been all day?"

"Your reflexes are as sharp as ever, my son!"

Isshin vanished . That was the best word to accurately describe how fast he moved. Reappearing behind his unaware son just as Ryuko's eyes widened while mindful of Aizen's growing smirk, he wrapped an arm around Ichigo's neck, the surprised gasp bringing an immense amount of satisfaction. After weeks of failure... of practicing his technique... he finally shattered his son's defenses! Grunting when Ichigo somehow broke free, jabbing an elbow against the underside of his chin, he effortlessly avoided the subsequent knee to the crotch, stepping sideways faster than most of those gathered could follow, "I'm surprised you didn't slack off during your vacation!"

"Vacation!?"

Ichigo grabbed his dad's tacky dress shirt yet he stopped short of berating his old man. The look in his eyes... it was something he remembered, back when they were fighting Aizen in the fake version of Karakura Town. Releasing his hold with a heavy sigh, Mugetsu looking at his old man before swiveling upwards in concern, he didn't say anything, choose to remain silent when Isshin grimaced somberly, "Ichigo... I know you and Ryuko went through hell in London. I don't think anything could have prepared you for Alucard... or what the Quincy did. If you want to talk about it..."

"No, it's... fine," he hesitated, looking away with a frown, "Right now we need to focus on stopping Ragyo Kiryuin. Until then... I don't want to think about what happened."

Isshin sighed, running a hand through his silver hair. Ichigo was taking what happened in London better than expected. And Ryuko seemed a little on edge but otherwise stable. He had expected their depression to be worse. Losing a single battle against Ragyo was different than failing to stop Alucard from devouring millions of souls. Stepping away from his son when he became the center of attention, Olivier's disdain towards his existence palpable across the park, he stiffened and looked over his shoulder when an astonished voice called out in the darkness.

"Where did you get that?"

The question was accompanied by rhythmic clacking of Junketsu's heels as Satsuki beheld the thin object clasped in Isshin Kurosaki's left hand, her schooled features briefly cracking at its familiarity. She recognized the shallow curvature of the white scabbard, the grey tassels dangling softly in the wind unmistakable. But how was this possible? Eyes widening when Ichigo's father tossed her the weapon, she adjusting her footing before reaching out, clasping the sheathed katana midflight with nary a sound. A shuddering breath rippling through her lungs as she wrapped shaking fingers around the silk-covered hilt and unsheathed the blade several inches, her heart nearly stopped at the recognizable black metal.

Bakuzan...

Satsuki stared at the razor-sharp edge, the pale moonlight reflecting brilliantly off Bakuzan's polished surface. She could hear the disbelief coming from her Elite Four, their surprise at the weapon equal to her own. Years before founding Honnouji Academy... before defeating Sanageyama and the majority of the Northern Kanto Gang with nothing more than fighting spirit and two precise non-lethal attacks... Ragyo Kiryuin had given her the unique hardened Life Fiber weapon. A gift, her mother had claimed at the time, for exemplary performance and service to Life Fibers. Yet the weapon should no longer exist. It had been shattered by her mother, reduced to shards scattered across the halls of her former kingdom.

Yet it now rested - completely restored - in her hand, the white silk braid around the hilt shimmering with the same pale light as the full moon.

The former heiress stared at Isshin Kurosaki, unperturbed by the slight crackle of her voice, "How did you refashion Bakuzan?"

"Anderson collected the pieces after Aikuro knocked Ryuko unconscious," Isshin paused on the man's name, grimacing at his past interactions with the former paladin. Noticing Heinkel Wolfe's expected reaction out of the corner of his eye - the paladin still conflicted between Anderson's history and what she assumed actually happened thirteen years ago - he rubbed the back of his neck, "It took longer than expected putting all the pieces back together. I wanted to wait a little longer, make sure it was perfect, but Ragyo forced my hand."

Junketsu's interest in the restored weapon was overshadowed when Satsuki promptly bowed the upper half of her body, eyes closed in respect, "Thank you for returning Bakuzan, Isshin Kurosaki."

"Don't mention it!"

Isshin felt his guilt diminish at the gratitude. It warmed his heart hearing Satsuki express herself without worrying about appearances. She'd come a long way since threatening his life with Bakuzan, her stern theatrics when he visited Honnouji Academy for Parent Student Day still fresh in his mind. Stroking his stubble-free chin while turning away from Satsuki, he chuckled under his breath, "Besides, I couldn't have my son's future girlfriend fighting her mother without a weapon. As for the method of payment... I made a list of Ichigo's favorite topics for you to -"

The blow to his cheek, courtesy of Ichigo's fist, masked Ryuko slamming the blunt side of the Scissor Blade into his stomach. Collapsing face-first onto the ground with an unceremonious thump, Isshin barely regained his bearings before a sneaked smashed violently into the back of his head.

"Keep your stupid shit to yourself, you damn bastard!"

Giving one more stomp for good measure before stalking away, Ryuko left Isshin to pick both himself out of the dirt while reflexively avoiding Mako's shoulder tackle. But there was no hiding the faint blush on her cheeks, the way she vigorously attacked the man. Something Mugetsu's didn't miss while Ichigo watched Satsuki fully unsheathe Bakuzan before giving the midnight black weapon several experimental swings.

"You ready for this, Mugetsu?"

The Kamui's lapels twitched proudly as her eyes swiveled upwards, "It's what I was made for, Ichigo. We'll show everyone why I'm the fastest Kamui!"

Ichigo scowled at his old man's childish groans, the pain as fake as the blood flowing from his nose, "I don't think that means much against Ragyo Kiryuin."

" What?"

Mugetsu returned Ichigo's scowl, tightening around his body in frustrated displeasure. How could he say something so cruel and insulting? An annoyed humph rippled through her Life Fibers. Her speed surpassed any other Kamui's! She proved that against Junketsu and fighting those Quincy! Even if Junketsu unlocked her fashion week apparel and managed to fight Ragyo Kiryuin to a standstill, she was certain Zangetsu was still faster than Junketsu Shinzui! Ignoring Ichigo's half-hearted attempts to apologize, her determination weakening slightly when he promised to iron her when they got back, the Kamui barely missed Armstrong marching towards the Elite Four.

"Maxwell..."

Calloused fingers clasped his son's broad shoulder, gripping the newly improved Goku Uniform's blue threading with gentleness befitting an Armstrong, "Your performance yesterday was exemplary. But don't let that cloud your judgment. Stay focused. Always assume the enemy has one last trick up their sleeve. If anything were to happen to you, your mother would have my head."

Gamagori's dour expression, already tested by Jakuzure's snarky attitude, deepened as he squared his shoulders, "Understood... but this doesn't change anything!"

He placed a hand over his heart, aware of Lady Satsuki's unshifting gaze and his aunt stalking angrily towards Ichigo Kurosaki's father, "Make no mistake. I appreciate your assistance against Riruka Dokugamine. I doubt my Shackle Regalia could have effectively countered her Duveteux Raiment without following your strategies and tactics. But our relationship has not changed! I vowed to carve my own path in this world! A path separate from the Armstrong name! And nothing you - nor Aunt Olivier - do will change my mind!"

"How commendable!"

Pink sparkles accentuated Armstrong's chiseled features at his son's indomitable sense of self-determination. Such unyielding stubbornness was something he had in common with his mother, a remarkable woman he missed every second of the day. Which was why he had no right chastising his son. For a name was nothing more than a sequence of letters. It was the actions of an individual, their decisions that determined whether others treated them with dignity or disdain. Compared to such things, what one chose as a surname was inconsequential.

"But you're correct..."

Armstrong's boisterous personality, the gentile decorum which earned the undying respect of every nudist in Professor Matoi's organization, was on full display as he proudly saluted his son, "Good luck out there, Ira."

"Is the toad seriously having a father-son bonding moment?"

Nonon Jakuzure grumbled under her breath, the annoyance mimicked by the skull embedded on her Goku Uniform's majorette hat. Jeez... was the toad really on the verge of tears after something so stupid? Not to mention his dad was nearly as demented as Strawberry's. Only someone with brain damage would constantly strip off their clothing and pose like a complete moron. Scoffing at the display she turned towards Uryu Ishida, the four-eyed Quincy's morbid horror making her feel somewhat better. Ugh! She was still pissed at Gamagori for taking down Dokugamine. She had practiced for days - following Satsuki's training and directions to the letter - to send that near-sighted bitch back to Italy!

"You're staring at Uryu Ishida more than usual, Jakuzure," Inumuta flicked the side of his glasses, unbothered by the sudden burst of venomous loathing, "Perhaps you wish to tell him something?"

"What the hell is that supposed to mean!?"

Inumuta remained unfazed by the diminutive teenager's subtle threat, "There's no need for threats, Jakuzure. I was simply suggesting that -"

The former Information and Strategy Committee Chair stopped midsentence, his attention drifting towards the stomping growing increasingly louder by the second. Casually stepping backwards when Olivier Armstrong marched across his field of vision, he activated several features of his Probe Regalia as a sharp crack - the sound of the woman's fist smashing into Isshin Kurosaki's jaw - shattered the tepid tranquility.

"You're late, Isshin."

Olivier sneered at the blood coating her glove when Isshin's body corkscrewed through the air, sailing over his son's head before crashing into the ground. Removing the stained glove with a disdainful scoff, tossing the accessory over her shoulder even as the offending material dissolved into Life Fibers, she didn't bother waiting for the man's excuse. His performance in the upcoming operation would be enough.

"We're moving out!"

She swept an arm outwards, ignoring the former shinigami's false groans of pain, "It's time to show Ragyo Kiryuin you don't fuck with humanity!"

Burning Love

There was a lot that went into this chapter. I think it's the first time I seriously addressed the OVA episode. Of course, Hououmaru's origins are entirely different, mostly due to having already given her a background prior to the OVA. Here, she's not a war orphan found by Ragyo. Instead, she was hired out of college by Ragyo as her secretary prior to encountering the Original Life Fiber. There are other differences. But on the other hand, there's one major addition from the OVA that I'm proud to include. Take from that what you will.

So, I hope you enjoy the chapter. Leave a review and, as always, if you have any questions feel free to send me a PM. I'll be happy to answer anything you might ask. Apart from spoilers and such.

---

...

---

Chapter 59 - Burning Love

A deep breath disrupted the silence when Rei Hououmaru entered the private chambers formerly occupied by the Student Council Vice President of Honnouji Academy. Smoothing an errant wrinkle on her raiment as moonlight shone through the full-length windows, tinted crimson by the barrier enveloping Honnou City, she sighed before stepping forward, carefully avoiding the Life Fibers covering the imported marble tiles.

"Why did you destroy the COVERS?"

The question possessed neither frustration nor impatience as she walked around the shredded remains of the COVERS. Aware of the golden-orange light shimmering around Orihime's hairpins, Hououmaru brushed aside the burning pain radiating down her arms with an exasperated sigh, "Their only purpose was ensuring your protection, Orihime. Nothing more and nothing less. Lady Ragyo even ordered empty COVERS to your chambers - severely limiting their capabilities - as proof she cares about your well-being."

"She's not my mom."

The harsh retort elicited little more than a slight clenching of her jaw, "Your feeling towards Lady Ragyo are irrelevant."

Her sunglasses partially slid down the bridge of her nose at Orihime's silence. Withdrawing the PDA from her raiment's breast pocket, flicking the device with her finger as information scrolled down the screen, she waited several seconds before addressing the primary reason for her visit, "All children eventually harbor feelings of rebelling against their parents. Even the Grand Couturier once considered such thoughts, although her disobedience was limited to leaving Revocs without permission."

Emotion drained from her voice as the Grand Couturier's last unauthorized excursion - to Karakura Town - came to mind, "Which is why I suggest forgetting any fantasies of leaving Honnouji Academy."

"Ichigo will stop you."

Orihime ignored the nervousness fluttering in her heart, anger at Ragyo Kiryuin keeping her voice steady, "I know he will!"

"Lady Ragyo has anticipated Ichigo and Ryuko lending their assistance to Nudist Beach."

Hououmaru continued scrolling through the information on her PDA while Orihime's bluster deflated, surprise replacing whatever confidence she'd mustered in the interim. Even with Lady Ragyo preoccupied at the moment, the Kiryuin Conglomerate never ceased operations. Thanks to their contacts in the French government, they already knew about the unregistered military aircraft leaving London. Irrelevant under most circumstances. Relegated to Revocs'

Information and Espionage Division for future countermeasures. But its flight pattern and timing had warranted Lady Ragyo's personal attention.

"Olivier Armstrong will undoubtedly launch a full-scale, yet futile, operation with the sole objective being the destruction of Shinra Koketsu," she stowed the PDA back in her pocket, unaware of Orihime's quickening pulse, "And with someone like Kisuke Urahara lending his expertise on Life Fibers, the probability her organization penetrates the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier is greater than zero."

Life Fibers curled around her heels as she strutted towards Orihime, "However, they will fail to remove you from Lady Ragyo's custody. But you needn't worry. I've spoken with Lady Ragyo on the matter, imploring leniency towards your friends. She's agreed that Ichigo and Ryuko won't be punished for their transgressions against Revocs and Life Fibers. She's also promised to unequivocally spare anyone - nudists included - who surrenders if you agree to cooperate."

"You're lying."

Orihime's hands trembled, the viciousness of the secretary's answer causing her blood to run cold, "I know what you're trying to do. If you hurt Ichigo, Ryuko or any of my friends... if you try to force me to help you... I'll destroy Shinra Koketsu!"

A presence fluttered against Hououmaru's consciousness, its amusement undoubtedly focused upon her discontent. Why was Orihime determined to make her job difficult? Despite its impossibility, she was required to report the threat to Lady Ragyo, increasing her already overbearing workload hours before Nudist Beach's assault, "Your threat against Shinra Koketsu carries no weight. While your Shun Shun Rikka possesses unparalleled power - enough to render even Kamui nothing more than scraps of clothing - you lack the physical prowess of your sisters. If the Grand Couturier decided to make such a threat, she would have already unraveled my Écusson Raiment."

"Lady Ragyo's generous offer is simply a choice between two methods of execution," she watched impassively as Orihime's determination wavered before pressing on, "Regardless of your intentions, humanity will be devoured by Life Fibers."

"Why are you helping her?"

"Ragyo only cares about herself," Orihime's voice cracked, nervousness preventing her from staring into the secretary's cold eyes, "So why are you helping her? Why are you trying to kill everyone!?"

"Because Lady Ragyo's orders are sacrosanct."

There was no hesitation as Hououmaru removed her sunglasses, sweeping away the accessory without expressing her inner frustration. Did Orihime expect her to address something so complicated in the span of a few seconds? To condense her loyalty and devotion to Lady Ragyo, why she would gladly sacrifice her existence to the Original Life Fiber if it ensured the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet's success, within a single breath? The notion was insulting. That Orihime even considered the ridiculous question only served to deepen her hatred of Sora Inoue.

She tucked away her sunglasses as Orihime attempted to rationalize her answer, turning around with a soft clack of her heel, "The Grand Couturier will retrieve you once Shinra Koketsu is finished."

Her voice echoed slightly as she marched towards the door, beams of pale moonlight casting shadows upon the opposite wall, "So please try to relax. Denying Lady Ragyo's countless sacrifices with futile acts of defiance and hollow threats is tantamount to insulting the Original Life Fiber."

An overwhelming silence filled the room before the door closed, reinforced Life Fiber locks instantly sealing the chamber. Shoulders stiffen as she stood in the corridor, several COVERS floating past her field of view without acknowledging her presence, Hououmaru sighed, the sound containing more than twenty-four hours of exhaustion. Sora Inoue deserved to suffer in the deepest pits of Hell. Orihime's refusal to assist Lady Ragyo was bolstered by years of his indoctrination and malicious slander. Nothing unsurmountable given Lady Ragyo's vast resources and abilities, but her immunity to Mental Refitting necessitated alternate methods of gaining compliance.

"Your purpose has not changed."

She closed her eyes when the nearby shadows moved, sunglasses resting once more upon the bridge of her nose, "Continue guarding Orihime. Do not let anyone other than Lady Ragyo or the Grand Couturier through this door."

"Concerned, Hououmaru?"

The question carried a hint of arrogance, possessing confidence tempered through mental training, as a figure emerged from the darkness, long golden hair falling across their shoulders in flat waves, "Did speaking with Orihime Inoue rattle your nerves?"

"Please refrain from using that name."

Hououmaru focused on the satellite transmitter looming over Honnouji Academy, ignoring the figure's annoying attempt at getting underneath skin. Such behavior was unbecoming of a loyal servant of Life Fibers, "Our sources have detected large-scale mobilization of Anti-Life Fiber assets in Karakura Town. We expect Nudist Beach to attack within the next several hours, possibly sooner. It's also anticipated that Isshin Kurosaki will lead the assault, using the single defect in the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier to confront Lady Ragyo."

"Interesting..."

" Don't underestimate Isshin Kurosaki."

Her voice hardened at the figure's fascination with the man, "It required years of planning for Lady Ragyo to successfully pull off Operation Laissez Faire. If I hadn't convinced Isshin that I betrayed Revocs and the Original Life Fiber, the operation would have likely failed. His naïve trust in my loyalty - built over twenty years and upon countless assets sacrificed to the nudists - is why the last prerequisite for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet's success rests within Lady Ragyo's grasp."

"Whatever method Isshin chooses to obtain Lady Ragyo's attention, it would be prudent to assume his actions are covering another nudist operation," pain radiated throughout her hand as the wounds obtained battling Kugo Ginjo flared, "If the nudists breach the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier despite Lady Ragyo's preemptive measures, your only purpose is ensuring Orihime does not leave Honnouji Academy."

"Nui Harime described Ichigo Kurosaki's synchronization with Mugetsu in vivid detail."

The non-sequitur comment was accompanied by a sinister chuckle which echoed viciously in the darkness. Smirking as the moon flickered in the overcast skies, highlighting the black armor accentuating their sculpted physique, the figure breathed in sharply, malevolent exuberance permeating every word, "Fighting such a magnificent Kamui will require considerable effort. But anyone that rebels against Lady Ragyo deserves nothing less than complete humiliation."

"Ichigo is still Lady Ragyo's godson. She would be mécontent hearing you speak about him with such callous disrespect."

The smile on the figure's ashen grey face tightened, hints of apprehension in their brilliant green eyes, before Hououmaru continued, "However, you have her permission to fight Ichigo and Ryuko to your heart's content. But safeguarding Orihime takes priority over everything . Only use as much power as necessary to incapacitate them. Nothing more. Understood?"

A single, exuberant chuckle filled the hallway as the figure stepped closer to Hououmaru, "Am I ordered to also hold back against Satsuki Kiryuin?"

"Lady Ragyo only cares about Ichigo and Ryuko. Anyone else attempting to reach Orihime is to be killed with extreme prejudice."

Hououmaru pressed a finger against her ear, head tilted slightly when the voice over the secure network drew her attention. It appeared her conversation with Orihime took longer than expected. Pivoting softly once Lady Ragyo finished speaking, she quickly moved to leave, but not before imparting one final comment.

"If you encounter Satsuki, please remember to recover Junketsu."

A sharp exhale left the figure's parted lips, the pitch black yet revealing armor adorning her ashen grey flesh shimmering in the moonlight. Testing her capabilities against Mugetsu and Senketsu would be exhilarating. To push her Life Fibers to their limits, straining them until they threatened to fray underneath clashing blades, filled her soul with excitement. This was the reason behind her creation! Why the Grand Couturiers sacrificed their valuable time extracting memories and impressions of Satsuki Kiryuin from the captured humans. Why they weaved them into her Life Fibers alongside Lady Ragyo's own recollections!

Every moment from Satsuki Kiryuin's childhood to the Karakura Town Raid Trip was stitched into her soul.

For all intents and purposes she was Satsuki Kiryuin!

"I'm looking forward to our battle, Ichigo Kurosaki," she smirked as the inverted multicolored eyes on her pauldrons didn't move, "Defeating your Kamui would prove my superiority over you once and for all."

---

...

---

Ragyo Kiryuin drank in the reticent darkness, her divine flesh unencumbered by the biting cold of the autumn night. Manicured fingers strummed against the crooks of her arms as she stared westward, the amused contentment adorning her regal façade momentarily cracking, more out of disappointment than honest anger.

"Oh Isshin, just what are you planning?"

An excited shudder rippled throughout her Life Fibers. Despite his stubborn refusal to concede that the Original Life Fiber's divine goal was correct - a notion that seemed impossible to beat into his thick skull - she still adored Isshin, from his childish boisterousness to his failing attempts at humor. After all, he was the only man she would ever love. And it was for that single reason she found his decision to ally with the naked apes, humans unworthy of anything other than serving as nourishment for Life Fibers, frustrant. Someone of his stature, endowed with the Original Life Fiber's blessed gift, shouldn't degrade himself by associating with lesser beings, least of all the group founded by her former husband.

"You wished to see me, Lady Ragyo?"

Engrossed in her thoughts, Ragyo craned her neck backwards, the flaunting dress accentuating her womanly figure fluttering softly, "Yes..."

The word left slightly parted lips alongside a breathless sigh. Folding her arms as Hououmaru marched across the pinnacle of Honnouji Academy's central tower, she sighed in response to the faint glimmer on the horizon, "I'm afraid we've run out of time. Isshin will be on our doorstep in just over five minutes."

Hououmaru's breath hitched. Revocs hadn't detected any nudist deployment from Karakura Town during her conversation with Orihime. If Isshin intended to interfere with the Celestial Cocoon

Seed Planet so quickly, she didn't want to be present upon his arrival, "Understood."

" Merde ."

A weary sigh accompanied the curse as Ragyo lamented the necessity of the approaching confrontation, "Even after twenty-two years Isshin still found a way to surprise me. I assumed he'd attempt to rescue yesterday afternoon. But, of course, he didn't show."

Annoyance masked by wistful nostalgia passed underneath Hououmaru's limited awareness as she stared at the moon hanging lazily in the night sky. Some things simply never worked as intended. She had waited patiently for Isshin's arrival after returning from Karakura Town, finishing the last preparations while dearest Nui reacquainted herself with Orihime. Mild apprehension had tainted her thoughts at fighting so soon after dealing with Satsuki and that blasphemous shinigami. But the wounds sustained beating common sense into her daughter were nothing compared to Isshin's.

Their rematch would have ended in her favor.

Perhaps she wasn't giving Isshin enough credit. While he publicly behaved like a childish idiot lacking common sense - one of his more endearing qualities - it was nothing more than a whimsical performance. Underneath his atrocious disguise lay the heart of a shrewd and calculated man, someone capable of setting back the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet for years by the most trivial of actions. It wasn't surprising. Only Isshin could have kept her traitorous former husband safe for thirteen years, prevented her employees from fully eradicating the naked apes and conceal the existences of Amu and Orihime, both of whom she didn't even know survived until Ichigo transferred to Honnouji Academy.

Sometimes she didn't understand why she tolerated his rebellious behavior.

Caressing the Needle Blades stabbed into the platform on either side of her body, fingers running circular patterns upon the multicolored metal, she smirked when something else came to mind.

"How is Orihime, Hououmaru?"

"She's behaving quite stubbornly," Hououmaru closed her eyes, the only indication of the fatigue plaguing her body, "Not only has she destroyed the COVERS assigned to protect her from the naked apes, she's vowed to destroy Shinra Koketsu with her Shun Shun Rikka."

"I suppose irrational stubbornness runs in the family..."

Amusement seeped into the Kiryuin matriarch's tone. Did Orihime honestly believe she would allow the only one of her daughters capable of destroying Shinra Koketsu without using hardened Life Fibers weapons anywhere near dearest Nui's œuvre maîtresse ? It was absurd. But if Orihime somehow took advantage of her permissive behavior to escape, her little pet project - something the Grand Couturiers stitched together in their spare time - made accomplishing the feat virtually impossible, "Perhaps I've been too lenient with Orihime. Inform our pet project to rebuke my daughter if she attempts anything during Isshin's upcoming performance."

"As you wish, Ma'am."

The subtle inflections in Hououmaru's response piqued the matriarch's interest. A heel clacking sharply as she turned around, placing her back against Isshin's growing presence, Ragyo focused on her servant's elevated breathing, "That reminds me. How is dearest Nui's progress?"

Hououmaru flicked her aviator sunglasses, the subconscious behavior concealing her nervousness, "The Grand Couturier should finish Shinra Koketsu within fifteen minutes, possibly sooner. However, she's growing increasingly unstable. Losing Amu to Kisuke Urahara's underhanded tactics affected her mind worse than the temporary loss of her eye. When I attempted to inquire about Shinra Koketsu's progress this morning, she threatened to tear my heart out after cutting off my arms."

" C'est la vie. I'm afraid dearest Nui's mind couldn't handle the strain of losing Amu," Ragyo shook her head, a breathless sigh escaping her lips. Nui's connection with Amu was deeper than mere synchronization. It was hardly surprising that the backlash from Twin Life Fiber Entanglement would damage her precious daughter's soul. The outcome was tragic yet she wasn't concerned in the slightest. As long as Nui finished weaving Shinra Koketsu her stability was irrelevant.

The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet took priority over everything .

Her chest rose, breasts straining against silk-like fabric as she stared beyond the dilapidated streets of Honnou City into Tokyo Bay, the reflection from the full moon shimmering upon the stilled waters. Nui's purpose was weaving Shinra Koketsu alongside Amu. Nothing more and nothing less. Everything she's achieved as Grand Couturier - such as slaughtering the naked apes - was nothing more than a bonus, "From your response I presume she's still working on Shinra Koketsu?"

"Yes," Hououmaru pressed a finger against the bridge of her sunglasses, "The Grand Couturier hasn't stopped working since returning from Karakura Town."

"Then I don't see a problem," Ragyo watched hundreds of COVERS float through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, the mass-produced suits heading westward to intercept Olivier's naked apes, "However, I am curious about our pet project. It's been so hectic preparing for Isshin's arrival that I haven't had time to properly examine its threading."

She tilted her head backwards, lips curled into a psychotic smirk as Hououmaru's voice faded into the background. Her pet project, something conceived in the immediate aftermath of the Great

Culture and Sports Festival, went beyond the secondhand clone used to trick Isshin. The Life Fiber creation guarding Orihime was original. Unique . It was something standing upon the cusp of hybridization yet lacking certain basic characteristics and qualities, giving it an existence less than Ichigo or Ryuko but greater than mere Kamui. Some would consider that a failure.

But the clone created from her Life Fibers and woven into existence by Nui and Amu was anything but un échec .

A normal Life Fiber clone could mimic the personality and mannerisms of the original but the results were always inferior. If not for Hououmaru's stupendous performance as a double-agent, allowing the naked apes to have sensitive Revocs information with her express permission, Isshin would have easily noticed the difference. It wasn't difficult. But the duplicate of her eldest daughter was different. Purposely so . The Grand Couturiers sacrificed the scant hours not weaving Shinra Koketsu stitching memories of Satsuki - taken from the captured students and her own mind - into its Life Fibers, granting her creation the same personality and temperament as Satsuki while remaining loyal to the Original Life Fiber.

It was a magnificent oeuvre d'art, made more beautiful by the insentient replica of Junketsu - lacking the original's complete strength due to Isshin's absence - sewn into its skin.

"I'm more than certain Kisuke Urahara and Satsuki believe I played my entire hand yesterday," Ragyo laughed at the concept, the backdrop of multicolored light announcing her stature growing alongside her madness, "Losing most of Xcution was surprising. And I certainly didn't expect Junketsu to ascend into her fashion week apparel. But as Isshin pointed out years ago - you always hold something back for emergencies. Which brings up one final matter..."

She grinned, faced framed in darkness, "Have you finished dealing with the other loose ends?"

"Of course."

Hououmaru brushed dust from her raiment, a subtle yet noticeable cruel edge to her voice, "Kuroido sacrificed himself alongside your remaining staff to the Original Life Fiber twelve hours ago."

An overwhelming sense of amusement pulsed through her Life Fibers at the expected affirmation. She had nearly forgotten about Kuroido, the head butler relegated to the depths of her mind after the Great Culture and Sports Festival. After failing to prevent Kisuke Urahara and Satsuki's Sewing Club from breaching the Original Life Fiber's sanctum, locked within a broom closet by the former, she had contemplated ending the man's existence. He certainly deserved a disgraceful death, devoid of any worth despite years of fervent loyalty. Yet she'd purposely ignored his nervous rapport after leaving Orihime at Honnouji Academy, brushing aside his stammering excuses without so much as a cursory glance.

Kuroido might have failed the most trivial tasks - starting with assassinating Souichiro - but the Original Life Fiber wasn't picky.

That only left one final loose thread.

A loud clack interrupted Hououmaru's somber thoughts as she strutted towards the edge of Honnouji Academy's tower, silver hair rustling in the gentle wind. Isshin's plan was obvious almost to the point of embarrassment. The lack of tact, his inability to conceal his true objective beneath several layers of fabric, was disappointing. Did he not expect her to realize his plans? She could sense their Life Fibers, matured from slaughtering those disgusting Quincy, despite Isshin's presence. Ichigo and Ryuko were coming, determined to end the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Even Junketsu was partaking in their foolish endeavor.

The Kamui's participation turning her smirk malevolent. She knew her daughter far too well.

"Satsuki's persistence would be amusing if it wasn't so pathetic. Oh well, I suppose that leaves me with little choice..."

The comment rolled off her tongue without warning, carrying a heavy weight that immediately gained Hououmaru's undivided attention. Her multicolored radiance brightening as she chuckled alongside a sharp intake of air, masking her excitement as anticipation, Ragyo's eyes widened sadistically, "Prepare EXCELSUS."

"Are you certain, Ma'am?"

Hououmaru stared at the ground when Lady Ragyo quirked an eyebrow, clearing her throat with a small cough, "EXCELSUS was designed by your daughter as a final deterrent against the Original Life Fiber, to be used only when all other options had failed. Its activation will destroy Honnouji Academy, tearing apart both the Sewing Club where the Grand Couturier is weaving Shinra Koketsu and the Student Council Chambers where Orihime is resting."

"I am aware of that, Hououmaru."

Ragyo found the criticism both refreshing and disappointing. She still remembered Satsuki's passionate declaration regarding her plans for an institution, an experimental testing ground for humans to wear Life Fiber clothing. It was a bold and ingenious idea. But she wasn't born yesterday. Her daughter might have designed Honnouji Academy, personally overseeing its construction. However, she funded the multibillion dollar project, including the Anti-Life Fiber technology Satsuki concealed with her hacker associate's assistance, "Which is why you won't activate EXCELSUS until I have adorned myself with Shinra Koketsu. As much as I would love to witness Satsuki's expression when her 'secret weapon' is turned upon the naked apes, the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet takes priority over everything."

"Very well," Hououmaru bowed, all doubt driven from her mind, "Will there be anything else?"

"Yes. Inform me once the Grand Couturier is finished," Ragyo smirked as her attention drifted to the west, "Now if you'll excuse me..."

Manicured fingers curled through the smooth handles of the Needle Blades as she extracted the twin weapons from the platform, "... I need to go speak with Isshin."

She floated silently above the platform, basking in the familiar presence permeating her Life Fibers and Hououmaru's deference, before vanishing with enough force to crack the metallic plating beneath her heels. With streaks of kaleidoscopic spiritual energy trailing from her body, thousands of COVERS instinctively floating out of her path, she passed through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, shredded high-velocity Life Fibers clinging to her skin as the ephemeral surface rippled. It would be foolish to confront Isshin at Honnouji Academy, not when dearest Nui was still working on Shinra Koketsu.

All it would take was an errant attack. Something Isshin would attempt given half a chance.

Her lips quirked playfully as she stopped thousands of feet above Honnouji Academy, the multicolored radiance from her hair shimmering like a jewel in the darkness. Fingers caressing the Needles Blades, trailing patterns in their Life Fibers as the seconds slowly changed into minutes, Ragyo smiled, amused yet slightly annoyed by the familiar presence doing his best to avoid her attention.

"It's rude to keep a woman waiting."

She laughed - the melodious sound mixing sadistic amusement and arrogant mirth. Turning around, prepared to properly greet Isshin, Ragyo's breath immediately hitched, maroon eyes widening. Incroyable ! She didn't think it was possible! The probability of witnessing something this amazing was lower than Satsuki's chances of defeating the Original Life Fiber! It took every ounce of self-composure she possessed, which grew more difficult by the second, to keep her voice steady, "Oh? What's this? Did you finally develop a sense of fashion?"

At some point over the last twenty-four hours Isshin had finally discarded his gaudy and incredibly tacky dress clothes, changing into something more antiquated. The refreshing garment now adorning his body had a certain quaintness, archaic culture visible in the threading that clashed with Isshin's normal fashion. Upon first glance the shihakusho and accompanying tattered haori wrapped around his shoulder appeared subpar, perhaps created by Kisuke Urahara, but the perfectly stitched thread patterns quickly proved her wrong. Only someone like Isshin could wave such magnificent clothing.

And only Isshin would choose black of all colors.

"I'm not here to talk, Ragyo."

Isshin rested his wrist against the blade strapped within his shihakusho, fingers positioned to draw the weapon if Ragyo decided to take the initiative, "But I will give you one chance to surrender."

"Oh Isshin, your naïveté is simply endearing."

Her voice stabbed through the darkness like a knife, carrying a hint of madness that caused Isshin's posture to stiffen. She was insulted - furious beyond comprehension - that he would consider such a ludicrous notion, "That you believe I would be swayed by such nonsensical connerie... is infuriating!"

She crossed the chasm separating them in the blink of an eye, muscles pulling taut as she thrust the Needle Blades towards Isshin's exposed lungs. Undeterred in the slightest when he moved at the last second, the faint rustling of his shihakusho drawing her undivided attention, Ragyo pirouetted upon platforms of solidified air, heels clacking loudly as she decided to try harder . Her body blurred out of existence, flickers of multicolored spiritual energy the only evidence of her presence in the darkness, as she danced with Isshin. Over and over their blades clashed, each choreographed movement creating bursts of spiritual pressure that could be sensed for kilometers.

"Come now, Isshin, do you intend to keep holding back?"

Pivoting gracefully around the telegraphed swing, eyes half-lidded as Isshin's blade passed inches from her face, Ragyo waited until he extended himself before countering with a sharp kick, frowning when her foot instead slammed into his forearm.

"You're not exactly giving one hundred percent yourself, Ragyo."

A mischievous grin threatened to give away the game as he curled a finger against the thumb of his free hand. Resting one forearm upon the other, amusement curling the corners of his mouth at the annoyed twitching of Ragyo's right eyebrow, he flicked his finger without any witty remarks, releasing the Oni Dekopin point-blank against her stomach.

With a resounding crack of displaced air Ragyo was thrown away from Isshin, her flesh rippling around the pulse of spiritual energy. Spittle flying from disbelieving lips, teeth clenched as her patience rapidly dwindled, she arrested her momentum with one sharp clack of a heel, the sudden application of physical force releasing a miniature explosion of smoke. Breathing lightly as the faint bruises on her stomach vanished, leaving behind nothing but flawless skin, she stiffened when Isshin grumbled incoherently, "I know you're still upset but what did you expect me to do?"

Switching zanjutsu stances, Isshin rolled his shoulders, "Maybe helping the Original Life Fiber dulled your mind. Or perhaps you're simply tired. But you should really consider giving up trying to change my mind. It won't work. You'll have better luck making Ichigo wear Senketsu than convincing me to help the Original Life Fiber."

"That's quite the comparison..."

Ragyo darted forward with a frustrated snarl, the hem of her dress fluttering as the Needle Blades arced trails of light through the darkness. Undaunted when the sword in her left hand was parried - pushed away from Isshin's shoulder in a flurry of multihued sparks, she flicked the wrist of her other hand clockwise, dragging the Needle Blade against the hastily shifted tachi. Alongside an ear-wrenching screech of metal she thrust the blade around Isshin's guard, piercing his clavicle in a spray of blood.

The gurgle - a mixture of surprise and blood welling in his throat, tempered her frustration. Seeing Isshin's reaction made wasting her time almost worthwhile. Callously discarding the Needle Blade in her left hand, Life Fibers thread around the weapon before it could fall more than a few inches, she grabbed his throat, gently squeezing the blood-soaked flesh.

"I had hoped you would see reason, Isshin..."

Her arm was severed midsentence at the elbow, iron-like flesh momentarily resisting the hardened Life Fiber weapon before torrents of thick blood gushed from the wound. Cursing at Isshin's rudeness, twitching eyes tracking his retreat while flesh and clothing knitted seamlessly back together, Ragyo rushed back into his embrace with a snarl, spiritual energy trailing from the Needle Blades.

"Humanity's only purpose... the single reason they've been allowed to thrive on this miserable planet..."

They were little more than blurs, bursts of light illuminating her scowling visage with each countered or parried attack, as she attempted to beat common sense into Isshin's skull, a task made difficult by his inhuman stubbornness. Seething when she was thrown backwards after a particularly vicious confrontation, blood pouring from the rapidly regenerating wound on her chest, Ragyo stomped her heels against the air for purchase, flipping the Needle Blades into a reverse grip as Isshin attempted to take advantage of her perceived weakness.

"... is to become nourishment for Life Fibers!"

A sharp crash of metal upon metal echoed in her bones when she parried Isshin's attack, forcing the curving blade away from her throat. It appeared from the depth and viciousness of his assault Isshin had finally stopped holding back. And that simply would not do. Twisting sideways as Isshin avoided her counterattack, the appreciate tear on his shihakusho already stitching back together, she snapped an arm upwards, kaleidoscopic spiritual energy hovering above a polished fingernail.

"Whoa!"

Isshin didn't think. There wasn't enough time for that. Acting purely on instinct he gripped his sword with both hands and swung downwards.

"Getsuga Tenshou!"

The sleeves of his shihakusho burned, dissolving as the crescent-shaped spiritual energy sliced through Ragyo's technique, her widening eyes the last thing he saw before an explosion of light briefly transformed night into day. As he stood in the middle of the multifaceted conflagration, mouth pursed into a grimace and regenerating burns covering his forearms, Isshin grumbled. Perhaps using Getsuga Tenshou was over-excessive. He had hoped to keep the technique hidden up his sleeves, unleashing it only in an emergency. But then again, he hadn't expected Ragyo to fire something that strong at point-blank range.

"Getsuga Tenshou? Can't you think of anything original, Isshin?"

His heart nearly stopped at the seductive voice whispering into his ear. Ragyo's tranquil fury readily apparent as he danced around the Needle Blades, blocking the twin swords cleaving towards his neck. Instinctively leaning backwards when she twisted her arms clockwise, prepared for the pirouette and subsequent kick to the chin, Isshin grunted when her fist angrily brushed the side of his face, the accompanying explosion of spiritual energy sending shockwaves rippling into the night.

"That was some fancy blade work," Isshin leapt away from Ragyo, rubbing his already healed jaw, "Were you trying to kill me?"

"Hardly..."

Ragyo smirked - frustration and annoyance lifting from her shoulders - as she permitted Isshin time to recover. Every moment he wasted complaining about trivial matters was another second Nui had to weave the finishing touches upon Shinra Koketsu, "I'll admit the thought has crossed my mind. After all, you betrayed me... betrayed the Original Life Fiber for the pigs in human clothing. Killing you would be the appropriate course of action."

She shook her head when Isshin's attention snapped toward the innumerable COVERS marching through the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, "But I'm afraid your little diversion has failed. Despite your best efforts to draw my attention, the naked apes will perish down to the last man and woman. Even Satsuki's pathetic avant-garde won't survive more than a few minutes. And before you ask..."

Kaleidoscopic light tore through the landscape in nearly perfect synchronization with Ragyo's rebuttal, the twinkling explosions accentuating her sadistic smile, "Why on earth would you think an army of COVERS was the only trick left up my sleeves?"

---

...

---

"Can you please stop fidgeting?"

"Sorry," Sanageyama stopped pacing back and forth, sewn eyes momentarily staring through the ceiling when another burst of spiritual pressure slammed against his awareness, "But Ragyo Kiryuin and Isshin Kurosaki are throwing around some serious firepower. It's got my nerves on edge."

"Understandable. However, placing that reason aside for the moment, your pacing is still highly distracting."

Houka Inumuta ignored the tattered remains of the COVERS - and their deceased victims - littering the subbasement corridor, returning to the task at hand with renewed vigor. Sitting on the ground, attention focused on the commands scrolling down his laptop's screen, the rehabilitated professional hacker sarcastically added, "The last thing we need is your discomfort triggering Honnouji Academy's anti-intruder defenses, ruining Lady Satsuki's plan and simultaneously dooming humanity to a pain-filled and torturous existence as nothing more than nourishment for Life Fibers."

Yoruichi half-listened to Sanageyama's begrudging second apology, the pain from her shoulder and Isshin's overwhelming presence suppressed as she scanned the area for any changes in the ambient spiritual pressure. Yet her thoughts kept returning to Kisuke's frustrating smile before they left Karakura Town. After he handed her an outfit identical to the one she was wearing - and before she backhanded him squarely in the nose- he bragged how 'lucky' she was to be wearing one of his special Gigai before explaining the assemble contained enough Life Fibers from Riruka Dokugamine's raiment to trick Ragyo Kiryuin's barrier.

How the hell did the bastard know she planned on changing her mind?

"How much longer do you need?"

"Less than a minute," Inumuta was unfazed by Yoruichi's bluntness, years of dealing with Jakuzure's snarky comments and Gamagori's strict adherence to rules and regulations granting him a significant measure of social immunity.

Sanageyama cursed under his breath, drawing a disgruntled glare from Inumuta. Nudist Beach and Lady Satsuki anticipated thousands of COVERS standing in their way, not freaking clones of Xcution! Beating Yukio's imaginary creatures and that stupid fire-breathing dragon had strained his Blade Regalia to its limit. And fighting Esdeath during the Great Culture and Sports Festival had been the most difficult battle of his life. Sure, his Goku Uniform received a small boost in power thanks to Iori's handiwork but nobody expected Ragyo Kiryuin to pull this kind of sneak attack.

She was literally throwing the rulebook out the window!

"And... Honnouji Academy's state-of-the-art security systems are now offline."

Lacking any dramatic flourish aside from his deadpan announcement the doors leading into the Underground Server Farm opened, the klaxons muted by the virus spreading through the security systems. As the chilled atmosphere of the chamber spilled into the corridor, fogging his glasses while blowing away errant strands of Life Fibers, Inumuta shut his laptop before turning to Yoruichi, "My little 'surprise' is currently feeding junk data to the auditory and visual sensors. We should have more than enough time to disable the Life Fiber generator and leave before Ragyo Kiryuin or her associates realize what happened."

Yoruichi pushed off the wall, grabbing Sanageyama's shoulder before he stepped through the open doors, "Hold on a second, Sanageyama."

"What? Is it the goddamn Grand Couturier?"

"Something's not right," she ignored the teenager's well-deserved apprehension, the words emerging with some reluctance as she stepped through the opened gateway into the massive chamber. Someone like Ragyo Kiryuin, who patiently waited more than a decade without tipping her hand to take down Isshin, wouldn't leave a few COVERS guarding the generator for the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier. There had to be something else. Years of commanding the Onmitsukido sharpened her instincts. Every nerve was on edge, muscles tensing in preparation for anything, "It shouldn't have been this easy."

"You have a point," Sanageyama grumbled, relieved at not having to worry about the Grand Couturier pulling a sneak attack, "Those COVERS barely put up a fight. But holy crap this place is big!"

The sudden change in topic threw both Yoruichi and Inumuta through a loop, the latter rolling his eyes at the former Athletic Committee Chair's childish idiocy. Ignorant of the reaction he glanced to the left, sewn eyes focusing on the servers stretching nearly two hundred feet into the darkness, which was roughly twice the height of the room if the reverberations from his footsteps painted an accurate picture. Rubbing his hands together, goosebumps forming and breath visible from the biting cold, he grimaced at the barely audible ringing on the edge of his senses, "Why did Lady Satsuki even need all this fancy equipment?"

"The Underground Server Farm's original purpose was simulating battlefield scenarios between Honnouji Academy and other high schools. Determining the best courses of action for Lady Satsuki to achieve victory while factoring in external variables - such as Matoi and Ichigo's unexpected enrollment - required immense computational power."

Inumuta disregarded Sanageyama's subsequent response, filing away his grumbling for future reference, before deciding to finally acknowledge the eldritch elephant in the room, "I'm guessing that's the Life Fiber generator."

His sarcasm fell upon deaf ears as he stared at the structure suspended near the back of the Underground Server Farm, thick strands of Life Fibers leaving the generator before vanishing into the ceiling, "Interesting. It appears Ragyo Kiryuin modified Isshin Kurosaki's original design."

Yoruichi glowered at the unexpected development, "Will this change anything?"

"Not at all."

Inumuta turned away from the generator suspended precariously above the Underground Server Farm's central platform, the elevated terrace serving as the hub for Honnouji Academy's systems, "I simply need to connect into the central terminal, bypass the customized security protocols designed to prevent foreign espionage and shut down the automated defenses. All fairly straightforward. If all goes well, the generator should be disabled in a matter of -"

"Hold on, Inumuta!"

The tension was audible in Sanageyama's voice, drowning out Inumuta's explanation as he sprinted around Yoruichi. Sneakers skidding against the metal floor as he stomped to a halt halfway to the central platform, he clenched his fists, listening to the nuances and shifting pitch of the mechanical whining on the edges of his senses. Brow creased in frustration, mouth pursed into a grimace, he slammed a foot against the ground. Ears straining as the accompanying echo reverberated throughout the chamber, he stiffened at the almost perceptible sound of metal creaking beneath rubber-soled boots.

"We're not alone!"

He unsheathed his shinai in one fluid motion, the wooden weapon sporting several cracks and dents, before aggressively pointing to his right, "Yoruichi! Twenty-seven feet to the right of the generator! Behind the fifth server row from the front!"

"Shakkahō!"

An orb of crimson red energy coalesced above Yoruichi's palm before Sanageyama finished giving directions. As bulges of superheated flames licked her curled fingers, the sphere of spiritual energy growing larger by the second, she ignored Inumuta's apprehensive warning about hitting the generator, acknowledging the prediction by shouting the technique's name at the top of her lungs. She already knew thanks to Isshin's verbal charades and Kisuke's explanation what would happen if the containment shield of a Life Fiber generator was damaged beyond repair.

Yet as the spiritual flames erupted from her palm, carving a path of destruction through the chamber, Yoruichi stiffened when the Hado spontaneously dissipated into crimson embers.

"What!?"

Her eyes widened, shock momentarily overwhelming rational thought. Damn it, she was an idiot! Cursing her stupidity as Kisuke's warning about Life Fibers returned to the forefront of her mind, she all but flinched when an overconfident voice echoed through the darkness.

"You really shouldn't use dangerous techniques around strange machinery."

Yuu Akiyama kept his pace purposely slow and methodical - purely to build suspense and increase tension - as he marched towards the front of the platform, an amiable smirk plastered across his face. Flicking the olive-green burglar's cap of his Lâche Raiment, one arm resting lazily upon his knee as he propped a boot on the metal railing preventing an ignoble end at the hand of Yoruichi Shihoin, the self-proclaimed coward tapped a finger against the air-filtration mask covering the lower half of his face, "Now this is a surprise..."

Despite extensive precautionary measures ranging from modifications to his Lâche Raiment based upon Houka Inumuta's acoustic cancelling software, subsonic and supersonic white noise generators and concealing his scent - under the assumption Sanageyama might infiltrate Honnouji Academy in Ragyo's absence - he was still detected. It was a black mark upon his nearly impeccable record, which is why he clapped enthusiastically at the blind teenager, "Your Shingantsu is impressive, Uzu Sanageyama. It pinpointed my location before I had the opportunity to activate the anti-intruder defenses."

"You!"

His amiable smirk widened at Yoruichi Shihoin's animosity, her anger tempered by knowledge of their last encounter. Raising two fingers to his forehead as he saluted the woman who relentlessly hunted him halfway across Japan without resting, Yuu chuckled in a friendly manner, his eyes falling upon her missing arm, "And a fine evening to you, Yoruichi. You're looking well for someone who survived against Lady Ragyo."

Yoruichi's mouth twitched, "Addressing me so informally? I should beat some respect into you."

"But we both know you won't ."

Yuu paced alongside the railing, grinning beneath his air-filtration mask, "Because right now you're thinking - what has he planned? He almost took down Kinue Kinagase with barely any preparation. What could he accomplish after ten hours of uninterrupted work. And how did he know Houka Inumuta would sneak into Honnouji Academy to disable the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier while Lady Ragyo was preoccupied with other matters?"

The smack of leather slapping against itself- courtesy of his flame-retardant gloves - snapped his guests from their shock. Threading his fingers together, the unmistakable glint of wires immediately drawing Yoruichi's attention, Yuu chuckled, "Don't look surprised. After all, it's just common sense. Aside from Kisuke Urahara, he's... wait, I changed my mind."

Something overcame the member of Xcution as he stopped walking, his grin widening, "On second thought, there's no reason to explain anything to you. Why, you might ask? Because Hououmaru spent quite a while this morning emphasizing the importance of this generator. She insisted the barrier was the only thing preventing Nudist Beach from -"

"Heh... pulling this trick again?"

Yoruichi caught the Life Fibers wires, the razor-sharp threads wrapping harmlessly around the Tailoring Glove attached to her hand. Rotating her arm with an angry grunt, snagging the wires underneath her elbow, she grinned maliciously before pulling, dragging Yuu forward with enough force that he slammed against the metal railing. Her muscles twitching seconds later when hundreds of volts traveled down the Life Fibers, little more than a tickle compared to Shunko, she tightened her hold on the taut wires, "Now, Sanageyama!"

"You're finished!"

The teenager sprinted around the shinigami his Blade Regalia transforming in a vivid burst of green and gold stars. Screw being careful! There wasn't any reason to hold back if Ragyo Kiryuin's psychopathic employees already knew they were coming. Leaping straight into the air, armored gauntlets slamming together as power coursed through his regalia, Sanageyama had only a moment for his Shingantsu to analyze Yuu's relaxed posture before dozens of Anti-Life Fiber needles pierced his Goku Uniform from every direction.

"What the fuck!?"

His Blade Regalia untransformed in a flash of muted crimson as he slammed into the ground, spittle flying from his mouth, "I-Impossible!"

"I guess I was lying about the anti-intruder defenses," Yuu released the razor-sharp wires twisted around Yoruichi's fingers while Sanageyama stumbled onto his feet, splotches of blood coating his Goku Uniform. The turrets throughout the room were designed to disable any clothing with active Life Fibers, modified over the last few hours to target anything other than his raiment. Of course, the Anti-Life Fiber needles weren't powerful enough to work on Kamui. But he didn't need to worry about Ichigo Kurosaki or Ryuko. After all, only a heartless monster would alter their Kamui to bypass Ragyo Kiryuin's barrier.

But Satsuki Kiryuin's Elite Four were fair game.

"Don't fall for his tricks, Yoruichi."

Inumuta carefully slid his laptop underneath the nearest server, protecting the cherished possession from Yuu Akiyama's machinations. Aware that said member of Xcution was watching the entire time, which negated the purpose of hiding his laptop, he cleared his throat, "Anti-Life Fiber technology is only effective against Goku Uniforms and, if the circumstances are perfect, Kamui. Your abilities, on the other hand, are spiritually-based. There is no correlation between shinigami and Life Fibers, meaning none of Lady Satsuki's countermeasures will affect your performance. However, you've already experienced Yuu Akiyama's tactical brilliance first-hand, not to mention his efforts in Seattle and London."

His voice lowered into a tense whisper, "Which is why I'm quite certain you're about to walk into a trap."

"I know."

White lightning crackled between her clenched fingers, pulsing alongside her heartbeat before traveling towards her shoulder in vicious waves of spiritual energy. Her expression frozen in tranquil fury when the technique vaporized her sweater, leaving only a skintight sleeveless black shirt protecting her modesty, she released a single, steadying breath, "Sanageyama, stay back."

Her voice stopped Sanageyama's protests before the thought even crossed the teenager's mind, "Don't let anything happen to Inumuta. I'll deal with this coward."

"Got it! Kick his ass, Yoruichi!"

Yuu observed the dangerous aura surrounding Yoruichi Shihoin while Uzu Sanageyama retreated to a reasonably safe distance. Jumping onto the metal railing with a small skip in his step, balanced perfectly despite the precariousness of the situation and his opponent's ability cover hundreds of feet faster than the Grand Couturier, he clapped his hands together, the muffled sound echoing loudly, "Well, if you're bringing out something like Shunko, it's only fair to stop holding back myself."

Wires flashed between his gloved fingers as he gave a curt bow, "Now the, Yoruichi, let's fight in a fair, cowardly way."

Yoruichi spat at the mocking gesture, "Fair and cowardly, huh? You've got some nerve saying that after your little stunt in Osaka."

"... you're absolutely right. So, why don't we make things a bit more interesting?"

The razor-sharp threads vanished into his sleeves as he pointed downwards, smirking at Yoruichi's rampant paranoia, "You have my word that I won't move from this spot. Nothing is attached to my body or raiment. No wires or harnesses are hidden out of view, ready to pull me away at the last second. And the Grand Couturier is currently finishing Shinra Koketsu on the other side of Honnouji Academy, so you don't have to worry about any unexpected guests. So please, take your time. Breathe deeply and calm your nerves. You shouldn't waste this golden opportunity."

"Take him down, Yoruichi!"

Inumuta shouted at the top of his lungs when the when the significance of Yuu Akiyama's air-filtration mask became apparent, "He's filled the room with -"

He stumbled, darkness tainting the edges of his vision as the world suddenly grew out of focus. Collapsing to his knees, numbed fingers grasping the floor for support, Inumuta struggled to understand the situation, "That air-filtration mask you're wearing... you filled this room with gas, didn't you?"

"You damn coward," Sanageyama snarled, slamming his shinai against the ground as his limbs grew increasingly unresponsive.

"Thank you, that's the highest praise for me."

Yuu whistled jauntily while leaping off the railing, hands folded within his raiment's pockets when Yoruichi staggered, Shunko flickering alongside her wavering consciousness, "I'll act as cowardly as possible - using underhanded tactics and disrespectful methods - to win, no matter the cost. The gas you're breathing? It's a powerful and fast-acting anesthetic that's odorless, colorless and tasteless. Designed specifically to counter your Shingantsu."

"But when dealing with someone connected to Kisuke Urahara, one cannot be too careful."

He propped a foot against the handrail as Sanageyama collapsed with a breathless curse, hands folded underneath his chin when Inumuta followed suit moments later. Domino-masked eyes locked upon Yoruichi when she remained standing, wobbling slightly but still possessing most of her faculties, Yuu raised two fingers while shaking his head, "Do you remember the COVERS you destroyed outside this room? I coated them with another anesthetic, one that evaporates when struck with enough physical force."

The woman's ability to conceal her disbelief was laudable. But then again, Yoruichi was intimately connected to Kisuke Urahara, "It's a little overkill, sure, but you're not an ordinary woman. Even with your reflexes numbed by the anesthetics, I'm almost afraid to leave this platform. After all, who knows what someone of your caliber, who fought Lady Ragyo, could accomplish with the slightest opening?"

"Flattery will get you nowhere. But I'll give you credit for one thing..."

Yoruichi laughed at the teenager, mocking his boastful taunt with a predatory smirk. Yuu Akiyama was a cowardly genius but she fought opponents both smarter and stronger. Dealing with countless traps and contingencies meant nothing when Kisuke did the exact same thing on a daily basis, "Filling this room with anesthetic gas was ingenious. But it won't stop me from kicking your ass."

"That's quite the interesting threat, Yoruichi. But I think you're forgetting one crucial detail."

She scowled at the mocking tone, "Oh?"

" This time I actually have hostages."

A sharp gasp escaped disbelieving lips when Yuu twisted his wrist, exposing the detonator clasped between his fingers, "You do remember! But allow me to explain - right before you arrived I planted high-grade plastic explosives around the entrance to this room. You might be fast enough to escape the blast radius but what about Satsuki Kiryuin's friends? Once my finger leaves this trigger, you'll have less than a quarter of a second to react, which in your condition isn't enough time to save either Inumuta or Sanageyama."

Her knuckles cracked at the ultimatum, teeth clenched as she resisted the desire to throw caution to the wind. Yuu Akiyama wasn't bluffing. The anesthetics clouding her thoughts was powerful. Sparing a quick glance over her shoulder at Inumuta and Sanageyama's prone forms, Yoruichi bit the inside of her cheek before grinning, "Heh... that's cute . I'm the Goddess of Flash, remember? Go ahead, press that trigger. I guarantee you'll be dead before your thumb stops moving."

"You know, you might have a point. I mean, you ran circles around the Grand Couturier," Yuu leaned over the railing, meeting her smile with one of his own, "Here, catch!"

The detonator left his fingers without fanfare, spinning through the darkness over the edge of the platform. As Yoruichi tracked the blinking device, her attention momentarily drawn to the well-crafted yet fake detonator, Yuu reached around to the small of his back. Removing the Carnifex taped to the inside of his Lâche Raiment, the Anti-Life Fiber weapon something he borrowed from Tsumugu Kinagase, he rapidly depressed the trigger just as Yoruichi realized his admission of a bluff was actually a bluff.

With a sharp bang the first needle left the weapon faster than the speed of sound, piercing Yoruichi's right thigh in a spray of blood. Firing five more times, muscles straining from the recoil, he waited until the Carnifex was empty before continuing in the same pleasant tone.

"Please accept my sincerest apologies."

Yuu wasn't surprised by Yoruichi's ability to withstand six Anti-Life Fiber needles piercing the muscles and ligaments in her legs. Tossing the Carnifex aside, the weapon clattering to the ground before sliding away into the darkness, he smirked at her unyielding perseverance despite the copious amount of blood pooling beneath her feet, "But you're far too dangerous of an opponent to fight."

An awkward silence passed between them before Yoruichi fell forward, collapsing onto the floor with a dull thud, "Those needles are coated with a powerful tranquilizer. You should pass out in a few moments. But your stubbornness is concerning. You see, by this point I would usually leave. Yet if I don't stick around and watch you fall unconscious myself, I won't be able to inform Hououmaru everything's secure."

"... bastard..."

The look in Yoruichi Shihoin's eyes as she slipped into unconsciousness - the hate-filled glare promising endless pain and agony - was relieving. Such honesty implied the combination of anesthetics and muscle relaxant were too much, even for someone of her prowess. Yet he paused at the top of the stairs leading from the platform, one foot hovering inches above the first step. Humming softly as he stepped backwards, domino-masked eyes carefully observing woman's breathing and posture, Yuu tapped a finger against his chin, mouth pursed into a contemplative frown.

"You know, I'm still not convinced you're unconscious."

A heavily threaded and spiked whip uncoiled from his raiment in a flash of multicolored light, "Even with your legs damaged beyond repair, one of your arms torn off by Lady Ragyo and rendered unconscious, I can't shake the feeling you're planning something. Perhaps you're waiting until I enter your range before leaping off the ground, hoping to take me out with a single punch."

He snapped the whip against the ground while cautiously approaching the edge of the platform, "So, if you don't mind, I'm going to use this torture whip to tear apart your body from the safety of this -"

The boot smashing into his ribs ended the taunt alongside an explosion of white lightning.

Yuu gagged from the physical force, abdominal muscles reinforced by his Lâche Raiment caving beneath the shinigami's attack, as he flew backwards, crashing through multiple rows of servers before slamming into the far wall of the Underground Server Farm. Recovering his bearings, vision slightly swimming, in time to witness Yoruichi close the distance, flashing across the room with tendrils of lightning coating her fist, he pushed himself out of the wall, barely avoiding the life-ending punch by the skin of his teeth. As the wall shattered in the wake of his retreat, warping around the woman's hand before exploding in an eruption of lightning and turning his graceful landing into a painful roll, he snapped his fingers, detonating the starch grenades left behind by his raiment.

"Tch... damn."

He grimaced when Yoruichi landed in a cat-like crouch, steam wafting from her mildly injured body. How the hell was she still standing after several point-blank starch grenades to the face? They were strong enough to knock Esdeath down a few pegs. And the last time he checked - and he did - Yoruichi Shihoin wasn't a Life Fiber Hybrid. Yet she was perfectly fine despite the blood oozing down her face, burns covering her arms and needles still lodged in her legs.

"You are stubborn. You know that, Yoruichi?"

Sweat dripped down his cheek, following the contours of the air-filtration mask when the electricity enveloping the woman intensified. Yoruichi's last attack managed to crack three of his ribs, leaving him at a significant disadvantage even with the anesthetics and tranquilizer coursing through her bloodstream. But his nervousness instantly transformed into confidence when Yoruichi stumbled, limbs trembling and breath hitching.

"But it looks like Shunko was a one-shot deal."

He casually played off his previous nervousness, smirking at Yoruichi's defiance before adding in a more reserved tone, "At this point it should be straightforward - even for a coward such as myself - to finish you off."

"You think I'm going to let a punk like you take me down!? Don't make -"

Yuu swung his arm forward, sending the spiked whip cracking through the air before she finished speaking. As blood oozed onto the ground, dripping from the jagged gash on Yoruichi's stomach, he raised a finger, "That's one. The longest anyone's lasted against my torture whip without losing consciousness is eighteen lashes. And thanks to the anesthetic and needles in your legs, it's taking everything you have left to not pass out. Which means I can continue doing this!"

The whip cracked four more times, cutting deeply into Yoruichi's body. Now thoroughly convinced she wasted most of her remaining energy kicking him in the stomach, Yuu stopped on the cusp of a sixth lash, domino-masked eyes narrowed. It looked like the woman was teetering on the verge of unconsciousness, the intensity of his combo mixed with the chemicals in her bloodstream finally taking their toll. Smirking at the rapidity in which the battle shifted in his favor, chuckling at how well his cowardice paid off, he coiled the whip around his arm before casually inquiring.

"How well do you know Ryuko?"

"... what?"

The inanity of the question tore Yoruichi from her semiconscious state, leading him to shrug his shoulders, "Oh, nothing. Now, I believe we were on number -"

A mechanical whine screeching with a deepening electronic backdrop interrupted his threatening taunt. Quickly turning around, missing the half-grin on Yoruichi's bloody lips, Yuu's eyes widened at the unexpected sight. Standing in front of the Underground Server Farm's central terminal, his fingers typing commands into the laptop connected directly into Honnouji

Academy's systems, was Houka Inumuta.

"From your uncharacteristic silence, I suppose you're curious how I'm still conscious."

Inumuta raised his left arm, exposing the off-colored patch concealed underneath his Probe Regalia's extended sleeves, "You can thank Kiskeya Urahara. Right before leaving Karakura Town he gave me something rather special. An invention with the singular purpose of filtering chemicals and toxins from the bloodstream."

Yuu found himself momentarily speechless by the admission. It was one thing preparing plans and contingencies against one's opponents - such as the trapdoor concealed on the other side of the chamber - but predicting his countermeasures down to the exact method of delivery? No wonder Ragyo hated Kiskeya Urahara with unadulterated passion previously reserved for Isshin Kurosaki's life choices, "Kisuke Urahara, huh? This complicates things. But at least Hououmaru will be busy dealing with Nudist Beach. She's always had a knack for creating unusual punishments for those who fail Lady Ragyo. So, you faked unconscious until Yoruichi kicked me away from the generator?"

"On the contrary, I merely waited for a golden opportunity to fulfill our part in Lady Satsuki's plan."

The Life Fiber generator finished shutting down as Inumuta calmly flicked his glasses, "Of course, one errant twitch would have jeopardized everything. It's quite difficult to suppress basic bodily functions. But your focus on Yoruichi - and whether she was faking the effects of the anesthetic - made waiting until you were preoccupied easier than expected."

He shut his laptop with a soft click, ignoring the sudden increase in Ragyo Kiryuin's monstrous spiritual pressure, "But I'm sure acting cowardly to achieve your objectives is something you understand quite well."

---

...

---

"Gottverdammt!"

The blood-soaked needles clattered onto the asphalt as Heinkel tore them from her shoulder. How could she be so goddamn stupid? Only a rank amateur would fall for such an obvious trap! Grunting more from frustration than actual pain as her regeneration kicked into overdrive, sealing the ragged wounds while flesh and ligaments shifted back together, her annoyance transformed into venomous hatred upon noticing the irreparable damage to her cassock.

Verdammt ! She was going to put another bullet... nadel... right between the blasphemous abomination's eyes!

Her glasses shimmered in the moonlight as she grasped the remnants of her cassock's right sleeve, removing the tattered fabric with a single, sharp pull . Unflinching when the scraps of clothing blew away, disappearing over the side of the highway into the darkened waters of Tokyo Bay, Heinkel clenched her fingers until her knuckles bled white. Did this abomination have any idea how difficult it was fitting into a cassock with her height and physical proportions? Exhaling sharply, goosebumps racing down her well-toned arm, she vented her anger through a string of colorful curses in her native tongue, earning a disapproving frown from the shinigami down the road.

How the hell did he know German ?

An Anti-Life Fiber pistol slid from her remaining sleeve as she spat onto the ground, removing the coppery taste of blood and pushing the thought from her mind, "Playing dead won't work."

Even with the creature's arms painfully contorted from their sockets, thick straps of black fabric pinning it face-first against the asphalt, she stopped walking just beyond its reach. She had experience dealing with monsters feigning defeat. She could see the monster's eyes flickering towards the katana to her left, as if testing its chances of escaping. Stepping forward once she was certain it could not break free, carefully avoiding the spiritual fabric bolted into the pavement, she scoffed when it looked upwards, confusion buried beneath the sociopathic apathy.

"Confused how I overcame your unholy ability, monster? Is your soulless mind even capable of such introspection?"

She was lucky, something unnecessary to mention given present company. It was only thanks to the revolutionary experiments which transformed her into Iscariot's most effective asset against enemies of God that her body resisted the Life Fibers implanted into her shoulder long enough to make the pragmatic decision. But emptying a full clip of high-velocity, armor-penetrating needles into the festering wound at point-blank range had still hurt like a hündin . If the shinigami hadn't arrived when he did - surprising the foul creature during its moment of triumph - Heinkel had the unnerving suspicion she might not have walked away with her mind and sanity intact.

"My apologies, Miss Wolfe."

Tessai Tsukabishi brushed aside the Life Fiber creature's underwhelming reaction towards the Bakudo. Its struggles had ceased almost immediately upon falling to the ground, something warranting suspicion given the circumstances. Dusting some errant Life Fibers from his apron and shoulders, the messy result of tearing apart dozens of COVERS upon his retreat from the greater Tokyo Metropolitan Area, he adjusted his glasses, the frames slightly askew, "Are you alright?"

"I'm fine."

Heinkel raised her arm as a concussive shockwave of spiritual energy burst against the highway. Staring at the incapacitated creature while the accompanying explosion of multicolored light overwhelmed everything, shining like the sun thousands of feet above the ground, she waited until the chaotic wind died down and darkness returned before inquiring, her voice a decibel lower than normal, "This spiritual technique is impressive. What did you call it again?"

"Bakudo."

" Bakudo," she emphasized the foreign word, pronouncing it perfectly despite her accent, while aiming the empty weapon between the creature's eyes. It was mocking her. Even bound by spiritual fabrics beyond humanity's capabilities, its weapon out of reach and raiment neutralized, the abomination took amusement from her guilt. Hissing at the sadistic glint visible in its eyes, snarling at the burning wreckage reflected off her glasses, the tension was shattered when the shinigami loudly cleared his throat.

"Please forgive any insolence, but your regenerative capabilities are extraordinary. If you don't mind, how did -"

"Sorry."

The half-hearted apology was muffled by her hand as she placed a cigarette between her lips. She was thankful for the change in subject, even though the question involved secrets the Vatican had killed dozens of humans to protect. As the taste of nicotine filled her lungs, she slowly lowered her arm, considering how to answer the question. Maxwell might have died an ignoble death due to Ragyo Kiryuin's heinous mind control, leaving her temporarily in command of Iscariot until the demon was destroyed, but there were some things she couldn't share, not even with shinigami, "I cannot divulge that information."

Smoke curled around her face as she pulled a fresh magazine for the Carnifex from her cassock, the ammunition spontaneously appearing in her waiting fingers. That reminded her. She needed to properly thank Kisuke Urahara once Ragyo Kiryuin's blackened soul was burning in the pits of Hell. Having hundreds of magazines without worrying about excessive weight slowing her movements was a verdammt miracle.

"But your assistance was helpful."

She replaced the empty magazine in a fraction of a second, briefly examining the weapon for problems, before firing all six needles into the bound abomination's head. Sneering at the Life Fibers shimmering within the new corpse, the thick blood oozing upon the asphalt lacking the consistency and coloration of anything created by god, she waited until smoke stopped rising from the Carnifex's barrel before breaking the awkward silence, "I didn't expect that demon to have these creatures at her beck and call."

"I appreciate your gratitude, Miss Wolfe, but you should withhold such pleasantries until the battle is concluded."

Heinkel frowned at the shinigami's candor demeanor, an eyebrow quirking above her glasses when the spiritual fabric pinning the corpse onto the road dissipated. She should be pleased with this conclusion. Yet her righteous fury at the abomination would not... could not... vanish. Even with the failed mimicry of humanity lying in a growing pool of its foul blood, eyes staring sightlessly towards Honnou City, she wanted to stomp its head into a bloody pulp. Only the sacred vows she recited upon swearing loyalty to Iscariot stayed her hand. She was someone who struck fear into the enemies of God and inspired reverence in His children. The notion of desecrating a corpse, even of one's enemies, shouldn't even cross her mind.

But this sociopathic creature deserved not a shred of sympathy. Not after it attacked her transportation without warning, puppeteering the wounded pilots into killing each other before leaving. All without losing its insufferable and arrogant smirk.

"We need to move," she reloaded the Carnifex before firing another three needles into the corpse, just for good measure, "How fast can you..."

The question died in her throat when a prickling sensation unrelated to the bitter cold or the slowly cooling corpse raced down her spine. Turning around, following the shinigami's line of sight, her lips immediately quirked into an amused smirk. The Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier, the blasphemous creation which had loomed above the highway since she emerged from the wreckage of her transportation, was dissolving. Patches of scintillating crimson were unraveling before her eyes, leaving both Honnou City and the academy perched upon the artificial island's summit vulnerable to attack.

And almost instantaneously Ragyo Kiryuin assaulted Isshin Kurosaki with renewed ferocity.

"Ragyo Kiryuin is rather upset."

She ignored the pressure upon her shoulders as pink-tinged explosions rippled above the Tokyo skyline, courtesy of Nonon Jakuzure's regalia. Aware of the COVERS floating towards their position, the suit-like creatures likely summoned by the corpse lying at her feet before its death, Heinkel reloaded her weapon with more passion than was necessary, "We should fall back before -"

"STAND CLEAR, MISS WOLFE!"

Tessai didn't hesitate when the presumed deceased creature's fingers twitched. Clenching his shoulder for support as the Life Fiber being sprang off the ground only to run into Heinkel's boot, false cartilage and bone audibly shattering under the force sending it flying several feet into the air, he waited until she leapt out of range before thrusting his palm forward, "Hado Number Eighty Eight - Hiryū Gekizoku Shinten -"

"COMIN' THROUGH!"

A supersonic boom interrupted the assistant manager's incantation when Ryuko appeared out of nowhere. Armored fingers gripping the Scissor Blade, trails of crimson energy exploding from Senketsu's thrusters, she spiraled tightly over Tessai's shoulder, reciprocating his surprise with a predatory grin as she sliced through the Life Fiber creature. This was almost too easy! It was nothing like the one Ichigo destroyed before they separated back in Tokyo! Smirking at the memory of that annoying bastard's shocked expression when Ichigo destroyed its stupid-looking raiment, Ryuko briefly locked eyes with Heinkel before making a ninety degree turn and rocketing towards Honnouji Academy.

"Heh..."

Heinkel shook her head, smirking at Ryuko's impeccable timing. But as the foul creature spontaneously exploded, raining strands of burning Life Fibers onto the highway, she ignored the flames licking her body. Something big was coming. She could feel it. Her straw-blond hair rustling gently as the burning threads slowly cooled, turning into embers and ash which scattered into the darkness, she clenched her empty hand into a fist when the ground suddenly shook.

"You creatures don't know when to give up, do you?"

An identical Anti-Life Fiber pistol appeared in her right hand as she turned around, eyebrows quirked at the massive COVERS rising from the darkened waters. Craning her head back as the creature loomed higher and higher, eventually casting the highway in perpetual darkness when the moon vanished behind its suit-like form, she was only partially aware of Tessai uncharacteristically cursing under his breath.

"Tch..."

She quickly reloaded the armor-penetrating weapons when dozens of slits opened across the COVERS, spheres of Life Fibers swiveling until they focused downwards with animalistic intensity. Hundreds, perhaps even thousands, of innocent humans had been devoured by this abomination. Yet rescuing them was impossible. They were likely already dead, their bodies drained of energy and blood by the COVERS. But still, this creature needed to be destroyed. And she would accomplish that feat no matter what it took.

"Hmm... it's larger than a Gillian."

The way the shinigami commented on the situation instantly dispelled what little tension existed. Crushing her cigarette beneath a boot as the COVERS loomed more than moved, one misshapen fist rising above the highway, Heinkel spat onto the ground before chuckling. Compared to the monster reduced to naught but scraps of Life Fibers by Ryuko... compared to Alucard... defeating this creature was hardly going to be a challenge.

---

...

---

"You dare use something so annoying!?"

The Needle Blade ricocheted off Isshin's sword, multicolored sparks dancing across the edges of her vision. Her second strike was blocked when the man moved, forcing the other blade away from his neck. Yet Ragyo didn't care about his reciprocity. She pushed forward without abandon, pursuing the man through the skies above Honnou City. Every exchange of their blades - the explosions of spiritual energy and bursts of rainbow light - only worsened her growing ire. How dare Isshin pull such an egregious stunt! Did he think she was another one of his pathetic colleagues, those naked apes begging for scraps of power?

His impudent behavior *demand*ed compensation!

"I expected such an immature technique from a child!"

She allowed Isshin's hardened Life Fiber weapon to scrape against her cheek, leaving a jagged wound blemishing her features she momentarily prevented her Life Fibers from stitching shut. Taking advantage of his surprise, using Isshin's bewilderment towards something he was all but certain she was incapable of doing, she pivoted gracefully with a soft clack, fingers slipping against the grooved handles of the Needle Blades when she smashed her foot into his ribs, "Have you no shame!?"

"What can I say?"

Isshin brushed aside the phenomenal strength behind Ragyo's kick, grunting in minor discomfort as he slipped away before she attacked again. Three... no, four... of his ribs were nearly broken, something any lesser man would find difficult to overcome while dealing with an opponent of Ragyo's caliber. But he was perfectly fine. With an exaggerated pivot - mimicking the constant clacking of her heels - he shifted around Ragyo's rebuttal attack, avoiding the Needle Blades aiming for his chest. Only slightly bothered by the strands of silver hair falling in front of his eyes, the severed Life Fibers sending a mild shiver down his spine, he immediately countered with a straight thrust that sent Ragyo reeling, blood spraying from the wound across her stomach.

"You're a woman with high standards. And I'm positive you'll beat me senseless if I tried using anything from Nudist Beach. So, I decided to think outside the box."

Thin, yet substantial, cuts appeared upon his shihakusho when Ragyo took his comment as an offense. Locked into the deadly embrace, his strength faltering against the relentless fury of an insulted woman, he nevertheless broke the tension with a bit of levity, "But if it makes you feel any better, Ichigo had the same reaction when I used that move on him."

Ragyo twitched at the inane statement, the brief lapse in concentration allowing Isshin enough time to retreat. Why on earth did he have to say something so merde absurd!? She knew he was mocking her, purposely wearing down her patience with childish antics. Yet as she broke away from the man, skidding upon the air before arresting her momentum with a soft clack, she found herself simply not caring. The Original Life Fiber's voice, the whispers urging her to destroy Isshin for his betrayal, fell upon deaf ears. At the moment, fighting against the man she'd ever loved thousands of feet above the ground, the only thought filtering through her mind was beating manners into Isshin's thick skull.

After all, there was some time until dearest Nui finished Shinra Koketsu.

With some reluctance - just enough to garner Isshin's suspicion - she released the Needle Blades, allowing the twin swords to fall away from her hands. In the moment that immediately followed, while Isshin was preoccupied with determining her motives, she impaled her left hand upon his blade. Twisting her wrist, pulling the man into a lover's embrace while gripping his weapon with bloody fingers, she breathed deeply, chuckling at the realization playing across his adorning features.

"That may be true, Isshin..."

The sound of shattering cartilage - flesh rippling around her other fist as it smashed into his face - was downright cathartic . And as Isshin recovered, his Life Fibers weaving damaged flesh back into place, she punched him again, spittle flying from his mouth, "But I'm still insulted you would even consider using such an asinine move against me!"

Expressing her disappointment with Isshin's many mistakes in life, conveying her longstanding frustration concerning his reluctance in reciprocating her feelings, was something long overdue. Yet as her fist smashed into his cheek for a third, fourth and fifth time, Ragyo felt no satisfaction. The man's blood was coating her fingers, the bruises on his face visible, but the pleasure previously thrumming through her Life Fibers had abated. Something wasn't right. Despite everything - betraying Original Life Fiber, assisting the naked apes and training Satsuki to use Junketsu - Isshin should be putting up more of a fight.

It was almost as if...

"Are you stalling ?"

The question carried a level of annoyance as she callously removed her impaled hand from Isshin's weapon, flesh sliding off the razor-sharp metal with a sickening squelch . She should have seen this coming. Isshin's presence was, after all, nothing more than an obvious - and disheartening diversion. Something to occupy her attention while Satsuki and the naked apes stripped themselves bare trying to stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

"What exactly are you planning, Isshin?"

The accusation rolled off her tongue, annoyance tainting every syllable as she narrowed her eyes, "Are you waiting for Kisuke Urahara? Or perhaps you're stalling until Satsuki somehow regains the ability to ascend Junketsu into her fashion week apparel?"

Isshin shrugged his shoulders, "Does it really matter why I was stalling?"

"No, I suppose not," Ragyo conceded with a small, yet appreciable, sigh. It was always a hassle dealing with Isshin's childish mannerisms, which had only worn upon her patience since his untimely arrival. Smirking at his subdued reaction, or rather lack thereof, towards the admission, she tucked a strand of silver hair back into place, "But it doesn't really matter. I'm afraid I simply cannot allow you to interfere with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. It's nothing personal, Isshin. Although you'll nevertheless continuing trying to stop me. So, if you don't mind, I'm going to -"

The sentence devolved into a strangled gasp when the barrier surrounding Honnou City disintegrated .

" Quelle ?"

Her amusement vanished as the high-velocity Life Fibers dissipated into nothingness, leaving Shinra Koketsu vulnerable. Confusion mingled with primal fury as she stared downwards at Honnouji Academy, lips quivering in disbelief. She had anticipated Kisuke Urahara inventing something - perhaps a method of locally short-circuiting the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier. But this? This was unexpected! Unfathomable! How was this possible!? The naked apes didn't possess the means of penetrating the barrier without getting torn apart. And the pigs in human clothing didn't have the power to breach Hououmaru's defenses.

"Isshin..."

The single word hung in the darkness, drawn out over several seconds. Why was Isshin being so merde difficult!? Her lips curled furiously at the man's blasé reaction, the triumph upon his face obnoxiously disgusting. Fingers twitching around the Needle Blades as she forcibly stopped herself from attacking the man, scarcely aware of the massive COVERS emerging from Tokyo Bay in response to the pigs in human clothing, she seethed when a streak of familiar crimson light caught her attention.

Ryuko!?

It took the blink of an eye - the amount of time required for her daughter to pass over Honnou City's No-Star neighborhoods - to determine where Ryuko was heading. And in the next fraction of a second she turned away from Isshin, heel clacking as she almost instantaneously cut the distance to her daughter by a third. It was painfully obvious Ryuko's objective was the Sewing Club. Glancing over her shoulder, mouth pursed into a snarl, when Isshin gave pursuit, chasing her through the darkness, she waited until the man was several meters away before abruptly twisting around, spiritual energy coalescing above a manicured fingernail.

"Lumière Divine."

The explosion of multicolored incandescence slammed into Isshin's instinctively risen guard. Faceted beams of light curled around his sword, burning away folds of his shihakusho as her lips curled upwards. It was a shame the divine technique, born from her intimate connection with the Original Life Fiber, couldn't kill Isshin. Horribly maim during the scant seconds required for his wounds to regenerate? Yes, but that wasn't the point. She had no intention of physically injuring the man. Even now, her patience and temper pushed to their limits by his contemptible actions, she found the notion of wounding Isshin completely reprehensible.

A chuckle escaped her lips when Isshin sliced through the technique, turning the divine energy into nothing more than dissipating shards of light. The next moment she punched him in the stomach, taking advantage of his preoccupation to relieve most of her remaining stress. Her mouth quirking into a smirk when Isshin crashed into the bay, sending a column of water rising upwards into the sky, she looked over her shoulder at the crimson passing over the Two-Star dormitories before taking another step.

"What the -"

Her fingers clasped around Ryuko's throat, turning the rest of the question into a strangled gasp, "Oh dear."

She slammed Ryuko against Honnouji Academy's outer walls before her daughter realized what happened, the sickening impact forcing Senketsu out of his flight configuration. As the concrete and metal façade flexed, first cracking and then shattering in an expanding wave of destruction, Ragyo sighed when Ryuko punched her shoulder, wasting Senketsu's standard strength on the ineffective attack, "Children these days simply have no respect for their elders. What make you think you could sneak past your own mother?"

Ryuko coughed when the manicured fingers around her throat tightened, "You ain't... my damn... mom!"

"Your stubbornness is commendable," Ragyo caressed the fabric beneath her fingers, marveling at Senketsu's exquisite quality despite its origin, "But I blame Souichiro for your lack of manners. A daughter should not address her mother that way."

The Needle Blade in her other hand snapped upwards, intercepting the hardened Life Fiber weapon inches from her neck in a screech of metal upon metal. As her arm quivered, muscles unyielding against Ichigo's strength, she stiffened when a flash of blue light and twinkling stars enveloped the youth. His synchronization with Mugetsu was astonishing, almost enough to pull her attention away from Ryuko. The stubbornly curious Kamui had transformed into her battle configuration without a single word on his part, bypassing the unnecessary delays that had plagued Satsuki time and time again.

"Getsuga..."

However, her interest in Ichigo's phenomenal progress was constrained by reality. While intriguing, curiosity about such things came second to the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. And despite the technique's limited range, there existed a small - yet highly consequential - chance the backlash from allowing Ichigo to unleash a Getsuga Tenshou could affect the satellite transmitter in Honnouji Academy's courtyard. Her eyes closed, a smirk pulling at the corners of her mouth, when Isshin's son disappeared in a flash of speed, moving at speeds requiring a modicum of her attention.

It was shameful she didn't have enough time to enthusiastically test Ichigo's newfound abilities.

"... Tenshou!"

She waited until Ichigo stepped within range, the angle of his approach calculated to prevent Ryuko from getting caught in his Getsuga Tenshou. Half-lidded eyes analyzing the energy wrapped around Tournesol, Ragyo smirked before countering the technique with the minimal required effort. The stubborn teenager was immediately stopped when his weapon struck the Needle Blade, hands shaking from the sudden halting of his momentum. But far more importantly - and the cause of the breathless sigh escaping slightly parted lips - deflecting the collected energy towards the sky.

"You really should be more careful, Ichigo."

A sharp intake of air accompanied the cold laughter, sadistic amusement playing out across her features at Ichigo's bewilderment. Releasing Ryuko from her loving embrace as Ichigo recovered from his shock, confusion transforming into a mixture of annoyed stubbornness and embarrassment, she allowed her daughter a moment's respite before smashing the handle of the Needle Blade into her stomach.

"FUCK!"

The obscenity left Ryuko's gasping lips as a strangled cough forced its way from her lungs. What the hell!? She hadn't even seen her bitch of a mom move! Spitfire flew from her mouth as she bent around the weapon, taut muscles quivering at the sensation of having several of her organs rearranged without her permission.

Only subtly aware of Senketsu's voice in the back of her mind, attention focused on the cruel laughter coming from Ragyo, Ryuko screamed when the concussive force behind the seemingly gentle strike sent her crashing through the roof of a Two-Star apartment hundreds of feet away.

"Ryuko!"

Ichigo's concern towards her daughter was touching, almost commendable, as she effortlessly blocked, parried and deflected every one of his attacks. Her arm blurred from the intense speed, lips curled into an amused mockery of a smirk at the amount of effort Ichigo was putting into ending her life. There was no question. Isshin's son was considerably stronger than during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. Perhaps enough to overwhelm dearest Nui. But it was nowhere near her level. Someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber.

"Well, you've certainly grown faster," Ragyo made no effort to chase Ichigo when he retreated, "But your reflexes are somewhat lacking. Is something bothering you, Ichigo?"

"Shut up."

She could tell Ichigo had a lot on his mind. That much was obvious. The tightening of his jaw, the indignation playing across his features while Mugetsu whispered warnings, was proof the youth was determined to continue this charade of a battle, which was perfectly acceptable. The longer Ichigo fought her using every tactic imaginable - and some Satsuki undoubtedly shared during their time together in Karakura Town - the probability he interfered with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet before Nui finished Shinra Koketsu lessened. Her only lament, the single reason she further raised Ichigo's unfounded suspicions, was knowing he would never see the beauty of her plans. Understand the glory of sacrificing humanity - the pigs in human clothing experiencing pale facsimiles of existence - to Life Fibers.

And the impertinent man silhouetted against the full moon.

But why ruin the surprise?

"ISSHIN FLYING DROPKICK!"

Ichigo's eyes widened at the familiar announce before a pair of sandals slammed into the back of his head. Instincts honed over years of surprise attacks, including every battle since he obtained shinigami powers from Rukia, faltered when he tumbled forward, bouncing past an amused Ragyo before crashing into Honnouji Academy. Was his old man seriously doing this now of all times!? His eyebrow twitched when Mugetsu, ignorant of everything prior to her awakening, curiously wondered why his dad attacked them. Pulling himself free, pieces of concrete lodged in his hair, Ichigo expressed his confusion in the most effective way possible.

"What the hell was that for!?"

"Why are you wasting time fighting Ragyo?"

Ichigo shamefully glanced downwards at the armor-piercing question. His old man was right. Why was he wasting time fighting Ragyo Kiryuin? He should have retreated once Ryuko was safe. But now that he had a moment to think, the strangeness of the situation dawned upon him. He could sense the woman's spiritual pressure. But something about its consistency didn't feel right. It was too constrained... too smooth and tranquil... for something fighting his old man. A bead of sweat trickled down his cheek, absorbing into the Life Fibers pressed tightly against the underside of his chin.

"You're right. Sorry about that."

He pushed the train of thought to the back of his mind, momentarily ignoring Mugetsu's concern about his blood pressure. Even after all this time - dealing with Satsuki and her Elite Four, awakening Mugetsu and encountering Nui - Life Fibers still didn't make any damn sense. Scoffing derisively, turning away from the old goat and Ragyo with his mouth twisted into a scowl, Ichigo grabbed Tournesol from its perch in the wall, "Just promise me one thing, all right?"

Mugetsu transformed into Gufū without a single word, monochromatic armor shifting and warping alongside a flash of sapphire light. As the Kamui's twin jets ignited, sending streams of energy blasting towards the ground, he hesitated before snapping, "Don't fall for any stupid tricks, got it? Satsuki told me what happened with Hououmaru. I don't want to save your ass because you didn't see something coming from a mile away!"

A constrained groan rumbled in Isshin's throat at Ichigo's flagrant lack of respect. Yet he stopped himself from saying anything. Chastising his wayward son could wait until after they stopped the Original Life Fiber. Unbothered by the awkward silence when Ichigo rocketed upwards, twisting around Honnouji Academy's fortifications, he took advantage of the brief lull to brush dust from his shihakusho.

"You can drop the act."

His expression didn't waver when Ragyo smiled, malevolence visible beneath the contemptuous amusement, "I know you're still angry."

" Bien sûr, je suis furieux... "

Ragyo laughed, the mirthless sound conveying the fullness of her dissatisfaction. How long had Isshin played the role of a bumbling man? Someone pretending to be human? She could not deny his acting was superb. Yet she remained frustrated with many of his decisions - purposeful or otherwise. It had been... disheartening... when she learned through Hououmaru that he condensed the last twenty years into an absurd and pathetic story. Relegating their relationship into nothing more than plutonic friendship.

Her jaw clenched at the ludicrous notion.

"Simply not to the point of blinding rage."

She folded her arms underneath her bosom when something familiar obtained her attention. It was faint - purposeful so - but sensing that meant everything was falling into place, with or without Isshin's cooperation. Closing her eyes, a feeling of warmth rushing through her Life Fibers, she sighed, traces of anger clinging onto every word, "While losing the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier was tragique - and I'm certain Satsuki is planning something as we speak - I'm not terribly concerned. Nothing in life is infallible. Nor am I bothered with Mr. Akiyama's failure. No, I'm disappointed with you, Isshin. Because whether you like it or not, Ichigo made a valid point."

A muffled whump shook the landscape when Ichigo crashed through Honnouji Academy's walls. Only barely paying attention to the youth, focused instead on Isshin's surprise, Ragyo continued, "After falling for Hououmaru's machinations..."

Her eyes swiveled towards the darkened figure relentlessly chasing Isshin's son, "... why on earth do you keep presuming I have nothing left up my sleeves?"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #35 - The Temporary Transfer Student

This is a continuation (of sorts) of the alternate universe introduced in Kamui Tales #30 - The Temporary Guest.

"Finally! I've been looking everywhere for you, Ichigo."

Renji halfheartedly waved, mental and physical exhaustion preventing anything more enthusiastic, as he walked into the classroom, the box lunch purchased that morning from Kisuke's shop tucked underneath his arm. Collapsing into a chair, groaning as he leaned backwards, he rubbed his sore neck, "Damn it, Kisuke's working me like a dog. Between waiting around for Aizen's next move and helping Ururu move boxes of heavy merchandise, I'm exhausted! I swear, the bastard's purposely torturing me."

It took a few seconds - just long enough to ponder whether Kisuke poisoned the rice in his lunch with a powerful laxative - before he realized the gloomy atmosphere. A deathly pallor enveloped the classroom, muting the background noise of students going to lunch and actually dimming the late morning sun shining through the open windows. Turning to Ichigo, who was scowling more intensely than usual, before glancing at Uryu, who seemed morbidly disturbed by something important, Renji pondered the situation through the one method proven to work.

"Did someone die?"

His tattooed eyebrows twitched when Ichigo turned away, grumbling something under his breath. Oh, it was like that, was it? He grabbed the substitute shinigami's shirt, clenching the fabric hard enough to pull the teenager from his seat. Leaning forward, face nearly pressed against Ichigo's, he seethed, "Hey! I heard that! What the hell do you mean it's none of my damn business!?"

"You want me to say it again!?"

Ichigo was pulled from his depressed funk - something Tatsuki coined during homeroom - by the sheer stupidity of the question. Didn't the bastard know how dangerous it was showing his face around Karakura High School for the next few weeks? He had to know! Nobody could be this stupid! Or did hat-and-clogs not tell him anything? Removing Renji's hand with a well-placed elbow to the stomach, he decided to repeat the question, "Why are you here, Renji?"

For a moment Renji considered punching Ichigo - both to recover his pride and because the guy's mood was seriously starting to piss him off. But he stopped, backing down when his stomach growled. Returning to his lunch, mentally hoping Kisuke didn't screw with his food after what happened last time, he removed the plastic cover,

"I'm here because the Seireitei is still waiting for Aizen's next move. So, until the bastard decides to do something, I'm just another average high school student."

"Wait, you don't know?"

Renji froze at Uryu's question, the clump of rice stopping inches from his mouth, "Huh? What don't I know?"

"Nui Harime," Ichigo glanced towards the windows, muttering the name with the same level of exhaustion reserved for Kenpachi, "It seems my dad promised Ragyo Kiryuin she could stay in our guest room for a couple of weeks while she's off doing something in Europe."

The lieutenant paused at the name, missing the slight breeze as another presence entered the room through the open window. Nui Harime? He knew a lot of people in the Soul Society with names ranging from normal to the absurd. But nothing quite on the level as Nui. Ignoring the growing sense of apprehension as he returned to his lunch, failing to realize Ichigo's attention was focused to his left, the rice just touched his tongue when it hit him like a ton of bricks.

"That psychopath !?"

The ball of rice fell from his mouth, rolling onto his shirt before hitting the floor with a wet thump . He still remembered every vivid detail of that night. Finding Rukia and dealing with the human who took her shinigami powers should have been simple. And for a brief moment - after getting his ass thoroughly kicked by Ichigo due to a combination of arrogance and cockiness - he had assumed things were finished. Ichigo was lying on the ground in a pool of his own blood, stripped of Rukia's powers by Captain Kuchiki and slowly dying from the Senka. While Ichigo's stubborn refusal to give up - that he was still alive - defied all common sense, he knew things were over. At the time, he assumed there was no way anyone could survive such grievous wounds outside of the Fourth Division.

But just as he opened the Senkaimon - under Captain Kuchiki's orders - she appeared.

What happened was still a blur of colors and sounds, mostly because Nui Harime kicked him in the face. According to Rukia, the girl's surprising attack sent him crashing through the nearby brick wall, shattering several bones requiring an extended visit to the Fourth Division. She had then flipped - that was the only word Rukia claimed could describe Nui Harime's movements - around Captain Kuchiki's zanpakuto, leaving only after commenting about the archaic fashion choice of wearing a silk scarf over a white haori.

The girl was insane.

Renji leapt to his feet, the chair screeching against the linoleum floor tiles, and nervously glanced around the almost empty classroom, "She's not mad at me, is she?"

"Nui was kind of upset after Byakuya almost killed me. She was planning to come to the Soul Society. Luckily, my old man took her out of town for some 'Revocs-associated' clothing conference or something."

Ichigo air-quoted the words before looking at his own lunch. Poking the sandwich, scowling at its eerily perfect shape and the expensive-looking desert wrapped in plastic, he shrugged off Renji's apprehension, "But I'm sure she's over it. I mean, there's no way she would hold a grudge this long."

"Gosh! Now isn't this a sight for sore eyes!"

Hours from that moment and knowing Kisuke's paranoia prevented anyone from sneaking into his shop, Renji would admit - to himself - that perhaps his scream at seeing Nui Harime sitting to his right was a little unmanly. Reflexively flinching away from the nascent Grand Couturier, tumbling head over heels onto the floor when his foot got stuck in the legs of the desk, the mortified shinigami carefully weighed his options. Escape was always an option. Not only was he faster than three months ago, he was also several times stronger. Even if Nui Harime dodged all of Captain Kuchiki's attacks when his power was restricted in the World of the Living, there was no way she was as strong as a captain.

... right?

Nui smiled when she noticed the man glancing towards the window. Was he trying to escape? He wouldn't be the first. And Lady Ragyo gave her first-hand experience on successfully preventing humans from escaping through a variety of routes - including windows, doors, hatches in the floor and ventilation shafts. But was this guy actually human? She didn't think pigs in human clothing could survive getting kicked through a brick wall without suffering irreparable damage. Well, there was only one way to find out! Her drill-like pigtailed bounced cutely as she leaned forward, grinning at Renji's apprehension, "Hmm... nope, that won't work, you know."

"Don't kill Renji."

"Gee, that's an interesting thing to say, Ichigo."

Her head bobbed back and forth, which unnerved the Quincy trying to focus on his lunch. She couldn't understand why Ichigo was friends with Uryu. The guy was a wet blanket with no sense of humor. Something that reminded her of Lady Satsuki. But Ichigo had Satsuki's perpetual scowl, which was honestly impressive. Expressing her disappointment with Ichigo ruining her fun, she closed her eyes before giggling, "But that's rude! I promised the old goat I would stay on my best behavior. And maman ordered me to listen to the old goat's every word. So, if you don't want me humiliating the guy who beat you senseless, that's all on you! I certainly don't hold a grudge against the person who nearly killed my favorite cousin."

"Stop call me that," Ichigo scowled, annoyed by Nui's insistence on saying they're related.

"For the record, it was Captain Kuchiki who almost killed Ichigo. Not me," Renji emphasized his captain's name, making sure Nui Harime heard every syllable. Was it dishonorable to place his captain in danger? Yes. It went against everything he learned since graduating from Shin'ō Academy. But at the moment he didn't care about archaic traditions. Being on Nui Harime's bad side - scratch that, issing off a psychopath worse than Captain Kurotsuchi - was the worst possible outcome, "But if it helps, Ichigo kicked my ass when he invaded the Soul Society. That should make everything even, right?"

And he was almost certain Nui Harime couldn't get to the Soul Society.

"Hmm... nope! But it's awfully cute you think that makes everything better."

Nui propped her chin upon a manicured hand, leaning forward slowly enough that the desk creaked, "Gee, you really think I'm still angry you nearly killed my favorite cousin? Holding grudges is passé, you know! Still, you should be really careful. Someone like you could wind up disappearing without a trace."

The subtle dark tone in her voice, the way her eyes narrowed slightly despite the widening smile, set off every warning bell in Renji's mind, "Uh... she's kidding, right Ichigo?"

"I don't know," Ichigo scoffed at Nui, who returned his scowl with a friendly smile, "But if I were you, Renji, I wouldn't leave Kisuke's shop alone at night."

Coat of Many Colors

I had a lot of inspiration when writing this chapter. Several events have been in the works for years, since the first drafts of the story, which made it easier to get characterization correct. Also, I recently discovered the light novel "Cannot Fear Your Own World," involving events in the time period between Yhwach's defeat and the final chapter of Bleach. And let me just say... it was interesting. I won't spoil anything, but the information in the light novel really helps shed some light on certain character's actions.

So, enjoy the chapter!

---

...

---

Chapter 60 - Coat of Many Colors

"So, this is the place?"

The question lingered as Kinue Kinagase stepped around the tattered remains of a COVERS, heels disturbing the dying Life Fibers left in Sosuke Aizen's wake. With Danketsu's silence on the matter concerning, a stark departure from her Kamui's normal mood, she pressed a hand against the wall, frowning at the electric-like sensation immediately crawling down her arm. Pulling away, fingers clenching and relaxing several times, Kinue stared at the doors looming overhead, the intricate pattern carved on the metal surface standing out in the darkness.

Something lay beyond the closed threshold, an otherworldly power that could only be the Original Life Fiber. She could feel it.

It wasn't a comfortable sensation.

"What can we expect?"

Her tone possessed a sharp edge as she turned towards the former captain standing in front of the entrance, "Should we expect an army of COVERS guarding the Original Life Fiber?"

"I don't know."

The admission left a bitter taste in Aizen's mouth. It was one thing possessing minimal information on a subject. A lack of knowledge could be rectified by collecting data and running experiments. But the creature eloquently described by Kinue Kinagase - and worshipped as a god by Ragyo Kiryuin - was esoteric in nature. Even after researching the sample of Life Fibers appropriated from its body, his knowledge on the Original Life Fiber lacked finer detail. A problem compounded by his inability to return to the Kiryuin Manor. But that did not mean he was blind. On the contrary, Kisuke Urahara's progress involving the manipulation of Life Fibers merely filled the gaps in his knowledge.

He knew before Kisuke, for example, that Ragyo Kiryuin and Isshin Kurosaki were mentally connected to the creature. He was also aware, thanks to the former's behavior in Karakura town, that the Original Life Fiber harbored an unsettling hatred for the Hogenyoku.

And during the decades following the creation of his original Hogenyoku, concealing the truth of his actions from Gin and Kaname through careful misdirection and other, less important experiments on Hollowfication, he observed the Original Life Fiber's activity. Analyzing how it grew increasingly aware every sacrificial cycle. He watched the thing evolve its defenses after his intrusion. He indirectly tracked the rate the creature recovered its strength by precisely measuring ambient spiritual energy, which dwindled every year as the countryside turned into a desolate wasteland, lacking the ability and spiritual density to support life.

"However, the information Kisuke collected on Ragyo Kiryuin's weave preferences has proven invaluable. Increasing our chances of success beyond my original predictions."

Seras Victoria scratched her forehead in confusion, the Harkonnen shifting awkwardly upon her back, "Weave preferences?"

"When Ragyo Kiryuin reweave the Life Fiber wards, she subconsciously based them upon the same pattern," he lightly pressed a hand against the doors, half-smirking at the matriarch's ingenuity and creativity. Weaving a ward into the conductive metal framing was impressive, something he hadn't considered possible until Kisuke Urahara's incursion. It was deserving of recognition. If anyone other than himself - or Ragyo Kiryuin - attempted breaching the perimeter, they would have been devoured. Painfully and in excruciating agony as their body and soul were torn apart by the constituent Life Fibers.

"Knowing that..."

The Hogenyoku pulsed beneath his jacket, drawing Kinue Kinagase and Danketsu's attention when the doors opened with a gentle push, "By isolating the Banshi from the rest of the Life Fibers in the ward, disrupting Ragyo Kiryuin's work was rather straightforward."

Seras stiffened when vermillion light filtered through the slowly opening doors, allowing her to see what laid beyond, "Is that the -"

"Yes. That's the Original Life Fiber."

Kinue's heels clacked against the mat of Life Fibers covering the floor as she stepped into the Forbidden Room. She could feel Danketsu's apprehension. Her Kamui's nervousness was bleeding through their connection, inadvertently twisting her own thoughts. There was a foulness filling the chamber, permeating every fiber of her being and earning a single but large shiver from Danketsu. But that wasn't why her hand drifted towards the Genji Blade. Nor did it explain why her armored fingers tightly gripped the weapon's hilt, well-trained muscles only a single thought from drawing the prototype blade.

For only a brief moment, something had brushed against her mind.

"Whether out of self-preservation or instinctual awareness of its surrounding environment, the Original Life Fiber will try to stop me."

Aizen observed the artificial hybrid's reaction to the creature with mild curiosity. The tensing of her muscles, how her gaze focused upon the primordial being's central body, indicated an apprehensive state of mind. Intriguing. It seemed her transformed physiology granted her unique sensitivity towards the Original Life Fiber. Something he would need to consider if things progressed poorly. But, for the moment, he gave Kinue Kinagase and Seras Victoria no room for arguments. A beneficial decision considering the multitude of questions plaguing the latter, "However, the nature of Kisuke Urahara's technique requires minimal movement. Avoiding its attacks, or even proactively protecting myself with Bakudo, will interfere with the process. I'll require both of you to stall for time. Intercepting its attacks until I finish the incantation."

"So, we are your decoys."

"To some degree," Aizen brushed aside Kinue Kinagase's reasonable skepticism, focusing instead on the matter at hand. As long as the Original Life Fiber was sealed - preferably with minimal loss of life - she had no right to complain.

"And to answer your other question, I was not lying in Karakura Town."

He stepped around the perturbed woman, matching her Kamui's equivalent of an irritated scowl with a half-smirk, "However, ask yourself this. Even if I was concealing the truth, hiding it for some ulterior motive, would you entrust this task to Satsuki Kiryuin? Or perhaps you're comfortable asking normal humans - such as your brother - to hold off the Original Life Fiber until I'm finished?"

Kinue hesitated at the man's brutal honesty, refusing to listen to Danketsu's annoyance at being tricked. She knew Sosuke Aizen wasn't threatening Tsumugu - merely pointing out his chances of survival against the Original Life Fiber were slim to none - but hearing the arrogant and condescending tone, no matter how sincere his words, was aggravating.

A stifled grunt escaped her mouth as she forced herself to relax, draining the intense emotions passing through their synchronized connection with a single, muted sigh, before turning towards the creature hovering in the center of the room, "How much time do you need?"

"Less than thirty seconds," Aizen mentally noted the woman's frustration as he raised his left arm, twisting the limb clockwise in front of his body, "Now, shall we begin?"

Seras unstrapped the Harkonnen, allowing the anti-tank cannon to hit the ground with a muffled thump. She still didn't know much about Life Fibers. And trying to understand how she and her Master could hear Kamui gave her a headache. And finding out Heaven didn't exist was depressing, but none of that matter. Sosuke Aizen might be an arrogant bastard like that infuriating Major, but he was still right. If they didn't stop the Original Life Fiber... if Ragyo Kiryuin managed to win... then everybody would die, "I'm ready when you are!"

The Genji Blade appeared in Kinue's hand when dozens of slits opened across the Original Life Fiber's central body, exposing jagged edges and glowing crevasses that caused Danketsu to comment upon its ugliness. Raising the prototype Anti-Life Fiber weapon parallel to her shoulder, she suppressed the tension creeping down her spine when Aizen began chanting.

" My left hand holds the shears to sever fate."

She was halfway across the room before Sosuke Aizen finished the first word.

The purple lines covering Danketsu shimmered when the Original Life Fiber responded, sending a tendril of Life Fibers towards the shinigami. Swinging the Genji Blade in a tight arc as she stepped in front of Aizen, severing the threaded fibers several dozen times before her other heel clacked against the matted floor, she flexed her knees. With Danketsu's excitement bleeding across their connection - pulsing through her mind with enough fervor that she grinned - Kinue leapt upwards, launching herself towards the creature while streams of purple energy blasted from the Kamui's vents.

Only to scowl when dozens of crimson spheres erupted from its surface.

This was unexpected .

She twisted her upper body without thinking, muscles tightening beneath taut fabric. Swinging the Genji Blade in a crisscross pattern while her heel pushed off nothingness, launching her further into the rafters of the Forbidden Room, crimson energy clung to its edge as she sliced through the projectiles. With traces of a smirk - her own - at the multitude of explosions, Kinue flipped the prototype weapon into her other hand before reaching out, catching the final sphere inches away from her face.

As the orb pulsed in her hand, she squeezed, shattering the concentrated spiritual energy into motes of light.

All without leaving a single scratch on Danketsu.

" My right fist clenches the needle to thread destiny."

The burning darkness twisted into a facsimile of her missing arm shifted, transforming into a single, jagged wing as Seras pushed off the ground. Darting around Kinue while dodging spheres of crimson energy faster than the human eye could follow, gravity abruptly inverted itself - causing blood to rush to her head - when she landed in a crouch above the Original Life Fiber. Jagged claws of shadows gripping the alcove, shattering the Life Fibers wrapped around the stone façade, she aimed the Harkonnen downwards, mindful of Kinue's current position.

"Take this, you bastard!"

Her arm buckled - shoulder bouncing against the wall from the recoil - when the depleted uranium shell penetrated the Original Life Fiber, tearing through sheets of Life Fibers before slamming into the ground with an ear-wrenching boom . Hissing when the hole sealed itself, thousands of Life Fibers pulling themselves together before the echo stopped bouncing off the walls, Seras stiffened at the crimson spheres already halfway to her perch.

" The falling stars in the heavens flicker and dim!"

Shadows curled around her body when she pushed off the wall, avoiding the spiritual bombs by the skin of her teeth. Landing in a controlled crouch on the Original Life Fiber - clawed fingers dragging through its Life Fibers - Seras promptly leapt back into the air. She twisted backwards, hissing at the jagged gash across her waist from the veritable garden of spikes emerging from the creature's surface. Shooting like a bullet away from the Original Life Fiber, the darkness writhing from her shoulder transformed into a jagged wing, her mind ground to a halt when one of the spheres made a right turn.

She needed to stop moving.

And then she did .

"Huh?"

It took Seras an awkward moment - just long enough to swing her good arm around for balance - to realize she was floating. Standing literally on nothing but air. Amazed - and greatly confused - how she was flying using such a strange method, she nevertheless shot sideways, fading into the shadows moments before the Original Life Fiber's attack turned her into a bloody smear.

" Red fades to black which fades to nothingness!"

"Danketsu Genkai!"

Kinue felt the red highlights in her hair change colors, the artificial dye devoured by the vibrant purple spreading from the nape of her neck. With the sound of clothing snapping tightly into place, thigh-high boots transforming into dark blue, pleated hakama while Danketsu's eyes shifted upwards, she brushed aside the warmth coursing through her body. The strength coming from her weak - but improving - bond with Danketsu. Listening to her Kamui's excitement at destroying the Original Life Fiber, the opportunity to tear apart the source of Life Fibers filling Danketsu with a sense of exhilaration impossible to ignore, she spun the Genji Blade once... twice... over her shoulder, crimson energy trailing from the edge.

"Youkou Genshou!"

" The falling stars in the heavens flicker and dim!"

Her heels dug into the matted Life Fibers - first cracking and then shattering the pliable material - as she swung the Genji Blade, releasing the spiritual energy concentrated across its cutting edge. With Danketsu tightening around her body, purple light shimmering from the Kamui's pleated hakama and heels, the attack slammed into the Original Life Fiber, covering the creature in a crimson conflagration that nearly reached the ceiling. Torrents of flames enveloped every inch of his massive form as she landed in a kneeling crouch, small flickers of spiritual fire still clinging to the Genji Blade.

Watching with bated breath as the creature vanished within the spiritual inferno, Kinue grimaced when something caught her eye. A milder... tamer... reaction than her Kamui's shocked protests.

" What the fuck!? It didn't do ANYTHING!?"

There was not a single scratch on the Original Life Fiber.

" Deny the hand of destiny to obtain the key to freedom!"

Aizen quirked an eyebrow when Seras Victoria intercepted one of the Original Life Fiber's attacks. Darkness leaked from the hole in her stomach, burning shadows writhing as she flew over his shoulder, crashing through the entranceway into the corridor beyond. No matter how disconcerting, he could not allow empathy to cloud his judgment. Time was had always been of the essence when it came to Life Fibers. But it was more important now than at any other moment during the last two centuries.

Pointing two fingers at the Original Life Fiber, ribbons of spiritual energy wrapped around his body as he shouted the final line.

"Let the heavens weep and the earth erupt with fire! Life Fiber Seal Number Two! Kōgō Nuno Shīru!"

Cloth-like streams of spiritual energy spun from his hands, twisting through the air towards the Original Life Fiber. Wrapping around the creature, coiling together as the angry orange-red light permeating the Forbidden Room's darkest shadows flickered and dimmed, Aizen waited exactly three seconds before clenching his fist - one of the few modifications he made to Kisuke Urahara's technique. As the translucent sphere shimmered into existence, interlocking hexagonal plates glowing with emerald incandescence, he lowered his arm, grinning at the otherwise resounding success.

The overbearing presence - bordering on incomprehensibility - had disappeared, leaving only wisps of fading energy and smoking craters.

"Is it over?"

He half-smirked when Seras Victoria reappeared without a single scratch on her body, "Kōgō Nuno Shīru warps space and time, trapping the Original Life Fiber within a dimensional barrier."

"It's not only incapable of escape, but my modifications severed its connection with Ragyo Kiryuin, preventing the same failure that befell Kisuke Urahara's first attempt," he emphasized the latter point, specifically to draw a distinction between Kisuke's previously rough sealing technique and his own, improved one. Looking over his shoulder when Kinue landed next to Seras, Aizen noted her Kamui's expression of unfulfilled satisfaction before turning back to the Original Life Fiber, "You have my thanks. Sealing the Original Life Fiber would not have been possible without your assistance."

"That's it?"

Kinue watched Seras walk away, hopping over thick tendrils of Life Fibers towards the Harkonnen stabbed into the wall, before frowning, "I expected... more. It doesn't feel like we've won."

"Your worry is not unfounded. In fact, it's reasonable to assume sealing the Original Life Fiber won't be enough to stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet," Aizen momentarily paused when Seras Victoria returned, Harkonnen propped over her shoulder, "Even with her connection to this primordial creature severed, Ragyo Kiryuin's strength has not diminished."

"Isshin might be keeping her preoccupied but she's not blind," Kinue frowned when Danketsu shivered, something that surprised both Kamui and wearer, "When she realizes what you have done..."

"She'll slaughter everyone in her path, using the Hogyoku as a beacon to track me down. Even Isshin Kurosaki's strength won't be enough to prevent her from inflicting massive losses on Nudist Beach and his son's allies."

The matted Life Fibers crunched beneath his sandals when he turned around, intrigued by Kinue's subdued worry, "Fortunately, I've already prepared contingences. Precautions created for a different - yet still applicable - set of circumstances. However, escaping Ragyo Kiryuin becomes completely meaningless if she manages to wear Shinra Koketsu."

"Then we should leave."

Kinue hesitated before following the shinigami, spinning the Genji Blade around her fingers and sheathing it against the small of her back. She needed to inform Olivier on the situation before Ragyo Kiryuin realized what happened. Despite finding Aizen's smugness overbearing - nearly to the point where she was agreeing with Danketsu - he was right. The Original Life Fiber might be sealed, but their plan hinged on Isshin keeping Ragyo Kiryuin busy while Ryuko destroyed Shinra Koketsu.

Something that wasn't guaranteed.

" Are we going to Honnouji Academy? That means I can slaughter Ragyo Kiryuin before Mugetsu! She'll have no choice but to admit I'M the superior Kamui!"

She ignored the Kamui's boasting - which lacked its usual arrogance - and raised a hand to her ear, "That's the plan. We'll need to rendezvous with Olivier before leaving for Honnouji Academy. But I'm sure you'll get the chance to demonstrate your power, Danketsu."

" Maybe we'll run into the Grand Couturier! Wiping the smile from that psychotic bitch's face will be exciting!"

And there it was.

But the simple answer, which earned honest approval from Danketsu as her child-like excitement bled across their connection, gave her time to think. Perhaps she was overthinking the situation. Isshin might be prone to behaving like an immature teenager but when it came to Life Fibers the man possessed one of the sharpest minds on the planet. The chances he would fall for another of Ragyo Kiryuin's schemes after allowing Orihime Inoue to fall into her clutches was slim to none.

"We're leaving already?"

Seras turned away from the Original Life Fiber, walking alongside Kinue as the woman raised a hand to her ear, "You know, that was sort of strange. I never imagined fighting an alien ball of yarn to save mankind. It's like something out of a television show."

Kinue only partially listened to the vampire, her attention focused on the static coming across the radio. It appeared they couldn't contact Olivier until returning to the surface. Switching off the radio, several seconds passed in silence before her brow slowly creased into a frown. The skepticism in her eyes matched by Danketsu's confusion, both Kamui and wearer were in complete synchronization when she asked, "Wait, wasn't Alucard an immortal vampire? An undead monster who devoured souls and blood?"

"Yes," the vampire nodded, missing Kinue's sarcasm, "But that's different! Master was -"

Time stopped - the conversation grinding to a screeching and sudden halt - when the Hokyoku flared to life, dimmed purple replaced by a multicolored splendor which burnt away the front of Aizen's jacket.

"What!?"

Aizen panicked at the rainbow luminescence beneath his fingers. What was happening!? Stumbling forward before collapsing onto his knees, he was left speechless when the Hokyoku's power - the strength he'd used against Ragyo Kiryuin - vanished . Ripped away in a manner lacking Isshin Kurosaki's camouflaged interference or Ragyo Kiryuin's sadistic arrogance.

"I... miscalculated..."

He strained to speak, sweat dripping from his chin. As the Hokyoku dimmed, multicolored radiance returning to purple before fading away entirely, Aizen focused on the impossibility of the situation. He used the implausible scenario... the sense of wrongness... to brush aside the weakness spreading throughout his body. And he used the singular goal that had propelled him for two hundred years - the overarching objective of saving humanity from Life Fibers - to stand back on his feet.

"But how..."

The question didn't necessitate an answer. But he couldn't understand how Ragyo Kiryuin was suppressing the Hogyoku. Subjugating his Life Fiber invention required visual contact, impossible when she was fighting Isshin Kurosaki at Honnouji Academy. And careful observation of Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi demonstrated they lacked the ability to mentally dominate the Hogyoku - willingly or otherwise.

Which suggested only one conclusion...

A sound akin to shattering glass filled the Forbidden Room when the Kōgō Nuno Shīru shattered, blown apart by an explosion of spiritual energy powerful enough to nearly drive him to his knees. Drawing his zanpakuto as he leapt back, avoiding the pieces of rubble raining upon the ground, Aizen stiffened when the Original Life Fiber started transforming. Morphing shapes as waves of Life Fibers were drawn upwards, wrapping its central body in a cocoon of pulsing threads.

"It seems we're out of options," Aizen raised Kyouka Suigetsu, holding his zanpakuto perpendicular to the ground, "Miss Kinagase, I suggest you and Miss Victoria leave. Use whatever strength you possess to get as far away from this room in the next twenty seconds as humanly possible."

The woman hesitated at the command before nodding, taking his decision to confront the Original Life Fiber with greater ease than he expected. Calmly walking towards the primordial creature while Seras Victoria quickly followed Kinue Kinagase, granting him a single concerned look over her shoulder, he steadied his breathing, focusing his thoughts on minimizing unwanted consequences.

"I'm afraid I cannot allow you to reach Honnouji Academy."

A violet aura enveloped his body, fighting against the burning vermilion growing increasingly brilliant with every passing second. Smiling faintly when their spiritual pressures abruptly decreased, signifying both women had breached the manor's walls and escaped into the surrounding countryside, he tightened his fingers, Kyouka Suigetsu slowly dissolving into shards of glass. He wasn't certain this would actually work. Not after Ragyo Kiryuin rapidly adapted to his zanpakuto's illusions. But with everything at stake - humanity's existence hanging by a single thread - he needed to at least try .

"Bankai: Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu."

---

...

---

" She's strong."

"Yeah, I know."

" If you knew, why didn't you stop her from kicking us halfway across Honnou City?"

Ichigo ignored Mugetsu's sarcasm as he wiped a hand against his mouth, the smudge of blood rapidly absorbed into her threading. How could he possibly have expected something like this ? A living, breathing clone of Satsuki had been the last thing on his mind when the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier went down, "Tch... she just took me by surprise."

He leapt back through the hole in the building created during his abrupt expulsion from Honnouji Academy, landing outside as the neon sign above the front door crashed to the ground with an ear-wrenching groan . The clone - or whatever it was - had all of Satsuki's strength. And then some. But it wasn't something they couldn't handle, "She's not any stronger than Ryuko. And you know how hard she can kick. Next time she attacks, I'll be ready."

" Senketsu might have brute force, but my power is more than enough to destroy this pale imitation of Satsuki," Mugetsu grumbled as she reluctantly admitted her impressive strength wasn't equal to Senketsu's, something the other Kamui always mentioned, "However, this off-colored lookalike's appearance is unnerving. Her spiritual pressure is nearly identical to Junketsu's after she influenced Satsuki's mind. But she's NOT a Kamui. And her body contains Life Fibers. Just like yours and Ryuko's."

She wanted to help Ichigo. It was, after all, the reason behind her creation. Nothing else mattered. But as she experienced Ichigo's emotions shifting through their connection, annoyance mixing with concern before settling on general irritation, her lapels metaphorically dropped. Despite her best efforts, she couldn't think of anything . Nothing came to mind. There wasn't anything in her memories, nothing woven into her Life Fibers by her creator, about this mysterious being.

And that feeling of helplessness - being unable to assist her wearer - was frustrating.

Not to mention their opponent's insulting sense of fashion!

Only someone lacking the most basic knowledge of Life Fibers would assume the clone was wearing a Kamui! It was absurd! That inverted mockery of Junketsu possessed none of her fellow Kamui's childishness and innocent curiosity about the world! It lacked Junketsu's incessant desire to ask Senketsu question after question! It was nothing more than an inanimate piece of clothing! A second-rate imitation created by someone lacking the ability to weave Kamui!

" Yet she's STILL different," another grumble rippled through her Life Fibers, "It's all very confusing, Ichigo. I don't know what we're actually fighting."

"This thing might look like Satsuki, Mugetsu..."

Mugetsu's eyes turned bloodshot at the unstated command, fabric warping and armor shifting before the flash of sapphire light completely dissipated. As a single, quick, burst of steam erupted from her vents, Ichigo stared at the ground, Tournesol quivering in his tightening grip, "... but it's not her."

" Ichigo. You -"

"Is that right, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Ichigo's eyes widened at the arrogant - and painfully familiar - voice whispering into his ear, masking the faint whistling of a blade cutting sharply through the air.

He reacted without thinking, relying upon months of experience - not only from Honnouji Academy but during his time as a substitute shinigami - to raise Tournesol in an underhanded grip, parrying the golden version of Bakuzan. As his blade bounced off the hardened Life Fiber sword, releasing a pressurized blast of air that pushed away every mote of dust and dirt for hundreds of feet, Ichigo cursed under his breath. Damn it! Why the hell didn't he sense its spiritual pressure!? Immediately pushing the thought from his mind when the clone rushed forward, sapphire spiritual energy clashing against emerald as their blades clashed once more, he grimaced at its arrogant smirk when the ground cracked - and then crumpled - beneath their feet.

"Why do you PURPOSELY refuse to acknowledge reality!?"

The clone grinned when Ichigo pressed downwards, using the difference between their heights - even with her heels - to his advantage. Pushing back, forcing Ichigo away with a burst of strength his Kamui had not expected, she curled her hand into a fist, basking in the sensation of power thrumming through her Life Fibers, before closing the distance between them with a single clack of her heel, "Open your eyes and accept the truth!"

"I am the real SATSUKI KIRYUIN!"

Ichigo stiffened when the clone twisted around Tournesol, allowing the blade to scrape against her stomach before thrusting Bakuzan towards his heart. Damn, this thing really did fight like Satsuki! With a quick pivot, flickering across the desolate neighborhood hundreds of feet every step, he instinctively braced his left arm against Tournesol, stopping Bakuzan from cleaving through his neck.

"Shut up!"

The ground cracked beneath his feet, splintering into fragments of concrete. Forced on the defensive when the clone pirouetted through his guard, swinging Bakuzan with enough speed that blocking its attacks only redirected the enormous spiritual energy, he scowled at the malevolent grin stretching across her ashen grey - and intimately familiar - face, "If you were really Satsuki, you would NEVER help Ragyo Kiryuin!"

He glowered when their blades clashed, allowing him to see the inhuman hatred in the clone's eyes. No matter how much she sounded like Satsuki... or even acted like her... this thing would never be Satsuki, "Not after what she did to Ryuko! To her dad! And especially after what Ragyo did to her !"

"I've heard enough of your garbage!"

Ichigo was caught by surprise when spiritual pressure exploded from the clone, sending him careening through the No-Star Slums. Skidding above the ground, boots digging into asphalt while leaving a trail of collapsing buildings in his wake, he snarled at the familiar clacking growing louder by the second. What the hell just happened? How did the clone suddenly get twice as strong!? Stiffening at the clone's spiritual pressure as it closed the distance, sprinting across the ruined slums with traces of emerald light glittering from Bakuzan's edge, Ichigo swung Tournesol in an upwards arc, stopping the strike meant to remove his right arm.

And the next second they both vanished.

"Ichigo Kurosaki!"

The clone jubilantly shouted his name as they danced, moving through the No-Star Slums with their respective blades fighting for the slightest advantage. Yes! This was why the Grand Couturiers brought her into existence! Ichigo's ability to counter her strength - to match the power imbued into her Life Fibers by Lady Ragyo and the Original Life Fiber - filled every fiber of her being with exhilaration! Yet she was disappointed by his decision to assist the pigs in the human clothing, pledging his loyalty to those whose only purpose is nourishment for Life Fibers.

Kicking off a dilapidated rooftop, a single, shuddering breath left her lips as she chased Ichigo, laughing despite the fresh wound tracing ugly patterns across her stomach. Even if Ichigo chose humanity over family, this was still the greatest experience in her short existence.

Now she understood the Grand Couturier's infatuation with Lady Ragyo's godson!

Her heel slammed into Ichigo's stomach, bypassing his guard and eliciting a strangled gasp. Impressed by the quickness of his recovery when she was forced to parry his counterattack before the pleasure finished traveling down her spine, she leered viciously, basking in his feelings of inferiority, "Unleash Mugetsu's full potential so that I may prove MY superiority ONCE and for ALL!"

" Is she telling ME what to do? "

A bead of sweat dripped down Ichigo's cheek, pooling against the edge of Mugetsu's armor as he forced the clone's taunts to the deepest corners of his mind. This thing might look and sound like Satsuki - it might somehow even have her memories - but it wasn't Satsuki, "I don't care what you want!"

Spiritual pressure exploded from Mugetsu, achieving little more than a mildly surprised expression from the clone. Twin cracks echoed across the No-Star Slums as the ground beneath their feet splintered, jagged fractures widening until the surrounding buildings collapsed. As sapphire streams of energy erupted from Mugetsu's vents - matched only by the identical emerald blasted from the clone's faux Kamui, Ichigo pushed against Bakuzan with everything he could muster, "I WON'T let you stop me from saving Orihime!"

"You DARE imply I'm standing in YOUR way, Ichigo Kurosaki!?"

She snarled at Ichigo's impertinence, frowning at his inability to understand the truth of the world. It was infuriating! How could he - someone gifted with power from the Original Life Fiber by Lady Ragyo - willingly interfere with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet? Frustrated by his naïve behavior and Mugetsu's constant mockery of her existence... as if her position in the world wasn't important... she lashed out, snapping her leg upwards in a perfectly executed kick aimed at puncturing Ichigo's trachea.

"Coming from YOU, whose motives are anything BUT noble, such a declaration rings HOLLOW!"

Despite the consistency in which her blows were parried or dodged - Ichigo's minor advantage in speed proving decisive - she refused to relent. Even when Ichigo vanished in a flicker of sapphire light, moving across the No-Star Slums, she gave pursuit, catching up to him in matter of seconds. She hunted him down, clashing blades over and over without rest, keeping him on the defensive.

"Saving Orihime Inoue?"

Golden hair whipped frenziedly in the moonlight as she twisted around Tournesol, moving within Ichigo's guard until she felt his breath on her face. Cutting open his shoulder, bypassing Mugetsu's armor with laughable ease, she frowned at his reaction, uncaring that the wound already regenerated, "What do you hope to accomplish with such a treasonous act!?"

"Orihime's my friend!"

Ichigo awkwardly blocked Bakuzan with a metallic clang, the golden blade trembling inches away from his body, "I don't need any other reason to save her!"

The clone reciprocated Ichigo's bold declaration by switching Bakuzan into an inverted grip when sapphire energy erupted from Mugetsu. Backflipping over the initial strike, shuddering at the hardened Life Fiber weapon arcing beyond the tip of her nose, her heels barely clacked against the ground before she rushed forward, meeting Ichigo head-on in a titanic explosion of light. Yes! This was it! She could sense the nearly palpable elation when Bakuzan slipped against Tournesol, carving open Ichigo's waist. Hououmaru might have ordered her to fight Ichigo to limit his interference in the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, undoubtedly a sentiment shared by Lady Ragyo, but defeating him was her purpose!

"Your naivety is unbecoming, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Bakuzan clashed against Tournesol in a monumental display of power as she physically demonstrated to Ichigo the futility of his resistance. Their respective blades fought for dominance while the surrounding landscape suffered the consequences, disintegrating beneath the power contained within their Life Fiber. As multicolored sparks illuminated her smirking visage, she chuckled, taut muscles struggling against Ichigo's synchronized strength, "Orihime Inoue is Lady Ragyo's daughter! The keystone of everything! It is her existence - not yours or the Grand Couturier's - that will facilitate humanity's destiny!"

A jagged gash opened across Mugetsu, the Kamui's eyes widening at the blood spraying through the opening in her armor, "You may have cast aside your birthright, Ichigo Kurosaki, but you are still Lady Ragyo's godson. All but family! One of the few who will survive beyond the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Which is why YOU, of all people, should understand the purity and benevolence guiding her -"

He stabbed Tournesol into the clone's stomach with a sickening squelch before tearing the blade out the side. As something resembling blood spurted from the wound, oozing from her abdomen alongside emerald light, Ichigo watched the ashen grey flesh stitch back together, his eyes shadowed in the moonlight. He still remembered Satsuki's inner world down to the smallest detail. That place, from the castle to her inner sanctum, couldn't be easily forgotten. Not after he risked everything to save Satsuki and Junketsu from his Life Fibers. Witnessing Satsuki's memories firsthand - seeing her childhood through her own eyes - had allowed him to understand her motivations.

Which was why he couldn't stand hearing this clone speak about Ragyo Kiryuin with such devotion.

"I don't pretend to understand how you were created..."

Ichigo watched the clone stagger backwards, aware of Mugetsu's confusion surrounding his anger, "But hearing you talk about Ragyo like that... is sickening ! The Satsuki I know would never call anything her mom did 'pure' or 'benevolent!'"

"Incomprehensible nonsense!"

Her anger destroyed any remaining misconceptions when she shattered the sound barrier, smashing her fist against Ichigo's face with enough force that his head whipped sideways. The shock in his eyes - the surprise that she punched him - infuriated her! Did Ichigo believe Mugetsu's speed meant she couldn't touch him? That she couldn't hit him!? Leaning backwards when Ichigo retaliated, she tracked Tournesol with a sense of purpose . Glaring at the sword cutting several strands of blonde hair. Her heel immediately clacking when the blade finished arcing over her body - the ground fracturing as emerald energy blasted from her back - she positioned herself within Ichigo's guard before swinging upwards.

Sending him soaring skyward with a resounding clang of metal upon metal.

"Damn it!"

Ichigo grimaced as he cleared the skyline above the One-Star Residential District, "Was she holding back this whole time!?"

" I can't believe Ragyo Kiryuin had something this powerful up her sleeves," Mugetsu stared into the smoke created by their abrupt departure and shivered, goosebumps racing along her uniform, "She's not wearing a Kamui yet her speed's comparable to ours. Don't lower your guard, Ichigo. I have a strange feeling she's planning something."

"We fought plenty of people stronger than us," Ichigo stopped midair with his back to the full moon, Tournesol shimmering brightly in the pale light, "This clone's no different!"

" But -"

Mugetsu was left sputtering when Satsuki's clone flickered into existence inches away, her mouth quirked into an arrogant smirk. His own expression tightening at the unexpected burst of speed, eyes widening and jaw clenching at the blade swinging towards his shoulder, Ichigo felt time slowing to a crawl. He flexed his knees as emerald spiritual energy curled around Bakuzan, Mugetsu tightening with a subtle snap in response. Shifting his center of balance sideways without taking his eyes off the golden weapon aiming to remove his left arm from the rest of his body, he took a single step and vanished .

"Impressive, Ichigo Kurosaki."

The clone wasn't dismayed when Ichigo disappeared before Bakuzan could momentarily dispel his ability to fight. On the contrary, she was ecstatic her attack missed. Ichigo was faster than she remembered, his reflexes sharper and talents honed! Perhaps crushing Mugetsu beneath her heel would actually prove something of a challenge. Chuckling with barely repressed exhilaration upon noticing a flicker of black and white, she grinned viciously at the dozens of afterimages encircling her position.

Mugetsu was truly the fastest Kamui!

But she remembered the first time Ichigo Kurosaki used this technique with eidetic detail! It was before he earned the hard-fought privilege to wear Mugetsu's advanced configuration, when he stubbornly resisted her authority over Honnouji Academy to rescue Matoi! The memories of that fateful battle - the first time she truly experienced defeat - were stitched into her Life Fibers! And it was that knowledge which granted her the instincts and experience to pivot clockwise, her heel clacking against solidified spiritual energy as she thrust Bakuzan into Ichigo's chest.

Only to hit nothing but an afterimage.

"What's wrong? Am I moving too fast for you?"

She frowned at the arrogance in Ichigo Kurosaki's voice. How dare he insinuate she couldn't follow his movements! Her existence might pale compared to those blessed by the Original Life Fiber - an existence Ichigo and Matoi disregarded without the slightest understanding of the consequences - but she was beyond Kamui!

"You're indeed faster than me."

Bakuzan dragged against Tournesol in a shower of blue-green light when she parried Ichigo's blade. As the corners of her mouth twitched, devolving into a scowl upon finding herself momentarily locked in a deadly embrace, she seethed at the expression in his eyes, "But adulation prevents you from landing the finishing blow! Affection clouds your judgment! And that is why you will lose, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"No, you might have Satsuki's memories... but you're NOT Satsuki."

Sapphire light coalesced around Tournesol, rippling in turbulent waves down the hardened Life Fiber weapon. As spiritual energy exploded from Mugetsu, aware of the clone's shocked expression, Ichigo ignored the dryness in his throat - the pounding of his heart - before uttering two simple words.

"Getsuga Tenshou."

---

...

---

The smoke from her improvised entrance barely settled as Ryuko punched the cover bolted onto the wall, turning steel into a crumpled mess of metal. As patches of moonlight streamed through the holes in Honnouji Academy's classrooms, teacher lounges and club rooms - each crater bigger than the last - she threw the disfigured cover over her shoulder, the crushed wreckage of Satsuki's low-tech security stabbing through the wall. Reaching into Senketsu's armor, searching for something tucked away beneath his threading, she froze upon realizing it was gone .

" What's wrong?"

Ryuko grumbled as she turned away, refusing to look Senketsu in the eye, "... I lost the damn passwords."

Senketsu gave his best efforts at a contemplative frown. She was right. He couldn't feel the uncomfortable piece of paper lodged between Ryuko and his threading, "How did you lose it?"

"It must have fallen out when Ragyo Kiryuin freakin' blindsided us!"

She really wanted to punch the keypad until it was nothing more than a crumpled mess of metal and wires. Not simply for losing the passwords, which was freaking embarrassing, but because Satsuki went out of her damn way to make them as complicated as possible! Who the hell thought making both passwords thirty digits long - letters, numbers and even freaking symbols - was a good idea!? But she couldn't vent her frustrations. Because doing anything to the keypad would lock down the Sewing Club and inform her bitch of a mom what they were planning.

"Damn it! I guess we got no choice, Senketsu..."

The Scissor Blade spun around her wrist before she clasped its curved handle with both hands, "Let's slice through this stupid door and -"

" Wait, Ryuko!"

She stumbled when Senketsu shouted - loudly - into her ear, "What?"

" Forcing our way inside might work. But it will also alert Ragyo Kiryuin. You should consider all consequences before doing anything rash," Senketsu ignored the subtle twitch of Ryuko's eyebrow at his blunt yet helpful comment, " Fortunately, I took the liberty of memorizing the excessively complicated passwords before leaving Karakura Town."

"Hold on a second!"

Ryuko's eyes widened as her head snapped back and forth between Senketsu and the door, "You can do that!?"

" I may be your Kamui, Ryuko, but I am also your school uniform," Senketsu preened smugly as he met her gaze, confidence washing across their connection, " Compared to helping you study for Satsuki's difficult exams, memorizing seventy different numbers was trivial."

"Heh... is that right?"

She grinned when Senketsu began reciting the passwords from memory, giving her just enough time to press the damn buttons on the keypad. After everything that happened over the last few weeks, his ability to memorize pointless facts and information had completely slipped her mind, "I forgot you were so useful, Senketsu."

" Yes," Senketsu glanced towards the holes leading outside Honnouji Academy. Ichigo was fighting something incredibly powerful - and dangerous. While impossible to sense Mugetsu within the academy's halls, likely due to Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual pressure overwhelming everything in the vicinity, such a surprising sent a chill through his threading, "But we should hurry. There's no telling what other tricks Ragyo Kiryuin has up her sleeves."

Her smirk faltered at the warning, wavering before she shook her head and sprinted into the Sewing Club, "Then let's move quickly!"

The first thing she noticed - or rather felt - while the lights flickered, specialized fans spinning to life when the doors closed, was the air. It was stifling, causing her lips to tingle. There was something wrong about the way it felt... the way it smelled. Even as she leapt down the staircase several steps at a time, landing gracefully with a soft clack before kicking open the doors leading into the central sewing chamber, the strangeness was the only thing on her mind.

"Hey, Senketsu..."

She stood prone with her leg extended, ignoring the doors slamming against the wall, leaving a noticeable indent in the reinforced steel, "You feel that?"

" Yeah," Senketsu looked around the darkened room, the multicolored bands of his eye narrowing slightly, "Stay on your guard, Ryuko. I have a bad feeling in my threading."

Ryuko nodded as she cautiously walked into the darkness, heels clacking ominously with every step. Damn it! It was too freaking dark to see anything. If Shinra Koketsu was anywhere in the Sewing Club, how the hell was she supposed to find the damn thing!? For all she knew, the ugly outfit was standing right in front of them!

She winced when every light simultaneously turned on, flooding the Sewing Club with blinding bursts of crimson. God damn it! Someone was messing with her mind! Scowling as her vision cleared, fingers tightening around the Scissor Blade for good measure, Ryuko *gasp*ed when she saw the enormous gown-like dress floating in the middle of the room, illuminated by several spotlights.

"Is that..."

" Shinra Koketsu."

Senketsu couldn't explain the emotions coursing through his Life Fibers. It wasn't nervousness or apprehension. It wasn't even fear. No, the closest word that sufficiently described his reaction to Shinra Koketsu was awe . The ultimate Kamui was far larger than they imagined, stretching nearly twenty feet from hood to hem. And unlike Mugetsu, Junketsu, himself and even Danketsu, it resembled more of an elaborate wedding dress than school uniform. Befitting someone as pompous as Ragyo Kiryuin. Yet the thing that caught his eye, causing him to rustle slightly, was that despite looking finished, the perfectly-stitched white and ruby pattern radiating power, he couldn't sense anything from its Life Fibers.

"Ragyo plans on wearing that !?"

Ryuko scowled as she hefted the Scissor Blade overhead. Thinking about the stupidity of Shinra Koketsu - and how her bitch of a mom planned on wearing the damn thing - was giving her a headache. But that wouldn't matter once she destroyed the damn thing!

"Tch... let's slice this thing into scraps, Senketsu!"

As she experienced Senketsu's power flowing through her body, his armor shifting against her skin before snapping into Senkou alongside an intense burst of crimson stars, Ryuko did her best not to look at the corpses scattered across the Sewing club. She didn't want to think about what happened to Satsuki's students who weren't able to escape Ragyo Kiryuin and the COVERS. With anger fueling her resolve, she took a deep breath, the ruby undertone of her feathery, dual-colored hair glowing in the light. Scowling as she stepped forward, flying above the ground towards the so-called ultimate Kamui, Ryuko yelled at the top of her lungs and swung the Scissor Blade.

Only to hit a familiar purple blade with a loud clang .

"Nui Harime!"

Sparks danced from the point of contact between the Scissor Blades as Ryuko glared at the Grand Couturier. Her twin-toned hair fluttered violently in the ensuing explosion of spiritual energy, Senketsu fluttering while the weapons scrapped against each other with an ear-wrenching clang . Grunting when Nui lashed out without warning, spittle flying from her mouth as a pink boot spontaneously planted itself into her stomach, she bounced several times against the ground before skidding to an embarrassing stop. What the hell just happened? Pulling herself off the floor, loose strands of Life Fibers falling from her head as she stood back on her own feet, Ryuko hissed under her breath.

How the hell did Nui Harime sneak up on them? She might not be the best person at detecting spiritual pressure. Even Ichigo was better at this spiritual crap. But she'd improved since fighting that bastard vampire. Sensing a psychotic bitch like the Grand Couturier should have been easy .

"Hey, Ryuko..."

Nui slouched forward, trembling fingers gripping the purple Scissor Blade as she watched Ryuko recover from her embarrassing flight, "I-I was waiting for you, you know."

Ryuko ignored the way Nui's voice cracked to focus on something more important - like how the hell she knew they were coming. She wasn't stupid. Yoruichi explained that anyone could sense spiritual pressure. But it should have been impossible to sense Senketsu's power with Ragyo Kiryuin and Ichigo's dad kicking each other's asses! Even knowing Ichigo was outside fighting against a Life Fiber clone, she couldn't sense his or Mugetsu's spiritual pressure.

So how the hell did Nui sense Senketsu's?

Scoffing at the question as she flipped the Scissor Blade around, sliding one heel backwards while the razor-sharp edge shimmered in the light, Ryuko frowned at Nui's disheveled and messy appearance before glaring into her bloodshot eyes, "Huh, is that right? I'm surprised you could sense anything. What, with Ichigo's dad kicking Ragyo Kiryuin's ass."

"D-Don't be silly, Ryuko."

Nui's already strained smile wavered, quivering to the point of collapse, "I felt you coming from a mile away! I-It's really hard not sensing your Kamui!"

" Be careful, Ryuko," Senketsu glanced away from the Grand Couturier when Ryuko's blood pressure spiked, "Nui Harime is a particularly powerful adversary. Yet something about her behavior seems off..."

Ryuko nodded, refusing to take her eyes off the Grand Couturier. She couldn't afford getting pissed off at Nui Harime. If she wanted any chance at kicking her ass, she needed to fight with a clear head, "Don't worry, Senketsu. After all the shit we've been through, kicking Nui's ass should be a piece of cake!"

"Where's Amu?"

Her eyes widened when Nui's Scissor Blade appeared inches from her face. Leaning sideways, avoiding the sword by the skin of her teeth, Ryuko felt her heels leave the ground when Nui delivered a haymaker to her cheek.

"FUCK!"

She spat out blood while planting her hand against the ground. Fingers digging into the metal plating moments before the purple Scissor Blade skewered through the floor, creating an expanding wave of liquefied steel blasting across the Sewing Club, Ryuko leapt over Nui's head only to find the Scissor Blade swinging towards her neck. Immediately forced onto the defensive by the insane assault, Ryuko cursed for the millionth time when her heels cracked into the floor. Damn, Nui was faster than expected! But when she propped her forearm on the Scissor Blade, stopping Nui from pulling the same shit with a resounding clang, she smirked savagely at the Grand Couturier's nervousness.

"What's wrong?"

The question reeked with smug confidence as she easily matched Nui's inhuman strength - and then some, "Upset that my bitch of a mom can't control Ururu anymore?"

Nui visibly flinched at the accusation, "Don't say that stupid name!"

"And what the hell are you going to do about it!?"

An explosion of energy reached the furthest corners of the Sewing Club when Ryuko forced both weapons to the ground before head-butting Nui, "Because compared to last time..."

Her knee smashed into the Grand Couturier's stomach, "... all of your attacks..."

Pushing off the ground as Nui hovered midair, sapphire eyes trembling with unregistered shock, she followed with a bone-shattering kick that sent the Grand Couturier crashing through the far wall, "... are fucking predictable!"

" Now's our chance, Ryuko!"

"Yeah! Time to tear that ugly ass outfit apart!"

Spiritual energy wrapped around the Scissor Blade as she flew towards Shinra Koketsu, "Ichiban Gen-"

"Nope!"

The Life Fibers wrapped around her arms, pulling taut before she could react. Cursing violently when Nui sent her crashing through multiple abandoned sewing stations with a dramatic flick of her wrist, Ryuko snarled upon slamming face-first into a wall. Damn it! She won't let this murderous psychopath stand in her way! Not when everybody was counting on them destroying Shinra Koketsu! As ruby-colored energy erupted from Senketsu, the crimson undertone of her feathery hair glowing with power, she snapped the Life Fibers, giving her just enough time to block the purple Scissor Blade swinging towards her face.

"God damn it! Just give up already!"

Waves of spiritual energy exploded from their trembling blades as everything not bolted to the floor - and several things that were - was sent flying across the Sewing Club. For a brief moment, sweat dripping down her face, she pushed against the purple Scissor Blade, staring into Nui's dulled yet strangely conflicted expression. But as flashes of crimson mixed with violet, heels digging into the ground before she vanished, clashing again and again while pushing Senketsu's power to the limit, Ryuko's eyes widened. Senketsu was right. Something was strange. Even with Senkou boosting her strength, fighting Nui Harime shouldn't be this easy.

But easy or not, she WAS going to kick Nui Harime's ass!

"We shouldn't be fighting, Ryuko!"

It was impossible to miss the quiet desperation in Nui's voice as she leapt backwards, avoiding Ryuko's flurry of strikes by the hem of her dress. Stumbling slightly when she landed in front of Shinra Koketsu, her already disheveled appearance was further blemished by the blood trickling down her arm. Unaware - or ignorant - of the liquid dripping from her trembling fingers, twisting down the Scissor Blade's handle, she slouched forward, her voice a harsh whisper, "O-Once Lady Ragyo wears Shinra Koketsu, the pigs in human clothing will become food for Life Fibers! B-But not you! Or Ichigo! You're different! You're family! Y-You'll be fine!"

"SCREW THAT!"

Ryuko didn't bother listening to the crap leaving Nui's mouth. She threw caution to the wind without hesitation, buckling the floor beneath her heels into sheets of fraying metal as she sprinted towards the Grand Couturier. Immediately kicking her speed up another notch when Nui managed to block her blade, appearing behind the psychotic bitch in a flash of flickering crimson light before the metallic clang finished echoing, she flipped her wrist, spinning the Scissor Blade into a reverse grip.

"I'm going to make sure that bitch never wears Shinra Koketsu!"

She leaned around the predictable counterattack before smashing the Scissor Blade against the underside of Nui's chin with enough force that her boots left the ground, "Even if it's the last thing I do!"

Nui's neck snapped with a sickening crunch from the force of Ryuko's underhanded attack, eyes widening as she gagged on spittle and blood. Landing on her head, twisting her already damaged neck sideways, a painful migraine lanced through her foggy mind when she saw Ryuko turning towards Shinra Koketsu. Still laying on the floor, unable to move despite her body having mostly regenerated, she whispered in a trembling voice.

"Why?"

Blood dripped from her fingers, coating the purple Scissor Blade, as she stumbled onto her feet. She forced herself to move, muscles trembling at the expression in Ryuko's eyes. This didn't make any sense! It wasn't right! She couldn't understand why Ryuko was risking everything for the pigs in human clothing! Why? WHY!? Why was Ryuko willing to throw her life away fighting Lady Ragyo!?

They were sisters! And all sisters should do their very best - even if they didn't always get along - to help their maman !

After all, they were family.

She threw herself at Ryuko, ignoring the clenching within her chest as their matching blades clashed in a vibrant display of crimson and purple, "Why do you hate Lady Ragyo? She's our maman ! She -"

"She AIN'T my damn MOM!"

Spiritual energy exploded from Senketsu as Ryuko shouted down the pathetic distraction. She didn't know - or care - why Nui Harime was mentioning pointless crap! All that mattered was kicking her ass! Roaring defiantly as she overpowered the Grand Couturier with an ear-splitting clang of metal upon metal, she waited for the perfect opportunity before punching Nui in the face, "Dad and I had issues! He was always busy working on some strange crap! And maybe he missed a few of my birthdays..."

Crimson-tinted smoke curled between her clenched fingers as Nui Harime soared across the Sewing Club, leaving a perfect silhouette in the wall next to Shinra Koketsu. Rubbing two fingers against the side of her mouth, wiping away the faint trail of blood, Ryuko sneered hatefully, "... but he was still my DAMN dad!"

She gripped the Scissor Blade with trembling hands as Nui Harime stumbled back into the room, her richly adorned dress damaged while blood trickled down her face, "And you killed him! So take that 'sister' crap and shove it up your ass!"

"N-No! No! This isn't right !"

Nui rushed Ryuko without a second thought, her expression a combination of impotent rage and despondent desperation. As she attacked again and again - throwing everything she had into winning only for Ryuko to constantly block the Scissor Blade - only a single thought echoed through her mind, "You and Ichigo... you're not like those naked apes!"

The ground underneath her boots buckled, cracking into splintered waves of pulverized metal when Ryuko counterattacked . Struggling beneath her sister's overwhelming strength, her vision wavering when the world briefly transformed into familiar images of a rocky landscape overlooking a city, she stammered, "So why are you helping them!? Why did you betray Lady Ragyo? Family should ALWAYS stick together! Through thick and thin! And -"

"Get it through your thick skull!"

Ryuko twisted her arms, sending the purple Scissor Blade flying out of the Grand Couturier's hands. As the hardened Life Fiber weapon spun through the air, embedding itself into the ground near Shinra Koketsu, she followed up with a punch that caused Nui's head to snap sideways, blood spraying from quivering lips, "My body might be made of Life Fibers... but I'm still human!"

Steam rose from her fist as she watched Nui bounce several times before crashing through a sewing station, "And nothing you, my bitch of a mom or that bastard vampire say will ever change that!"

" Ryuko!"

She turned her attention back to Shinra Koketsu. The appearance of the so-called ultimate Kamui sent shivers down her spine. But that wouldn't matter in a few seconds when she sliced the oversized dress into scraps of Life Fibers! Gripping the Scissor Blade with both hands as crimson energy coated the weapon, streaming down the dark red surface in turbulent waves of burning power, Ryuko stiffened - more from annoyance than shock - when Nui Harime slowly struggled back onto her feet.

"Give up, Nui Harime!"

With her shoulders slumped and dress tattered, blonde hair laying in disheveled curls against her back while blood trickled down her face, Nui forced her body to move, stumbling until she was standing between Ryuko and Shinra Koketsu.

"... why?"

It was difficult hearing Nui's quiet mumbling, which further annoyed Ryuko, "What the hell are you saying?"

"W-Why does Ichigo like you?"

Ryuko's mind ground to a screeching halt at the question. But the surprise rendering both Senketsu and herself completely speechless was eclipsed when Nui looked up, tears streaming down her cheeks. What the hell was going on? Nui Harime - the psychopath who murdered her dad, Ginjo, Shinjiro and nearly killed Mako - was crying ?

"H-He'd do anything for you and those stupid naked apes. B-But he won't even look at me," Nui trembled as she cried, shoulders shaking with every wracking sob.

Stopping Ryuko didn't matter anymore. Nothing mattered without Amu. But her sister was never coming back. Amu was gone, killed by the same hateful man who kidnapped her from Lady Ragyo when she couldn't protect herself. It wasn't fair . Ichigo hated her. Ryuko wanted to kill her. And the old goat? He preferred that fake thing calling itself Ururu, choosing to save something that didn't even exist.

"A-All I wanted was a family..."

Nui's vision blurred as she collapsed to her knees, anguish piercing her voice, "B-But Amu's gone. I'm all alone. I-I don't have anyone ."

A moment passed in silence as Ryuko watched the Grand Couturier break down into tears, unable to think of anything to say. She still hated Nui Harime. That would never change in a million years. But seeing... this... after everything that happened - after the psychotic bitch attempted to murder Mako for no damn reason - was confusing. She was conflicted, something Senketsu noticed when her arm lowered, the Scissor Blade tapping against the floor.

" Ryuko?"

"This doesn't feel right, Senketsu," she grimaced, remembering Ururu's question during the Great Culture and Sports Festival, "Kicking her ass is one thing. But this..."

Senketsu's eyes swiveled, the multicolored bands narrowing before his voice echoed in her mind, "In any case, I don't think we need to worry about Nui Harime. Let's destroy Shinra Koketsu and -"

Something pulsed through her soul before Senketsu finished, a sensation that caused the Kamui to instinctively tighten around her body. Turning around, eyes widening as an enormous explosion of spiritual pressure slammed into Honnouji Academy, Ryuko felt sweat dripping down her face.

"What the hell was that?"

---

...

---

Ichigo stepped backwards, eyes narrowing from the wind erupting in the aftermath of his Getsuga Tenshou. His breathing was slightly strained as the crescent-shaped spiritual energy slammed into the No-Star Slums, leaving a trail of destruction that vaporized entire neighborhoods. Lowering Tournesol as he watched the technique slam into Tokyo Bay, creating an enormous column of water extending nearly to the shore, his frown deepened when something emerged from the smoke, waist-length blonde hair fluttering gently as she plummeted to the ground.

" Did that kill her?"

He vanished without answering Mugetsu's question, covering hundreds of feet before landing near the clone. It was difficult sensing spiritual pressure with his old man fighting Ragyo Kiryuin, but being this close to Satsuki's clone made this easier, "I doubt it."

" Really?"

He brushed aside Mugetsu's disbelief when he noticed the golden blade lying next to the clone. Funny. He thought Bakuzan would have been thrown further away. She must have held onto her weapon even after falling unconscious. Reaching down, grabbing the off-colored weapon while keeping an eye on the clone, he watched the dark blue spread across its surface while Mugetsu grumbled, "She was nearly as tough as the REAL Satsuki."

"It makes sense she survived your Getsuga Tenshou if she's wearing something modeled after Junketsu," Ichigo conceded, aware of Mugetsu's eyes suddenly widening, "Junketsu was always tougher than she looked."

Mugetsu huffed at the notion that Junketsu was better at, well, anything, before her eyes swiveled towards the sword in Ichigo's left hand, "What do you plan on doing with that?"

"According to Kisuke, hitting Ragyo Kiryuin with both Scissor Blades at the same time should prevent her from regenerating," Ichigo stared at Bakuzan's replica, his voice increasingly strained, "Even if we don't get the chance to fight her..."

"... we can use it against Nui Harime?"

Ichigo's silence confused Mugetsu, causing her multicolored eyes to droop before immediately perking back up, "Nui Harime doesn't matter! The clone's defeated, right? We should focus on rescuing Orihime and leaving dealing with that psychopath to someone else! Like Ryuko and Senketsu!"

"Yeah", Ichigo nodded, craning his head upwards, staring at Honnouji Academy silhouetted against the moon, "Let's get back -"

"I-Impressive, I-Ichigo K-Kurosaki..."

Blood splattered beneath her mouth as the clone coughed, a sound that sent shivers down Ichigo's spine. Propping a trembling hand against the ground for support, fingers digging into the concrete, she raised her head, crimson trailing from the corners of her mouth, "B- But this fight isn't over..."

"You're still conscious ?"

"D-Did you think getting hit by your Getsuga Tenshou was enough to defeat me ?"

The clone forced herself to chuckle at Ichigo Kurosaki's childish naivety despite the copious amount of blood pooling underneath her body. Why would someone like him - who fought Lady Ragyo and the Grand Couturier - presume she would be so easily defeated? It was insulting . Without fanfare or further mockery, she tried pushing herself off the ground only to stumble, falling back onto her face. Coughing once more as blonde hair obscured the blood trickling down her face, she grimaced upon realizing most of her left arm was gone . Missing nearly halfway down her bicep with the familiar emerald glow of her Life Fibers accompanying the thick blood dripping freely from the wound.

"I-I am Satsuki Kiryuin..."

She staggered onto her feet, refusing to show the slightest weakness in front of Ichigo and Mugetsu. One of her pauldrons was missing, destroyed in the initial explosion of energy from Ichigo's Getsuga Tenshou, while burns and wounds marred her ashen gray flesh. Clenching her remaining hand into a trembling fist, fabric crinkling as her eyes focused upon Bakuzan in his grasp, she suppressed the slightest pangs of panic when she realized her injuries weren't regenerating, "I-I won't allow myself to be defeated so easily! This battle won't end until one of us is dead!"

"No... it's over..."

Ichigo lowered Tournesol, the blade almost touching the ground as his frown softened. The clone might not be Satsuki, but he couldn't stare into those familiar eyes, "I can tell you're trying to hide it... but your regeneration has reached its limits."

The clone's simmering anger dampened at the comment, faintly glowing green eyes widening as the wind swelled through the ruined streets, "Whatever Ragyo Kiryuin did... however she created you... wasn't perfect. If we keep fighting... if you keep throwing yourself at me without stopping... you'll die. So, that's why, I won't fight you anymore."

"Hold your tongue, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

He ignored her outrage, his voice lowering as he forced himself to stare into the clone's eyes, "There's something else... something I realized towards the end of our battle. Whenever I fight someone, I can generally tell how they think. I'm not suggesting I can read minds or anything like that, but I can get a general feeling of their resolve, whether they respect me or look down upon me. That's why I understand your anger. Why you're so determined to prove yourself stronger than Mugetsu. You know you're not the real Satsuki, don't you?"

"SHUT UP!"

The clone stammered, unable to properly articulate her thoughts as she staggered towards Ichigo. Gripping the front of Mugetsu, seething as blood continued spilling from between her lips, she snarled, "I am what she SHOULD have been! Someone loyal to the Original Life Fibers! Someone who wasn't a FAILURE! The perfect heiress to Revocs! Someone who was your equal, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

The clone fell to a knee, gripping her bleeding stump of an arm, "Defeating you! Besting Mugetsu and proving my superiority! That's the only reason for my existence! It's -"

"That's enough."

Ichigo and the clone turned simultaneously, the latter's eyes widening in recognition. There was no mistaking the owner of the voice. Walking across the ruined landscape without any nervousness in her stride, clad in an intricate black cloak fastened across her chest by several brass clasps, Satsuki's gaze momentary focused on Ichigo before turning towards the clone kneeling on the ground, "I see my mother has been busy in our absence."

"H-How..."

The clone staggered back onto her feet, blood dripping like water from the remnants of her arm as she viciously seethed, "Even with Lady Ragyo's presence... even focused on proving my superiority over Mugetsu... I should have sensed Junketsu!"

If Satsuki was perturbed at hearing something her voice and inflections refer to her mother with such obnoxious reverence, she did not show it. The only sign of her discontent with the clone's response was a tightening of her already appreciable scowl. Her heels clacked, reverberating sharply in the moonlit silence as she approached the clone, motioning towards her cloak with a sweeping gesture, "This cloak is one of Kisuke Urahara's inventions, capable of completely concealing one's spiritual pressure from inquiring eyes. My original intent was to use it to track down Hououmaru without drawing my mother's attention, leaving Ichigo and Ryuko free to carry out their own objectives."

Her eyes flickered towards the blade in Ichigo's left hand, identical aside from its coloration to the sword sheathed at her waist. A hint of annoyance appeared across her scowling visage at the implications. Without another word, without giving her replica a single moment to argue, she clasped her fingers around Bakuzan, the weapon's obsidian edge shimmering in the moonlight as the hood of her cloak was blown backwards.

"However, seeing you has forced my involvement."

She pointed the weapon between the defiant clone's eyes, waist-length black hair billowing in the swelling wind, "A Life Fiber clone of such high quality must have required the Grand Couturier's personal involvement. And for all her talk about me being a 'failure' and 'disappointment' to the Kiryuin name, my mother could not help herself to create an abomination modeled in my image yet utterly subservient to the Original Life Fiber."

"Satsuki!"

Ichigo grabbed Satsuki's wrist, meeting her determined gaze with one of equal resolve, "Even if that's true... killing her when she can't defend herself isn't right!"

"I have no intention of killing her."

His surprise at her answer - as quick and forthcoming as it was honest - was not unexpected. Staring into the clone's eyes, meeting its frustration with burgeoning commiseration, her brow furrowed, "Bereft of her weapon and confidence shattered by Mugetsu's power, striking her down would be immeasurably cruel."

She sheathed Bakuzan when Ichigo's grasp around her wrist loosened, the blade sliding into its scabbard with a soft click, "It would be an act condoned by one lacking morals. Striking down a defenseless adversary, even one created by the Grand Couturier, would make me little better than Ragyo Kiryuin. However, don't let empathy cloud your judgment, Ichigo!"

A sharpness pierced her voice as she glared at Ichigo, refusing to back down from their confrontation, "This clone is loyal to my mother. Neither words nor arguments will ever change her mind! As long as she lives, there exists the possibility she will inform Ragyo Kiryuin of our plans. Putting humanity's survival at jeopardy without the slightest hint of guilt."

"I know..."

Ichigo couldn't look at Satsuki. Despite hoping otherwise, she was right. Even if her clone couldn't fight, the only way to make sure she couldn't reach Ragyo Kiryuin - and sentencing humanity to a fate worse than death - was killing her. His jaw clenched at the conclusion, drawing Mugetsu's attention when he despondently added, "But still..."

"Shut your mouths!"

The clone grasped the front of Satsuki's cloak, clenching the fabric between fingers. Furious emerald stared into stoic sapphire as she pulled herself closer, strands of blonde hair falling over ashen gray skin while her shoulders trembled from the exertion, "Why don't you finish me off!? I would slaughter you without hesitation! I would tear Junketsu from your unworthy corpse! So why won't you do the same to me !? Am I not worthy of your attention, Satsuki Kiryuin !?"

" Huh? Why would she pull me away from Satsuki? "

Satsuki didn't hear Junketsu as the wind sweeping across Honnou City intensified, only deriving her Kamui's inquisitive question from the subtle changes across the face so familiar to her own. She understood her clone's frustration, perhaps better than anyone else. While twisted by her mother and Nui Harime until she was nothing more than a leashed animal fervently loyal to the Original Life Fiber, she still possessed her memories. The determination, resolve and decisiveness laying at the heart of her actions, which kept her focused, lay within her clone, albeit warped into something nearly unrecognizable.

Which is why killing her clone would be an act of mercy.

Yet she hesitated, allowing Ichigo's words to resonate within her mind. Something in the clone's expression - in its frustration and defiance - struck a cold, hard blow. And it took only an imperceptible moment, while familiar emerald eyes narrowed and eyebrows furrowed, to understand why. Twisted by the Grand Couturier's sadism, corrupted through her mother's physical ministrations or otherwise, the clone was Satsuki Kiryuin. The Student Council President who wouldn't have thought twice against striking down someone standing in the path of her goals.

Her expression tightened, drawing Junketsu's focus and worry. Ragyo Kiryuin had granted the worst parts of her psyche existence in the form of the Life Fiber clone, someone willing to slaughter anyone standing against the Original Life Fiber without hesitation, conscience or empathy.

But she had grown better than that.

"You are indeed worthy of my attention..."

Satsuki's expression softened, "... because you are a reminder of who I used to be."

She watched confusion, so alien coming from someone identical to herself, play across the clone's façade at the honest admission. But she wasn't surprised. Nor was she shocked when her clone released Kisuke Urahara's cloak, fingers trailing down the fabric as she collapsed onto her knees. It was apparent, she realized as the last traces of defiance escaped from what was so familiar, that Ragyo Kiryuin never believed the clone could defeat Ichigo. She might have briefly equaled Ichigo's prowess, but the absolute loyalty woven into her Life Fibers blinded her from the truth.

That she was expendable, a distraction to keep Ichigo occupied for several minutes. That her mother would sacrifice anything - anyone - to facilitate the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet's success.

"Why are you still here, Ichigo?"

The clack of her heels echoed sharply across the ruined landscape, snapping Ichigo from his thoughts as her brow furrowed, "Orihime Inoue won't rescue herself."

"Yeah," Ichigo nodded and, after a moment's hesitation, prepared to leave, pausing only to look back at the clone, "What about her?"

Satsuki kept her expression ambivalent as she gave the Life Fiber clone another, more sympathetic glance, "The injuries she sustained are severe, limiting her ability to move, let alone reach Ragyo Kiryuin. Leaving her alive should pose minimal risk to our plans."

Ichigo felt relieved when Satsuki marched away from her clone, adjusting Kisuke's cloak around Junketsu without breaking her stride. Frowning as Mugetsu muttered something about Satsuki wearing something hideous, he effortlessly pushed his Kamui's annoyance to the far corners of his mind and turned towards Honnouji Academy with renewed resolve. She was right. He needed to rescue Orihime and leave before Ragyo Kiryuin discovered their plans. Who knew how much longer his old man could keep her occupied? Especially considering she already tricked him... twice .

" Rescuing Orihime might be trickier than expected, Ichigo," Mugetsu brushed aside her annoyance at Satsuki, choosing instead to focus on something slightly more important at the moment,
"Satsuki's clone was waiting outside Orihime's room. It's likely Ragyo Kiryuin has -"

Her concern went unfinished, cut off with a strangled gasp when a massive wave of spiritual pressure slammed against Honnou City.

"Aizen!?"

Sweat trickled down his face, pooling around the edges of Mugetsu. He recognized this spiritual pressure. Incredible! Aizen was hiding something this powerful up his sleeves? Turning around, instinctively tightening his grip around Tournesol and Bakuzan, Ichigo immediately froze, eyes widening in stunned disbelief. The mountains north of Honnouji Academy were warping. With Satsuki tensing beneath the massive spiritual pressure, the clone driven to her hands and knees, he watched the horizon flicker, segments of the landscape fading into and out of reality.

But it was only when the effect expanded, rippling outwards like water on a lake, that he realized what Aizen had done.

"What the hell? That's his Bankai !?"

---

...

---

"What's wrong, Ragyo?"

The blood trickling down his arm vanished - absorbed by his Life Fibers - as he pushed away from the stunned matriarch, sandals skidding against the air. Rolling his shoulders while the wound on Ragyo's neck regenerated, flesh weaving itself back together with a sickening squelch, Isshin had little time to rest before she moved . But the sounds of her heels clacking gave everything away. He pivoted around the Needle Blade in her left hand, grimacing when several strands of silver hair floated in front of his eyes. He parried the other hardened Life Fiber weapon, simultaneously darting backwards as blood splattered the front of his shihakusho.

Spurting from the wound on Ragyo's stomach.

"Distracted in the middle of a fight? That's not like you."

Isshin took a moment to rest when an explosion of sapphire spiritual energy slammed against the No-Star Slums, sending a powerful shockwave reverberating outwards for miles in all direction. Something wasn't right. Ragyo's reaction time was slowing down. Her attacks were growing more predictable. And, most importantly, she stopped responding to his perfectly timed taunts. Yet his eyes widened, disbelief flooding his mind, when the faint string of French curses reached his ears, coinciding with the disappointment in her narrowed eyes, "Don't tell me you expected that science project to defeat Ichigo?"

That caused the matriarch to scoff derisively, " Hardly, Isshin."

Ragyo rolled her eyes at Isshin's behavior. Did he believe she would be enraged by such childish mockery? Or, better yet, that she cared about her experiment's fate? Tucking an errant strand of silver hair behind her ear, she stared at the smoking ruins of Satsuki's former kingdom, watching Ichigo's Getsuga Tenshou crash into Tokyo Bay, "Contrary to what you may believe, I never expected the project to defeat Ichigo. Yet I'm still disappointed by the level of failure. After all that effort dragging Nui and Amu away from their work, spending some of my own time stitching a replica of Junketsu onto its skin and implanting memories into its Life Fibers, I assumed it could preoccupy Ichigo or Ryuko long enough for me to deal with you ."

A wistful sigh passed between slightly parted lips, "But it appears no matter what I do, Satsuki will always manage to be a failure."

"Don't sell yourself short, Ragyo."

Isshin wasn't disappointed when Ragyo's eyebrow quirked upwards in mild curiosity as her attention shifted away from Ichigo, "Masaki always said I had no sense of fashion. But even I could tell that clone was significantly higher quality than the others. And that replica of Junketsu? It might pale in comparison to Junketsu, but it's still pure Life Fiber clothing. Better than any Goku Uniform or Raiment on the planet. Weaving its Life Fibers without Junketsu's dress patterns must have taken hours . Between you and me, Ragyo, I don't think I could have created something that unique even if I tried."

"Oh, Isshin. Flattery will get you nowhere," Ragyo brushed aside Isshin's mentioning of that woman, choosing instead to focus on more pressing matters. There would be enough time to deal with Isshin's flagrant disrespect once humanity fulfilled their collective destiny. As food and nourishment for Life Fibers. But right now, she needed to address the source of the man's shifting emotions.

"But it appears something else is bothering you."

The corners of her mouth curled into an amused smirk as her heels clacked softly upon air, "If it involves my pet project, please don't hold back. I AM open to criticisms on improving my technique."

"... the clone had Satsuki's memories, didn't it?"

Isshin glowered when Ragyo's grin slowly broadened, carrying a sense of sadistic amusement that sent disgust rippling down his spine, "You probably also gave her free will, something most clones don't have. That means she knows..."

"... she's not actually Satsuki? Oui..."

Ragyo found Isshin's surprise towards her admission, the disgust twisting his handsome features, strangely endearing. But as someone possessing every secret on Life Fibers, his reaction to an otherwise failed project was pathétique. Honestly, listening to Isshin's human complaints was frustrating! Even stitched into a replica of Junketsu, her daughter's martial prowess and memories woven into its Life Fibers, she never believed her pet project - which was so much more than a normal clone - could overwhelm Ichigo and Mugetsu. Or Ryuko and the Kamui woven by her former husband. It was powerful, yes. Strong enough to slaughter those naked apes, barring that one interesting hybrid on their payroll? Without question.

Defeat Satsuki, tearing Junketsu from her unworthy flesh? Of course, but with some difficulty thanks to Junketsu's evolved strength. But Ichigo or Ryuko?

Jamais .

"But putting aside the question of Ichigo using Getsuga Tenshou, I'm quite surprised he defeated my project so ruthlessly," she closed her eyes, chuckling lightly as the breeze billowed around them, "I expected Ryuko - not Ichigo - to use her Kamui's power with adolescent recklessness. After all, his feelings towards Satsuki have already been made abundantly clear."

Isshin's silence spoke volumes. More than any excuse or attempt at diverting the conversation. It appeared she touched a nerve . Something previously thought impossible. She smirked at the notion - a malicious and sadistic expression. Stepping closer to the man only to immediately leap backwards when Isshin launched himself towards her, Ragyo avoided the blade carving towards her throat, eyes wide and pupils dilated in amusement, "What's wrong, Isshin?"

She threw his question back in his face, taunting him with the irony, as they danced through the skies above Honnouji Academy. Every time their blades clashed in a magnificent display of multihued light, blood gushing from wounds already half-regenerated, her smirk broadened, pleasure coursing through her Life Fibers. For the first time, Isshin lost control over his temperament! And she was ecstatic ! Basking in the revelation! Nothing could take away the amusement - the gratification - racing down her spine! Not even the uncomfortable feeling of Isshin's sword dragging against the Needle Blade in a burst of tri-toned sparks, piercing her sternum without the slightest traces of hesitation.

"Don't tell me you were oblivious towards Ichigo's affection for Satsuki!?"

Isshin frowned when Ragyo pulled herself off his tachi, removing the blade from her chest with a sickening squelch . In an instant he vanished, moving before Ragyo's wounds had the time to regeneration. As spiritual energy wrapped around his hardened Life Fiber weapon, he swung downwards, ears ringing when both Needle Blades intercepted his sword barely an inch from her face, "That's not important, Ragyo!"

" Au contraire, Isshin!"

Her arms quivered at the effort necessary to counter Isshin's impressive strength, manicured fingers trembling when the Needle Blades pushed towards her neck, "His affection towards Satsuki made it THAT much more difficult for Ichigo strike it down! Even if Ichigo knew otherwise, defeating something that looked, sounded and behaved like my failure of a daughter must be devastating !"

"Then you certainly don't know Ichigo!"

Cartilage shattered - blood and spittle spraying from gasping lips - when Isshin slammed his forehead against Ragyo's nose. As the normally composed and implacable woman staggered backwards, one hand clutching her face, he scoffed, shihakusho rustling as spiritual energy thrummed through his Life Fibers, "Ichigo's tougher than you think, Ragyo. But you're right about one thing. He's probably feeling guilty about destroying your clone of Satsuki. I'll be sure to talk to him later about how he feels. He'll probably yell at me, saying he's fine and to mind my own business. That's Ichigo's decision. But I'll have all the time in the world once you're stopped."

"Stopped!?"

The word rolled off Ragyo's tongue alongside a short, yet deep, chuckle, "Don't be absurd, Isshin. You, of all people, should know the Original Life Fiber cannot be stopped."

She lowered her hand, exposing the manic grin as the damage marring her features vanished, "Life Fibers are the beginning and end of ALL things. Humanity's existence - no, everything on the planet - are fated to become their nourishment! To be devoured as part of the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet! Stalling me with this pathetic display of resistance won't change -"

An appreciable wave of spiritual pressure brushed against her mind, turning her condemnation of Isshin's poor life choices - including betraying her for the naked apes - into a strangled grunt.

HIM!

Ragyo's eyes twitched furiously at the familiarity. Her fingers gripped the Needle Blades tightly enough that the weapons trembled. That man - that shinigami - was inside the Kiryuin Manor, which meant only one thing. A hiss of air escaped clenched teeth, arms quivered from barely suppressed rage as she looked over her shoulder, watching with widening eyes as the landscape surrounding her ancestral home twisted, warping and rippling like waves on stilled water. What!? What was this!? What had that abominable man DONE!? With righteous indignation, Ragyo turned back to Isshin, seething at the guilt concealed beneath false innocence.

An overwhelming sensation of betrayal swept through her mind. So, this was his plan! He was keeping her distracted - stalling her - long enough for that atrocious shinigami to reach the Forbidden Chamber! The Original Life Fiber was in danger! And it was all ISSHIN'S fault He betrayed her! All for the pigs in human clothing! How could -"

The anger clouding her judgment, urging her to attack Isshin without abandon, vanished when a celestial presence filled her thoughts.

She repressed a jubilant laugh. Did that contemptible shinigami attempt to seal away the Original Life Fiber using Kisuke Urahara's technique? La vie est drôle! It was a flagrant insult to her intelligence! After breaking through her wards, bypassing the other protections and witnessing the majesty of the Original Life Fiber with his unworthy gaze, the man attempted using the exact, same technique as Kisuke Urahara? Ragyo didn't know what was worse - his overbearing arrogance or contemptible rudeness. A man possessing his knowledge of Life Fibers should have known the Original Life Fiber wouldn't fall for the same thing twice .

That he didn't spoke volumes about her overestimation of Sosuke Aizen's abilities.

Ragyo felt herself moving when the Original Life Fiber enveloped her mind, filling her body and soul with its glorious presence. Isshin, despite his stubbornness and refusal to see the truth, wasn't stupid . They were equally connected to the divine creature awakening beneath the Kiryuin Manor. And as her body raised its arm, multicolored radiance coalescing around her fingers, she believed - no, knew - beyond a shadow of a doubt he was terrified . Horrified by the sudden presence inside his mind, something he forcibly suppressed for years. It was obvious from his frozen posture, a brief moment where his guard was lowered relative to her own.

With her lips curling into a smirk independent of any conscious control, Ragyo watched her hand press against Isshin's stomach, bringing the man back to harsh reality.

"Éclat Divine."

The energy detonated point-blank, sending a shockwave of rippling rainbow light smashing into the ground. Pressing harder than necessary as a secondary explosion encompassed her body, grinning despite the feedback vaporizing half of her right arm, Ragyo memorized Isshin's expression in the brief moment time stood still, her chin resting over his shoulder right before he was sent soaring backwards. With the front of his shihakusho destroyed, exposing his physique unaffected by the ravages of time, she watched the only man she loved smash into the ground, crashing through building after building before stopping in the outskirts of Tokyo thousands of feet away.

And then she moved, descending towards Honnouji Academy.

There was no point wasting her precious time basking in the fleeting sense of temporary victory. Even a point-blank Éclat Divine would only inconvenience Isshin for a minute. Three at the most. In fact, she could already feel his presence recovering. Tearing through the many anti-Life Fiber defenses Satsuki 'secretly' installed throughout her former kingdom, metal and concrete parting like water against her body, Ragyo smirked as she landed in the Sewing Club, her heel tapping against the floor with a soft clack .

"Oh Nui..."

She offhandedly noticed the Grand Couturier slumped against the ground, tears streaming from her eyes, "It appears you underestimated Ryuko's newfound strength. Still, you managed to protect Shinra Koketsu long enough for me to deal with Isshin. And that's all that matters."

"RAGYO KIRYUIN!"

An earsplitting clang echoed across the Sewing Club, shattering the metal plating underneath her heels as she halted her daughter's attack. With the Scissor Blade quivering against her Needle Blade, streams of crimson blasting from her former husband's weapon, Ragyo sighed, "How rude..."

Ryuko coughed as she found herself lifted off the ground, the muscles in her stomach twisting around Ragyo Kiryuin's fist. What the hell!? She didn't even see the bitch move! Gagging on the blood trickling from the corner of her mouth, choking when Ragyo wrapped a hand around her throat tightly enough that she found it difficult to breath, she snarled at the arrogant expression in the matriarch's eyes. Like hell she was going to let the bitch win! Not this time!

"Take this!"

Crimson energy enveloped the Scissor Blade as she swung towards the only target available - Ragyo Kiryuin's neck - with Senketsu's full power, "Niban Gen -"

"... but I simply don't have time to deal with your childish nonsense."

Ragyo afforded herself a moment's hesitation to ponder the situation as Ryuko crashed through the ceiling of the Sewing Club, screaming obscenities at the top of her lungs. It appeared her former husband was a terrible father. A young lady - especially her daughter - should watch their language. It was unbecoming of a Kiryuin, even one raised without proper guidance or direction, to shout, let alone speak, such ugly words. But Ryuko's resilience was surprising. Her misguided daughter had grown stronger than expected fighting those pathetic Quincy and that vampire. And, if Senketsu's power was any indication, on the cusp of something wonderful .

It was a shame there was no time to examine the Kamui's threading. The things she could learn from her former husband's creation...

Mais telle est la vie.

"Your work is finished, Nui."

She hooked two fingers underneath the straps of her dress, pausing long enough to frown, before pulling down the silk-like material with fond reverence. It was a shame discarding one of Isshin's gifts. But she no longer needed to adorn herself with lesser clothing. Something he would understand soon enough. There was simply nothing he - nor anyone - could do to stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

As the fabric slid against her skin, exposing taut flesh before falling around her feet, Ragyo took a single, shuddering breath and stepped towards Shinra Koketsu, ignoring the comatose Grand Couturier barely acknowledging her presence, "I can't wait to find out how it feels on me."

---

...

---

" Ryuko!"

"I'm working on it, Senketsu!"

Ryuko gnashed her teeth as the kaleidoscopic energy crashed against the Scissor Blade. The constant humming of the spiritual energy beating against her ears - an annoying sound that made it almost impossible to hear Senketsu - pissed her off! Snarling when the scenery beneath Ragyo Kiryuin's overpowered attack changed, shifting from the familiar neighborhood that looked a lot like Mako's to the eerily calm surface of Tokyo Bay, her dual-toned hair whipped frenziedly in the rushing wind as crimson energy enveloped the Scissor Blade.

Like hell she was going to let her bitch of a mom send them flying all the way back to Karakura Town!

"Screw this! Ichiban Genkai!"

Her mom's technique warped as she swung the Scissor Blade as hard as possible, throwing Senketsu's full power into the Ichiban Genkai. Multicolored spiritual energy buckled against the hardened Life Fiber weapon, clashing violently in an explosion of light that seriously hurt her eyes. But Ryuko didn't stop. She could feel Senketsu's pain as their Life Fibers reached their limits. And that only made her want to win even more! Shouting at the top of her lungs, Ryuko pushed every last scrap of power into the Scissor Blade, slashing through her mom's attack.

"God... damn... it!"

Ryuko struggled to catch her breath, panting heavily while smoke wafted from the Scissor Blade, "That was too damn close, Senketsu!"

" It could have been worse, Ryuko. "

Senketsu grumbled at the damage to his threading. Not only were several patches of his Life Fibers scorched, but deflecting something as powerful as Ragyo Kiryuin's attack left them rather drained. It was an uncomfortable - and unwanted - sensation. Especially so soon after fighting that shinigami in London. The one with the disturbing

Bankai, " Do you remember what Ragyo Kiryuin said about Ichigo's father?"

"Not really," Ryuko lowered the Scissor Blade and looked down, noticing for the first time she was standing hundreds of feet above the ground. Without Shippu. Something that would have been handy against the shinigami and her stupidly overpowered Bankai.

"But talking about Ichigo's dad can wait! Senketsu Shippu!"

Her lower body transformed in a burst of crimson light and stars. Newly-formed jet engines wrapped around her legs, momentarily sputtering before blasting at full power, sending her rocketing back towards Honnouji Academy. Senketsu might not be the fastest Kamui, but he was pretty damn fast when push came to shove! And right now, kicking her mom's glowing ass meant they couldn't afford holding anything back!

"Because I want to see the look on her face when I tear that stupid outfit apart!"

She reached the outer limits of the No-Star Slums in seconds . Another second later she spiraled over Honnouji Academy's walls, Senketsu's eye briefly turning bloodshot as the Scissor Blade transformed into Decapitation Mode. Ignoring the transmitter in the middle of the courtyard, she spiraled tightly towards the hole in the side of the school leading straight into the Sewing Club.

Only to slam face-first into a Life Fiber barrier.

"Gah!"

An undignified grunt accompanied Ryuko's descent when she bounced against the ground, rolling head-over-heels with her cursing becoming increasingly vulgar. Angrily stabbing the Scissor Blade into the ground when she finally came to an embarrassing - and completely undignified - stop, she turned around, glaring at the shimmering barrier, "Fuck! I forgot about that stupid thing!"

"Ragyo Kiryuin hasn't been sitting around," Senketsu shook around Ryuko, dislodging the shredded Life Fibers from his threading, "I'm still a little lightheaded, but I don't remember it being so large. Or forming so quickly. And I'm certain the Life Fibers are circulating as fast as those in Isshin Kurosaki's barrier. So be careful, Ryuko. We don't know whether or not Ragyo Kiryuin wove any more surprises."

"That's just freakin' great!"

Ryuko rubbed away the smudge of dirt on her cheek. She should have guessed one of Satsuki's crappy inventions would eventually bite them in the ass! How the hell were they going to destroy a Life Fiber barrier? It was impossible to scratch the damn things! Something she learned first-hand after Senketsu's Niban Genkai failed to dent the barrier around Karakura Town. But there had -

Her mind ground a screeching halt when she remembered something important. It might look the same. It even felt the same. But this thing wasn't a Life Fiber barrier! It was something else!

And that meant they had a chance!

"Hey, Senketsu. I have an idea. But it's gonna be risky..."

" Yes! I see what you're planning!"

Senketsu gave his best impression of a smirk - the multicolored rings of his eye narrowing - at the interesting idea, "Hitting that barrier with our full power should work!"

"Then what the hell are we waiting for!? Senketsu Senkou!"

The sensation of Senketsu tightening around her body was overshadowed by the seriousness of the situation. She needed to hit Satsuki's stupid barrier hard and fast! There was no time to waste thinking about a plan! Spitting angrily onto the ground as Senketsu's horns lengthened, resembling Junketsu's only significantly more jagged, Ryuko gripped the Scissor Blade with both hands, curling her fingers through the perfectly-shaped grooves along the handle, "We'll only get one shot, Senketsu, so let's make it count!"

"Don't waste your energy, Ryuko!"

Satsuki landed between Ryuko and the High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer, preventing her sister from wasting energy attempting to achieve the impossible. Turning around with a sharp clack of Junketsu's heel when Ichigo arrived, brow furrowed at the limited number of possibilities explaining Ryuko's predicament, her frown deepened into a glowering scowl, "The High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer might not have the same defensive capabilities as Isshin Kurosaki's barrier, but it's not less formidable! It must be attacked simultaneously and with perfect coordination if we are to have the slightest chance of overloading the redundant Life Fiber systems!"

"Damn it!"

Ichigo frowned as the autumn wind gusted, blowing through Honnouji Academy's courtyard with ominous ferocity. He could sense Orihime's spiritual pressure inside the building but she wasn't in the same place. She must have left the Student Council chambers after he was ambushed by that Life Fiber clone. And if she was currently running around, that could only mean Ragyo Kiryuin didn't have any other traps waiting for them, "That complicates things. I'm guessing Ragyo Kiryuin is hiding somewhere inside that barrier, right?"

"Yeah, she blindsided Senketsu and me after we finished kicking Nui Harime's ass."

Ryuko swung the Scissor Blade towards Honnouji Academy's central tower, snarling at the intimate memory of Ragyo sending her flying out of the Sewing Club, "The bitch's probably busy fitting her ugly ass into Shinra Koketsu!"

"Oh, dear. That is not how a daughter should address her mother."

A series of powerful explosions rippled through Honnouji Academy, crisscrossing up the central tower in alternating colors as mocking laughter filled the courtyard. With an entrance worthy of someone of her stature - announcing her reemergence with extravagant flair - Ragyo appeared upon the school's pinnacle alongside an eruption of blinding radiance, Shinra Koketsu conveying both power and hierarchy. Smirking triumphantly while floating above Honnouji Academy, the thought of dirtying Shinra Koketsu by touching something so filthy never crossing her mind, she extended a single, talon-like finger, the gesture almost unnoticeable within the multicolored light effusing the ultimate Kamui.

"In any case, what makes you think I'll give you the chance to ruin my plans?"

" That's Shinra Koketsu!? It's... "

"... colorful? "

Ryuko frowned, but not at Mugetsu's question or Junketsu's answer. Something didn't feel right about Ragyo Kiryuin. The bitch was flaunting the so-called ultimate Kamui like it was the newest fashion. Something that gaudy had to be powerful. But her mom's spiritual pressure didn't feel any different than it did five minutes ago. Cursing under her breath, Senketsu shuddering as goosebumps broke out across his Life Fibers, she tightened her grip on the Scissor Blade.

"That gaudy outfit didn't make her any stronger! So why the hell is she so damn confident!?"

"That does not matter, Ryuko!"

Satsuki dared not look away from their mother, focusing her recently acquired spiritual prowess on the billowing white and ruby cross-stitched folds of Shinra Koketsu, "Ragyo Kiryuin would never announce herself in so grandiose a manner - ruining the element of surprise in the process -without a plan! But not the circumstances of her arrival! Despite wearing Shinra Koketsu, our mother deigned to emerge behind the safety of the High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer!"

"Which means she's not yet at full power," Ichigo raised Tournesol and his duplicate Bakuzan, scowling when Ragyo Kiryuin's smirk widened, "The only question is how do we take her down."

Ragyo listened to her eldest daughter's astute observation, a twinge of something resembling motherly pride forming in the back of her mind. But she wasn't smiling at Satsuki putting thirteen years of meticulous sculpting - gently molding her body into the barest facsimile of a worthy daughter - to barely adequate use. That much she expected from the start. No, she was pleased that Isshin's son had confiscated her experiment's copy of Bakuzan, forged from hardened Life Fibers much like the original blade. And judging from Ichigo's posture and scowl, he knew what two hardened Life Fiber weapons could accomplish against a Life Fiber Hybrid.

Something he undoubtedly learned from Isshin or Kisuke Urahara.

"Oh, Ichigo..."

A hint of burnt orange appeared beneath Shinra Koketsu's billowing sleeve when she raised her right arm, grinning at the sudden terror filling Honnouji Academy, "You have so much to learn."

"ORIHIME!"

Ichigo moved the moment he saw Orihime in Ragyo Kiryuin's grasp, flickering across Honnouji Academy before Mugetsu finished transforming into Zangetsu. Spiritual energy writhed around Tournesol and Bakuzan when he reappeared in front of Ragyo, separated from the woman by the High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer. He could hear Satsuki shouting, telling him to calm down. But he couldn't - no, he refused - to let anything happen to Orihime! Slamming both weapons into the barrier only to snarl when they abruptly stopped, skittering across the vibrating edge without doing anything, Ichigo shouted despondently, his voice turning desperate .

"Let her go!"

Ragyo ran several fingers through Orihime's hair, ignoring Ichigo's outburst while keeping her other hand clamped over her daughter's mouth, "Orihime's powers are unique, wouldn't you agree?"

Amusement fluttered through her soul as she caressed Orihime's cheek, wiping away the tears staining her daughter's face, "Only a true Daughter of the Original Life Fiber could undo the damage to the Grand Couturier's eye! Eliminating Souichiro's final act of pitiful defiance against me!"

A melodramatic sigh passed between her lips when Ryuko decided to assist Ichigo's foolish efforts. Children these days simply didn't have respect for their elders. Without the slightest care about their efforts, only moderately interested in the power being thrown against the High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer, she brought Orihime into a tight embrace, fingers clasped around her daughter's waist. Leaning over Orihime when Ichigo and Ryuko's spiritual pressures increased, forcing the barrier to compensate, a single, shuddering breath passed between her slightly parted lips.

"But that's only a small fraction of her true capabilities."

She pressed a hand against Orihime's heart, holding one of the cheap hairpins between her fingers, "The true form of Orihime's power - that which you call Shun Shun Rikka - is none other than Absolute Domination!"

"What!?"

"It's quite obvious, Ryuko," Ragyo was mildly annoyed by her daughter's disbelief. Did Ryuko believe an ordinary human - even those with peculiar and interesting abilities - could regenerate damage caused by the Scissor Blades? Did she arrogantly assume a pig in human clothing - shinigami or otherwise - could bring the dead back to life?

It was ludicrous even considering such foolish notions!

"While dearest Nui and Amu were created with the singular purpose of weaving Shinra Koketsu, they could not grant it life."

She swept her gaze downwards, lips curling into a smile, "Another component was necessary. The finishing touch, if you will."

Ichigo's heart stopped when thousands of Life Fibers emerged from Shinra Koketsu, wrapping around Orihime before she could blink, "DON'T DO IT!"

He stabbed Tournesol and Bakuzan into the High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer when Orihime was pulled into Shinra Koketsu. An explosion of spiritual energy sliced into his arms when the backlash burnt Mugetsu's Life Fibers, blackening the armor around his hands. But despite pushed everything into shredding apart the barrier - his heart sinking at the pain Mugetsu felt as the barrier rippled, forcing their spiritual energy up his arms - Ichigo realized it wasn't working .

"ORIHIME!"

Ichigo was forced to watch - to listen to Ragyo Kiryuin's laughter - when Orihime disappeared inside Shinra Koketsu. Teetering on the edge of despair, shouting Orihime's name one final time, he felt Ryuko's hand grab Mugetsu and pull, yanking him sideways moments before an explosion of multicolored spiritual energy slammed into the barrier.

"GETSUGA TENSHOU!"

The High-Velocity Life Fiber Jammer popped like a cork when Isshin unleashed the spiritual energy writhing around his blade. Strands of shredded Life Fibers disintegrated within the kaleidoscopic wave of energy carving a path through Honnouji Academy, turning the pinnacle of the school - and the Student Council Chambers - into dust. A thump shook the artificial island keeping Honnou City from sinking into Tokyo Bay when his Getsuga Tenshou sliced through the

Two-Star Residential Districts before detonating in a blast of light overwhelming everything for miles.

"Ichigo!"

Isshin shouted over the crackling energy of his Getsuga Tenshou, out of breath for the first time in ages. He understood why Ichigo was shell-shocked. What Ragyo did to Orihime was reprehensible. If he had recovered from Ragyo's sucker punch a little faster... if he hadn't allowed the Original Life Fiber to get inside his mind... none of this would be happening. But there wasn't time to drown their sorrows! Not when Ragyo was on the verge of destroying everything, "Pull yourself together! Ragyo might have absorbed Orihime but there's still time to save her!"

"I..."

"Hey!"

Ryuko stomped towards Ichigo before ending his stupid protests by punching him in the shoulder. Hard. After the initial shock wore off - and Ichigo's surprise faded into something a little more familiar - she scowled, turning away while keeping her hand pressed against Mugetsu, "The old goat's right, so pull yourself together! Because there's no way I'm going to let Ragyo Kiryuin win! Senketsu and me... we're gonna kick her ass! And when we're done kicking her ass, we're gonna save Orihime. Got it!?"

"... you're right. Thanks, Ryuko."

"Damn straight I'm right," she playfully punched Ichigo again - just to get the point across - before noticing Satsuki standing next to his dad. But her sister somehow arriving without making a sound wasn't why she suddenly turned around, covering her eyes with one hand.

"Put on some freakin' clothing, will ya!?"

Isshin ignored Ryuko's embarrassment with experience born from seventeen years as a father, raising three normally well-behaved children. That he wasn't wearing anything other than hakama and a single sandal - all that remained after Ragyo took advantage of his momentary lapse in focus - shouldn't bother anyone with confidence in their own self-image. Frowning when the presence in the back of his mind strengthened, he turned to Satsuki, brushing aside Ichigo's own complains, "There's a way to save Orihime. But I'll need -"

"Welcome back, Isshin."

The smoke enveloping Ragyo vanished when she casually flicked her wrist, sending the talkative man slamming into the wall above Honnouji Academy's entrance. She smiled tenderly when blood spewed from Isshin's mouth as the concussive force shattered his bones and liquefied several of his organs. Now, why on earth would she allow him to speak about sensitive matters in front of their children? Isshin truly was an audacious man. Not only did he presume she wasn't listening to their conversation, but he was so focused on stopping her - stopping the Original Life Fiber - that he neglected his personal appearance, leaving him naked from the waist up.

Not that she was complaining.

"If I didn't know better, I'd think you were trying to kill me."

Ragyo chuckled softly when Ryuko attacked without the slightest provocation. She would be the first to admit that Senketsu's power was impressive. More so than expected. However, compared to Shinra Koketsu, all Life Fibers - Kamui included - paled in comparison. Maroon eyes, ringed by kaleidoscopic coloration, closed as her daughter screamed angrily at the top of her lungs. A single, talon-like finger extended from her curled hands when spiritual energy rippled down the Scissor Blade, painting the crimson edge with light so grandiose she could feel Ryuko's spiritual energy in her Life Fibers.

And an earsplitting clang resonated across Honnouji Academy - timed beautifully with Ryuko's expression of terrified shock - when she stopped the hardened Life Fiber blade's descent using nothing more than a single finger.

"What the hell!?"

Her shoulders trembled, shaking from repressed laughter as she clamped the Scissor Blade between her finger and thumb, preventing Ryuko from retreating despite her daughter's best efforts. Absolute Domination was magnificent! She could feel Orihime's power flowing through Shinra Koketsu! Through her own Life Fibers! Filling her with power befitting someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber! It was unlike anything she'd ever experienced!

"Tenrai Kagai!"

She allowed Satsuki the opportunity to strike Shinra Koketsu with all the strength her frail, human body could handle. It didn't matter whether Junketsu ascended into her Fashion Week Apparel. The concepts of physical ability and spiritual prowess amounted to nothing against Absolute Domination. That was simply how the world worked. And when Bakuzan stopped cold against Shinra Koketsu, trembling angrily against the nape of her neck while the sapphire energy enveloping the midnight black weapon shattered like glass, she laughed, the sound both melodious and regal.

"It's useless, Satsuki."

She heard Satsuki's faint gasp when Bakuzan failed to damage Shinra Koketsu. She sensed her daughter's frustration when the backlash left her hands trembling, blood dripping down her cheek. And yes, it was impossible to ignore Junketsu's shock, her curiosity silenced by the actions of her eldest daughter. Yet she tempered the pleasure threatening, refusing to let amusement at Satsuki's hopelessness cloud her judgment.

With Orihime having fulfilled her purpose, there was nothing in Isshin's repertoire capable of matching Shinra Koketsu. Let alone countering Absolute Domination. She stood upon the cusp of victory. Nudist Beach's headquarters in Osaka was crippled by Esdeath and Yuu. Everything required to commence the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet - heralding the beginning of the end for humanity - was within her grasp.

However, Isshin was acquaintances with Kisuke Urahara.

And she knew from experience not to underestimate that contemptible man.

"I'm afraid you lack the strength to cut a single thread on Shinra Koketsu. And even if you could, I would not allow you to do so."

Satsuki's eyes widened when Ragyo Kiryuin's fist smashed into Ryuko's stomach, the accompanying shockwave sending her sister crashing through Honnouji Academy's walls. She did not hesitate to move when their mother swept her arm backwards, hastily raising Bakuzan to fend off the same wave of physical force that incapacitated Isshin Kurosaki. Blood and spittle spewed from quivering lips when her arms buckled, Bakuzan forced aside by the overwhelming power of Shinra Koketsu.

Crashing towards the ground with a sharp crackle of thunder, darkness forming along the edges of her vision while Ragyo Kiryuin's mocking laughter filled her thoughts, Satsuki tensed when Ichigo's arms wrapped around her waist, their combined momentum sending him skidding nearly halfway across the courtyard.

"Are you alright?"

"I'm fine," she staggered away from Ichigo, stumbling when pain wracked her body. Even with Junketsu's superior endurance, she wasn't like Ichigo or Ryuko. She couldn't allow her mother to land another blow. With blood trickling from the corners of her mouth, peripherally aware of Isshin Kurosaki intercepting Ryuko before she left Honnou City, she scowled at Ichigo, cutting off his warranted concerns involving her health.

"My wounds are superficial, Ichigo! They can wait until after we rescue Orihime Inoue from Shinra Koketsu!"

"I know," Ichigo glared at Ragyo Kiryuin, meeting the woman's amused gaze as Ryuko and his dad landed next to Satsuki, "So, what's the plan? There has to be a way to pull Orihime out of that thing!"

"EXCELSUS."

Satsuki felt Junketsu's curiosity while Ichigo's brow furrowed at the name, "Honnouji Academy's final defense apparatus against the Original Life Fiber. If we can activate EXCELSUS without drawing Ragyo Kiryuin's attention, the combined power of its Anti-Life Fiber weaponry might be enough to weaken Shinra Koketsu's hold upon Orihime."

"An interesting plan, Satsuki."

Satsuki stiffened at the amused voice nearly whispering in her ear. She immediately pivoted, Junketsu's heels clacking as she leapt away from Ragyo Kiryuin, Bakuzan held diagonally across her chest. Without preamble, giving neither sign nor indication from her monstrous spiritual pressure, her mother had appeared behind them. Moving from Honnouji Academy's tower fast enough that even Isshin Kurosaki was unprepared.

"EXCELSUS is quite possibly the strongest Anti-Life Fiber system on the planet," Ragyo memorized her eldest daughter's frustration before sweeping her gaze towards Isshin, sighing wistfully at the conflicted expressions dancing in his eyes, "But I'm afraid you sadly overestimate its capabilities. Your 'final defense apparatus' cannot hope to stand against the Original Life Fiber. Which means against Shinra Koketsu... it's no more of a threat than those naked apes!"

"I don't give a crap about Shinra Koketsu!"

The Scissor Blade shimmered as Ryuko clenched the sword with both hands, "Because once we're done kicking your ass, we're going to pull Orihime out of that ugly dress!"

"Is that what you think?"

Ragyo shook her head, sighing in faux disappointment when Senketsu - followed by Junketsu and Mugetsu - transformed into their advanced configuration. Even Isshin's posture had changed, the stubborn man raising his weapon despite knowing the true power of Absolute Domination coursing through Shinra Koketsu. It was tragic. And irritating. That Ichigo and her daughters believed they possessed the ability to remove Orihime from Shinra Koketsu - to cripple the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet when she stood upon the cusp of victory - was insulting.

And that could NOT go unpunished.

The large, billowing sleeves of Shinra Koketsu rustled when she extended her arms, sweeping them outwards in a welcoming gesture. Talon-like fingers splayed widely as kaleidoscopic light enveloped her hands, rising in flame-like waves dissipating several meters above her head. Smirking when symmetrical sets of eyes spun from Shinra Koketsu, the largest framing her hooded visage, she chuckled at Isshin's terrified expression, something Ichigo appeared to notice with surprising rapidity.

"It would be foolish to presume the possibility you succeed - however remote - doesn't exist. Miracles do occur, after all."

Her voice twisted demonically as the light enveloping her hands erupted outwards, radiating proudly across the courtyard while the multicolored backdrop accompanying Shinra Koketsu devoured the darkness, "But I cannot - no, I refuse - to allow your arrogant, childish resistance interfere with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet!"

Ichigo's eyes widened at the light surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin's hands. Something was wrong. He could sense it. Whatever this light was, it wasn't spiritual energy. But before he could move - retreat to a safe distance until he determined what Satsuki's mom was planning - Mugetsu screamed inside his head, trembling as she returned to normal in a flash of blue light.

"Mugetsu!? What's going -"

He stumbled to his knees, when every last scrap of spiritual energy was suddenly - and violently - ripped from his body. Struggling to move, fingers curled through the dirt as the light from Shinra Koketsu intensified, Ichigo stiffened when he noticed the same thing happening to Ryuko and Satsuki, "What the hell? Why can't I move!?"

"I-I don't know," Mugetsu quivered, her threading unresponsive, "But that light... it's doing something to me, Ichigo! My Life Fibers are paralyzed!"

"C'mon, Senketsu!"

Ryuko leaned against the Scissor Blade, gripping the curved handle with shaking fingers, "Pull yourself together! We've been through tougher crap than a little light show!"

"It's no use, Ryuko! I have no strength! The moment that strange light hit us, all of my power vanished!"

"Shinra Koketsu is the master of all Life Fibers."

The divine light enveloping her hands flickered - and then faded entirely - when Ragyo watched Isshin falter, his Life Fibers weakened nearly to the point of death. It was disheartening having to strike down the only man she loved. But Isshin's refusal to accept the truth shown to them by the Original Life Fiber - that humanity only existed to serve as nourishment for Life Fibers - required some tough love, "Any Life Fibers that choose to rebel against it are rendered powerless, stripped of their strength until such thoughts are removed. That, my dear Ryuko, is Absolute Domination!"

"RAGYO!"

Isshin staggered onto his feet, forcing himself to stand despite Absolute Domination and eliciting a raised eyebrow from the woman, "STOP THIS!"

She snapped her fingers, cutting off Isshin's outburst as pure light streamed from Shinra Koketsu towards the transmitter in the middle of the courtyard. Weakened or not, allowing the man even a modicum of time to think was foolish. While it was almost certain Isshin was trying to dissuade her from commencing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, playing upon her emotions and empathy for the pigs in human clothing that, quite frankly, didn't exist, there was also the possibility he was stalling for time.

"Now..."

And considering Kisuke Urahara was still alive, she couldn't take that chance.

"Awaken, all you slumbering Life Fibers!"

Honnouji Academy shook when a column of glorious light - equally magnificent in both beauty and divinity - erupted from the transmitter. The artificial island upon which the school stood trembled as the clouds above Honnou City - above Tokyo and Karakura Town - dispersed. Torn apart by the signal reaching the satellite locked in geostationary orbit above her daughter's fortress. Raising a hand towards the sky, staring at the multicolored light spreading throughout the heavens, Ragyo laughed, aware not only of Isshin's reaction but those of her daughters and his son, "Take on your true forms and cover this entire planet!"

"SHINRA KOKETSU! ABSOLUTE DOMINATION!"

Come and Get Your Love

Well, I don't have much to say for this chapter. I enjoyed writing it. Some parts more than others. Several loose ends were tied up. And seemingly insignificant events from Kill la Kill and Bleach were brought back into focus. So, I hope you enjoy reading it!

---

...

---

Chapter 61 - Come and Get Your Love

"What the hell are we doing here!?"

Hiyori Sarugaki was annoyed. No, strike that. She was pissed off! Her nose was stuffed with snot, her cheeks stung from the cold and she couldn't feel half her body. It was bad enough they were in New York City, unable to speak a word of English. But standing outside in the middle of a blizzard, literally freezing their asses off while watching a stupid building? She was going to kill that bastard! As the corners of her mouth twitched, a single fang poking against her chin, she turned around with a huff, stomping away from the edge of the roof with more force than perhaps necessary.

Only to immediately slip on a patch of ice.

"We're supposed to observe the Revocs Distribution Facility. And report to Nudist Beach the strength of the Life Fiber uniforms produced. "

Lisa Yadomaru sipped the expensive brand of coffee. She savored the liquid's bitterness, tasting every exotic flavor while patiently waiting for the string of obscene curses leaving her fellow Visored's mouth to finish. It was fortunate their current vantage point was several stories above the street. And the snowstorm covering the east coast muffled everything. Not to mention the Kido barrier covering the roof. Having to relocate because of Hiyori's short temper - and the ability of Ragyo Kiryuin's employees to track suspicious movements without knowing how to sense spiritual pressure - would have been problematic.

"Don't repeat that crap!"

Snow cascaded down the blonde's face as she waved an arm at the New York Distribution Facility. It was impossible for anyone - even morons like Ichigo and that short-tempered girl always at his side - to not sense the strange spiritual energy coming from the building, "I don't get it! Something that suspicious shouldn't exist! The shinigami should have investigated this place years ago! And where are the damn Hollows!? With this much spiritual energy, the bastards should be swarming the place!"

The former lieutenant narrowed her eyes. She had noticed the distinct lack of Hollows since arriving, "I suppose you -"

"It's bad enough I'm freezing my ass off!"

Hiyori pulled out her phone - a caricature of Kisuke's face sketched on the back - and threw it against the roof, "But why the hell did we agree to help the bastard? We don't owe that badly crap!"

"Don't you remember?"

Lisa turned the page in her manga, "We decided not to help Kisuke. The decision was unanimous."

It was difficult forgetting the afternoon almost a week ago when Kisuke arrived at their new residence, a fruit basket in one hand and plane tickets in the other. After their former safe-house was destroyed during Satsuki Kiryuin's invasion - conveniently when they were out of town - Ryuken Ishida had offered them a new place to live. One of the many apartments abandoned after the Karakura Town Raid Trip. Fully furnished with all the amenities and free of charge. While Love had expressed his gratitude, she made sure the Quincy knew they owed him nothing.

They had no reason to help Nudist Beach fight Ragyo Kiryuin or deal with the psychotic Grand Couturier.

Which made Kisuke's appearance - after faking his death and duplicating the keys to their new apartment - that much more frustrating.

"Unfortunately, Olivier Armstrong made a very persuasive argument."

Lisa had trouble hiding her grin when Hiyori's frustration immediately vanished. The reaction was, as always, hilarious. There were only a handful of people capable of convincing her fellow Visored to do anything. At least, not without risking their health. Or getting barraged by insults. But the leader of Nudist Beach accomplished the impossible, which was no small feat. Olivier Armstrong - an otherwise normal human without a sense of humor - scared Hiyori into obedience.

The short-tempered Visored's eyes twitched nervously at the woman's name, "That bitch had no -"

"Although, Kisuke had a point. There's been a lot of suspicious spiritual activity across the World of the Living over the last few weeks," Lisa placed the empty mug on the small table before reaching into the bag near her feet. Pulling out the well-worn next issue of the manga, she flipped open the back cover, purposely ignoring Hiyori, "The Quincy have been rather busy. But I'm more concerned about Alucard. The vampire devoured millions of souls before vanishing, which we only know about because of the Hellsing Organization's partnership with Nudist Beach."

"Hey! I wasn't done talking -"

"And there's Ragyo Kiryuin," Lisa flipped to the next page, "The CEO of the Kiryuin Conglomerate and something worse than Aizen. It's hard to imagine she's a monster determined to sacrifice humanity to Life Fibers in some grand, over-the-top, misanthropic plan that will not only destroy the World of the Living, but tear apart the Soul Society and Hueco Mundo as well."

More than an inch of thick snow covered the roof as she shrugged, "Which is why, personally, I think helping Kisuke was the right choice."

"Shut up! That's not what I was talking about!"

It took Hiyori most of her self-control not to throw the pair of binoculars in her hand at Lisa. She didn't care about Alucard, Ragyo Kiryuin or anyone else! Jabbing a finger against her chest, she snarled, "I want to know why we're doing Nudist Beach's grunt work HERE instead of someplace warm!"

"Because you pissed off Olivier Armstrong."

Lisa closed her eyes. It appeared she wasn't going to have any semblance of peace and quiet. Not after reminding Hiyori their predicament was her fault. Kisuke's horrified expression when Hiyori called the leader of Nudist Beach a 'bitch' should have been enough for Hiyori to know something was terribly wrong. But trying to slap the woman with her sandal? She turned to the next page in her manga and sighed. After punching Hiyori through a wall, blood spewing from her fellow Visored's broken nose, the woman proceeded to scare the living crap out of everyone present without raising her voice.

The woman was almost as frightening as Captain Unohana.

"God damn it!"

Hiyori stomped away, snarling at the mental image of Olivier Armstrong's cold eyes, "But we're ordering take-out tonight! No more fancy food, got it!?"

"Whatever you say," Lisa drawled, "Just don't choose -"

The manga slipped from her fingers when the Kido barrier covering the roof shattered beneath an eruption of spiritual pressure. Disintegrating into shards of translucent energy. Reaching for her zanpakuto as echoes of the spiritual pressure reverberated across the city, shaking snow from several buildings before fading into nothing more than a whisper in her mind, Lisa glanced back and forth. Something with that much spiritual pressure, capable of emitting enough of a presence to physically affect the World of the Living, wouldn't stop at announcing their arrival.

But nothing happened.

Lisa breathed softly at the sudden stillness in the air. She couldn't sense anything wrong. No dimensional gateways between the World of the Living and Hueco Mundo. No Quincy or Life Fibers. Nothing. There was absolutely nothing accompanying that explosion of spiritual pressure. So, what was -

"Holy shit!"

Hiyori nearly tripped over her own feet when bands of multicolored light rippled through the clouds, "What the hell's going on!?"

The bookish Visored unsheathed her zanpakuto without a second thought, "Ragyo Kiryuin."

"What!?"

The blonde's neck audibly cracked as she turned around, "No way! There's no way we should sense that bitch all the way from -"

Screams. Thousands upon thousands of screams echoing across the city before suddenly ending - severed with almost surgical precision - caused both Visored to freeze. Watching with mounting horror at the millions of Life Fiber cocoons disappearing into the clouds, Hiyori didn't notice the binoculars slipping from her fingers when everything turned crimson .

"What the fuck!?"

---

...

---

Ragyo considered herself a passionate woman.

For decades, she'd striven to achieve the Original Life Fiber's mission. She spent every waking moment expanding the Kiryuin Conglomerate's influence across the planet. Assimilating competing textile companies and eliminating anyone standing in her way. Everything else - including her pursuit of Isshin - had come second to the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

With immense satisfaction, accentuated by the exhilaration thrumming through her Life Fibers, she clenched her hand into a fist. It took twenty years and dealing with countless setbacks and obstacles, but she finally delivered the coup de grâce . The signal from Shinra Koketsu was encircling the planet, activating the dormant Life Fibers worn by humanity. The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet could no longer be stopped. Not by the naked apes, her children or even Isshin.

And that meant she could focus on tying up loose ends.

"Well now..."

She purposely drawled out the words, allowing each syllable to slowly pass between her lips. After seventeen years of stubbornness - betraying the Original Life Fiber and assisting her former husband's foolish organization - Isshin was finally rendered speechless. Laughter welled in her throat at his horrified expression. His reaction to her victory was touching, pulling on her heartstrings.

But it was her daughter's expression that earned a short, mocking sigh.

"You seem troubled, Satsuki."

It was depressing seeing her daughter in such a pitiful state. But she couldn't blame Satsuki. To have wasted her life pursuing Souichiro's asinine goals only to fail at the most inopportune moment had to hurt, "Is something wrong?"

"Don't think you've won yet, Ragyo Kiryuin!"

She barely acknowledged her daughter's petulant defiance. The blood trailing from the corner of her mouth, the way she struggled to move under Absolute Domination, diminished the effectiveness of the otherwise laudable statement, "Oh? Well, in that case, I assume you have something up your sleeves? A technique you've been saving? As far as can tell, Absolute Domination is affecting Junketsu."

"But perhaps you're only pretending Junketsu is rendered powerless," Ragyo pressed a hand against her cheek, sighing at the hatred burning in her daughter's eyes, "It wouldn't be the first surprise tonight."

The mockery served its purpose as Satsuki struggled to articulate her thoughts, "Now, if you're through bluffing. I believe I've -"

A soft fluttering caught her attention when Ryuko rushed forward, swinging the Scissor Blade with all the strength her weakened body could muster. Maroon eyes flickered towards the Kamui next to Satsuki - sleeves trembling under Absolute Domination - before returning to her daughter, who was wearing nothing more than her bra and panties. Impossible! Ryuko shouldn't be able to move, let alone raise the Scissor Blade against Shinra Koketsu.

Unless... of course.

Her lips curled into a facsimile of a smile. Senketsu was paralyzed by Absolute Domination. Its Life Fibers instinctively understanding the divine nature of Shinra Koketsu. Ryuko, on the other hand, was her flesh and blood. Sa fille. The heir to the Kiryuin name she wished Satsuki had been, albeit lacking manners and respect for her elders. A habit undoubtedly due to Souichiro's atrocious parenting. It seemed Ryuko was forcing her Life Fibers to ignore Absolute Domination with the same level of delicateness and decorum she applied to everything else in life, risking damaging her body to the point of death.

Children could be so stubborn .

Ryuko snarled when her bitch of a mom caught the Scissor Blade, grabbing the weapon between two fingers. Struggling under the weight of Absolute Domination, muscles seizing as the disturbing light sapped what little strength she had left, she stumbled, mouth opened in a silent gasp as blood dripped from her fingers.

"W-What the!?"

"Absolute Domination rendered your Life Fibers powerless, remember?"

She stiffened when a hand - the one that released the Scissor Blade - touched her shoulder, "That means your regeneration no longer works. For the moment, you're nothing more than a pig in human clothing."

Ragyo allowed the statement to sink into Ryuko's subconscious as her daughter struggled dealing with the concept of pain for the first time in weeks, "But let's be honest, did you really believe you had the right - the privilege - to touch Shinra Koketsu?"

" Ryuko! You're bleeding! "

"I'm fine, Senketsu," Ryuko pulled away from Ragyo, snarling as her vision swam. She could hear Ichigo saying something - maybe her name - but her headache made it hard to hear anything. Damn it! Absolute Domination sucked! Her arms felt like lead, it was difficult to breathe and she couldn't feel her fingers, "It's going to take a lot more than some bruises to stop me!"

"You should listen to your Kamui."

Her former husband's masterpiece tried - and failed - assisting Ryuko. Collapsing onto the ground after only a few inches. Such an interesting specimen of Life Fiber clothing. To think it possessed enough strength to move under Absolute Domination, "Now, where was I?"

Ragyo caressed Isshin's shoulder before he realized she wasn't standing next to Ryuko. Her heart was fluttering at the tension pulsing through his Life Fibers, breath hitching at the fury bubbling beneath his silence. Unlike her daughters, Ichigo and the Kamui, all of whom could sense Shinra Koketsu's divine power, only Isshin could feel the vastness of its magnificent strength. His connection with the Original Life Fiber granted him the privilege of experience the purity of its Life Fibers. And as she leaned forward, pressing her hand against his bare chest, she quipped, "Ah, yes."

Kaleidoscopic threads spun from her finger, tracing patterns over Isshin's stomach as his tattered shihakusho regenerated. Weaving itself back together in a matter of seconds. She could not have the only man she loved stand before Shinra Koketsu half-naked, "J'ai gagné, Isshin."

"Ragyo..."

Isshin conserved his strength. Limiting his movement to no more than was necessary. Absolute Domination wasn't affecting his Life Fibers nearly as bad as Ichigo's or Ryuko's thanks to his connection with the Original Life Fiber. But his mouth felt like it was full of cotton. And his hair - the same shade of silver as Ragyo's - had dulled, the glowing undertone gone along with most of his spiritual energy.

There was no doubt about it. At this point, he wasn't sure anyone could defeat Ragyo before the World of the Living was destroyed.

But still...

He grabbed Shinra Koketsu, holding onto its sleeve with a trembling hand, "What have you done!?"

" Vraiment? "

It took considerable self-restraint to conceal her annoyance. Isshin wasn't stupid, which begged the question why he bothered saying something so inane in the first place, "I'm not even going to dignify that with an answer."

She lamented, not for the first time, her failure to reconnect with Isshin. To reconcile their differences. He wasn't like Kisuke Urahara or the naked apes, inferior beings convinced they could interfere with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. They were troublesome. Perhaps irritating at times. But despite their best efforts, they were nothing more than annoyances. Cast aside like scraps of clothing at the first opportunity. She didn't doubt the naked apes - or even Satsuki - would sacrifice themselves given the chance. Throwing away their lives in some delusional attempt to destroy Shinra Koketsu.

But Isshin wasn't that naïve.

He knew Absolute Domination's effects were permanent unless she changed her mind.

And the man wasn't nearly boorish enough to request something so ridiculous!

"In any case..."

Her tone softened as she pried Isshin's fingers from Shinra Koketsu, "There's nothing you can say - or do - that will make me change my mind. Although, to be perfectly honest, I'm disappointed by your performance tonight."

Maroon irises tinted with multicolored hues narrowed at Isshin's reaction. She couldn't help but find everything about the man fascinating. Enrapturing . Even knowing that humanity was hours from extinction - that they harbored no hope of harming a single one of Shinra Koketsu's threads - his expression was exactly what she expected. Above all else, despite his penchant for unpredictability, it was ludicrously simple pressing Isshin's buttons, "Stalling while that atrocious shinigami dared laying his filthy hands upon the Original Life Fiber was commendable. Tactical, even. And don't think I wasn't aware what Ryuko planned on doing to Shinra Koketsu."

A snarl - whether from Satsuki or Ryuko she did not care - caused her smile to broaden, "However, all this time I assumed you had one final trick up your sleeves. Perhaps another one of Kisuke Urahara's contemptible inventions. Something to be used on Shinra Koketsu or myself the moment I dropped my guard. But it seems, for once, I overestimated your intellect, Isshin. Not that I'm complaining."

Shinra Koketsu fluttered independently of the wind as she basked in Isshin's incompetency, "I did enjoy our time together."

"Wait a second!"

Ichigo struggled against the paralysis affecting Mugetsu. His arms trembled as he stumbled, one knee touching the dirt before he regained his balance, "You just said Kisuke could have made something capable of damaging Shinra Koketsu. But a minute ago you were boasting about its power. How Mugetsu and the others weren't a threat!"

He gasped for breath, panting while sweat trickled down his face. Damn it, it was difficult to move under Absolute Domination. He could barely hold Tournesol and Bakuzan. Removing Mugetsu could fix that problem - like Ryuko when she took off Senketsu - but fighting Ragyo Kiryuin in his condition was suicidal. Her spiritual pressure was monstrous, beyond even Alucard's. And he could swear she was holding something back, "Which means you're either lying about Kisuke! Or your Kamui isn't unbeatable!"

"Oh? Lying, am I?"

Ragyo met Ichigo's dour glare with genuine interest. She didn't expect Isshin's son to remember her every word. It was impressive. But Ichigo wasn't that smart. He might be naturally gifted, able to analyze Satsuki's swordsmanship after only a single, childish confrontation in the schoolyard. His synchronization with Mugetsu might have progressed further than her initial expectations. But in his haste to prove her wrong, Ichigo unintentionally admitted the limits of his comprehension.

"Normally I would find such an accusation insulting," she flirted with punishing Ichigo before deciding against such drastic action, "But it appears Isshin never taught you the difference between fear and caution."

Shinra Koketsu fluttered when the Needle Blades appeared in a flash of light, teleporting from the Sewing Club into her hands, "Kisuke Urahara is brilliant. I never imagined a human, let alone shinigami, unravelling the Life Fiber Wards surrounding the Forbidden Room. Yet that man proved me wrong. I do not fear that man, Ichigo. His actions infuriate me, yes, but never I have believed, even for a moment, he could counter Absolute Domination."

A hint of anger permeated Ragyo's voice, "But I did not get this far assuming nothing was impossible. Kisuke Urahara is a threat. Or rather, was a threat. I cannot recall anyone other than Isshin or myself capable of unravelling Life Fiber Wards. And by removing the Marionette Threads from Amu, he made himself a far more present danger than Isshin, those naked apes and even than atrocious shinigami."

Maroon eyes flickered towards her eldest daughter, "Surely you agree, Satsuki, that it's better to err on the side of caution against such an opponent?"

"Erring on the side of caution?"

Satsuki ignored the minor discomfort plaguing her body. She might be immune to Shinra Koketsu's Absolute Domination - an advantage over Ichigo, Ryuko and Isshin Kurosaki - but her humanity was a double-edged sword. Without Junketsu's power, honed over months through blood, sweat and sacrifice, the pain of her broken ribs pressing against her diaphragm was no longer numbed. But even so, she refused to grant Ragyo Kiryuin the satisfaction of anything resembling weakness!

"It's impossible to quantify the absurdities spewing from your mouth!"

She spat on the ground, clearing the coppery taste of blood from her mouth, "There's no question Absolute Domination is indeed powerful. But that you, of all people, would willingly divulge the possibility Kiske Urahara could undo your efforts, reverse decades of work, is laughable! Do you take us for fools!?"

"Think whatever you want, Satsuki."

Ragyo examined the Needle Blades, far more interested in their response to Shinra Koketsu than her daughter's delusions, before her lips slowly stretched into a smile. Closing her eyes as Honnouji Academy shook, exhilaration coursed through her Life Fibers as she stared at the crimson quilt blanketing the heavens, "Can you feel it? The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet is progressing on schedule. The Life Fibers woven into every piece of Revocs clothing have begun converting humanity. In a few hours, this miserable world will shatter! Spreading the next generation of Life Fibers across the universe!"

"And once that's finished..."

The Needle Blades vanished into Shinra Koketsu as Ragyo curled a finger through Isshin's shihakusho, "We'll have eternity to work through our differences."

"Given my options," with a supreme effort, Isshin slapped away Ragyo's hand, "I'd rather die with the rest of humanity."

"Must you be so stubborn ?"

Ragyo hissed under her breath. There were limits to her patience. And Isshin seemed determined with his boorish refusal to accept reality to find just how far she was willing to tolerate his behavior. Why must he make their lives difficult? Unlike the naked apes, Quincy scurrying like rats in the shadows and shinigami, he would survive the Life Fiber diaspora alongside Ichigo, Ryuko and even dearest Nui and Amu. She would release them from Absolute Domination moments before the planet exploded, preventing any more childish skirmishes while allowing them to share in the glorious experience.

It was a shame Hououmaru wouldn't survive the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Good help - especially a secretary with skills outside of corporate management - was hard to find these days. And, she reluctantly conceded, it was upsetting knowing Satsuki would perish alongside the rest of humanity. Her daughter somehow managed to ascend Junketsu into her fashion week apparel. Satsuki nearly tore her body apart, muscles tearing and bones shattering, but she accomplished the miraculous.

La vie est drôle .

She just needed to remember to recover Junketsu from Satsuki's corpse.

"And just what are you planning to do?"

Sarcasm clung to her question as an imposing figure marched through Honnouji Academy's entrance, shadows clinging to their tattered and torn cassock, "Iscaiot, right? I'm impressed you survived."

Heinkel refused to lower herself to Ragyo Kiryuin's level. There were far more pressing matters than worrying about childish taunts from an inhuman monster. Her expression tightened when the woman turned around, lips pulling back into a snarl. The kaleidoscopic light emanating from the monstrous garment was anathema. She didn't require supernatural perception to realize Shinra Koketsu spat in the face of God, "It's going to take more than puppets to kill me, Ragyo Kiryuin."

"I wasn't referring to those second-hand scraps of clothing."

Ragyo dismissed the paladin's insult against the Grand Couturier's work with all the mockery it deserved, "It's shameful, really. I expected more from my investment. After persuading the Pope to promote Enrico Maxwell to archbishop, knowing his lack of resistance to Life Fibers would render him little more than a puppet to his subconscious desires, realizing some of you people survived is disappointing."

"Wait a second!"

Ryuko couldn't believe what she was hearing, "YOU'RE the reason he went nuts!?"

"I consider myself a professional slayer of monsters and demons."

The wind swelled through the courtyard as Heinkel removed a damaged but mostly intact bible from her cassock. Placing her hand upon the holy scripture, aware of Ryuko's unkempt appearance, ethereal blue light shone from the inked pages as she focused upon the unholy abomination in the guise of Ragyo Kiryuin, "But for what you did to Maxwell, I'll make sure your soul rots in the deepest bowels of Hell."

"Alexander Anderson mentioned a similar threat..."

The intense light radiating from the bible in Heinkel Wolfe's hand was the only reason Ragyo didn't kill the woman. How interesting. She couldn't remember Anderson using something like this. Lips curling into a smirk when the paladin swiped her other hand over the bible, sending countless pages fluttering through the courtyard, Ragyo laughed, "And since he's not here, I can only presume he perished in London."

"But you don't need to worry about mourning the dead."

Shinra Koketsu's eyes widened - the colors contracting in visible anger - as multicolored spiritual energy destroyed everything between Ragyo and Heinkel. The ground disintegrated beneath the paladin's feet, sending her flying backwards into Honnouji Academy's walls with a resounding crack . Her laughter resonating in the darkness as most of the glowing pages burst into flames, dissolving into ash raining upon the ground, Ragyo watched the paladin struggling with more than a modicum of satisfaction, "Because you'll soon be joining him."

"I think not, Ragyo Kiryuin."

A hiss of air passed through clenched teeth at the familiar voice.

"What!?"

She looked over her shoulder, pupils dilating as Tessai Tsukabishi materialized from within a swirling tornado of glowing pages. Snarling at the emerald light between the man's clasped hands, refusing to allow any acquaintance of Kisuke Urahara time to think, she lashed out, multicolored energy enveloping her fingers as the ground underneath Shinra Koketsu started glowing, "You -"

"KUKANTEN'!!"

In the blink of an eye, as Tessai forcefully separated his hands, veins bulging under the weight of the spiritual energy, Ragyo - and a sizable chunk of the courtyard - vanished in a flash of emerald light.

---

...

---

"H-How..."

Electricity crackled along the surface of her raiment as she watched the screen showing Lady Ragyo. Or rather, where Lady Ragyo had been standing moments ago. Hououmaru tasted bile in her throat. Instead of Shinra Koketsu's breathtaking radiance covering Honnouji Academy - rendering all resistance useless - there was nothing. All that remained was a smoking crater and flickers of green light, "What happened? What did he do?"

Hououmaru rewatched the video, hands trembling when Lady Ragyo vanished in a flash of emerald light. How did that shinigami escape Lady Ragyo's attention? It was apparent Tessai Tsukabishi was working with Heinkel Wolfe. But even so, she should have detected his presence despite the paladin's obvious distraction. Snarling when the video repeated, the angle showing Lady Ragyo's bafflement at Tessai's arrival, she lashed out, slamming her hands against the controls. The shinigami didn't have the privilege of raising his hand against Shinra Koketsu, let alone behold the sacred garment with unworthy eyes!

And he had the gall to assault Lady Ragyo!?

She took a deep, steadying breath when the Life Fiber generator came online, filling the control room with its comforting hum. Her hatred towards the naked apes - towards the shinigami displaying unwarranted arrogance - transformed into tranquil fury as she closed her eyes.

This changed nothing.

Despite the outward appearance of success, Tessai Tsukabishi's actions accomplished nothing. It didn't matter if he miraculously transported Lady Ragyo across the world. Leaving her stranded in the middle of the ocean or somewhere in Africa. While impossible to find out where - thanks to the quilt of Life Fibers rendering geolocation systems useless - their victory was already guaranteed. Absolute Domination was saturating the planet, awakening the dormant Life Fibers woven into every piece of clothing stitched by Revocs. Nothing could alter humanity's fate at this point.

Not even Isshin.

The pigs in human clothing were destined to serve as nourishment for Life Fibers. Not a single one would survive the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet - including herself, once she finished carrying out Lady Ragyo's final orders.

"But don't think..."

She punched the Life Fiber booster, injecting energy into EXCELSUS before twisting the curved controls in opposite directions, "... your insolent actions bear no consequences!"

A sharp, bitter laugh punctured the darkness as the electronic whining intensified. It was poetic justice that Satsuki's final defense apparatus - her so-called secret weapon - was turned against the Original Life Fiber's enemies. Those who dared stand against Lady Ragyo. She couldn't think of a more appropriate form of retribution. Satsuki deserved nothing less than watching her allies perish, slaughtered like the naked apes they were, after discarding her mother's generosity and benevolence. But she purposely stopped herself from fully activating EXCELSUS, content on allowing the weapon to remain on standby.

She needed to be careful about unleashing EXCELSUS upon the naked apes. Isshin, Ichigo and Ryuko remained within Honnouji Academy's walls. Their Life Fibers and Kamui were still weakened by Absolute Domination.

Lady Ragyo would be incensed if she injured Isshin in her haste to eliminate Tessai Tsukabishi.

"So, this is EXCELSUS."

Yuu Akiyama failed to conceal the noticeable limp in his right leg as he stumbled into the command center. Gripping the edge of the door as blood stained his Lâche Raiment, trickling from the fresh stitches across his abdomen, he chuckled despite the awkward silence, "It's fancier than I expected."

"Why are you alive, Yuu?"

Contempt dripped from her mouth as she demanded from the teenager a rather simple answer. His survival was an insult to everything she represented. And it took considerable restraint to not finish the job started by the naked apes. When the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier dissipated during Lady Ragyo's argument with Isshin, she presumed Yuu had fallen fighting Nudist Beach. Sacrificing himself to keep the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet from failing while killing several of the naked apes and their allies in the process. A self-professed coward he may be, but Yuu Akiyama belonged to Xcution. Lady Ragyo's orders were sacrosanct. Not to be questioned to debated. To be carried out to one's full capacity, even if it meant their death.

That he was standing before her, grievously wounded but alive, was unforgivable.

"Lady Ragyo's orders were simple. Yet you're standing here . Alive. And the Life Fiber Infinite Woven Barrier isn't functioning."

"Kisuke Urahara was smarter than I thought," Yuu removed his burglar's cap and domino mask, the pieces of clothing dissolving into Life Fibers, "He anticipated my plans with almost frightening accuracy."

Hououmaru didn't give the teenager a shred of sympathy. The torturous pain and internal bleeding wracking his body was nothing compared to what he'll experience once Lady Ragyo returned, "Fortunately, Lady Ragyo managed to adorn herself with Shinra Koketsu despite your treachery. The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet is still proceeding on schedule."

"You don't say? Well, at least there's some good news."

"Don't think I'm unaware what you're planning," Hououmaru could sense Yuu's mocking tone, the derision for authority that earned him more than one official reprimand throughout his tenure in Xcution. She wasn't foolish nor naïve. He was planning something, his mind calculating multiple avenues of approach to their conversation. But she didn't earn the privilege of assisting Lady Ragyo without learning a few things along the way, "Lying low won't save you from Lady Ragyo's wrath. Nor will destroying your raiment prevent her from tracking you down. However, if you wish to witness the culmination of humanity's destiny, deal with Tessai Tsukabishi and Heinkel Wolfe while Isshin and the others are powerless. Only then will Lady Ragyo forgive your incompetence."

"You caught me. I'll admit it."

Yuu ascended the stairs towards Hououmaru, pausing halfway as a wave of vertigo caused his vision to darken, "But before I head outside, let me just say one thing. Yoruichi Shihoin exceeded my expectations."

"Don't get me wrong, I studied her battle with the Grand Couturier extensively. Documented every technique utilized. Picked through the Grand Couturier's exaggerated report. And it still wasn't enough."

He collapsed into the co-pilot's seat with a pained grimace, "I can see how she survived fighting Ragyo Kiryuin. It took every trick in the book - and some I never realized existed - to escape with my life."

Hououmaru snarled at the mockery of an excuse, "And you dare admit your -"

An eerie silence descended upon the room, "What did you call Lady Ragyo?"

There was a flash - a shimmer of obsidian - as Hououmaru unsheathed her trench knife, drawing the weapon faster than the human nervous system could respond. Electricity crackled around the blade, arcing in lethal bursts before the question finished leaving her lips. Without warning, acting purely upon her authority as Lady Ragyo's secretary and the commander of Xcution, she spun around, intent on piercing Yuu's throat.

Only to stop mid-swing at a deafeningly soft click .

"You know..."

She felt the barrel pressing against her Écussion Raiment, the muzzle aimed between her armor's plating. Widening eyes staring incredulously at the Carnifex in Yuu's hand, wondering how he smuggled the weapon through Lady Ragyo's sensors, she snarled when he leaned forward, "I think it's time we discussed my severance package."

---

...

---

Sweat trickled down Tessai's face, pooling on the underside of his chin before dripping onto the dirt. His breath escaped in short, ragged pants, the cold, autumn causing it to condense inches from his mouth. Transporting Ragyo Kiryuin had required a substantial portion of his spiritual reserves. Far more than he anticipated. Translocating Shinji and the other Visored halfway across the Soul Society to Kisuke's lab - after using Jikanteishi to halt their Hollowfication - hadn't left him more than briefly out of breath.

But then again, Kukanten'i wasn't designed to teleport someone so monstrous .

"It seems I owe Kisuke an apology."

He wiped a forearm against his brow, removing grime and sweat. As Isshin broke from his self-imposed stupor, staring into the crater where Ragyo had been standing only a few seconds ago, the former shinigami grimaced, "For what?"

"Kisuke described Sosuke Aizen's transformations under the Hogyoku's influence. Including how the man's spiritual pressure became unreadable," Tessai dusted shredded Life Fibers from his apron, missing Isshin's bemusement, "Until tonight, I believed he was exaggerating Aizen's power. But once Ragyo Kiryuin put on that strange garment, her spiritual pressure completely vanished. I could no longer sense her presence."

"Wait!"

Ryuko jammed her arm through one of Senketsu's sleeves, "You couldn't sense anything ?"

" You're putting me on backwards, Ryuko."

"Oh, sorry, Senketsu."

Ryuko fixed Senketsu before sliding the Seki Tekko onto her hand. She curled her fingers into a fist as blood dripped from the cuts covering most of her arm, the pain almost enough to make her curse. God damn it! How the hell was she going to kick her bitch of a mom's ass if Shinra Koketsu could disable Senketsu? Grumbling under her breath, she decided to express her annoyance in the only way possible - taking it out on someone else, "I don't know about you but I felt her spiritual pressure just fine! In fact, it was impossible to NOT sense Ragyo Kiryuin once she put on that ugly piece of garbage!"

"Ryuko, your hand!"

"I'm fine, Ichigo," she grumbled at Ichigo's concern, "Now, as I was saying..."

" Ryuko, your hand! "

"I said I'm -"

The fact her hand no longer hurt didn't dawn on Ryuko until she grabbed Senketsu's neckerchief. Shocked when the blood dripping down her arm stopped - and then disappearing into her skin - she noticed her injuries glowing with a familiar crimson light before sealing shut, leaving her arm as good as new, "What the hell!?"

"Absolute Domination must require our mother's presence to function."

Satsuki suppressed the pain making it difficult to breathe, managing the growing discomfort from Ragyo Kiryuin's attack by glowering, "She announced the light shining from Shinra Koketsu rendered Life Fibers powerless. It makes sense that once the light vanished, your Life Fibers began recovering, allowing your wounds to regenerate."

"Please hold still, Miss Kiryuin."

Tessai loomed over the former heiress upon noticing the full extent of the injuries she was concealing. Years of treating Kisuke and Yoruichi's minor ailments - followed by months of assisting Orihime with Ichigo's injuries - afforded him a discerning, and experienced, eye, "You have two broken ribs. A rather serious injury. But even in my current condition, healing your wounds won't be difficult. However, if it's not too much trouble, can you ask your Kamui to refrain from absorbing my spiritual energy until after I'm finished?"

"There's no reason to concern yourself with Junketsu," Satsuki noticed her Kamui staring at the green energy enveloping the shinigami's hands - childish curiosity more than animalistic hunger - and immediately dismissed what little concern tainted her thoughts, "She won't interfere with your efforts."

A sigh, faint but noticeable, escaped her unyielding control when the pulsating pain from her wounds abated, numbed beneath a sensation akin to cold water. The shinigami's technique might lack the versatility and power of Orihime Inoue's Shun Shun Rikka. A difference, in retrospect, between their individual origins. But the scrapes and bruises, the broken ribs and internal bleed sustained confronting her mother, wouldn't require more than a minute of his time. Already her broken bones were setting, muscles weaving together and bruises slowly vanishing, leaving nothing but unblemished skin.

It was unfortunate Tessai Tsukabishi couldn't do the same for Junketsu.

" I don't want to experience something so terrifying again, Ichigo!"

Mugetsu quivered at the memory of Absolute Domination paralyzing her Life Fibers. Such a sensation was the last thing she wanted to experience a second time! But her fear transformed into anger upon noticing Senketsu's amusement directed at her, "But that doesn't matter! I'll be at your side until the end! Although if we're going to fight Ragyo Kiryuin, I'll need some more of your blood."

"You don't need to ask about something like that, Mugetsu," Ichigo stumbled to his feet, frowning at his Kamui's request, "Because I have a feeling we're going to need all the power we can get."

"Raw strength won't suffice against Shinra Koketsu," Satsuki breathed deeply as Tessai's efforts succeeded in lessening the worst of her pain, "Our Kamui are powerful. But we mustn't overestimate ourselves. Ragyo Kiryuin had proven formidable beyond estimation! We'll need to fall back and adjust our strategy! Determine any potential weaknesses in Shinra Koketsu before she returns."

"Hey! Where did you send her?"

Ryuko propped the Scissor Blade across her shoulders while glancing around Honnouji Academy, "I'm guessing someplace really far away. Like that desert with the Hollows."

" I believe Kisuke Urahara called it Hueco Mundo, Ryuko."

"Thanks, Senketsu," she snapped her fingers, "Did you send her to Hueco Mundo?"

"Unfortunately, Kukanten'i is unable to transport between different spiritual realms," Tessai only paid half-attention to Ryuko's atrocious pronunciation of Hueco Mundo as he stepped away from Satsuki, allowing the teenager to bask in the sensation of perfect health before nearly tearing at her appreciation, "So I did the next best thing. I teleported Ragyo Kiryuin as far away from Honnouji Academy as physically possible."

Satsuki returned Bakuzan to its scabbard with a click of polished metal against wood, "How far?"

"Hmm... it's difficult to say," the spiritual pressure from the quilt of Life Fibers covering the planet sent a chill down Tessai's spine, "But I'd guess approximately two thousand Ri to the east."

"Huh?"

Ryuko scratched her head, "Is that miles or kilometers?"

"It's an archaic term for distance, Ryuko. Something you would have known had you paid attention to Aikuro Mikisugi's history lessons," Satsuki bore her sister's misplaced aggression towards her former laziness with dignity and grace, only affording Ryuko a single, unflinching frown before closing her eyes, "But to answer your question, two thousand Ri is roughly eight thousand kilometers. Which should put our mother somewhere off the coast of California."

"That freakin' far!?"

"Even with Shinra Koketsu, it should take some time for Ragyo Kiryuin to make her way back," Satsuki allowed herself to smile - the imperceptibly faint gesture confusing those aware of her usual disposition. She didn't doubt their mother could return to Honnouji

Academy at any minute. The power coursing through Shinra Koketsu couldn't be underestimated. But the quilt of Life Fibers covering the planet would greatly complicate Ragyo Kiryuin's efforts to determine her position, "But we mustn't relax our guard! Tessai Tsukabishi's assistance has bought us precious time! We must use this time to adjust our strategy!"

"We need to save Orihime."

Ichigo couldn't forget the terror in Orihime's eyes when she was absorbed into Shinra Koketsu. The tears streaking down her face while Ragyo Kiryuin mocked his efforts were seared in his mind, "If we can pull her out of that thing, Ragyo will be weak enough for my old man and Junketsu to defeat."

"Rescuing Orihime Inoue is our ultimate objective."

Satsuki stared at the spire previously housing the Student Council chambers, the damage from Isshin Kurosaki's Getsuga Tenshou noticeable. Frowning as she spoke, hints of trepidation clinging to her words, she shouldered the burden of guilt before continuing, "However, there's something we must consider."

"Like hell there's anything to consider!"

Ryuko snarled at her sister's explanation, "We save Orihime then kick our mom's ass! It's that simple!"

"Even before Ragyo Kiryuin cast Absolute Domination, our blades failed inflicting any damage."

Satsuki felt Isshin Kurosaki's attention, the perturbed expression causing his mouth to twitch downwards more than enough to unsettle Junketsu. It seemed it was aware - whether from intuition or experience - what she was planning to announce. Yet he refused to interrupt despite his experience on the subject, which only served to steady her nerves, reducing the guilt gnawing upon her consciousness, "Our mother claimed Shinra Koketsu's control over Life Fibers was absolute. And I'm inclined to agree. The moment Absolute Domination becomes active, our Kamui are rendered powerless. Humanity was devoured by their clothing in a matter of seconds."

"What are you saying?"

Junketsu's heels clacked as she faced Ichigo, "Assuming everything could be solved by separating Orihime Inoue from Shinra Koketsu would be short-sighted. Which is why we should consider leaving her within the ultimate Kamui and focus our efforts on defeating my mother."

"You can't be serious!"

She didn't react when Ichigo grabbed Junketsu. Neither did she respond when her Kamui reacted towards the unintended harshness, conveying a sense of confusion Ichigo undoubtedly heard. And Ichigo wasn't the only one taking fault in her decision. Ryuko was also upset, perhaps not to the same extent. But Satsuki expected such an outburst. As she allowed Ichigo to vent his frustrations, she felt, rather than heard, the desperation in his voice, "We can't leave Orihime in that thing!"

"And what will you do?"

Her tone hardened, carrying the burdensome weight of her decision, "Tessai Tsukabishi might have freed our Kamui but look upwards! Humanity remains trapped! At the mercy of my mother! Given an alternative, I would rescue Orihime Inoue! If such a strategy existed, I would discard my callous decision without a second thought! But we don't have time to consider alternatives! Humanity's survival depends upon stopping my mother! So, ask yourself this, Ichigo! How many lives are you willing to sacrifice hoping Orihime Inoue's separation from Shinra Koketsu will reverse the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet?"

"I get what you're saying."

The admission weighed heavily on Ichigo's mind. A harsh silence blanketed the courtyard as his hands trembled, tightening around Junketsu. Despite everything Satsuki said, he couldn't blame her. Not after realizing the same thing, "And you're right. Saving Orihime might not fix everything. Shinra Koketsu is unlike anything I've fought. Who know what might happen if I'm wrong. Ragyo's power is something else entirely. That maybe, instead of stopping her plans, pulling Orihime out of Shinra Koketsu will only make things worse."

Junketsu slipped from his fingers as he stared at the ground, unable to look at Satsuki, Ryuko or even his dad, "But there has to be another way! I just know it! There has to be a way to stop Ragyo Kiryuin without hurting Orihime!"

"I'm sorry, Ichigo."

Even as the apology left her mouth, Satsuki doubted its authenticity. For weeks, since her near-death experience during the Great Culture and Sports Festival, she believed she overcame her arrogance. The blind pride that enabled her to sacrifice every student under her control for the slightest advantage against Ragyo Kiryuin. But listening to her clone speak with such familiar vernacular - professing beliefs she, herself, would have repeated a month ago - threw that into doubt. Had she really changed if using Orihime Inoue was the first strategy that came to mind?

Dwelling on that disturbing admission, aware of the stifling silence blanketed Honnouji Academy, her scowl softened, "But it's likely the only way to undo my mother's work is to have someone wear Shinra Koketsu."

"You want one of us to wear that thing?"

" I don't like this plan, Ryuko," Senketsu bristled at the thought of Ryuko wearing clothing other than himself. Why was she considering something so insulting? He was her favorite outfit! But even so, he couldn't allow his jealousy towards something so gaudy stop Ryuko from saving the world, "But Satsuki's right. If it means stopping Ragyo Kiryuin, I suppose I could accept you wearing other clothes... this one time."

"Hold off on the guilt trip, Senketsu, until after we pull Ragyo out of the damn thing!"

Ryuko hissed under her breath. She didn't want to wear Shinra Koketsu! Even without knowing it was made by Nui Harime and Orihime was trapped inside, the ugly outfit rubbed her the wrong way. But what really pissed her off was knowing Satsuki was right. She couldn't think of another way to save everyone - and the planet - from Life Fibers. And the thought of leaving Orihime in that thing - trapped with only her bitch of a mom for company - caused her blood to boil.

Angrily kicking the ground as she tried thinking of a way to undo Ragyo Kiryuin's stupid plan without wearing Shinra Koketsu, Ryuko blinked when something came to mind, "Hang on a sec!"

She frowned before pointing a finger at Ichigo's dad, "Didn't you help Hat-and-Clogs make Mugetsu!?"

"You're misinformed, Ryuko. Contrary to Kisuke's humility and willingness to share credit, he was the one who stitched Mugetsu from scratch," Isshin felt the mental block - the 'gift' from the Original Life Fiber - when he tried going into more detail about Mugetsu. How she wasn't the first Kamui under his belt. That honor belonged to Junketsu, "All I did was give him some of Ichigo's Life Fibers."

"But you know how to make one, right? That means you know how to take apart Shinra Koketsu!"

Ryuko was standing face-to-face with Isshin, demonstrating the nearly two foot difference between their heights. Growling when Ichigo's dad didn't answer her question, she grabbed his shihakusho and shouted, "C'mon! Say something!"

"It's not that simple."

The multicolored undertone shining within his silver hair simultaneously dimmed and brightened as Ryuko's grip tightened. He could see the desperation in her eyes. Despite everything she was still only a teenager. Barely older than Ichigo. Not for the first time, he wished nothing more than to destroy the Original Life Fiber. Cut apart that creature until not even shreds of Life Fibers remained, "Even with Senketsu's impressive strength, which is greater than Mugetsu's, your Scissor Blade won't be able to slice through Shinra Koketsu."

" Hey!"

"Hmm... if your Kamui are ineffective, what about another avenue?"

Tessai rubbed his chin, unaware of Mugetsu's reaction towards the perceived insult, "I might be able to translocate Ragyo Kiryuin from Shinra Koketsu using Kukanten'i. It's risky and could have unintended consequences, but it should work."

"Do you think it'll be that easy?"

With a sickening crack Heinkel popped her dislocated shoulder into place. Blood stained her cassock as she marched towards Ryuko and the others, dripping in oozing rivers from the regenerating gash cutting from neck to shoulder. Her mouth twisted downward into a snarl, half-cracked glasses reflecting the crimson-tinted moonlight, she scoffed, derision dripping from every word, "I witnessed the inhuman hatred in that monster's eyes. Viewed the absolute loathing when our plan succeeded. Ragyo Kiryuin might not be physically wounded but her pride, that which she cherishes above all else, has been shattered. Her arrogance - her misplaced sense of superiority - caused her to subconsciously lower her guard. A mistake she won't repeat twice."

The bible in her hand snapped shut, "So we should work quickly. Because the first thing she'll do upon returning to this forsaken place is slaughter the man who embarrassed her."

"Damn it!"

" She's right," Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a concerned frown at the paladin's blunt explanation, "Ragyo Kiryuin isn't the sort of person to allow even the slightest insult go unpunished."

"I know that, Senketsu," Ryuko waved her arm, almost smacking Ichigo in the face with the Scissor Blade, "I'm just really pissed off! How the hell are we going to kick my mom's ass if she's always one step ahead of us!?"

"Then we must proceed without delay!"

Satsuki found no fault in Heinkel Wolfe's criticism. Nor the paladin's blunt method of addressing the issues at stake. She knew better than anyone - aside from Isshin Kurosaki and the Grand Couturier - how her mother responded to perceived insults. How she reacted towards the slightest embarrassment. Years of acting loyal, watching her mother destroy her enemies legally or otherwise, gave weight to the paladin's observation.

Junketsu's heel clacked against the ground as she faced Heinkel Wolfe, momentarily matching Ichigo's eyes along the way. She knew his feelings towards her decision hadn't changed over the last minute. His silence spoke volumes, far more than words could convey. But their insurmountable differences could wait until Ragyo Kiryuin lay defeated, stripped of Shinra Koketsu, "What is the range of your teleportation?"

"Several kilometers."

The cigarette between Heinkel's teeth burned with a deep reddish-orange glow, "I take it you have a plan?"

"When I fought my mother alongside Sosuke Aizen, I noticed her attention wavering. I did not consider the information pertinent at the time. But in retrospect, her behavior suggested she was sensing Orihime Inoue's spiritual pressure," Satsuki glowered as her tone sharpened. With the fate of the world resting upon their shoulders, the pressure to achieve victory was tremendous. But it was a burden she bore without complaint, "Yet even with Shinra Koketsu boosting her power, she was caught off guard by Tessai Tsukabishi! Only acknowledging his presence when it was too late!"

Ichigo stiffened as he realized what Satsuki was implying, "She couldn't sense his spiritual pressure..."

"Retreat into Honnou City and wait for my signal!"

If Satsuki heard Ichigo, her reaction was buried beneath the knowledge Ragyo Kiryuin could return at any second, "The moment my mother lowers her guard is when you'll strike. We shall hold her attention as long as necessary!"

Tessai glowered thoughtfully, his massive frame silhouetted against the moon, before nodding. Latching a calloused hand onto Heinkel's shoulder, whose discontent muttering exposed her disdain towards the shinigami's form of high-speed movement, he noticed Isshin's troubled expression before disappearing in a swish of speed.

" What's wrong, Ichigo?" Mugetsu followed Tessai's retreat, which was slower than her speed, before looking upwards, "Your blood pressure increased after Satsuki announced her plan."

"Something about the way Ragyo used Absolute Domination doesn't feel right."

Ryuko looped her arm through the Scissor Blade, "What? You think she was planning something else?"

"I don't know," Ichigo admitted as something flickered across his mind, "Maybe it's nothing. But if Shinra Koketsu controls Life Fibers as much as Ragyo claimed, why did she need to activate Absolute Domination?"

Satsuki noticed Ryuko's reaction in the deafening silence that followed Ichigo's question. The unadulterated surprise and frustration was readily apparent. And a single, piercing glare at Isshin Kurosaki exposed the man's knowledge on the subject. All but admitting he knew the answer. His inability to speak, the muteness that prevented him from exposing anything regarding the Original Life Fiber, said enough. For the answer to Ichigo's question was painfully obvious.

Her fingers clenched Bakuzan, knuckles bleeding white.

There was another swish when Yoruichi Shihoin appeared in a flicker of blurred speed, sweat trickling down her face and blood oozing from the corners of her mouth. Collapsing onto her knees as Inumuta and Sanageyama let go of her shoulders, amber eyes narrowed as she yanked one of the remaining anti-Life Fiber needles piercing her thigh in a spray of visceral blood, she grinned bitterly, "Damn, looks like we missed the fun."

"Yoru -"

Isshin's head snapped backwards when Yoruichi punched him squarely in the nose. Satisfied with the sound of cartilage breaking - even knowing the injury would heal in a matter of seconds - she grabbed the needle lodged above her left knee and pulled, "I take it Ragyo Kiryuin's not here?"

"My nose!"

She rolled her eyes at the childish posturing. Why the hell was Isshin's complaining about his nose? He was completely fine. In fact, her fingers stung. Yanking the last needle from her leg without so much as a grunt, Yoruichi hissed under her breath. She was annoyed the cowardly bastard ran away before she could break every bone in his body. But then again, Aizen releasing his Bankai had caught them off guard, "Anyone mind explaining what happened? Where's Orihime?"

"And why did my Goku Uniform suddenly go stiff as a board?"

Sanageyama grumbled as he flicked his Blade Regalia's popped collar. But the awkward silence hanging over the courtyard like a wet blanket caused his mouth to snap shut. God damn it, was he blind ? Now that he wasn't complaining about his relatively minor problem, he could sense the anxiety rolling off Ichigo. The guy's muscles and tense breathing screamed of someone experienced major depression. Which only meant one thing, "Oh... shit."

"My apologies, Lady Satsuki."

Inumuta ignored Sanageyama's embarrassing behavior as he unzipped the case holding his laptop, "Due to the severity of the situation, I didn't have time to properly explain anything to Yoruichi Shihoin and Sanageyama."

"There's no need to apologize," Satsuki furrowed her brow. She wasn't perturbed by Sanageyama's apparent rudeness. One only had to know the self-blinded teenager - to have fought besides him - to realize his question was born from ignorance rather than genuine acrimony, "But am I to assume you discovered something crucial to defeating Ragyo Kiryuin within the Underground Server Farm?"

"As a matter of fact, I did."

His fingers blurred into motion as he typed commands fast enough to render Mugetsu dizzy. Tired eyes showing initial traces of exhaustion moved back and forth, reading the information scrolling across the screen, "When I connected with the Life Fiber generator, I took the liberty of installing a particular program into Honnouji Academy's mainframe. A little 'gift' that returned my administrator privileges to the surveillance network. So, I'm already aware of Shinra Koketsu's completion. And Orihime Inoue's current predicament."

"So, you used a virus to hack into the academy's system?"

Isshin scratched his chin. He wasn't stupid. Sure, the Soul Society was a few years behind the World of the Living when it came to recent advances in technology. But as a certified and trained doctor running a small, family-owned clinic, he'd been forced to expand his horizons. Learn new things with a lack of passion Ragyo used to playfully mock alongside Masaki.

"... something along those lines."

Inumuta wasn't too insulted by Isshin Kurosaki's mistake. As a matter of fact, he was impressed the man deduced something in the first place, "In any case, Shinra Koketsu multiplied Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual pressure to unfathomable levels. And Absolute Domination rendered our most powerful assets - your Kamui and hardened Life Fiber weapons - useless. As you demonstrated earlier, Lady Satsuki, attempting to fight your mother while she wears Shinra Koketsu is tantamount to suicide."

"However, it might have a weakness we can exploit."

He pushed his glasses up the bridge of his nose as the data scrolling down the screen of his laptop changed, overlaying a hollow image of Shinra Koketsu next to Junketsu, "Despite its origins, Shinra Koketsu is a Kamui. It requires synchronization between its Life Fibers and Ragyo Kiryuin's to function properly. If we can disrupt that connection, removing her from Shinra Koketsu should theoretically be possible."

"Then our course is set!"

Satsuki marched towards Inumuta, her heels clacking with every purposeful stride. Disrupting her mother's connection with Shinra Koketsu would be difficult, if not impossible. Ragyo Kiryuin was arrogant. Confident in her superiority over humanity. Willing to slaughter thousands of innocent lives to achieve her objectives without shedding a tear or experiencing the slightest guilt. But she wasn't foolish, "While Tessai Tsukabishi waits in the shadows of Honnouji Academy, we shall begin working towards an alternate strategy!"

"Inumuta!"

She slammed Bakuzan between her feet, "While Ichigo and Ryuko assist Isshin Kurosaki in occupying my mother when she returns, you will activate EXCELSUS! Take every weapon off stand-by! Don't concern yourself with the safety protocols or damage to the academy! You will wait for my signal, at which point you will unleash everything on Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"Her power might be unfathomable! Her control over Life Fibers unbreakable," Satsuki snarled, her voice rising with every word, "But nothing is invincible!"

"Alright!"

Ryuko grinned savagely at the first piece of good news all night, "Sounds like a half-assed plan to me! So, what's the first -"

She froze when Ichigo's dad flew across the courtyard, half of his chest gone and blood spewing from his mouth. What the hell!? Pivoting around with the Scissor Blade around arcing over her shoulder, Ryuko froze, a strangled gasp escaping her throat at the multicolored light burning her eyes. Unable to speak when Ragyo Kiryuin teleported behind them, covering the distance before she realized her mom moved, she leapt backwards, determined to put as much distance between her and the bitch.

"Now..."

Ragyo paid little attention to Ryuko's behavior. Nor did she particular care that Ichigo and Satsuki reciprocated the tactical action. Lowering her arm, flickers of energy still clinging to her fingers, maroon eyes settled upon Yoruichi Shihoin, the shinigami's injuries befitting someone who fought Yuu. The shinigami was an acquaintance of Kisuke Urahara. But it was apparent her confrontation with Yuu took a drastic toll on her body. Still, she couldn't allow anyone associated with that shopkeeper to survive. Sighing gently, her expression remained unchanged when the impact of Isshin's mangled body slamming into Tokyo reached her ears.

It was unfortunate she had to chastise Isshin. Heaven knows her mécontentement had nothing to do with the man. But he needed to be punished for his transgressions against the Original Life Fiber.

She smiled. A cold and cruel expression that sent shivers racing through each Kamui as she looked around, searching for the man who dared embarrass her. Unsurprised to discover the shinigami was no longer present, a problem easily solved, she chuckled, the regal sound conveying her superiority as Shinra Koketsu's divine light illuminated the darkest shadows.

"... where were we?"

---

...

---

"How long?"

Hououmaru's jaw tightened when Yuu remained silent, "How long have you been planning to betray Lady Ragyo!?"

" Betrayal isn't the word I'd use."

Yuu could tell, quite clearly, Hououmaru was incensed with his actions. It was evident from the hitching of her breath, how the trench knife poised inches from his neck trembled. She was testing his reflexes. Determining how long it would take him to pull the trigger if she decided to throw caution to the wind. It was smart. Worthy of the commander of Xcution. But not quite good enough. Without giving any leeway, he pressed the Carnifex harder against her raiment, "That would imply loyalty. Obedience. On the contrary,

I've never felt the desire to obey Ragyo Kiryuin's orders outside of my own self-interests."

"Even if that's remotely true," Hououmaru counted the milliseconds it took Yuu's finger to tighten around the trigger when she purposely twisted her trench knife, "Your Lâche Raiment should have cleansed your mind of impure thoughts."

"There's quite a few holes in that theory..."

He feigned ignorance towards the purple-tinted electricity roiling across Hououmaru's raiment. The subtle changes in her posture, how her heels clacked against the floor as the circled each other, was difficult to miss. For a moment, long enough to whistle, he watched Ryuko talk to Isshin Shiba on one of the many security feeds, the emotion in her voice and passion implying something very important, "Such as my treacherous disposition. My betrayal of Revocs. And this gun pointed at the weak point of your armor."

The corner of Hououmaru's mouth twitched, "How is your discourteous disposition intact?"

"I'm sure you've wondered why I preferred never wearing my raiment."

With an arrogant chuckle, the humidity in the room causing sweat to trickle down the back of his neck, Yuu stepped sideways, placing his back to the stairs. Despite her self-proclaimed ability to compartmentalize, Hououmaru wasn't taking his treachery too well. She was angry. Prone to lashing out given proper motivations. In other words, bound to make mistakes at the drop of a hat, "It was perplexing - I believe that was Ragyo's term - how someone with my impeccable record preferred normal clothes to one of the Grand Couturier's works of art."

"Of course, you chastised my insubordination. Writing disciplinary notices for breaking the dress code," Yuu locked his elbow, the Anti-

Life Fiber weapon shifting towards Hououmaru's throat, "Threatening special training with the Grand Couturier."

"Well, that's because I discovered my raiment's dirty little secret about a month after accepting Ragyo's offer of employment."

His finger tightened around the trigger, "Or, from my perspective, after she threatened me into working for her."

Blood gushed through the air when Hououmaru swung downwards, carving deep into his shoulder. Teeth clenched as the obsidian blade acted as a conduit, drawing the electricity from her raiment into his body, Yuu avoided her following slash - aimed at cutting his jugular, by leaning backwards. Six deafening bangs echoed throughout the control center he fired the entire clip, ejecting the Anti-Life Fiber needles faster than Hououmaru's reflexives could compensate. But he underestimated the effects of several thousand volts throwing off his aim.

Allowing her to twist sideways, avoiding the needles by the skin of her teeth.

"Électrocution Marche."

Yuu grunted when Hououmaru smashed her knee into his stomach. The concussive force rippled throughout his body, almost breaking several ribs and causing blood to spew from his mouth. But he used the shockwave resulting from Hououmaru's attack to his advantage. He allowed the Carnifex to slip from his fingers, the spent weapon clattering to the floor as he leapt backwards, landing across the room in a kneeling crouch.

"You already know this, but I'm someone who prefers fighting in a cowardly, yet somewhat fair, fashion."

The door leading into the corridor slammed shut with a loud bang, cutting off his escape. For a moment Yuu stared at the two inches of reinforced steel separating him from the relative freedom of Honnouji

Academy - the metal interwoven with Anti-Life Life materials. A survey of the lock next to the door implied Hououmaru overrode his authorization, meaning any attempt to bypass the security measures would activate the anti-intruder defenses. Eventually his frown, more from surprise than frustration, shifted into a grin, "Blackmail, kidnapping, extortion and sneak attacks. There's nothing I won't do to win. That's my best quality. The thing that Ragyo found useful time and time again."

"But you already knew that."

He clapped his hands, the mocking sound of slapping leather echoing obnoxiously, "Which begs the question why I'm betraying, as you said, Ragyo Kiryuin. Perhaps the most powerful woman in the world. Who could kill me in the blink of an -"

"You're as loquacious as ever, Yuu."

Electricity crackled around Hououmaru's raiment as she stepped away from EXCELSUS. The starch grenades littering the floor - released by Yuu in the split second before she almost broke his ribs - short-circuited around her feet, wisps of smoke rising from the disabled explosives, "Don't presume I'm blind towards your machinations. You could have escaped this room before the anti-intruder defenses activated. That you chose to stay, and aren't resorting to your normal contingency plans, suggests an ulterior motive."

"Let's just say..."

A deep, almost bitter sigh, carried through the room when Yuu separated his hands, razor-sharp wires dangling between his fingers, "I didn't appreciate Ragyo's colorful threats towards my brothers and sisters."

Hououmaru didn't flinch when hundreds of Life Fiber threads spun from Yuu's raiment. She stared dispassionately, palming the bloody trench knife in her fingers as the lethally-sharp wires screamed towards her position, slicing apart everything in their path. Despite his penchant for subterfuge, for concealing his plans underneath long-winded speeches, her former employee's prowess couldn't be underestimated. A lesser individual, someone lacking Lady Ragyo's confidence, would be terrified, Yuu's mastery of Ayatori making their chances of survival next to zero.

Electricity sparked between her fingers, coiling around the dark purple armor.

A traitor would flee from the repercussions of their actions.

"Électrocution Glissando!"

The crimson shimmer of Life Fibers reflected off her visor as she danced through the razor-sharp wires. With surgical precision honed over years of intense training, pushing herself to be an asset for Lady Ragyo, she severed the threads. Slicing them into harmless strands of unraveling Life Fiber while Yuu watched, faux shock plastered across his face as she prepared to end his treacherous existence.

Which was why she wasn't surprised when the youth came to his senses. Moving beyond the reach of her knife using the same maneuver that achieved phenomenal success during the Milan Fashion Week. When Lady Ragyo deemed it necessary to inspire several competing textile companies in the Western European market to acquiesce to their demands. Something Yuu required less than four hours to obtain, "Your notion of blackmail is ludicrous."

Her heel smashed into Yuu's stomach, sending the teenager crashing into the wall, "That you feign ignorance why Lady Ragyo traveled to your otherwise banal orphanage is..."

An ear-splitting explosion rippled through the wall between them before she could finish. Ten pounds of modified nudist explosives - obtained from Osaka and repurposed over the last few hours - tore through several inches of Anti-Life Fiber plating. Snarling when Yuu vanished into the smoke, fleeing outside like a coward, electricity crackled over her armor as she gave pursuit. With the trench knife held in a reverse grip - glowing from the amount of electricity coursing through the conducting metal - Hououmaru sprinted after Yuu, amber eyes noticing the flash bombs littering the floor at the last second.

"... insulting."

Her raiment compensated for the flashes of light, turning her visor opaque before the first detonation cracked through the corridor. Yuu's tactic was obvious to the casual observer. And obnoxiously apparent to someone who trained the youth. Unfortunately, allowing Yuu time to recuperate, to reach his destination where he undoubtedly prepared countless traps to limit the effectiveness of her Écusson Raiment, was out of the question.

"Your score on the Fibres de vie Résistant à l'Examen d'Entrée was the second highest that year. Only three percent less than Riruka's."

She flicked her wrist, lightning crackling down the corridor as the trench knife left her fingers, "Lady Ragyo saw potential in you, Yuu Akiyama. You should have felt honored ."

"Honored?"

Yuu ducked underneath the trench knife, ignoring the dull whump when it pierced the door at the end of the corridor, "Now that, Hououmaru, is insulting. We both know there's nothing honorable about Ragyo Kiryuin."

A fist smashed into the underside of his chin. His neck snapped backwards when Hououmaru closed the distance using her raiment's superior speed, bypassing the laser tripwires, mines concealed underneath off-colored tiles and the delayed starch grenades scattered outside the control center. The thousands of volts of electricity generated by her raiment caused every muscle in his body to simultaneously contract and relax. Blood spewed from his mouth, splattering through the darkened subbasement as Hououmaru grabbed his face and pushed .

"But you repaid her generosity with betrayal!"

Hououmaru slammed Yuu through the door. She shattered the reinforced steel - meant to contain anything below a Three-Star Goku Uniform - without stopping, allowing Yuu enough time to understand her annoyance before the back of his head slammed against concrete. It was finished. Yuu was brilliant, but she'd observed his tactics for years. Watching his plans and strategies with a discerning eye. Allowing the youth to slump onto the ground, she callously noted they were standing in the emergency stairwell - one of the only ways to head to the main campus - before removing her half-buried trench knife from the wall.

"Tell me, Yuu. Did you plan for this ?"

Electricity crackled around her knife when the teenager dragged himself off the ground. Without hesitation, she kicked her humbled former employee, sending him crashing across the stairwell. As Yuu grasped the railing, blood dripping from his mouth, she scoffed, "You don't need to answer the question. Because you're going to die for betraying Lady Ragyo."

"That's... funny..."

Yuu's laughter was interspaced with violent bouts of coughing as his grip around the railing - or rather the nearly invisible carbon fiber rope tied to the railing - tightened. In the brief moment of time it took Hououmaru's eyes to adjust to the darkness, her disbelief priceless, his shoulder was wrenched from its socket. Yet he held onto the rope, ignoring the excruciating pain as he ascended upwards, but not without giving his opponent one final piece of advice.

"I planned this from the start."

He ducked when Hououmaru threw her trench knife, the impromptu projectile missing his heart by an uncomfortably small distance. Releasing the rope once he reached the top of the stairwell, only a single door between him and Honnouji Academy's first-floor classrooms, Yuu cupped a hand around his mouth before cautiously leaning over the railing, "Oh, by the way, I recommend staying perfectly still, Hououmaru! The explosives planted under the floor are motion-sensitive!"

The detonator that fell from his sleeve, which fell into his hand, instantly caught Hououmaru's attention. Holding the device over his head, purposely showing the switch resting beneath his thumb, Yuu smirked, "And one more thing! These particular explosives are quite special. They're both tamper-proof and resistant to electrical currents. Attempting to disarm them with your Écusson Raiment will give you a one-way ticket to the Soul Society."

"That's impossible!"

Hououmaru noticed the off-colored tiles underneath her heels. The edges of the replaced tiles were cracked, showing Yuu's amateurish camouflage. Glancing over her shoulder towards the exit, her eyes narrowed at the laser tripwires crisscrossing the corridor. As her jaw clenched, fingers trembling at the embarrassment of falling for his trap, she seethed at what Yuu claimed, "A trap designed to counter my raiment?"

The inanity of his boast boggled her mind, "Absurd. Laughable, even by your standards. These explosives couldn't have been commissioned by Nudist Beach. For Olivier's organization had no knowledge of my raiment until the Great Culture and Sports Festival. And Lady Ragyo would NEVER authorize the requisition of such dangerous armaments. If you had even considered outsourcing such work, she would have -"

"I requisitioned them from Ragyo Kiryuin three weeks ago."

Yuu thumbed the detonator as Hououmaru's bluff devolved into a strangled gasp, "About the same time Yoruichi Shihoin hunted me halfway across the country. She was good. Almost caught me outside Tokyo. Of course, I managed to escape. Although not quite unscathed. Her lightning really did a number on my raiment."

He jabbed a thumb against his olive-green jacket, "But that was the perfect excuse to ask Ragyo Kiryuin for explosive traps suited for taking you down.

"I misjudged you, Yuu."

Hououmaru seethed at the teenager's pedantic speech. Every moment she was forced to listen to Yuu's arrogance only further enflamed her frustrations, "I believed you were working with the naked apes. Feeding them information as a deep-cover operative considering your past relationship with Alexander Anderson. Faking loyalty to Lady Ragyo. Disrupting enough of their operations to avoid suspicion. But I was mistaken. Your betrayal wasn't motivated by self-righteousness like Souichiro. Nor an antiquated sense of honor and guilt like Ginjo."

Electricity crackled between her trembling fingers as she restrained herself, knowing Yuu wasn't bluffing about the explosives, "This is nothing more than petty revenge!"

"It's also selfish and pathetic."

A faint beep surrounded the enraged woman as Yuu primed the explosives, taking them off standby. Flipping the detonator through the air, allowing the woman to watch it arc over the railing, he caught it between his fingers, "But there's nothing inherently wrong with seeking vengeance. Especially when your target never sees it coming."

"And what will your revenge accomplish!?"

Hououmaru dropped any pretense of control. Her shoulders trembled, armor crackling under the pressure of her clenching fingers. The agony from her fractured was nothing compared to Yuu's arrogance and notions of superiority. And she refused to allow a pig in human clothing, someone willing to throw away Lady Ragyo's generosity, embarrass her any longer!

"Shinra Koketsu is complete," spittle flew from her mouth as she spat the words, "Killing me won't stop the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. It won't save your brothers and sisters. But you already knew that, didn't you? Of course, you did. Because if you cared about those orphans as something besides an excuse to justify your actions, you would have betrayed Lady Ragyo before it was too late to change anything!"

"You're absolutely right."

Time slowed to a crawl as Yuu leaned over the railing, the barest traces of a smirk on his face, "I suppose, in the end, I'm just too much of a coward."

The shrill beeping filling the stairwell grew deafening when he depressed the trigger. Tossing the detonator into the air as the explosives packed with enough Anti-Life Fiber components to give the Grand Couturier a bloody nose detonated, Yuu witnessed Hououmaru's horrified expression before turning around. As the flames rushed up the stairs, weakening the support structures, he whistled jauntily, exiting through the door into Honnouji Academy with his former employer's screams fading into the background.

---

...

---

" This isn't working."

Mugetsu huffed at the rainbow light floating above Honnouji Academy. The confidence radiating from Ragyo Kiryuin was palpable, almost nauseating. And Shinra Koketsu's arrogance wasn't much better, "She took a Getsuga Tenshou without flinching. And I'm fairly certain she knows we're stalling for time."

"That doesn't matter."

Ichigo scowled between deep breaths as the blood trailing down his face, dripping thickly onto the ground next to his knee, reduced to a small trickle. The last few minutes hadn't gone well. Instead of using Absolute Domination from the start, Ragyo decided to toy with them, "We just need to keep her busy! It's as simple as that!"

" What if she stops holding back?"

Mugetsu ignored the fluttering nervousness in her Life Fiber. She couldn't afford getting distracted, not when the fate of the planet - and humanity - rested in their hands, "Ragyo tore through Ryuko and Senketsu like they were nothing. I didn't even see what happened! If we're not careful, she'll do the same to us!"

"If we don't keep her busy, everyone will die! Mako... Chad... Uryu. Yuzu and Karin. They'll all die when Ragyo's finished with the planet!"

With an exhausted grunt, Ichigo hardened his stance. Tournesol and Bakuzan shimmered in the moonlight as he glared at Ragyo Kiryuin. Despite Mugetsu's incredible power, he knew defeating the woman was impossible. But that didn't mean he would give up trying, "So, it might hurt Mugetsu, but we need to keep fighting. We have to hold Ragyo Kiryuin's attention until Tessai's ready!"

"Do you intend to stand down there all night, Ichigo?"

He instinctively responded to the multicolored light gathering around Ragyo's outstretched hands. The dilation of Shinra Koketsu's symmetrical eyes shouting what the woman planned to do. Without thinking, he leapt backwards, pushing Mugetsu beyond her limits. In a burst of speed that strained their Life Fibers, sending a twinge of pain through his heart, he flashed across Honnou City. Moving around ruined buildings and pockmarked streets. Leaping upwards once Honnouji Academy was firmly between him and the nightmarish light of Absolute Domination.

If they couldn't see Shinra Koketsu, then maybe the effects of Absolute Domination wouldn't reach -

"Why do you insist on retreating?"

Ichigo's heart skipped a beat when a manicured hand grasped his face, holding him tightly enough that his neck almost snapped . Holding Isshin's son in one hand - effortlessly blocking Tournesol with the other - Ragyo found herself subconsciously grinned. She could punish Ichigo in a manner reminiscent of Isshin's. Something that would teach him a valuable lesson about respecting one's elders. But she couldn't blame his rebellious behavior. Who knew what sort of slanderous lies Isshin stitched into Ichigo over the years.

"Are you afraid of Absolute Domination?"

She couldn't deny Mugetsu was powerful. The Kamui's strength was already adequately demonstrated. Proven during his confrontation with her experiment. But Shinra Koketsu stood beyond the abstract human concept known as 'strength.'

"Understandable."

The raw emotions swirling beneath Ichigo's stoic façade was amusing. Enough that she released Isshin's son without provocation. Allowing him to retreat without saying a word, sweat dripping down his face from close proximity to Shinra Koketsu, "Those who rebel against the Original Life Fiber must be punished. Your actions, misguided by Isshin's nonsense they may be, cannot be ignored. And so, you instinctively retreat at the slightest danger. Pushing your Kamui to her limit whenever I get too close. Against anyone else, such a strategy would have worked."

She closed her eyes and smiled, "But while your Kamui's speed is impressive..."

Her fingers caressed Mugetsu, tracing patterns across the terrified Kamui, "To me, you might as well not be moving at -"

"NIBAN GENKAI!"

Ryuko swung the Scissor Blade against Shinra Koketsu with all the strength she could muster. And didn't stop swinging until the burning wave of spiritual energy smashed into Honnou City, creating an explosion visible for miles. Crouched above Ragyo Kiryuin, sweat trickling down her face while Senketsu muttered about the strain on their Life Fibers, she glowered at Ragyo's spiritual pressure.

"Damn it!"

Senketsu's heels clacked as she flipped backwards, spitting out a glob of blood before landing next to Ichigo. Taking the opportunity to catch her breath, Ryuko noticed the fading burns covering Mugetsu, the Kamui infuriated about something, before quietly muttering, "Sorry about that, Ichigo."

" Next time look before you swing the Scissor Blade! "

"I already said I'm sorry!"

Ryuko snapped at Mugetsu before the Kamui finished speaking, "I would have been here sooner, but that last cheap shot almost knocked me out!"

" It's fortunate Ragyo Kiryuin was holding back, " Senketsu muttered discontentedly at the conflagration. He could feel Ragyo Kiryuin's presence within the flames. It was as powerful as ever, which sent a shiver through his Life Fibers, *"I'm not sure we could have handled any more of Shinra Koketsu's power. That garment is truly terrifying, Ryuko."

"She's toying with us," Ichigo couldn't shake the memory of Ragyo touching Mugetsu, "She knows we're stalling for time."

"That's just great !"

Ryuko wanted nothing more than to kick her mom's ass. Even knowing Shinra Koketsu was powerful, she wanted to rescue Orihime, tear apart the ugly outfit before beating Ragyo to a bloody pulp for all the crap she's pulled. Snorting under her breath when her bitch of a mom's spiritual pressure increased, she flipped the Scissor Blade into a reverse grip, growling as everything turned multicolored, "Damn it! I guess she's done screwing around!"

"You sound disappointed, Ryuko."

Ragyo sighed at the flames enveloping Shinra Koketsu. She couldn't deny Senketsu was powerful. Proving himself the physically strongest Kamui. Yet Ryuko seemed to lack a working imagination. Niban - and Ichiban - Genkai were some of the worst names she'd heard in years. The unique abilities of a Kamui required appropriate names, something signifying their superiority. A moniker of their divineness. Ichigo knew that lesson, although she was conflicted whether he copied Isshin. Even Satsuki, despite her many faults and failures, appropriated an appellation for Junketsu worthy of the Kamui.

But it appeared Ryuko inherited Souichiro's atrocious naming sense.

With a twitch of her finger, she dispersed the residual flames, "If I didn't know better, I'd think you were stalling."

It was slightly bothersome she was using more than a modicum of Shinra Koketsu's potential against Ichigo and Ryuko. And for a moment, the Ultimate Kamui agreed. Expressing its distaste through a manner which eluded everyone present. But she couldn't deny they've grown stronger under Isshin's tutelage. But even their newfound power meant nothing against Shinra Koketsu. It would be simple ending this charade before Ichigo or Ryuko understood what happened. Slaughtering them in a fraction of a second. Sending them careening towards the earth with their bodies torn asunder beneath her divine strength.

But waiting for Satsuki's desperation to reach fruition required finesse.

Her daughter had something in mind, a strategy involving that shinigami and the paladin from Iscariot.

And drawing them out of hiding required more... proactive measures.

"In any case, this plan of yours..."

Shinra Koketsu's eyes flared to their full width as she flew towards the teenagers, shattering the atmosphere in her wake, "... will unequivocally fail!"

"Go to hell, you bitch!"

The Scissor Blade transformed into Decapitation Mode as Ryuko dashed forward. Senketsu's heels clacked as she brushed aside her mom's spiritual pressure. It didn't matter if Shinra Koketsu was unbeatable! She fought freaking Alucard! Got the crap beaten out of her by that shinigami! And kicked Nui Harime's ass without breaking a sweat! Compared to them, a few punches were nothing!

"And take your ugly outfit with you!"

Life Fibers snapping into place and spiritual energy roaring from her back, she swung the Scissor Blade intent on slicing Ragyo in half, "NIBAN GENKAI!"

Only for two fingers to catch the Scissor Blade.

"Getsuga..."

Ragyo smirked at the declaration echoing with a familiar reverberation. Tightening her hold upon the Scissor Blade before flicking the weapon, releasing an eruption of spiritual pressure that sent her daughter tumbling away, she turned around, waiting patiently for Ichigo to close the last few, unbearably long feet.

"... TENSHOU!"

" Je ne pense pas."

An explosion of cerulean light ricocheted from her fingers when she stopped the technique. Catching Tournesol between her finger and thumb with the same amount of effort one might use against an ant, "Although I'll give you credit."

The ear-splitting screech filling her ears made it virtually impossible to hear Mugetsu's reaction. Nor could she understand the short phrase silently passing through Ichigo's lips. But she did notice the Kamui trembling around his body. Her Life Fibers instinctively quivering at the overwhelming power of Shinra Koketsu. And that was disappointing. She presumed they would have matured beyond such fragile states of mind. After all, nothing in their repertoire - no, nothing in existence - could scratch even the weakest Life Fiber on Shinra Koketsu.

"Your teamwork was impressionnant ."

The Getsuga Tenshou writhed impotently as her grip upon Tournesol tightened. For an agonizingly interesting moment, as Ryuko recovered from her embarrassing tumble and rushed back into the fray, she considered merely shattering the technique. Disrupting the Getsuga Tenshou would make a poignant statement to Isshin's son. One demonstrating the gulf between Mugetsu and Shinra Koketsu. But as a couturier whose garments covered the world, treating Ichigo as another pig in human clothing would be insulting. Spitting in Isshin's face.

She grabbed Ichigo's wrist, laughter welling deep within her throat. Pulling the surprised teenager off balance, Ragyo pivoted sideways, dragging him forward.

And redirected the Getsuga Tenshou at Ryuko.

"RYUKO!"

"Now's not the time to lose focus, Ichigo."

The sound of her fist smashing against Ichigo's face, his head snapping backwards with a look of disbelief in his eyes, was cathartic. Exhilarating. Eliciting almost as much pleasure as watching Ryuko desperately attempting to counter the Getsuga Tenshou screaming towards her position. Smirking when her daughter failed as expected, her agonizing screams drowned out by the explosion, she turned back to Isshin's son.

"There's no reason to worry about Ryuko."

She trailed her fingers along Shinra Koketsu's sleeve, basking in the sensation of its Life Fibers while Ichigo appeared conflicted. Torn between watching her every move - wondering if she would attack if his guard fell - and helping her daughter. It was depressing, to a small extent. The knowledge his own technique severely injured Ryuko must be eating at Ichigo's conscious. But, like all teenagers, he automatically assumed the worst. Ryuko's presence hadn't diminished in the slightest. It remained strong. Persistent. Stubborn, much like her older sister.

Her smile broadened when Ichigo overcame his shock, turning downright sadistic at the energy thrumming through Mugetsu's Life Fibers.

"Because you'll soon be joining her."

A single finger was all she needed to stop Bakuzan, scattering the energy collected upon the appropriated weapon. Reveling in the excitement stemming from his desperation, she caught Tournesol upon the tip of her finger. Her skin slightly dented by the hardened Life Fiber weapon. With her laughter reaching a crescendo at Ichigo's despair, carrying a regality befitting someone blessed by the Original Life Fiber, she gently pushed against the sword, sending Ichigo skidding backwards, "Surely you realize by now..."

When the determined youth rushed back into the fray, she raised two fingers, deflecting every strike before closing her eyes, "That resisting Shinra Koketsu is pointless?"

"I don't care how strong Shinra Koketsu is!"

Ichigo pushed himself harder, forcing more power out of Mugetsu despite the strain on their Life Fibers, "I will stop you! I will save Orihime and everyone else!"

"And how do you intend to do that?"

The question trailed off her tongue, fading into nothing more than an errant thought when the obstinate teenager vanished in a flicker of movement. His speed might be impressive, but she could see Mugetsu's Life Fibers shifting. Watch every muscle tighten. Feel the nervousness underlying his confidence. The desperation to win relentlessly driving his actions to the point of suicide. So she laughed, allowing her amusement to make itself known, before catching his swords. The identically-colored blades sliding between her fingers alongside a flurry of sapphire sparks.

Only for a strangled snarl to tear itself from her throat when Ichigo stepped on Shinra Koketsu. Using the divine garment as a pedestal to pull himself free.

"How dare you!"

Ichigo was thrown backwards when Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual energy flared. Erupting from Shinra Koketsu in a violent miasma that was almost solid . Damn it! What the hell was going on? Why was she suddenly so pissed off?

" Ichigo!"

Blood gushed through the darkness when a blast of kaleidoscopic spiritual energy tore through his shoulder. As the wound regenerated, Ichigo leaned sideways, strands of orange hair falling away as the spiritual energy detonated against Tokyo Bay. Releasing an explosion that stretched higher than Honnouji Academy.

"To think you'd treat this sacred garment with such audacity," Ragyo was beyond disappointed. Mere words, syllables created by a species destined for nothingness, couldn't accurately capture her frustration, "It seems Isshin never taught you proper manners."

"You keep talking about my old man. Every time I try something new, or somehow piss you off, you bring him into the conversation," Ichigo swallowed the lump in his throat, ignoring how his shoulder throbbed despite the injury having already regenerated, "And I get it. You go way back. Maybe before he got married. And maybe you felt scorned or something when he married my mom. But you want to know something, Ragyo?"

He tracked Ragyo Kiryuin's reaction, watching her eyes slowly narrow, "Until coming to Honnouji Academy, I don't remember him ever talking about you."

"Hmm... I suppose that's my fault."

The aftermath of the Getsuga Tenshou faded into the background as Ragyo's expression softened. She couldn't blame Ichigo for his father's mistakes. And while his speech was decided to get underneath her skin, she heard worse from better people, "Isshin and I didn't exactly part on amiable terms. We both made mistakes. One thing led to another, and before I knew it, nine years had passed. Of course, I tried keeping in touch. But your father can be rather stubborn. It wasn't until your mother's funeral that we finally spoke. I expressed my deepest condolences for his loss while chastising his incompetence."

"What!?"

"It was only fair he shared the blame," Ragyo's smirk turned predatory at Ichigo's horrified expression, "After all, he was the reason your mother -"

"YOU BITCH!"

The dull thump of the Scissor Blade slamming into Shinra Koketsu was matched only by her daughter's string of foul words. With amusement pulling at the corners of her mouth, she grabbed Ryuko by the throat. It was disappointing watching her daughter struggle, the wet gurgle passing through her clenched teeth indicating the last remaining evidence of Ryuko's connection to the pigs in human clothing. As her fingers tightened in response to her daughter's defiance, piercing Senketsu's armor like paper, she sighed. Annoyed by her daughter's lack of forethought, something Satsuki possessed in abundance.

Why on earth would Ryuko believe she wasn't paying attention to her spiritual pressure?

Rivulets of blood trailed down her fingers, oozing from the puncture wounds in Ryuko's neck, "You should know better than to think your Kamui could scratch Shinra Koketsu."

"Fuck off!"

Her amusement faded when Ryuko kicked Shinra Koketsu. Desperation when facing defeat was no excuse for blasphemy. It was shameful witnessing her daughter behaving like a pig in human clothing. She assumed Souichiro, despite his treachery and arrogance, instilled into Ryuko appreciation for one's clothing. That humans - and Life Fiber hybrids - are servants of the Original Life Fiber. The former destined to become nourishment and the latter working to ensure the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet came to pass.

Judging from Senketsu's neatly-pressed Life Fibers, Ryuko understood the first lesson.

"That's no way to speak to your mother."

Blood splattered across Shinra Koketsu as her daughter lurched forward, mouth agape and eyes imperceptibly trembling. As the foreign substance vanished into the garment, absorbed by its ravenous Life Fibers, twisted her wrist, further driving her fist into Ryuko's stomach, "But I'm proud of your perseverance."

Without warning, and certainly without allowing Ryuko another opportunity to tarnish Shinra Koketsu with her filthy heels, she uncurled her fingers, resting the palm of her hand against her daughter's stomach. Ryuko's desperation was refreshing. But she couldn't allow exhilaration nor pleasure blind her from reality. Her daughter was stalling while Satsuki unleashed one final gambit. A plan destined to failed. And so, with more passion than perhaps necessary, she pushed a minuscule amount of Shinra Koketsu's power through her fingers.

"To recover your strength so quickly after Absolute Domination is nothing short of miraculous," Ragyo grinned when Ryuko crashed into Ichigo, smoke wafting from the regenerating burns adorning Senketsu, "I'm honestly impressed."

Ryuko dislodged herself from Ichigo, stumbling onto her feet as the Scissor Blade transformed into Decapitation Mode. Painful or not, she refused to give Ragyo Kiryuin the pleasure of knowing her attacks hurt like a bitch, "Heh... I guess that means your stupid outfit ain't all it's cracked up to be."

"Oh Ryuko..."

Her knees buckled underneath Shinra Koketsu's spiritual pressure, the sudden weight almost causing the Scissor Blade to slip from her fingers. Struggling alongside Ichigo against the overwhelming pressure, Ryuko sarled when her mom appeared inches away, "You've thrown everything at Shinra Koketsu. Exceeded my wildest expectations."

Cupping her daughter's chin, Ragyo smirked at Ryuko's defiance, "And what have you accomplished besides embarrassing yourself?"

"GETSUGA -"

Ichigo stumbled midstride, blood spewing from his mouth when Shinra Koketsu responded to Ragyo's subconscious commands. Before he took a single step, Tournesol enveloped with spiritual energy, one of its eyes transformed. Shifting into a spiked appendage that stabbed through his stomach. Coughing as Ragyo ignored his injury, smirking when Shinra Koketsu retracted with a sickening squelch of Life Fibers on blood, he forced himself forward. Brushing aside the uncomfortable sensation, his knuckles bleeding white beneath Mugetsu as he swung upwards.

"TENSHOU!"

"Have you forgotten, Ichigo?"

Ragyo didn't bother hiding her amusement. The excitement radiating through her Life Fibers as Ryuko's expression changed from defiance to horror to frustration, As Ichigo collapsed towards the ground like an unstrung marionette, blood gushing from the wound nearly cutting his body at the waist, she smiled, "Shinra Koketsu is the master of all Life Fibers."

"So, unless Senketsu's ascended to his fashion week apparel sometime during the last few minutes," she watched Ryuko gather every last scrap of available power. Her Kamui glowing crimson, spiritual pressure increasing to impressive levels, "I think we're just about done."

" Ryuko! Move!"

It happened too quickly. Even with Senketsu shouting in her ears, Ryuko gasped when something sliced through her body. Convulsing as her left arm fell away. Eyes trembling while her mouth opened and closed, she fell backwards, vision blurring as everything inverted.

"What... the... fuck?"

An indifferent sigh encompassed Ragyo's reaction to her daughter crashing onto the No-Star Slums. The smoke rising from the impact eliciting mild disappointment. Was this the extent of Ryuko's strength? Despite common sense and decades of research, she'd half-expected Senketsu to spontaneously ascend into his fashion week apparel. Reaching a level of strength requiring more than the barest essence of Shinra Koketsu's power.

"Oh?"

With some restraint, she turned away from Ryuko, lips curling upwards, "I was wondering when she'd arrive."

The purple light twinkling on the horizon, silhouetted against the Original Life Fiber and growing brighter by the second, earned her undivided attention. For so long, since learning of her existence, she'd hoped to meet the Life Fiber hybrid working for her former husband's organization. The woman who eluded the Grand Couturier on two occasions. Who wore the most intéressant Kamui - Danketsu. A person of some respectable stature, who'd proven herself against Xcution without fail, deserved a proper welcome.

She feigned surprise when the woman dodged Shinra Koketsu, avoiding her attacks by the slightest margins. Her opponent was talented. Or, at the very least, experienced. Something attributed to Olivier Armstrong's peculiar method of leadership. And that was why she paused in her efforts when the woman made a ninety degree turn, amethyst energy blasting from Danketsu. Purposely lowering her guard, giving the woman an opening to close the distance between them.

To swing her blade - a weapon of inferior quality to the Scissor Blades and Tournesol - at Shinra Koketsu.

"Youkou..."

A silver eyebrow quirked when the woman flickered out of existence. Oh? According to the Grand Couturier, Danketsu's speed wasn't impressive. Faster than Senketsu but inferior to Junketsu and Mugetsu's. But it appeared dearest Nui's report on the Kamui was outdated. Painfully so. And as the woman appeared behind Shinra Koketsu, energy flooding Danketsu's Life Fibers, her lips curled into a smirk. There was still plenty of time to demonstrate her superiority. Avoiding the energy straining along the Genji Blade's edge would require minimal effort.

But she saw no reason to deny the woman the fleeting sensation of victory.

It would make her despair all the more satisfying.

"... Genshou!"

A crackle of displaced air - the clap of thunder as the vacuum left by her Youkou Genshou vanished - accompanied the crimson flames engulfing Ragyo Kiryuin. But Kinue Kinagase retreated almost instantly, bearing her Kamui's frustration and animalistic annoyance. She fell backwards, falling towards Honnou City before abruptly turning, shifting from Genkai to Funsha in an explosion of amethyst. As the surface of Tokyo Bay parted in her wake, she glanced over her shoulder at the slowly dying flames surrounding the Kiryuin matriarch.

"This won't be easy, Danketsu."

Bangs of purple-tinted hair whipped around her face. So, that was Shinra Koketsu? She'd figured the so-called ultimate Kamui would be powerful. A woman of Ragyo Kiryuin's stature wouldn't settle for anything less. Yet something didn't feel right. There was a sinking feeling in the pit of her stomach, a nagging sensation as she looked over her shoulder towards the matriarch. Even if Shinra Koketsu was stronger than Danketsu, she'd expected Ragyo to block the Genji Blade. It might be inferior to the Sword Scissors, but it could still cut through Life Fibers.

But Ragyo Kiryuin didn't bother moving. In fact, she purposely lowered her guard. Allowing the Genji Blade to strike Shinra Koketsu.

"Her spiritual pressure hasn't changed," the scent of salt water rapidly faded when she reached Tokyo, flying above the battle-torn landscape, passing above the shredded remnants of Ragyo's COVERS, "Destroying Shinra Koketsu might be difficult."

" Like hell I'm going to let YOU give up! Use all my power! Take whatever you need! But you WILL destroy that thing! I want to see that rainbow bitch's face when we tear Shinra Koketsu from her body!"

"A direct approach won't work," Kinue shouldered Danketsu's frustration as she tried contacting Olivier. She couldn't blame the Kamui for the visceral emotions bleeding through their connection. Twisting what should have been mild annoyance into suppressed loathing, "Ragyo overpowered Ichigo and Ryuko. She defeated Mugetsu and Senketsu. What makes you think we stand a chance against Shinra Koketsu?"

" I'm nothing like those two!"

"This isn't the time for posturing, Danketsu," Kinue grimaced at the static on the radio, "Unless we find Shinra Koketsu's weakness, Ragyo Kiryuin will tear us apart."

Danketsu scoffed at her wearer's self-deprecation. But she couldn't deny Kinue had a point. And that frustrated her more than anything else. Including the blanket of Life Fibers covering the planet, "You're right. It pisses me off, but attacking that ugly piece of scrap Life Fibers without a plan is suicidal. We'll have less of a chance cutting off Ragyo Kiryuin's head than Senketsu does of growing a fucking -"

"Your Kamui is quite fascinating."

Kinue's blood froze at the voice whispering her ear. Without thinking, she twisted in the opposite direction. Danketsu's jets blasted with renewed fervor as she tracked the Needle Blade grasped in Ragyo Kiryuin's fingers, the polished edge coming within an inch of her throat. And as the matriarch's other hand reached out - intent on clasping around her face, Danketsu shifted back into Genkai, giving her the freedom of mobility to duck beneath the outstretched limb.

"Danketsu, was it?"

The pulse of spiritual pressure emanating from the Life Fiber hybrid piqued her interest. Smiling at the flash of purple light, Ragyo observed the woman's thigh-high boots were replaced by pleated hakama and matching heels. Her fingers caressed the smooth handle of the Needle Blade as Danketsu shifted advanced configurations. A staggered, breathless laugh escaped her lips at the purple undertone in the woman's hair, the coloration indication the maturity and strength of her Life Fibers.

"Such an extravagant and elegant design."

Her eyes shimmered with subdued anticipation at the crimson energy enveloping the inferior blade in the woman's hand, "Although the name could use some work."

The abandoned city harboring the naked apes and Isshin's allies trembled when she deflected the Genji Blade. Purple light danced across the Needle Blade's edge. Sparks illuminated her visage, highlighting every curve of her smirk. And displaying Kinue Kinagase's clenched jaw. Her slightly bared lips and unflattering grimace. As their weapons clashed again and again, releasing shockwaves of pressure, shattering every window left intact by the previous battles, Ragyo chuckled, "From its flattering appearance, my former husband used Junketsu's dress patterns as the basis of Danketsu's design."

" What the fuck is she implying? "

"But enough about Souichiro."

She grabbed the Genji Blade as Kinue swung downwards, "I'm more interested in you ."

Her finger and thumb clasped around the weapon's edge, pulling Kinue off balance, "How did a naked ape such as yourself ascend to the divineness of Life Fibers?"

A cursory examination only deepened her curiosity. Driving the incessant desire to understand Kinue Kinagase's existence. She was far too old to have been subjected to the Life Fiber experiments which bore fruit with Ryuko and Ichigo. Yet the woman's Life Fibers were matured. Inferior only to her own and Isshin's, a fact that elicited a twitch of annoyance. How did this woman - a naked ape professing her former husband's absurd philosophy - ascend beyond humanity? It couldn't have been Souichiro. His knowledge concerning the procedure was limited.

That only left Isshin, but she doubted his personal involvement. He possessed neither the temperament nor inclination for such things. And yet, Ragyo found herself drawn towards the tattoo between the woman's breasts. An intricate pattern of overlaying shapes that radiated a nearly imperceptible, yet familiar, energy.

"That bastard..."

The Needle Blade sliced through Kinue Kinagase before the woman blinked.

While the extensive wound regenerated, amethyst-colored Life Fibers knitting together at an appreciable speed, Ragyo experienced an emotion she considered irrelevant since adorning herself with Shinra Koketsu. Frustration. She'd known about Danketsu's origins for some time, despite Satsuki's efforts to eliminate Kinue Kinagase's arrival from Honnouji Academy's surveillance system. Even with the knowledge stolen from Revocs and Junketsu's dress patterns, Souichiro could never have created Danketsu without assistance. He lacked imagination, using her inventions to create mockeries and knockoffs. Insulting everything she'd achieved.

The Sword Scissors were based upon the Needle Blades.

Danketsu copied from Junketsu.

But as her finger traced the tattoo between the woman's breasts, Ragyo's lips curled into a cold and monstrous smirk.

She released the Needle Blade, distracting Kinue Kinagase long enough for her fingers to wrap around the woman's throat. As her nails pierced Danketsu, digging into the flesh under the Kamui, Ragyo chuckled. Now this was interesting! And unexpected. The woman and Danketsu were stitched together, their Life Fibers interlinked at the deepest levels. Even with regeneration, attempting to separate them would lead to exsanguination, putting her original plans on hold. But now it made sense! Why Danketsu resembled Junketsu beyond Souichiro copying the former's dress patterns!

"Did Isshin tell you anything?"

"I have... no idea... what you're... talking about," Kinue choked when Ragyo tightened her grip.

"Hmm, I'm not surprised."

Not for the first time, Ragyo questioned Isshin's judgment. Why he chose a naked ape - a woman possessing neither redeeming qualities nor temperament - for such an honor made no sense. She couldn't understand the reasoning behind his decision. Surely his daughters would have made better prospects. Their Life Fiber resistance was abnormally high compared to most of humanity. Yet the results spoke for themselves. Unworthy in her mind of the divine gift or not, Kinue Kinagase's existence was a resounding success. The woman was a genuine hybrid, which meant killing her was out of the question.

"But putting that aside for the moment."

Her grip tightened considerably around Kinue's throat, "Did you enjoy unraveling the Life Fiber wards throughout my home?"

She didn't miss the Kamui's reaction when Shinra Koketsu unfolded to its full, majestic volume. Its eyes burning brightly as she shattered the woman's ability to resist, expressing her irritation in the most prudent method possible - by thrusting the Needle Blade through Kinue Kinagase's stomach, "Don't think I'm unaware what you did!"

Blood coated her fingers as she stabbed the woman again... and again... and again, "You helped that contemptible shinigami!"

Ragyo skewered Kinue one final time before pulling sideways, cutting the woman nearly in half, "And you had the audacity to raise your blade against the Original Life Fiber!"

A breathless chuckle passed between her lips as she released Kinue, allowing the clothed nudist to fall towards the ground. It was disheartening she couldn't kill the woman. If anyone else had broken into her home, trespassed upon the Original Life Fiber's sanctum before striking the holy creature, she never would have bothered waiting for their arrival. They would have died the moment she noticed their presence, limbs severed and organs ruptured. Their eyes widening during those last few seconds, watching what was left of their body fall in the opposite direction.

"However, I'm not without sympathy, Miss Kinagase."

With a flick of her wrist, she removed the blood coating the Needle Blade. Another motion sent a wave of pressure slicing towards Kinue, who finished regenerating quickly enough to avoid wasting any more of her valuable time, "After all, you're nothing more than Isshin's pawn."

Spiritual pressure caressed Shinra Koketsu when the clothed nudist's inferior weapon struggled against the Needle Blade. In the span of five seconds, long enough to notice Ryuko and Ichigo's recovery, she countered more than a dozen strikes. Her arm blurred from the rapidity of the woman's assault. Each clash emitted a burst of spiritual energy that illuminated the surrounding darkness, overwhelming the deep crimson radiating from the blanket of Life Fibers covering the planet.

"The man loved keeping secrets," a restrained counterattack sent Kinue soaring towards the ground, "From me! From Ichigo! And from you naked apes! Without him, Danketsu would be nothing more than an inanimate uniform! Devoid of life and meaning!"

" What the hell is she talking about!? "

Kinue flinched at Danketsu's hatred towards Ragyo Kiryuin. The turbulent emotions were beginning to cloud her judgment. It was getting difficult separating Danketsu's thoughts from her own, "And why should I care?"

She exhaled softly, a cloud of mist leaving her parted lips as the Genji Blade flared with energy. Spinning the weapon around her fingers before grasping its hilt with both hands, crimson and purple shadows danced across her face, "Danketsu is my Kamui. She's the only piece of clothing I'll ever wear. Even if Isshin had something to do with her creation, nothing will change my mind."

"A passionate speech but hardly worth -"

Ragyo frowned when several flashes of blinding light detonated inches from her face.

Kinue moved before the flash bombs left her fingers. She flew towards Ragyo Kiryuin as the accompanying smoke grenades exploded, enveloping the woman in a cloud of acrid smoke interfering with her ability to sense spiritual pressure. One of Kisuke Urahara's inventions. Ducking beneath the matriarch's outstretched arm, twisting around the Needle Blade carving inches from Danketsu's right eye, she pushed everything into the Genji Blade, "Because WE don't care! Youkou..."

Their voices resonated together, her determination and Danketsu's excitement synchronizing into a single roar, "... GENKOU!"

Only for nothing to happen.

"Forgive me. For a moment, it slipped my mind you weren't at Honnouji Academy."

Ragyo dismissed the Needle Blade as Kinue staggered away, disbelief etched upon the clothed nudist's face, "Shinra Koketsu has mastery over everything in existence. From beginning to end, humanity has been molded by Life Fibers. Their evolution controlled by the Original Life Fiber for a single, divine purpose. By possessing the sacred power which granted your species the intellectual capacity - no, the honor - to serve in the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, Shinra Koketsu's superiority cannot be questioned. Absolute Domination. Ichigo assumed it was limited to stripping Life Fibers of their power."

"But it's more than that!"

Her laughter deepened, "Absolute Domination is superiority over EVERYTHING! Not just Life Fibers! Nothing in existence can scratch the divine garment!"

" What!?"

"And another thing..."

Multicolored light flared around Shinra Koketsu, "You gave quite the performance, but I could have rendered your Life Fibers powerless whenever I wanted."

Kinue screamed when every nerve in her body burned with the most excruciating pain imaginable. Blood trickled from her nose as Danketsu convulsed, their Life Fibers seizing under the blinding light enveloping Shinra Koketsu. She couldn't think - couldn't breath - as something in her chest snapped. The pain immediately vanished, replaced by a feeling of complete emptiness when amethyst light exploded from Danketsu, sending the Kamui into blissful unconsciousness.

"I should kill you."

Ragyo caught the clothed nudist once Absolute Domination stripped every scrap of spiritual energy from her Life Fibers. "It's the only sensible punishment."

Hoisting the barely conscious woman by the wrist, she noted Danketsu's normal appearance. Beneath its crass and vulgar mannerisms, the Kamui was a purple and cerulean version of Junketsu down to the collar, tasseled epaulets and the three bands on her left sleeve. There was no questioning it. Her former husband couldn't create anything original, "But watching you wallow in despair. Forced to realize your foolish defiance against the Original Life Fiber amounted to nothing in the end. That's simply too tempting to pass -"

"Shut the hell up!"

Seras Victoria shouted at the top of her lungs as she shattered Ragyo Kiryuin's nose. Blood-red eyes narrowed viciously when the woman's face caved underneath her fist, cartilage and bone disintegrating into a visceral explosion of blood.

"S-Seras?"

"Don't worry about me, Kinue!"

She kicked against Shinra Koketsu wrapping her remaining arm around Kinue's waist. Worried when the woman collapsed limply without another word, disturbed by the eldest Kinagase sibling's weak pulse and blood pressure, Seras didn't give Ragyo Kiryuin another second of her time. She blasted in the opposite direction of the matriarch, shadows coiling around her body as the landscape changed to Tokyo Bay, the remnants of a massive COVERS slowly disintegrating over the bridge, before shifting once more to Honnou City. The artificial island covered with craters, pockmarked by recent battles.

Glancing over her shoulder when she landed in the most obscure location possible - all but certain Ragyo Kiryuin was behind them - Seras gently laid Kinue on the ground, careful not to further damage her Kamui, "What happened? What did Ragyo Kiryuin do to you?"

"It's Absolute Domination!"

Ryuko leaned against the nearest wall, breath ragged and sweat dripping down her face, when Senketsu returned to normal. Damn it! She couldn't believe Absolute Domination's range was so goddamn large! Stabbing the Scissor Blade between her sneakers, she looked at Kinue before snarling, "We can't scratch Shinra Koketsu but that bitch can shut down our Life Fibers!"

"There must be something we can do! Anything!"

"We're stalling for time," Ryuko winced when she tried sensing Ichigo's spiritual pressure only to find nothing, "Satsuki has a plan to pull that bitch out of Shinra Koketsu. But Ragyo Kiryuin knows that! She knows we can't do SHIT to Shinra Koketsu!"

"Running away, are we?"

Copious amounts of blood spewed onto the ground as Ragyo purposely - and with great satisfaction - thrust her arm through the vampire's heart. But she wasn't smiling. There was no enjoyment to be derived from the cathartic action against Vlad's protégé. Not only had Seras Victoria trespassed within the sacrosanct sanctum of the Original Life Fiber, she somehow harmed her. While it was nothing more than a bloody nose, realizing with some degree of embarrassment that the vampire wasn't bothered by Absolute Domination, that the annoying creature achieved what neither Kamui nor Isshin could, necessitated a reevaluation of her priorities.

"Although I suppose congratulations are in order."

She didn't bother holding back against the vampire. Not anymore. Not when Seras Victoria proved a threat. Without preamble, accompanied only by her annoyance, Shinra Koketsu's eyes flared. Spiritual pressure exploded from the ultimate Kamui, disintegrating everything in her vicinity underneath the nearly tangible presence. Uncaring that Ryuko was caught in the eruption, Ragyo squeezed the vampire's heart, eliciting an agonized gurgle, "Against all odds, you accomplished what Isshin could not. And that, I'm afraid, has made you quite the problem. For many reasons."

"But I'm not one to pontificate."

Shinra Koketsu rustled as enough spiritual energy to turn Honnou City into a smoking crater coalesced around her fingers, "So, with that being said, I bid you adieu ."

" I find your usage of French rather insulting, Madame Kiryuin... "

"What!?"

A claw formed of writhing shadows, undulating and warping until it resembled something monstrous, latched onto Shinra Koketsu. With crimson eyes glowing sinisterly, Seras Victoria took advantage of Ragyo Kiryuin's surprise. Pulling herself forward, blood dripping from the ragged hole in her chest, she reached out, grabbing the matriarch's throat with her remaining hand, "How does it feel, you bitch? How does it feel knowing your stupid outfit can't beat a single vampire? I'm sure you're absolutely pissed off!"

Ragyo snarled at the vampire's underhanded insult. How dare this undead creature speak to her with such flagrant disrespect! Lashing out, she disintegrated Seras Victoria's lower half of her body into a fine, red mist. A wave of concussive force erupted from Shinra Koketsu as shimmering kaleidoscopic light, slamming into the vampire before carving a trench towards Tokyo Bay.

And yet the vampire - nothing more than ragged flesh - continued resisting.

"Enough!"

She tore off Seras Victoria's remaining arm, the limb disintegrating in her grasp, "You DARE think to -"

" Underestimating Ma chère isn't good for your health."

"What are..."

The inhuman warbling in the voice sent a disgusted shiver down her spine. And the divine light surrounding Shinra Koketsu, more than enough to wipe Seras Victoria from the face of existence, diminished when something emerged from the vampire. A formless clump of burning darkness taking shape over the young woman's shoulder. Flesh and blood growing out of the shadows.

" And dropping your guard in the middle of combat is... well... downright dangerous."

Her heart stopped at the crimson bullet twirling between the thing's fingers.

" Un cadeau," Pip Bernadotte didn't bother waiting for Ragyo Kiryuin to give a witty retort. As more of his soul emerged from Seras, forming just enough of his body to experience the chilled autumn air, he thrust the bullet into the woman's heart, "To you, from one Monsieur Kinagase."

After the Love has Gone

There are several things I wished were in the final arc of Bleach. While some Bankai were revealed, others were not. And I would have preferred a complete list of all Bakudo and Hado, including their effects. That would have been nice to read. It certainly would have given me more material to put into my story instead of reusing Kido or trying to create techniques on my own. Because Japanese is not my primary, or secondary language. Still, the information in the Light Novels has been illuminating, even if some of it is contradictory to my story. But I did strike gold through pure coincidence concerning Kugo Ginjo's background.

Anyway, sorry for the delay. I hope you enjoy the chapter.

And if you have any comments, questions or concerns, feel free to send me a PM. I'll be more than happy to answer your questions.

---

...

---

12 Years Ago - Nudist Beach Headquarters

" So, what exactly am I looking at?"

Isshin Matoi grumbled at the question, "Something I've been designing for almost eight months. A weapon capable of standing toe-to-toe with Ragyo Kiryuin."

" Well, I'll be damned."

Batou propped an arm against the bulletproof glass separating the control room from the experimental chamber, "You finally created a Kamui. I suppose this means Olivier will stop complaining about our budget for a while. Raiding all those Life Fiber transports wasn't cheap."

" Unfortunately, my research into replicating Junketsu has reached an impasse."

The continuous failures at reproducing his former wife's Kamui - the culmination of Life Fiber research - weighed heavily on Isshin's slouched shoulders. Something he concealed by folding his hands in front of his mouth. It didn't make sense. He understood with surgical precision the underlying processes for weaving Life Fibers into a Kamui. The data on Junketsu's dress patterns supplied everything required to replicate the Kamui from scratch. Yet nothing worked. Every uniform he created was perfectly stitched from hem to collar. And yet none of them possessed Junketsu's spark of life.

They were inert, nothing more than scraps of clothing made from Life Fibers.

He sighed wearily, half-paying attention to the information scrolling down the monitor inches from his face. As talented as he may be, his manipulation of Life Fibers was amateurish compared to Ragyo's or Isshin Kurosaki's. Nothing he created held a candle to their work. What he couldn't accomplish after more than a year of hard work and sweat, pushing what he knew about Life Fibers to the breaking point, his former wife created in a matter of hours.

" I've contacted Isshin for assistance on the matter," his uncovered eye narrowed when the secondary security features disengaged with a faint hiss, "Providing he doesn't change his mind, he'll arrive sometime next week."

" Isshin, huh?"

Batou found it strange, for more than one reason, to hear Isshin would be driving all the way down to Osaka. Leaving the relative peace and quiet of Karakura Town to involve himself with their war. After what Ragyo did to Ichigo, and everything else that happened during that horrific summer, he wouldn't blame the guy for retiring to a normal life, "I heard through the grapevine that Masaki had twins. Look, I'm not a married man, so I'm probably speaking out of my ass.

But I'm surprised the guy would leave Masaki alone with three kids just to help with our problems."

" It took some effort to convince Isshin," Isshin swiveled his chair around, arthritic-looking fingers reaching towards the nearby cane, "Hopefully, it won't take more than a few hours of his time."

" Couldn't this have waited until morning?"

The clothed nudist yawned loudly as he shook the cobwebs from his mind. Rushing through headquarters at three in the morning wasn't fun. Especially when the place was so freaking big he got lost twice on the way over, "If Olivier were here, she'd respectfully kick your ass."

" And I suppose you wouldn't have helped her?"

Isshin gave his beard another thoughtful stroke, the artificial hair radiating an aura of eccentric genius. Creating the nearly foolproof disguise concealing his movements from Ragyo for the foreseeable future hadn't been easy. It had taken time to acclimate to the sudden lack of depth perception. And the steep slouch in his posture was quite painful. But these things were necessary sacrifices to keep Ragyo off his trail as long as possible. Not just for him, but also for Ryuko. If Ragyo discovered the infant she discarded as a failure without a second thought had survived...

" In any case, behold!"

Without further delay, he tapped his gnarled cane against the window. As the container in the other room opened, showing a single crimson bullet suspended within a solidified bleach-starch matrix, he declared, "I call it the 'Adhesive Bullet!'"

" Adhesive Bullet?"

This was a bullet? It looked like a bullet, but the odd design - a disassembled brass jacket with Life Fibers visible through the cracks - stuck out like a sore thumb to Batou, "Alright, so how does it work? The name doesn't really spoil the surprise."

" Life Fibers communicate through bioelectrical impulses, allowing them to exchange information at speeds thousands of times faster than the human nervous system."

Isshin tapped his cane against the window a second time, "The Adhesive Bullet interferes with their communication. This synchronization, if you would be so bold. The moment it makes contact, it forcibly desynchronizes the target's Life Fibers! Rendering them helpless! And if they somehow survive, any abilities they may have, including regeneration of tissue, would temporary cease operating!"

" Damn," Batou whistled. He knew Aikuro and Kinue were researching Anti-Life Fiber technology but this took the race by a large margin, "You made this bullet to take down Ragyo?"

" When dealing with someone as powerful as Ragyo Kiryuin, it's best to err on the side of caution," Isshin stared at his reflection in the glass, the glow from the Adhesive Bullet dancing across his face, "She currently views Nudist Beach as nothing more than a minor obstacle to Revocs. Insects to be crushed at her leisure. But if that changed, if she discovered you and Olivier survived, I doubt she wouldn't use everything at her disposal to crush us. Even Junketsu."

" Junketsu?"

The name rolled off Batou's tongue with some disgust. He'd seen the legendary Kamui a couple of times back when he worked for Revocs. Before Ragyo proved she was nothing more than an insane megalomaniac. Motoko thought the thing had been cute. He, on the other hand, found the sight of a white schoolgirl uniform moving under its own power, those ringed eyes on the collar swiveling back and forth, unnerving, "Shit. Ragyo's powerful enough on her own. There's no telling how much stronger she'll get by wearing Junketsu."

" Kinue ran simulations using the information on Junketsu's dress patterns," Isshin stared at the Adhesive Bullet. His eye followed the stitched he spent days weaving from scratch. The threading that injured his fingers, "If Ragyo decides to wear Junketsu, our anti-Life Fiber weapons will have no effect on her Life Fibers. For all intents and purposes, without another Kamui or this bullet, she'd be unstoppable."

" That's not good."

As cathartic as it would be to curse, Batou kept his temper under control. Destroying Junketsu and depriving Ragyo of her greatest weapon was important. But he wasn't foolish. Revocs had one of the greatest security systems on the planet. Motion sensors, facial recognition software tied into the global database and fingerprint identification systems. If Ragyo hadn't transferred Junketsu to a different location, breaking into the Life Fiber research facility beneath Revocs without getting killed would have been difficult but not impossible.

" If we can't destroy Junketsu, our best bet is hitting Ragyo hard and fast. Before she realizes we have an ace up our sleeves."

Suppressing another yawn, Batou walked towards the door, flipping the collar of his jacket along the way, "I'll speak to Olivier. See if she can pull together a strike team. Because from the looks of that bullet, we're going to need a hell of a lot more Life Fibers."

" Normal Life Fibers aren't sufficient."

Batou almost choked on a yawn at the unexpected answer. The hell? How could Life Fibers be insufficient!? The damn things were used in Kamui, for crying out loud! Turning around to speak his mind, he felt the atmosphere grow stifled when Isshin continued without missing a beat, "The Adhesive Bullet was created from ultra-hardened Life Fibers more powerful than anything you've encountered. Unfortunately for my research, I could only gather a handful of these Life Fibers. And they were all used creating this single bullet."

"Damn it," the former ranger cursed under his breath. That complicated things. A lot. Ragyo was powerful enough to dodge high-velocity rounds at close range. She was also intelligent enough to realize when someone was trying to draw her attention. Or lull her into a false sense of security, "So, we only have one shot? I can't even begin to imagine the strategy we'll need to hit her with the damn thing."

"You have a point."

Isshin felt a fraction of his former passion, the scientific curiosity which had driven him into researching everything surrounding Life Fibers without worrying about the consequences or ethical issues, rise to the surface. It was an odd experience after years of failure and setbacks. Of watching fellow nudists getting killed on missions. Or not coming back at all, "The Adhesive Bullet is guaranteed to strike down Ragyo Kiryuin. However, hitting her will be quite difficult."

"At the very least she won't make it easy," Batou felt his old injuries ache at the thought of getting anywhere close to Ragyo, "We'll need to catch her by surprise. But that won't be as simple as taking down her middle managers. It would have to be one hell of a distraction."

---

...

---

Ragyo lurched when the abomination thrust its arm into her chest.

"W-What!?"

Her eyes quivered at torrents of blood sprayed through the air, coating the ground surrounding Shinra Koketsu in crimson visceral. Gasping at the sensation of the foreign object, Ragyo ignored the bitter taste of copper. She brushed aside the pain spreading from her heart, the sudden weakness plaguing her Life Fibers. What had this creature done!? How could anything scratch Shinra Koketsu, let alone penetrate the sacred garment? Vampire or not, Absolute Domination should have rendered her powerless. Even the creature's annoying progenitor was no match for Shinra Koketsu. So how -

She stiffened at the familiar presence intermingling with her Life Fibers.

"Where did you get this!?"

Without a second thought, inconsiderate of the ramifications that could arise from such hasty actions, she tossed what remained of Seras Victoria off her arm. The vampire impacted the ground with a wet thud, blood and shadows intermingling beneath her ragged flesh as she gasped for breath, undead lungs desperately seeking sustenance from the air. But Ragyo didn't notice of the vampire's torturous existence. As Seras Victoria laid upon the ground, agony coursing through what constituted her physical form, she clutched the hole in Shinra Koketsu directly over her heart. Kaleidoscopic light radiated in ominous shafts between her fingers, oozing across the manicured digits desperately holding the damaged garment together.

" Cela n'a pas d'importance !"

A noncommittal grunt escaped her lips, twisting into a snarl when she noticed the vampire regenerating. How did her Souichiro, a pathetic man who couldn't realize his inferiority, steal some of the Original Life Fiber? She made sure he never entered the Forbidden Room unsupervised. And he wasn't nearly half as clever as he pretended. If it wasn't for Isshin's constant protection, Souichiro would have died long before his organization became an annoyance.

Flecks of blood dripped onto the ground as Shinra Koketsu's eyes flared to their fullest extent. The pain coursing through her body was torturous, but nothing compared to what she had planned for this abomination, "So please, give my regards to dearest Vlad when you _."

All conscious thought stopped when agony - pure and unrelenting - coursed through her Life Fibers. Her fingers clutched the gaping wound in Shinra Koketsu as a hollowness impossible to comprehend defined her existence. A scream threatened to tear its way through her clenched teeth before she clamped down upon the absurd reaction. Pain or not, she refused to give the vampire any satisfaction! But as she grew accustomed to the pain, at least enough to raise a trembling finger at Seras Victoria, Ragyo gasped, falling onto her hands and knees when Shinra Koketsu's divine essence abruptly vanished .

Her fingers carved through the concrete like sand, tearing jagged divots into the material. Sweat trickled down her cheeks, dripping from her chin as she tried scrounging enough energy to move. What had that vile creature done to her!? No amount of anti-Life Fiber technology, even her former husband's, could weaken Shinra Koketsu! Yet, to her growing terror, she noticed the ultimate Kamui's coloration fading away. She watched with bathed breath as the radiance permeating the majestic garment - a sign of its divine origin - dimming until there was nothing but a pale facsimile of the ultimate Kamui adorning her body.

"You... miserable... abomination!"

Ragyo punched the ground, splitting open the knuckles on her right hand. As the darkness composing the vampire's physical form finished regenerating, leaving Seras Victoria panting for breath, she forced every remaining scrap of power from her Life Fibers. Pushing the agony stabbing at her souls to new heights. All to accomplish one thing.

"How... dare... you..."

The words slurred together as the Needle Blade appeared in her clenched fingers. Strands of silver hair framed her face as she stumbled off the ground, forcing her burning Life Fibers to respond. Taking control of her body despite the excruciating pain making every movement unbearable, a venomous curse left from her throat when her attention drifted towards the stains blemishing Shinra Koketsu, covering the divine garment with splotches of dirt.

"YOU ARE NOT WORTHY OF TOUCHING -"

She was interrupted with extreme prejudice when a fist smashed against her mouth.

Ragyo tasted copper as her jaw shattered. The bitter, metallic liquid spewed from her gasping lips, splattering through the air alongside the deafening roar of Senketsu's spiritual energy. Staggering away from her daughter, she grasped her bloodied face. Merde ! How did Ryuko escape her notice!? As blood trickled down her chin, dripping onto Shinra Koketsu without abandon, her confusion twisted into monstrous hatred.

"Ryuko!"

Her daughter's arrogance was astounding! She could hear the Kamui whispering false platitudes and reassurances into Ryuko's ears, filling her daughter's mind with visions of grandeur impossible to achieve. Souichiro's blasphemous weapon may have weakened Shinra Koketsu, but she wasn't deaf . Hearing such foolishness from Kamui, such misplaced bravado, was insulting!

But it was the Ryuko's condescension that granted her the strength to push aside the excruciating pain coursing through her Life Fibers. To draw upon what power remained in Shinra Koketsu, channeling its divine essence down her fingers into the Needle Blade, "How dare you lay your filthy hands on -"

Drops of foreign blood splattered across Senketsu when Ryuko responded the only way she knew how - uppercutting her mom in the middle of her sentence. Shutting down the bitch's annoying speech with the satisfying crunch of Kamui against bone. Not stopping despite her punch literally lifting Ragyo Kiryuin off the ground, Ryuko quickly followed with a second haymaker, sending the insane woman crashing back to the ground.

"Don't you EVER shut up!?"

Ryuko honestly couldn't care less whether her mom answered the question. Because if Ragyo Kiryuin thought she was going to stand around and let her bitch about her problems, then she had another thing coming!

The moment her bitch of a mom's face slammed into the ground, Ryuko rushed forward. As Ragyo rolled back onto her feet with a seriously pissed look on her blooded face, spiritual energy flooded Senketsu. And when Ragyo Kiryuin swung the Needle Blade so damn slowly she thought the bitch was messing around, Ryuko leaned out of harm's way and clenched her fingers into a fist.

"Because it's SERIOUSLY starting to piss me off!"

She grunted as Ragyo crashed through one building after another, leaving a trail of destruction across Honnou City. After dealing with her mom's arrogance for weeks and that undead bastard's broken powers, landing a good, solid punch was almost enough to make her grin. Almost . Because just three seconds later, enough time to make sure Seras was alright, Ryuko felt something caress her Life Fibers.

" Ryuko!"

"Don't worry, Senketsu! I got this!"

Her heels clacked as she flickered back and forth, avoiding the Needle Blade while grinning at the twitch forming above Ragyo's left eye.

"What's wrong, Ragyo?"

With a light chuckle, she decided to kick things up another notch. Screwing with the bitch was fun, but she couldn't afford wasting time. Not when Orihime was trapped within Shinra Koketsu!

"For a know-it-all bitch, you're not that smart!"

The expression on her mom's face when she caught the Needle Blade, grabbing the rainbow weapon between her fingers without looking, was priceless. As the accompanying explosion cratered the ground beneath her heels, Ryuko tightened her hold, Senketsu barely shaking from the strain, "Because it doesn't take a genius to realize Senketsu's the most badass Kamui in the world! A cheap knock-off like Shinra Koketsu can't compare to the real thing!"

Ragyo snarled at the blasphemous proclamation, "You insolent, little _."

A quick yank on the Needle Blade pulled her mom forward, allowing her the leverage to knee the bitch in the stomach.

"So, take your stupid outfit..."

Ryuko pivoted with a hollow clack .

"... and your bullshit speeches..."

Her heels dug into the ground as crimson energy blasted from Senketsu. Smiling at the sudden change in fortune, Ryuko felt Senketsu's encouragement as she reared back her arm and punched Ragyo in the stomach. Every scrap of Senketsu's available power rushed through her Life Fibers into Shinra Koketsu, leaving an ugly tear across the so-called ultimate Kamui before she pushed a little harder.

Sending the bitch flying across the No-Star Slums until she reached the city limits.

And then kept going .

"... and go straight to Hell!"

" Stay focused, Ryuko," Senketsu watched Ragyo Kiryuin bounce across Tokyo Bay with a mixture of satisfaction and nervousness. He'd known his creator was brilliant, but something capable of desynchronizing Shinra Koketsu was terrifying, "Ragyo Kiryuin might be weakened, but there's no telling how much longer that will last. Also, you should restrain your punches a little more. It would be bad if we accidentally hurt Orihime."

Ryuko clicked her teeth. She knew Orihime was somewhere inside Shinra Koketsu! There was no way she'd forget something so important! Why else would she leave the Scissor Blade with Kinue? It wasn't because she wanted to personally beat her bitch of a mom senseless!

"Don't worry, Senketsu," she cracked her knuckles at the thought, "As long as we aim for her ugly face, that won't be a problem!"

Ragyo's eyes snapped open when Shinra Koketsu touched Tokyo Bay.

In a fraction of a second, she righted herself, spiritual energy trailing from Shinra Koketsu, enveloping the ultimate Kamui within its kaleidoscopic radiance. Hovering above the stilled waters, blood continued trickling from her broken nose as she snarled at the fast-approaching presence. Merde ! Did her daughter think it would be this easy? Ryuko might have the edge at the moment, but she had decades of experience dealing with those unwilling to devote themselves to the Original Life Fiber. With anger fueling her strength, she gathered every scrap of strength remaining in Shinra Koketsu, the ultimate Kamui glowing with a faint, yet familiar, multicolored light as she confronted her petulant daughter.

"You insolent, little brat!"

She made little effort concealing the venom in her voice. As a mother, she was proud Ryuko's Life Fibers matured to such an extent. Recovering so quickly after Absolute Domination suggested strength befitting her daughter. But as a servant of the Original Life Fiber, she was infuriated beyond comprehension!

Her arm quivered upon catching Ryuko's haphazardly-thrown punch. Manicured fingers grasped the Kamui-covered fist with infuriated fervor. She dug into the exquisite fabric adorning Ryuko's undeserving flesh while the accompanying eruption of clashing spiritual energies evaporating the water beneath her feet.

"Congratulations, Ryuko," blood dribbled from her split lips, mixing with the copious amount pouring from her nose, as she struggled against her daughter's strength, "You've landed a few punches. Managed to tarnish Shinra Koketsu. But your foolish rebellion ends here!"

It was time she ended this pointless charade. Her condescension towards Ichigo and Ryuko, her refusal to consider their attempts at stopping the Original Life Fiber anything more than pathetic, enabled her former husband to get one last laugh. And that, above all else, including Isshin's refusal to reciprocate her feelings, was frustrating. That Souichiro of all the naked apes blemished Shinra Koketsu was an insult she would not tolerate. And now that her pride was effectively shattered, any ignorance pertaining to her daughters discarded, she needed to focus on destroying everything refusing to succumb to the Original Life Fiber.

Starting with Ryuko.

"If not for Ichigo, how far would you have come?"

Ragyo discarded any remaining attachments for her flesh and blood with a single, cathartic punch, "Without Isshin's guidance, you would be nothing! A petulant, angry little girl seeking the unobtainable!"

"You think I give a shit!?"

Despite the fist lodged against her cheek, just another act of 'tough love' by her dear old mom, Ryuko grinned. Even with blood oozing from her nose and the taste of copper filling her mouth, she took Ragyo's comment in stride. Because she heard worse from Satsuki.

"So, what if Ichigo helped Senketsu and me!?"

She grinned with a mouthful of blood before grabbing Ragyo's wrist. Squeezing it just hard enough to get her attention. And once she was sure her mom couldn't leave until they were done talking - like a normal family - she slowly twisted the arm away from her face, "And maybe you're right. Ichigo's dad gave me some pointers on Senketsu."

"But you want to know something?"

With a quick twist, she wrenched Ragyo's arm out of its socket. As her mom dealt with the relatively minor discomfort, Ryuko spat blood onto Shinra Koketsu before using the ultimate Kamui as a stepping stone. Bringing them face to face, "You like to talk about how pathetic I am..."

Feigning a punch before twisting at the very last second, she grasped Shinra Koketsu's hood before slamming her knee into Ragyo's face.

"... but you're the one who can't get over a guy who hates your freakin' guts!"

Ragyo hovered on the edge of unconsciousness when her head snapped backwards. Blood pushed through her teeth, spewing from her mouth in copious spurts. Her eyes quivered when the landscape abruptly inverted, the ruined remains of Honnou City twisting with the blanket of Life Fibers enveloping the planet into an abhorrent tapestry. The Needle Blade trembled in her fingers at Ryuko's arrogance. Yet she suppressed such petty frustrations for her daughter with a strangled snarl. She wanted nothing more than to teach Ryuko a valuable lesson on respecting one's elders. To wipe the smirk off her daughter's face before destroying everything she cared about, starting with Satsuki and those naked apes.

But overplaying her hand so early wouldn't be wise .

Until Shinra Koketsu fully recovered, she needed to bide her time. Senketsu was powerful. She couldn't deny that fact. At the moment, the Kamui's strength exceeded her own, granting Ryuko the false sense of superiority dictating her actions. Yet even with Isshin's positive influence, her daughter was still the same short-tempered girl who foolishly -

A familiar crackle and hiss of burning ozone ended her train of thought.

Kaleidoscopic light enveloped Shinra Koketsu, encompassing the ultimate Kamui from hood to hem, as she pivoted, Ryuko's sanctimonious behavior momentarily forgotten. Yet the Needle Blade shimmered alongside her mounting confusion when she found nothing . The skies as empty as her tolerance for anyone daring to interfere with the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

She heard the subtle fluttering of clothing far too late.

The spiritually-concealing cloak Kisuke loaned Satsuki dissolved when Yoruichi stretched her leg upwards, electrical energy surging around the limb in lethal torrents. Surrounded by tattered fabric glistening in the crimson-tinted moonlight, she twisted sharply before driving her heel into the back of Ragyo's neck.

"SHUNKO: RAIJIN TONBOKIRI!"

---

...

---

"Damn..."

The curse hovered overhead while awareness slowly returned to his senses. As the cavity in his chest regenerated, the tattered remnants of his shihakusho weaving back together, Isshin picked himself off the ground. Kneeling on the ground, surprised at the lack of smugness and arrogance, he winced when a sharp pain stabbed down his spine. Damn, Ragyo hadn't held anything back in that punch. He couldn't remember the last time he felt anything like this .

Wiping the blood trailing from the edge of his mouth, his heart plummeted when Ragyo's presence vanished. But his concern that Ragyo found him - and was determined to finish what she started - deepened when Ichigo's spiritual pressure skyrocketed.

From his vantage point in the No-Star Slums, he watched his son streak through the sky towards Ragyo.

His hand clenched when Ragyo danced around Tournesol, purposely allowing the weapon within an inch of Shinra Koketsu before moving out of range. And she had every right to act that way.

Because Shinra Koketsu was something that couldn't be described as 'powerful' or 'overwhelming.'

With his expression shifting between concern and worry, Isshin ignored Shinra Koketsu's disturbing presence. Despite its horrendous origins, the ultimate Kamui was a masterpiece in every sense of the word. But as long as Ragyo didn't feel the need to unleash Absolute Domination, it was merely invincible. Adjusting the sword strapped to his obi, he involuntarily stiffened at the supersonic bang of Ryuko joining the battle, the ear-splitting screech of the Scissor Blade against Ragyo's hand sending multicolored shockwaves rippling through the air.

Briefly reaching for his tachi as Ragyo's laughter echoed through his Life Fibers before stopping, her enjoyment at Ichigo and Ryuko's despair palpable, shadows framed his face when he turned around, giving the woman one final tense glare before walking away.

"I'm sorry, Ichigo."

He meant every word. He truly was sorry. And once things were finished, he would apologize to Ichigo. Putting an end to Ragyo's madness was his problem. It had been his responsibility to stop Ragyo from the moment he realized the woman he'd known for years, Masaki's friend and Ichigo's godmother, was gone. Transformed into a monstrous caricature of her former self by the Original Life Fiber. It sickened him to stand in the shadows while Ichigo and Ryuko fought Ragyo.

If she was still here, Masaki would never forgive him for placing Ichigo's life in jeopardy.

And he couldn't blame her.

What kind of father watched his son fight his battles? His fingers trembled until he clenched them into a fist. What sort of parent was he to let Ichigo fight Ragyo, who was his problem and nobody else's? That he was contemplating the question proved his failure as a parent. That he wasn't rushing to save Ryuko from the 'love tap' that sent her crashing into Honnou City, an arm nearly severed and blood streaming from her chest, weighed on his conscience. But despite Ragyo's laughter echoing in the deepest recesses of his mind, despite the scream from his son, he kept walking.

Never faltering even as the lump in his throat grew.

Ragyo needed to be stopped. If the Celestial Cocoon Seed Plant reached its climax, humanity would become nothing more than food for Life Fibers. The World of the Living would be torn apart. Nudist Beach, Ichigo and Ryuko's friends and even Satsuki, they'd be killed in the explosion alongside countless souls in the Soul Society. Forcing himself to continue when his son slammed into Honnou City, leaving a trail of destruction covering half of the island, Isshin ignored the constant twitching of his fingers, that his hand was slowly moving closer to the blade sheathed at his waist.

He needed to trust Ichigo.

His son had enough experience to make Ragyo's job difficult, at least while she was holding back. And Ichigo was motivated. He was fighting Ragyo to save Orihime - to save everyone from Life Fibers. After everything else failed, Ichigo was banking his hopes on Satsuki's last-minute plan. And he couldn't blame his son. If Satsuki's plan worked, if Tessai separated Ragyo from Shinra Koketsu, stopping the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet would be possible.

But he knew better.

Shinra Koketsu transcended everything. As long as Orihime remained trapped within the ultimate Kamui, nothing could separate Ragyo from Shinra Koketsu. Even the Hogyoku created from the Original Life Fiber was nothing more than a pale imitation of its shadow. If Tessai tried using Kukanten'i, she'd kill him in a heartbeat. Leaving her in an annoyed mood. And thanks to the mental block woven onto his soul, he couldn't warn him. With the Original Life Fiber awake and angry, attempting anyone more than vague insinuations would cause his throat to close.

Even thinking about passing along a coded message was causing him to forget how to write.

Still, there was something he could still do.

He'd noticed her presence the moment Ichigo and Satsuki headed towards Honnouji Academy. A weakening, but nevertheless alive, spiritual pressure. Something Ragyo, in her infinite wisdom, believed was dead. Without a sound, he carefully leapt across the twisted remains of a metal billboard, sandals clapping against cracked concrete. Grunting just loudly enough to announce his arrival, he approached the Life Fiber clone sitting on the ground, her golden hair shifting listlessly in the wind.

"I'm surprised you're still around."

The clone didn't answer. Not that he expected anything different. Ragyo hadn't been lying about giving her free will. But that only helped to leave a bitter taste in his mouth. Allowing her 'experiment' to know she was nothing more than a replacement for the original Satsuki was immeasurable cruel, even by his standards. He doubted Ragyo created the clone for any other reason besides testing Ichigo or Ryuko's strength. Putting on his best, friendly smile, he waited until Ragyo moved to the opposite side of Honnou City, giving him some breathing room, before shaking his head.

"Ichigo sure did a number on you."

The clone's remaining hand twitched. Yet she didn't respond. Her vacant eyes stared into the distance, disheveled golden hair lying against the contours of her face. With every cautious step closing the distance between them, Isshin realized the depths of what Nui and Ururu created. Ragyo was right, this wasn't an ordinary Life Fiber clone. She was significantly higher quality than the second-hand imitations fighting Ichigo's friends and Nudist Beach. And while her clothing was nothing more than an insentient replica of Junketsu, it was created from pure Life Fibers. Granting the outfit stitched onto her skin a tremendous amount of power.

"Although, I heard you gave him some trouble."

Isshin scratched his cheek. It didn't take the Grand Couturier to tell the clone was grievously injured. The bruises blemishing her ashen gray yet otherwise normal skin were bad enough on their own. But the damage to her left arm was concerning. Everything beyond the upper bicep was gone. Emerald ichor spilled from the wound, pouring onto the ground around her feet. And her posture, the slight laboring of her breath when her eyes swiveled in his direction, suggested the wound was quite painful.

"Still, while you both might have consented to the fight, I'll need to punish Ichigo for his reckless behavior," he rubbed his stubble-free chin, "No matter what, a man should never lay his hands upon a woman."

"Why are you here, Isshin Kurosaki?"

The clone raised her voice at the man's insistence. Her mouth tightened into a suspicious grimace. When another Getsuga Tenshou tore through the heavens, showing the lengths Ichigo Kurosaki was willing to take his foolish resistance against Lady Ragyo, she tensed when Isshin Kurosaki grumbled incoherently, his answer bereft of seriousness, "What's wrong with wanting to make sure you were alright?"

"Don't patronize me!"

She snapped at Isshin Kurosaki, spittle flying from her clenched teeth. Contrary to the man's expectations, she wasn't naïve enough to believe his magnanimous behavior was anything but a farce. A being of his stature wouldn't behave so foolishly without ulterior reasons. Someone equal to Lady Ragyo, who could destroy the Grand Couturier without effort, wouldn't debase himself by greeting a failed experiment with anything resembling geniality.

"Why would you," the pronoun slipped between her teeth alongside a ragged gasp. Burying the excruciating pain of her Life Fibers unraveling, she glared at the elder man, focusing the brunt of her anger and frustration upon his faux affability, "Concern yourself with my well-being?"

Her remaining hand trembled, masking the agony from her deteriorating Life Fibers. She clenched her jaw with as much strength as remained in her body, brushing aside the sensation of her left arm slowly unraveling. Lady Ragyo created her for a single purpose - to defeat Ichigo Kurosaki. But she knew from the first moments of awareness, with the Grand Couturiers standing over her prone form, that she wasn't Satsuki Kiryuin. The memories so vivid in her mind, the conversations with Ichigo and Ryuko Matoi that evoked burning passion, weren't her own. Everything about her life - her existence - were lies. Yet she had carried that burned without question nor complaint, waiting for the opportunity to unleash the entirety of her divine strength against Ichigo Kurosaki.

For it was only through defeating Mugetsu would she prove herself superior to Satsuki Kiryuin!

The various presences encompassing Honnou City mixed into a kaleidoscopic tapestry as she averted her gaze. Her lips, stained with the substance running through her veins, pinched into a tight frown at Isshin Kurosaki's silence, "Mugetsu's strength exceeded my wildest expectations. For a brief moment, ephemeral as my hopes, I was clashing blades with a Kamui who had fought the Grand Couturier. Who had defeated Satsuki Kiryuin not once, but twice. But that still wasn't enough. In the end, I never stood a chance. Despite my best efforts, I was nothing more than a stepping stone for Ichigo."

"But then Satsuki Kiryuin decided to show mercy."

She laughed bitterly at the painful memory burned into her Life Fibers. The immeasurably cruel expression in those cold, sapphire eyes drawing another dry chuckle, "Instead of striking me down, she stayed her hand. She chose to let me live. Perhaps I wasn't worthy of her attention. Or maybe... maybe she knew what I ignored. That my existence meant nothing to Lady Ragyo."

Emerald eyes dimmed as Satsuki Kiryuin's words echoed in the deepest recesses of her consciousness. The bands of shifting green narrowed before she closed her eyes, blood-covered lips curling into a smirk.

"And yet I'm grateful."

"Huh? Really?"

Isshin blinked in surprise, "For what?"

The clone didn't flinch when another inch of her arm frayed apart. She couldn't comprehend Isshin Kurosaki's concern with her well-being. Nor did his consternation make the slightest sense. She was nothing more than a failed replica of Satsuki Kiryuin. An hour ago, while the thoughts of destroying Mugetsu brought endless pleasure born from anticipation, she would have sneered at such defeatism. But that didn't matter. Not anymore. She was dying. And nothing would change that.

"It doesn't matter."

Another sigh escaped her lips when the weight of her arm, the few inches remaining in the wake of Ichigo Kurosaki's attack, vanished. It seemed she'd overestimated the resiliency of her Life Fibers. She had hoped to watch Ichigo and Ryuko Matoi's confrontation with Lady Ragyo, to witness first-hand the divine glory of Shinra Koketsu, but it appeared such things were not meant to pass, "Give my regards to Ichigo if he -"

"Alright! That's enough!"

Isshin interrupted the clone halfway through her depressing comment. While he would never physically strike a woman, Ragyo notwithstanding, he could expression his displeasure in other, more creative fashions, "The Satsuki I know would never admit defeat! She wouldn't take losing to Ichigo lying down! Instead of wallowing in self-pity, she'd fight until her last breath!"

He paused, allowing the point to sink in, before pointing a finger at the clone, "And stop with this nonsense about dying! Sure, your Life Fibers are damaged. But take it from someone who knows a thing or two. You're not going to fall apart in the next minute."

A moment passed before Honnou City trembled, thanks to Ragyo redirecting his son's Getsuga Tenshou towards Ryuko. Yet he grimaced, but not at that. It was obvious his statement got through to the clone. He was many things, an overbearing father, a former shinigami captain and head of the Shiba Clan, and the only person capable of stopping Ragyo. Or, at least, before she wore Shinra Koketsu. But it was the first thing he took most pride in. Underneath her fervent loyalty to Ragyo, the clone was simply a scared and confused teenager who just realized everything she knew was a lie.

And as a father, that didn't sit well with him. The clone wasn't Satsuki, and her body made from Life Fibers, but that didn't make her any less human.

Pivoting when everything turned a brilliant shade of sapphire, he watched Ragyo manhandle Ichigo, her smirk visible even from this distance, "Would it hurt Ragyo to hold back a little more? She doesn't need to brag about Shinra Koketsu."

"Isshin Kurosaki, you are the most credible threat to Lady Ragyo."

The clone forced herself to stand. Her heels clacked sharply upon the ground. Despite his strange train of thought, Isshin Kurosaki was correct. She wasn't Satsuki Kiryuin, the memories woven into her Life Fibers were artificial, but allowing the prospect of her impending death hold sway over her final moments was pathetic. Holding her shoulder with the remnants of her dwindling strength, blood seeped between her fingers, trickling down her arm as she glowered at the man, "Staying your hand for years does not make sense! Why haven't you -"

"Enough about me! Let's take a look at your arm!"

"What?"

"Hmm... this is Nui's handiwork all right. I'd recognize her stitch patterns anywhere," Isshin mulled under his breath, ignored the clone's confusion when he grabbed her hand, turning the wrist over several times, "I might not be a couturier, but I can tell she put a lot of time and effort into creating you. But your Life Fibers lack maturity, which explains why your arm hasn't regenerated."

His grip tightened around the clone's wrist, holding her steady long enough to place his other hand on her shoulder. Tracing a pattern across the edge of the wound, he grunted as small threads shimmering with kaleidoscopic energy emerging from his fingers. With the clone's emerald eyes quivering, whether from shock or astonishment, the Life Fibers stitched through flesh and clothing. As his fingers followed the contours of her shoulder, multicolored threads pulled the wound closed, weaving cross-patterns until the last trace of green light vanished.

"That should do it."

Isshin double-checked the stitching before nodding, pleased with the overall success. He might be a little rusty, but something of this quality was second nature, "It's not much, but I've stabilized your Life Fibers. If you want, I could make you a new arm."

"No, this is more than adequate."

The clone pulled away from Isshin Kurosaki before the man could further damage her pride. That he prevented her death in exchange for nothing, with no ulterior motive discernable behind his amiable expression, evoked suspicion. If Lady Ragyo had saved her life, she would have questioned the reasoning behind such a magnanimous decision. But if he believed this meager act of generosity swayed her thoughts, he was more of a naïve fool than Ichigo.

"But a single act of kindness changes nothing."

A trace of Satsuki Kiryuin's passion accompanied the furrowing of her brows. The wounds blemishing her ashen gray skin faded as she glared at the elder man, emerald light shimmering in her eyes while Honnou City trembled, shifting dangerous upon Tokyo Bay when Ichigo and Ryuko slammed into the No-Star Slums, "Do not assume I'm blind to your deceit, Isshin Kurosaki! I might not be Satsuki Kiryuin. And perhaps Lady Ragyo believed I would perish fighting Ichigo. But if you think I'd betray Life Fibers for something as insignificant as my life, you -"

"Of course not!"

Isshin huffed at the unwarranted suspicion aimed in his direction. It was insulting she thought so little of his generosity! Clone or not, she was still Satsuki. Forcing her to do anything was out of the question. He'd have an easier time convincing Ragyo to betray the Original Life Fibers, "You're free to do whatever you want!"

"Humph," she glared at the enigmatic being. It didn't matter if Isshin Kurosaki was lying. If he so chose, he could end her existence in a heartbeat. The difference between their powers was unfathomable, equivalent to the bottomless canyon between his strength and Shinra Koketsu's.

"I'm serious!"

He didn't receive an answer when the clone turned around, disappearing into the surrounding darkness without another word. Leaving him standing in the middle of the rubble with his hands raised awkwardly in front of his body. Before long, as Kinue's presence prickled on the edge of his mind, he rubbed his neck. Things were worse than expected. He hadn't missed Aizen releasing his Bankai. The Original Life Fiber's anger at his audacity couldn't be defined in human terms. It was only a matter of time before the creature made its way to Honnouji Academy.

And there was nothing he could do to stop it.

"You know, Shinra Koketsu is better than anything I've ever made."

The pitter-patter of footsteps, slow and methodical, accompanied the rhythmic scrapping of metal against concrete. Folding his arms together, the tachi strapped to his waist the furthest thing from his mind, he looked over his shoulder when Nui Harime shambled into view, her dress tattered around the edges and tears staining her cheeks. Forcing himself to grin despite Nui's vacant expression, he didn't give the Scissor Blade dragging against the ground a second thought.

"But don't tell Danketsu. She'll throw a fit if she finds out I said that."

---

...

---

The blood trickling from Yoruichi Shihoin's wounds evaporated beneath the intense spiritual energy pouring from her body. Crackling rings of electrical energy tinted crimson by the Life Fibers enveloping the World of the Living formed into structures bearing uncanny resemblances to the Tenshiheisō. Every muscle in her leg screamed in agonizing pain, the wounds from Yuu Akiyama's tactics interfering with her concentration. Yet as Kisuke's spiritually-concealing cloak disintegrated into bits and pieces, she steeled her resolve and twisted sharply before driving her heel into the back of Ragyo Kiryuin's neck.

"SHUNKO: RAIJIN TONBOKIRI!"

An explosion enveloped Ragyo Kiryuin as the electrical energy surged forward, seeking to pierce through Shinra Koketsu. And for a moment, alongside the dull thump of displaced air and accompanying thunderclap, the ultimate Kamui resisted the overwhelming technique. The dress patterns and stitching - envisioned by the Original Life Fiber and made real by Nui Harime and Ururu - deflected her Shunko, sending arcs of electricity crackling through the skies over Honnou City, one of which came within inches of electrocuting Ryuko.

Then, with a sound more akin to shattering glass, Shinra Koketsu crumpled underneath her heel.

Ragyo gasped wordlessly as she lurched forward. Her eyes widened in disbelief at the impossible sensation of Shinra Koketsu faltering against the shinigami. She felt her neck snapping when Yoruichi Shihoin pirouetted, driving the heel of her boot further into the ultimate Kamui, before immeasurable and excruciating pain redefined her existence. Gurgling thickly in the back of her throat as electrical energy coursed through Shinra Koketsu leaving streaks of burns across the divine garments billowing fabric, the world twisted into palettes of crimson and white as she slammed into the ground, the final echoes of the blasphemous shinigami's animalistic roar accompanying her descent.

"Damn... her..."

Her consciousness flickered in the ensuing silence, the only sound coming from the decrepit buildings collapsing underneath their own weight. Each breath spewed blood, blemishing the ground with her life's essence.

"How... dare... she..."

Maroon eyes snapped open when a voice filled her mind. Encompassing everything that was - and ever shall be - Ragyo Kiryuin. With her teeth bared into a sneer, she pushed off the ground, the dirt blemishing Shinra Koketsu flowing off the divine garment like oil upon water. As her fingers carved divots into the landscape, she basked in the pleasure of the ultimate Kamui repairing itself. Life Fibers restitched themselves, weaving in a cross-wise fashion that removed the sacrilegious damage in a matter of seconds. But even so, her hatred towards the shinigami only deepened.

Blasphemy against the Shinra Koketsu - no, against all Life Fibers - was unforgivable!

Without a single curse, Ragyo vanished, moving across Honnou City at speeds beyond Mugetsu's capabilities. Reappearing underneath Ryuko's hovering form with only the slightest fluttering of fabric announcing her presence, a guttural growl reverberated in the back of her throat upon sensing Yoruichi Shihoin's presence fading into the distance.

"A lâche, are you?"

If the impertinent shinigami thought, even for a moment, she had permission to leave, Ragyo was prepared to prove her wrong. Without further dramatics, she raised her hand, manicured fingers curled into clawed. Shinra Koketsu was still recovering from that vampire's cowardly tactics. But dealing with an opponent of Yoruichi Shihoin's capabilities would be child's play. As she prepared to destroy the shinigami, the divine garment responding to her deep-seated loathing in a way only someone intimately connected to the Original Life Fiber could understand, Ragyo's brow furrowed in annoyance.

Before vanishing in a flicker of movement, avoiding her daughter's obnoxiously straightforward ambush.

"There you are, Ryuko."

Ragyo watched her daughter arrive with mild disappointment. Her eyes flickered across every square inch of Senketsu, memorizing the Kamui's matured Life Fibers and complimenting her former husband's ability to mimic superior clothing. Waiting an imperceptible fraction of time for Ryuko to recover, to regain whatever composure was lost after missing with her first embarrassing attack, she chuckled, a smirk pulling on the corners of her mouth. Yet buried underneath her growing elation, she felt sorry for Ryuko. A few minutes ago, that kick would have caused quite a bit of damage. Perhaps enough to blemish Shinra Koketsu. But as her impatient daughter rushed forward, spiritual energy streaming from Senketsu and the ground shattering in her wake, she closed her eyes.

"You had your opportunity."

And promptly caught Ryuko's fist.

"What the!?"

"But I'm afraid you wasted it," Shinra Koketsu rustled slightly as the energy coursing through Senketsu dissipated. Squeezing her daughter's fingers, eliciting a snarling wince, Ragyo leaned forward,

"Was beating me senseless worthy sacrificing humanity to Life Fibers? If so, I severely underestimated your loyalty to Life Fibers."

"Shut the fuck up!"

With a defiant roar, Ryuko slammed her knee into Ragyo's stomach. She was sick and tired of listen to the bitch spew garbage about Life Fibers. Especially when it was crap that didn't make any sense! But she froze when a deathly cold hand touched her stomach, fingers plucking at Senketsu's suspender before her foot left the ground.

"What's wrong, Ryuko?"

Ragyo smirked as multicolored energy coalesced underneath her hand, "Did you think I would do nothing while you attacked? Lumière Divine."

Her daughter's screams were like a symphony. While she didn't possess anything close to Shinra Koketsu's undiluted strength, the point-blank attack was more than enough to get the point across. That despite their relationship, rebellion against the Original Life Fiber would not be tolerated! And yet, the sight of Ryuko crashing to the ground, smoke wafted from her body while the last traces of energy faded into the heavens, was disappointing. Every second wasted against her daughter brought Shinra Koketsu closer to completion. But the pinnacle of her abilities - Absolute Domination - remained tantalizingly out of reach.

It was vexing .

"Although, as your mother, I was impressed by your ingenuity."

The sight of blood dribbling down her daughter's chin was cathartic. And the Kamui's reaction when it spontaneously reverted from Senkou made her heart quiver. Strutting across the decimated landscape as Ryuko propped an arm against the ground, Ragyo clenched her fingers, summoning the Needle Blade in a flash of light, before stabbing the weapon through her daughter's forearm.

"FUCK!"

"However, the effects from that audacious weapon are only temporary," she basked in her daughter's misery. With the clothed nudist unconscious and the abomination of a vampire out of commission, Ichigo and Isshin were the only beings capable of standing against Shinra Koketsu. Of course, there were other annoyances scattered throughout the area. But she would deal with them in due time.

"It was painful experiencing my Life Fibers tearing themselves apart. I'll concede that much," Ragyo met her daughter's snarling visage, an expression countered by the Kamui's fearful gaze. On its own, the Needle Blade didn't possess the capability to completely cut through Life Fibers. But it could still inflict excruciating agony, which was perfect for a daughter so belligerent, "Yet you had the nerve to lay your hands upon Shinra Koketsu!? To tarnish this divine garment with your -"

"Hado Number Four - Byakurai!"

Ragyo paused when a bolt of lightning pierced her throat, leaving a smoking hole of seared flesh and burning Life Fibers. Her mouth opened for a moment before closing, the curse on the tip of her tongue remaining unspoken. As blood spewed from the wound, she turned around, staring over her shoulder at the figure perched upon one of the few remaining buildings.

"You've learned a new trick, Satsuki."

Satsuki's scowl deepened into a glower as she lowered her finger, tendrils of lightning crackling around the digit. Unbothered by Ragyo Kiryuin's regeneration, leaving the woman no worse for wear, she thrust Bakuzan between her legs, the hollow crack reverberating sharply, "Are you surprised, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

" À peine ."

The silence was deafening as Ragyo considered her daughter's question. For a moment, she analyzed the wording for deeper meaning, searching for the truth, before tearing the Needle Blade from Ryuko with a dismissive scoff. Did Satsuki take her for a fool? She couldn't deny her daughter's strength. Any human capable of wearing Junketsu's fashion week apparel was worthy of recognition. But without Junketsu Shinzui, her eldest daughter was simply forcing herself into the obedient Kamui.

It was only the obvious nature of Satsuki's ulterior motives that stayed her hand.

"You were always resourceful," she flicked the Needle Blade, removing Ryuko's blood from the weapon, "Even before forcing yourself into Junketsu, you sought every single advantage against Revocs. However, I'm rather curious. Who taught you that technique?"

"Does it matter?"

Satsuki furrowed her brow, "It would be presumptuous to assume shinigami techniques are sacrosanct. Human or not, anyone possessing proper motivation, ability and the determination to understand their inherent complexities can learn Kido."

"You don't say..."

Ragyo honestly didn't care if Satsuki learned these so-called Kido from Kisuke Urahara. Or even that abominable shinigami. She already experienced a wide variety of the techniques in Karakura Town, "But as I've already told Ryuko, your window of opportunity has closed. Unless you've miraculously regained the ability to wear Junketsu Shinzui, you'll die without making any difference."

"What the freaking hell's going on?"

" I don't know, Ryuko," Senketsu tore his eye away from Ragyo Kiryuin, the woman's presence causing his Life Fibers to break out in goosebumps, "But we should move before she remembers we're still here!"

"Got it!"

Ryuko didn't know what the hell was going on. In fact, she was freaking confused! But Senketsu had a point! Without waiting for her bitch of a mom, she jumped backwards, vanishing alongside a faint, nearly imperceptible, clack of her heels. As she reappeared, panting slightly and pissed she left the Scissor Blade with Kinue, she snarled at Ragyo Kiryuin's annoying smirk, "But something's bugging me, Senketsu. Why the hell is Ragyo -"

"Hold your tongue, Ryuko!"

Satsuki interrupted Ryuko's question before it finished leaving her mouth. Briefly, and cautiously, shifting her focus from Ragyo Kiryuin, she made sure the point was well established before adding, "We cannot afford to waste time discussing unimportant matters!"

With a flex of her knees, she leapt from the building. The concrete façade, already heavily damaged and on the verge of collapse, shattered in her wake. Junketsu's heels clacked sharply against platforms of spiritual energy as she flicked her thumb against Bakuzan's guard, drawing the hardened Life Fiber weapon in a single, constrained motion. Discarding the sheath over her shoulder, Satsuki tucked Bakuzan against her waist as she landed in front of Ragyo Kiryuin, the elder woman presenting only the barest semblance of a defense.

"Hado Number Seventy Eight - Zangerin!"

Spiritual energy arced from Bakuzan as she swung the hardened Life Fiber weapon towards the only chink in Ragyo Kiryuin's stance. But she never expected the woman to allow her attack to touch Shinra Koketsu. While Ragyo swung the Needle Blade at speeds faster than the human eye could follow, deflecting Zangerin into the nearest building, where it exploded in a titanic eruption of light and energy, she flashed forward, Junketsu's heels clacked with every step. Bakuzan shimmered darkly in the crimson-tinted moonlight as she broke through the elder woman's guard.

Only for her eyes to widen when the Needle Blade changed direction faster than anticipated.

"What!?"

The exclamation slipped from Ragyo's tongue when Bakuzan intercepted her attack. Shocked was etched upon her features at her daughter's strength. Impossible! Junketsu hadn't even transformed into her fashion week apparel, let alone Zenkan. Yet Satsuki was countering Shinra Koketsu?

"Surprised, Ragyo Kiryuin?"

Satsuki grinned despite the immense strain placed upon her body. With Bakuzan quivering against the Needle Blade, orange sparks dancing from the point of contact, she matched her mother's shock with subdued confidence, "Junketsu already stood against you, someone cursed by the Original Life Fiber, once before. Even though I'm unable to wear Shinzui, what makes you think such a feat cannot be replicated?"

Twisting her wrists, she allowed the Needle Blade to scrape against Bakuzan, releasing a cataclysmic eruption of spiritual energy when the weapon slammed into the ground. Unperturbed by the dust obscuring her view, nor bothered by the shattered pavement that made it difficult to move, she waited until the last second before leaping backwards, avoiding the dozens of strikes transforming the Needle Blade into a multicolored blur.

"I've changed my mind, Satsuki."

A thought prickled in the depths of her consciousness when the Needle Blade nicked Satsuki's arm. The notion that something was suspicious about her daughter's newfound strength caused her eyebrow to twitch. Even weakened, Shinra Koketsu should be more than sufficient for dealing with Junketsu. Especially since Satsuki deigned to arrogantly face the divine garment in the Kamui's base configuration. Yet she was troubled, an emotion that only deepened as she dealt her impertinent daughter a staggering blow to the stomach, forcing the air from her lungs.

When had Satsuki learned Kido?

As Satsuki recovered quicker than expected, she flipped the Needle Blade into a reverse grip. Slamming the handle into the underside of Satsuki's chin, blood and spittle spewing from her daughter's mouth, Ragyo scoffed under her breath. Exasperated by the conundrum. She didn't doubt Satsuki could learn the techniques. No, she knew her daughter very well . After confronting that blasphemous shinigami in Karakura Town and the variety of supernatural spells at his fingertips, she anticipated Satsuki might have learned the same techniques over the last few weeks.

Presumably from Kisuke Urahara.

But her daughter hadn't cast a single Kido in Karakura Town. Despite their usefulness, the repertoire of techniques witnessed during their skirmish were Junketsu's. From Tenrai Kagai to fashion week apparel, everything originated from the Kamui's Life Fibers.

The Needle Blade fought for dominance against Bakuzan an immeasurable number of times, each confrontation releasing an explosion of spiritual pressure. Their forms blurred into a cacophony of colors as the number of wounds adorning her eldest daughter increased, the mere proximity of Shinra Koketsu sharpening her attacks to surgical precision.

"Still, I'm curieux ."

She caught Satsuki's foot when it snapped upwards, the spiritual energy coursing through Junketsu detonating harmlessly against her hand, "If Kido are as powerful as you claim, why didn't you use them in Karakura Town?"

"Such a question confesses your ignorance!"

With noticeable effort, Satsuki twisted Ragyo's superior strength to her advantage. Spinning tightly, Bakuzan tucked against her back, she pushed off the ground and smashed her other foot against the woman's neck, releasing an explosion that cratered the ground next to Ragyo Kiryuin. And during that imperceptible moment, when the matriarch's surprise caused the immeasurable powerful grip upon Junketsu to weaken, she slipped free, heels clacking as she darted backwards.

"In battle, one mustn't preemptively reveal their hands!"

An ephemeral wind tore through the ruined landscape when Satsuki raised her hand. Wincing sharply from the damage accrued fighting her mother, blood trailed from the corner of her mouth as several golden ropes coalesced behind Junketsu, "Bakudo Number Sixty Three - Sajō Sabaku!"

"Oh really?"

Ragyo moved before the spiritual ropes finished snaking around her daughter. She closed the distance between herself and Satsuki in a single, graceful step, announcing her arrival by shattering the golden bonds seeking to tarnish Shinra Koketsu. Matching her daughter's surprised gaze with veiled contempt, she thrust the Needle Blade forward, puncturing Junketsu before Satsuki registered her presence. Blood trailed from the wound purposely inflicted upon Satsuki's shoulder, cutting deeply enough into the ligaments that her daughter would be writhing in agony for weeks, before Bakuzan swung downwards, intercepting her next attack.

Sparks danced between their respective weapons as Satsuki pushed aside the excruciating pain.

The ground underneath their feet shattered from the ephemeral weight of their combined spiritual pressures, disintegrating further with every exchange of blades.

"How long can you keep this up, Satsuki?"

She didn't expect an answer to her question. Not when Satsuki was using every scrap of Junketsu's strength to withstand Shinra Koketsu. Yet experiencing the implausible scenario of her eldest daughter, a failure in every regard, matching the ultimate Kamui, despite its weakened condition, felt like a dream. Her daughter was human . A pig in human clothing limited by the weakness of her flesh. Who couldn't grow stronger. Who would eventually wither and die.

Yet she was resisting Shinra Koketsu using nothing more than Junketsu's basic configuration!

It defied logic!

How could Junketsu match Shinra Koketsu?

Her mouth imperceptibly twitched at the abhorrent thought as an invisible wave of pressure exploded from Shinra Koketsu, sending her petulant daughter skidding backwards through the ruins. A purposefully shallow swing of the Needle Blade, timed to coincide with the divine garment, carved through Junketsu, leaving a bloody streak across Satsuki's stomach.

"Your resilience is admirable..."

Another exchange of blows left a thin, but rapidly regenerating cut upon Shinra Koketsu's sleeve, which was reciprocated several-fold.

"... but in the end, you're nothing but a spoiled brat!"

A choked and undignified gasp pierced the ensuing silence when she grabbed Satsuki's throat. But she wasn't satisfied with such meager forms of torture. Watching her daughter slowly suffocate, the hand grasping at Shinra Koketsu weakening until the final electrical impulses in her brain faded, wasn't enough. After years of plotting against Life Fibers, spending every waking moment anticipating the Original Life Fiber's death, she wanted Satsuki conscious when she tore Junketsu from her undeserving body. The physical trauma of having the Kamui separated from her skin - and the painful exsanguination that followed - was the proper punishment for daring to think, even for a fleeting moment, she was her equal!

"Now that your impudence has finally ended..."

The Needle Blade impacted the ground with a dull thud as she prepared to remove the Kamui adorning her failure of a daughter, "I believe it's time Junketsu returned to her rightful -"

Her heart stopped upon touching Junketsu.

Without hesitation, she tightened her grip around Satsuki's throat. Snarling between clenched teeth, she dragged a finger down Junketsu, nearly recoiling at the disgusting sensation of the inferior threading. This wasn't Junketsu! This piece of second-rate clothing was nothing more than a mockery of the Kamui! A fake designed by someone unfamiliar with the deeper intricacies of Life Fibers! Enraged by the pathetic deception, blood dribbled down her daughter's chin as she choked the last breath from Satsuki's lungs, "Where is Junketsu?"

"Oh? You thought I was wearing Junketsu?"

Blood trickled from Satsuki's mouth as she grinned, "That's quite fascinating, Ragyo Kiryuin."

Those words .

That contemptible tone.

Ragyo gasped, and she found herself unbothered by the embarrassing sound. Her eyes widened at the revelation, maroon irises constricting to pinpoints from shock. Ignoring the laughter grating against her consciousness, she glanced towards Ryuko, seeking her daughter's reaction. This was impossible! And yet the terrified expression she expected, the impotent anger and frustration, was nonexistent. Instead of fear, her daughter appeared confused. Bewildered.

And staring at someone roughly half a foot taller than Satsuki.

"You connard !"

Her teeth clenched. Manicured fingers quivered around the flesh adorned by an illusion of Junketsu. Without waiting for the inevitable retort, kaleidoscopic energy surrounded Shinra Koketsu as her grip tightened. Digging into taut muscles and bones. Yet to her frustration, the hallucination endured her attempt to break its neck. The impertinent smirk, blood staining its teeth crimson, broadening as it raised Bakuzan, the midnight black sword shimmering like a mirage.

"Shatter, Kyouka Suigetsu."

A phantasmal breeze washed across Shinra Koketsu when the illusion of her daughter shattered into nothingness. Replacing the lithe form adorned by Junketsu with the shinigami she'd assumed was devoured by the Original Life Fiber.

"It appears my hypothesis was correct."

Sosuke Aizen returned the Kiryuin matriarch's restrained hatred with an amiable smile. He treated her disdain towards his existence - towards the Hokyoku - with a discernable lack of worry. Despite the copious amount of blood spilling to the ground, he was pleased. Although the upper half of his uniform had been destroyed fighting the Original Life Fiber, leaving the Hokyoku inert for the time being, things had progressed beyond his wildest expectations.

"The Adhesive Bullet synchronized with your Life Fibers. Preventing you from wielding Absolute Domination."

His zanpakuto clattered to the ground. With Ragyo Kiryuin's frustration growing by the second, he chuckled, "But on its own, that wouldn't be enough for Kyouka Suigetsu's Perfect Hypnosis to take effect. It required your cooperation. After all, a woman of your intuition should have sensed the subtle difference between my spiritual pressure and Satsuki Kiryuin's despite Kyouka Suigetsu's control. As her mother, the intrinsic nuances differentiating our speeches patterns should have drawn your suspicions."

"Or, if you were truly a servant of the Original Life Fiber, touching what you believed to be Junketsu shouldn't have been necessary to realize it was an illusion."

"You..."

The word devolved into a snarl as spiritual pressure erupted from Shinra Koketsu, the divine garment fluttering chaotically beneath the supernatural weight pressing down upon Honnou City. Yet she forced herself to ignore the shinigami's arrogance. Did he think she would fall for his tricks a second time? His illusions were powerful, but experience demonstrated their ephemeral nature. Tearing the Needle Blade from the ground without caring about the resulting eruption of power, spiritual energy enveloped the weapon as her fingers curled through its hollow handle.

"... insect!"

Shinra Koketsu's eyes widened as she raised the Needle Blade, the weapon burning in the moonlight, " Couronne de -"

"By the way, when did you assume I resealed my zanpakuto?"

Ragyo gasped when the illusion shattered, leaving her fingers grasping at nothing but air. Her breath hitching when a hand pressed against Shinra Koketsu, defiling the divine garment without consequence, she noticed Sosuke Aizen's contemptible smirk as glowing cracks spread down his arm.

"Hado Number Ninety Six - Ittō Kasō."

---

...

---

"But don't tell Danketsu. She'll throw a fit if she finds out I said that."

The ensuing awkward silence was interrupted by an ear-splitting thump when Danketsu shifted around Kinue, propelling both woman and Kamui across Tokyo Bay. Purposely turning his back on Nui, Isshin raised a hand to his forehead and stared at the crimson flames surrounding Ragyo. He took in the overwhelming power and intense heat, wincing at the spiritual energy radiating across Honnou City, before tensing at the amusement coursing through his Life Fibers, carrying a sadistic weight that was unmistakable. There was no question about it. Danketsu was probably complaining, but retreating was the best choice Kinue could make against something as monstrously unstoppable as Shinra Koketsu.

Catching only the faintest wisps of the ultimate Kamui's unfathomable spiritual pressure when Ragyo vanished, stepping across the vast distance between Kinue and herself faster than he could follow, Isshin frowned at the unexpected breeze tickling his neck.

"Whoa!"

With a measured step, he spun around the Scissor Blade. Allowing the weapon to harmlessly slice through the air. Blinking at the lack of explosions, or any release of spiritual pressure as the sword slammed into the ground, his eyes widened when Nui pivoted, using her smaller stature to thrust the Scissor Blade towards his heart.

"Hey!"

He disappeared in a flicker of movement, nimbly stepping across the ruined landscape. Stopping once he was sure Nui was out of range, Isshin grumbled at the soft pitter-patter growing louder by the second.

"You should be careful with that thing."

The ground shattered when Isshin caught the Scissor Blade. Claspings the weapon between his fingers with the effortlessness of tying one's shoes. As amethyst energy spilled from the sword, emitting waves of spiritual pressure that buckled - and then destroyed - the pavement beneath his feet, Isshin twisted his wrist. With a clockwise pivot, he released the Scissor Blade, allowing Nui to continue forward in an embarrassing stumble, her face hitting the ground with a sickening thud .

"I'll admit you're stronger than expected," Isshin grimaced at the blood dripping from Nui's chin. For a moment, he considered asking if she was alright. But he frowned, banishing the thought. Instead, he watched Nui stagger back onto her feet, shoulders trembling and spiritual pressure erupting chaotically from her Life Fibers, before raising a finger, "But it will be a cold day in Hell before Isshin Kurosaki gets his ass kicked by a teenager!"

"SHUT UP!"

Nui screamed at the top of her lungs, "It's all YOUR fault!"

"Huh? My fault?"

The accusation threw Isshin through a loop, "If you're still upset about the Scissor Blade, I did leave a note."

"Y-You..."

Nui snarled at the stupidity spewing from Isshin Kurosaki's mouth. She couldn't understand why someone as strong as Lady Ragyo - stronger than anyone working for the naked apes or that miserable shopkeeper - would bring up something so annoying! It was infuriating! With her boots scraping against the ground, disheveled blonde hair falling in limp bangs over her eyes, the Scissor Blade transformed into a lethal blur when she rushed the older man, intent on carving chunks of Life Fibers from his body, "What's different about Ichigo!? What makes HIM so SPECIAL!?"

The scraping of polished metal upon wood screeched in the darkness when Isshin unsheathed his sword, drawing the weapon lengthwise across his body. Without moving, he countered the Scissor Blade in a flutter of kaleidoscopic sparks. Aware of the power behind Nui's attack - and the ground cratering beneath his sandals - Isshin deflected the hardened Life Fiber weapon. Using a single finger for guidance, he parried the Scissor Blade. Redirecting the sword without taking advantage of the countless openings in Nui's stance. She might be trying to separate his head from his shoulders, but Nui seemed... off .

Her attacks lacked their normal finesse and artistic flair.

Almost as if -

"Mon-Mignon Prêt-à-Porter!"

Isshin blinked at the dozens of clones surrounding Nui, each sporting the same angry expression as the original. And then he found a pink boot lodging itself firmly against his face.

"Ouch!"

The attack didn't hurt. And his nose was perfectly fine. But getting kicked in the face after proclaiming himself unbeatable was embarrassing. Something Ichigo and Ryuko would never let him live down! With a guttural grunt, he threw the clone over his shoulder. As the surprised replica crashed into another three clones, causing all four to transform into scraps of Life Fibers, he twisted around the sharpened fingernails clawing towards his heart. He avoided the clone trying to snap his neck, taking advantage of the opening it provided to disappear in a flicker of speed.

"Hmm... not bad."

Nui trembled when her beautiful doppelgangers exploded, raining Life Fibers onto the ground like confetti, "W-What?"

"Ichigo certainly can't make clones from Life Fibers."

Isshin plucked the offensive threads from the glowing silver hair that had once been rugged and handsome black. Rubbing his fingers against the purple Life Fibers, he hummed at the underlying maturity. Olivier was fortunate Ragyo never located Nudist Beach's headquarters despite her best efforts. Even if they possessed only a fraction of the original's strength, a few clones would have slaughtered everyone besides Kinue. Turning the underground fortress into a slaughterhouse. And he was certain Ragyo wouldn't have passed on the opportunity to witness Nudist Beach's destruction with her own eyes.

"But you see a little tense," he flicked away the errant threads before turning his attention to the petrified Grand Couturier, "Are you sure you want to keep fighting?"

Nui blinked when Isshin Kurosaki vanished. Her pupils dilated at the unmistakable fluttering of fabric, perfectly-stitched threading swaying in the wind. Without caring about appearances or embarrassment, she ran from the overwhelming presence that resembled Lady Ragyo's. She ignored the impossibility of hiding from someone like Isshin Kurosaki. Every thought in her mind was focused on survival . Yet she lurched forward when her boot slipped against the rubble, twisting in a divot that would have broken a pig in human clothing's ankle.

"S-Stay back!"

The Scissor Blade trembled in her shaking fingers as she scampered backwards. Her knuckles bled white, holding onto the purple sword pointing at the man, "D-Don't come any closer!"

For a moment, in the time it took to carefully maneuver around Nui, Isshin listened to the nightmarish symphony of Ragyo's spiritual pressure. The monstrous presence emanating from Shinra Koketsu was intermingled with her Life Fibers, synchronizing wearer and clothing behind anything achievable by Kamui. Torn from his thoughts upon landing behind the Grand Couturier, he watched the terrified teenager before sheepishly rubbing his neck.

"Sorry about that!"

He sheathed his sword in one swift, well-practiced motion, "I shouldn't have mentioned Danketsu. That was thoughtless of me."

"W-What?"

"I mean, Ragyo was probably going to tell you the secret behind Kamui when you turned eighteen," Isshin forced a sly, purposeful enigmatic, smirk despite Ragyo's spiritual pressure possessing a disturbing sharpness. She really wasn't holding back against Kinue. Not that he expected anything different from someone with her vision and sense of ownership. Danketsu was her own Kamui. Unique and special. With a blunt manner of speech completely opposite to Junketsu's shy politeness. But Ragyo likely viewed the Kamui as nothing more than an imperfect replica of Junketsu.

A nauseating sensation rippled through his Life Fibers when Shinra Koketsu's presence utterly encompassed Honnou City and the surrounding landscape.

"Stitching a Kamui requires a lot more effort than creating Goku Uniforms," he scratched his nose. Something wasn't right. Absolute Domination was active. He could feel the technique permeating his Life Fibers with existential dread. And from Kinue and Danketsu's vanishing spiritual pressures, Ragyo achieved the impossible.

Something he'd sought for more than a decade. Yet his strength remained intact. His Life Fibers unaffected by Absolute Domination despite feeling Shinra Koketsu's unflinching gaze.

Either Ragyo was focused on taunting Kinue in some roundabout method of tarnishing Danketsu or she didn't see anyone, including himself, as threats to Shinra Koketsu.

"Now that's unexpected."

He whistled when Seras punched Ragyo in the face. But the subsequent hatred - directly specifically on the vampire retreating in his direction - was nothing compared to the venomous anger burning in the back of his mind. The orange-yellow monstrosity looming over the outskirts of Tokyo was unmistakable. Hundreds upon hundreds of meters of Life Fibers bristling with energy absorbed over millennia. Its inhuman spiritual pressure, the true extent impossible for humans to comprehend, powerful enough to brush aside Aizen's Bankai.

And it was angry .

"Jeez, give a guy a break," he grumbled when the Original Life Fiber briefly - and seemingly unintentionally - turned its gaze in his direction.

"It's going to take some careful planning to stop that thing," Isshin rubbed his chin, the lack of stubble making the familiar posture awkward, "I won't have time to teach you the secret behind weaving Kamui."

"W-Why are you doing this?"

The question left Nui's throat as a faint, nearly imperceptible, whisper. She didn't understand. Try as she might, she couldn't find the energy to care about Isshin Kurosaki mocking the Original Life Fiber. That he was purposely taunting her about her constant, never-ending failure to weave Life Fibers into the most sacred of clothing.

With a soft clatter, as Lady Ragyo hunted the disgusting vampire and clothed naked ape, the Scissor Blade slipped from her fingers.

"A-Amu's not coming back."

Tears trailed down her cheeks with every hitched breath, "S-She's gone. And Ryuko doesn't want to be family. She'd rather die with the naked apes. Even Lady Ragyo..."

Nui's voice audibly cracked at the notion of speaking about Lady Ragyo so wrongly, so rudely. Her pink dress, tattered and frayed from several hours of inattentiveness, crinkled as she tucked her knees against her chest and sobbed. Tears dripped from her chin, staining the layered fabric of her favorite dress with every hitched breath, "B-But why? Did I do something wrong? When Ryuko's stupid dad hurt my eye, Lady Ragyo tried everything to fix it. S-She even thought about asking you for help. B-But after she stopped Ryuko from harming Shinra Koketsu, she didn't even ask if I was alright."

"I-I thought she loved me."

Her shoulders lurched alongside a sob as she stared at Isshin Kurosaki, "Why did Lady Ragyo abandon me?"

"I don't know."

The lie slipped from his mouth with far too much ease. Even when Ragyo's spiritual pressure went haywire and Absolute Domination disappeared alongside a sensation that could best be described as shredding fabrics, something that should have gained his attention, it took considerable effort to hide the sickening guilt welling in his stomach, "Ragyo might be a busy woman but that doesn't excuse her negligence. It's every parent's solemn duty to raise fine, upstanding children. To protect them no matter the cost."

He folded his arms, "It's why I've never blamed Ichigo for what happened to Masaki."

"It wasn't anyone's fault she died," Isshin remembered Masaki's funeral. It had been small. Only a few of Masaki's friends. Nobody associated with Nudist Beach. But Ragyo appeared before the procession, arriving at the church without any of her normal guards. Attending the funeral from start to finish despite everything she did to Ichigo. And for a moment, he had believed she was genuinely upset.

But during their brief exchange at Masaki's grave, he'd realized her sorrow was nothing more than a well-crafted façade. Beneath the genuine concern, Ragyo had been ecstatic about Masaki's passing. But he pretended otherwise, choosing to feign ignorance while berating himself for assuming anything changed.

For assuming, perhaps naively, Masaki scarring her body loosened the Original Life Fiber's grasp.

"If I blamed Ichigo, Masaki would get mad at me."

He remembered every word of that conversation clear as day. Yuzu and Karin were sleeping upstairs. And Masaki somehow convinced him into letting her take Ichigo outside despite her worsening condition, "The woman I fell in love with, the same woman who always berated my nonsense, died protecting our son."

His smirk widened as he turned away from Nui, staring at the flashes of crimson in the distance, "Every time I see Ichigo's perpetual scowl, or his anger at having an early curfew. Or when he attacks his defenseless father for mentioning his lack of a girlfriend, I see the boy the woman I loved more than life itself gave her life to protect."

"Why didn't you kill me?"

Nui found it impossible to continue crying. Nothing made sense anymore. She should have been horrified Lady Ragyo was losing to Ryuko. It was impossible for Kamui to stand against the divine power of Shinra Koketsu. But something happened to her chef-d'oeuvre, turning its beautiful threading into nothing more than scraps of fabric. Resting her forehead onto her knees, she couldn't find the energy to look at Isshin Kurosaki, "I-I was going to kill them. I had everything planned out."

"That was practically a lifetime ago!"

Isshin mulled the unexpected confession while explosions continued illuminating Honnou City, "If I held grudges against every person who came after my family, I'd never get anything done. But if it makes you feel any better, you got a lot closer than most people."

"W-Why?"

Tears welled in Nui's eyes as her voice audibly cracked, "Why are you like this? You care more about those stupid naked apes than Lady Ragyo! W-Why didn't you kill me? Why are you so nice to me!?"

"... that's a tough question."

It really wasn't that difficult a question. And it took Isshin considerable effort not to grimace, "Maybe it's because you were trying to impress Ragyo. She isn't the most understanding woman. But I'm sure she was upset when she found out you -"

"Hey!"

Ichigo appeared in a flicker of moment, already stomping towards his old man before the dust settled. Clenching the obnoxiously clean shihakusho that felt exactly like Life Fibers, he ignored the Grand Couturier and Mugetsu's annoyed muttering, "I don't have time for any of your confusing nonsense. So, just tell me what you know, alright!?"

"And what makes you think I know anything?"

Isshin reared his head backwards before slamming it against Ichigo's forehead. As his delinquent son refused to budge, he jabbed a finger against Mugetsu, "Do I look omnipotent and all-knowing?"

"Yes! Because you've known about everything that's happened so far!"

Ichigo grumbled at the exhausted look in his old man's eyes. Sure, he could understand his dad had secrets about Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber. And maybe some of them were better left unsaid. At least until he was good and ready to hear them. But with Ragyo's spiritual recovering from whatever Seras did - and Ryuko throwing Senketsu's full power at her mom - waiting around for something to happen wasn't an option.

"You have your secrets. Fine. I get that," he smacked away the finger jabbing Mugetsu, "But whatever happened to Ragyo isn't permanent! So, tell me one thing. How long until she's strong enough to use Absolute Domination?"

"It's hard to say," Isshin wanted to give Ichigo something useful. But everything and anything related to Shinra Koketsu caused his mind to blank, "But -"

"Three minutes."

The quiet whisper cut through the tension like a pair of scissors, "I don't know why, but Lady Ragyo's strength won't return for another three minutes."

Ichigo's eyes widened at the unexpected answer, "What?"

"Three minutes," Nui repeated herself in the same, emotionless tone as she stared at the ground, "Something's interfering with Lady Ragyo and Shinra Koketsu's Life Fibers. I can hear them screaming in pain. She won't be able to use Absolute Domination for another two minutes and forty seconds."

" Ichigo, this is too good to be true. "

An angry shiver rippled through Mugetsu at Nui Harime's advice. The Grand Couturier might be docile, but she remembered the psychopath tearing out Ichigo's heart. Not to mention stabbing them through the back, all with a smile on her face, "We can't trust her to tell the truth! This is the same monster who killed Mako! She's probably luring us into a trap for Ragyo Kiryuin!"

"You might be right, Mugetsu," Ichigo frowned at the Kamui's frustration towards Nui Harime, "But we don't have a choice. Even if she's lying, this might be our only chance to save Orihime and destroy Shinra Koketsu."

" But how do you intend to destroy Shinra Koketsu?"

Mugetsu 'blinked' at Nui Harime before an annoyed growl coursed through her Life Fibers, "Senketsu might be stronger than Shinra Koketsu but that won't last much longer. And I'd rather not have any more holes ripped into my threading. Do you have a plan?"

"No, but I'll think of something."

Ichigo reflexively grabbed Tournesol when Ragyo Kiryuin was engulfed within an enormous explosion of lightning, "Shinra Koketsu's powerful. But without Absolute Domination it's not invincible. If we can cut it, we might have a shot at stopping Ragyo."

"And just how do you intend to do that, Ichigo?"

Isshin grabbed his wayward son in a perfectly-performed headlock. He tucked his forearm against Ichigo's throat before pulling backwards, causing Mugetsu to emit a shriek unbecoming of Kamui. While Ichigo struggled against his superior physical strength, he scoffed with audible disappointment, "You've fought Satsuki, right? Then you know cutting Kamui is easier said than done! Even if you cut Ragyo down the middle, she'll regenerate before you realize the ground was spinning beneath your feet!"

" Ichigo! He's crinkling my Life Fibers!"

Somehow managing to break free of the chokehold, Ichigo gasped for breath before kneeing his old man in the groin, "What the hell are you saying? If Tournesol won't cut it, then how do I -"

His eyes widened at the answer.

"I'm borrowing this!"

Despite the appearance of incapacitating pain, Isshin was rendered speechless when Ichigo reached out and, without any hesitation, ripped the sword from his waist. What sort of juvenile delinquent would steal a cherished family heirloom? Pointing a finger at Nui, who'd been silent for almost a minute, he opened his mouth only for Ichigo to promptly cut him off.

"Don't even bother asking why I took your sword instead of the Scissor Blade."

Ichigo took three steps before scowling over his shoulder, "Because if you weren't busy worrying about nonsense, you'd realize Nui left twenty seconds ago!"

As his old man finally realized Nui Harime disappeared sometime after informing them about Shinra Koketsu, Ichigo pushed off the ground. Vaulting several meters into the air before vanishing in a flicker of speed. With Mugetsu tightening protectively when Aizen's spiritual pressure appeared out of nowhere, blasting through Honnou City and overwhelming Ryuko and the others, his eyes narrowed when a familiar pillar of crimson fire stabbed upwards into the sky.

"Aizen... what the hell's going on?"

---

...

---

Aizen moved before the crimson flames encircled Ragyo Kiryuin.

The world dissolved into shifting colors as he retreated from the erupting conflagration. Retreating from the spiritual explosion enveloping the Kiryuin matriarch as her screams reached his ears, the treacherous captain's expression tensed at the blood dripping from his elbow. Copious amounts of the crimson liquid pooled around his feet, the scent of burnt flesh almost repugnant to one's senses.

"How unfortunate."

He gave the charred flesh on his left arm another cursory glance, the pain uncomfortable yet manageable, "Even with ample preparation, it appears Itto Kase requires a physical catalyst to reach full power."

With faint traces of a smile pulling on his mouth, Aizen observed the crimson flames jutting into the heavens, reaching beyond even the pinnacle of Honnouji Academy. While his own experiences with the Hado were discomfiting, perhaps even slightly painful, watching the upwelling of spiritual energy piqued his curiosity. It was because of that interesting Adhesive Bullet that Ragyo Kiryuin couldn't ignore his attacks, which meant the amount of damage inflicted depended upon her spiritual pressure.

"I appreciate your cooperation, Ryuko Matoi."

His smirk broadened when the teenager arrived in a flash of speed not too dissimilar to a Quincy's hirenkyaku, "If you had given Ragyo Kiryuin any reason to doubt reality, she would have seen through the deception. Rendering my efforts pointless."

"Whatever."

The Scissor Blade transformed into Decapitation Mode as Ryuko snarled at the flames surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin. Something about the shinigami still pissed her off! She would never admit it - least of all to the bastard - but hearing the guy mock Satsuki's stupid way of speaking struck a nerve. Damn! If Ichigo was here, she was certain he'd punch the shinigami for the both of them, "Just don't do it again. Got it!?"

" His understanding of Satsuki's mannerisms is... disturbing."

Senketsu found the shingami's reaction unnerving. Anyone, maybe not Ryuko or Ichigo, would panic at the amount of blood pouring from what remained of their arm. And the blackened skin and muscles had to be painful. Yet Sosuke Aizen appeared ignorant, which caused goosebumps to break out across his Life Fibers, "Nevertheless, we can worry about his suspicious behavior later. Shinra Koketsu might be weakened but Ragyo Kiryuin's still alive. And growing stronger by the second."

"Damn it!"

Ryuko flinched under the sweltering heat blasting against her skin. Sweat trickled down her cheeks, pooling against Senketsu much to the Kamui's frustration. The bastard was strong but she could sense her mom's presence. It was as strong as ever! Maybe even stronger! Tightening her hold on the Scissor Blade, she sneered at the arrogant grin undoubtedly plastered on the bitch's face, "What the hell is she planning?"

"Ragyo Kiryuin's biding her time."

It required an almost trivial amount of effort to interpolate Ryuko Matoi's chaotic thoughts. The teenager's mind was akin to an open book, her emotions worn on her sleeves. Something observed when he unsheathed Kyouka Suigetsu, causing her eyes to subtly widen, "From your reaction, you're concerned about my zanpakuto. A logical response, even for a Life Fiber Hybrid. However, thanks to your Kamui, you cannot succumb to Perfect Hypnosis."

Ryuko blinked owlishly at the comment before frowning, "Say what!?"

" How is that possible?"

She felt Senketsu's confusion through their connection when the bastard chuckled, "Kyouka Suigetsu functions by controlling one's senses, causing them to misinterpret information at my choosing. A frightening technique, but there is a singular drawback. Something you, and your Kamui have taken advantage of. For Perfect Hypnosis, despite its notoriety, depends on my understanding of the world. Or, to be more specific..."

"... I cannot control senses that I, myself, do not possess."

Aizen gestured towards the sweltering conflagration, "Your mother was originally human. Therefore, despite her physiology transforming into something inhuman, her senses remained that of a human's. Your Kamui, on the other hand, was never human. Since I cannot understand how it communicates, nor can I comprehend the method in which it interprets data and information, Kyouka Suigetsu cannot control your senses as long as you're synchronized with Senketsu."

"Heh... so you're saying Senketsu is better than your zanpakuto?"

Pride swelled through Ryuko's mind despite the bastard's dehumanizing insults about Senketsu. She always knew Senketsu was powerful. They kicked enough ass across the goddamn planet to earn a well-deserved vacation! But knowing her Kamui was immune to something hat-and-clogs said was unbeatable, which meant she was immune, simply made everything better! If Senketsu was immune to this bastard's zanpakuto, who knew what else he could do? Grinning at the thought, almost forgetting about Ragyo Kiryuin, her good mood faltered when something came to mind.

"Hey, wait a second! How the hell do you know all this?"

"An interesting question."

Aizen stabbed Kyouka Suigetsu into the roof when a familiar presence washed across Honnou City. As Ryuko Matoi tensed underneath the spiritual pressure, pupils dilating and teeth clenched, he pointed towards the crimson flames, "But it appears we're out of time. Bakudo Number Eighty One - Danku."

The translucent barrier shimmered into existence moments before the barrage of kaleidoscopic spiritual energy pierced Itto Koso. While Ryuko Matoi braced herself, he stood unyielding despite cracks spreading across the Bakudo. A dull crack grated on his ears as the transparent surface cracked and splintered under the assault, pieces of spiritual energy fracturing until Ragyo Kiryuin refrained for wasting further effort.

"It appears Kido retain full effectiveness against weakened Life Fibers."

As the protective Bakudo shattered, he removed Kyouka Suigetsu from her impromptu purchase, "Nevertheless, victory cannot be achieved through Kido. Oh well, it appears I'll need to do things the hard way after all."

Ryuko noticed something different about the shinigami's zanpakuto. But before she could speak, an enormous pressure slammed against her shoulders. Leaning on the Scissor Blade as Senketsu tightened, almost squeezing, around her body, she snarled when the bitch's voice seemingly whispered in her ears.

" Félicitations... "

Ragyo was beyond furious.

The conceptual limitations of hatred couldn't encompass her disdain for the shinigami. For weeks, perhaps somewhat prematurely, she presumed nothing could match her loathing for Kisuke Urahara. The contemptible man who injured the Grand Couturier with a Bleach Bomb. Who stitched Mugetsu and crafted Tournesol. And who befouled the Original Life Fiber during the Great Culture and Sports Festival. Yet, over the last thirty-six hours, through recovering Orihime and adorning herself with Shinra Koketsu, Sosuke Aizen seemed intent on breaking that record.

"... you've successfully pissed me off ."

With a sweep of her arm, she dispersed the remaining flames. As she floated above the scorched crater, smoke rising from the blackened concrete and rubble, Ragyo snarled at the burns covering Shinra Koketsu. The damage was fading, but the audacity of the shinigami to tarnish the ultimate Kamui was unforgivable! Raising her hand towards the man, fingers almost clenched into her fist, she frowned when Ryuko turned around and fled without a single, rebellious curse.

No, not fled. Retreated .

Her stubborn daughter was retreating. Which meant either Ryuko finally understood the greatness of the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet and believed abandoning shinigami meant reprieve from her eventual punishment.

Or Sosuke Aizen had something up his sleeves.

"But there's nobody to blame but myself."

Taking a single, cautious step towards the shinigami, Ragyo suppressed the desire to skewer his heart. Or better yet, tear it from his chest. Her overconfidence in Shinra Koketsu's divine power enabled the shinigami to achieve this slight modicum of success. A bitter taste of victory. And allowing that to continue, even for an imperceptible moment, was intolerable, "It would have been simpler dealing with Ichigo and Ryuko before things got out of hand. Without their interference, that vampire could never have touched Shinra Koketsu. Nevertheless, worrying about the past won't accomplish anything. Because right now, the only thing on my mind..."

The Needle Blade appeared in a flash of light, "... is understanding what you're planning."

Ragyo took another step, drawing within a dozen meters of the insidious shinigami before he registered the movement. It would be simple, almost trivial, to take advantage of the man's condition. Without proper medical treatment, he'd likely perish from exsanguination. Allowing nature to take its course was the most sensible option. It would require no effort to leave the shinigami alone. To bide her time until Shinra Koketsu recovered from her former husband's weapon.

Yet she refrained from leaving Sosuke Aizen to his own devices.

She wasn't stupid .

Even infuriated beyond human comprehension, she personally understood the ramifications of underestimating Sosuke Aizen. The memories of Karakura Town remained at the forefront of her mind. The man was frighteningly brilliant. Nearly as much as herself. He knew how to get underneath her skin. To manipulate a conversation until the greatest advantage twisted into a weakness. No, assuming the shinigami would die from his self-inflicted wounds was foolhardy. Imbécile . And considering the countless delays and setbacks suffered at the hands of those pathetic naked apes and Isshin's treachery, acting recklessly without considering potential consequences was out of the question.

"Planning, you say?"

Aizen smirked at the backhanded compliment, "An interesting declaration. But you're overestimating my capabilities, Ragyo Kiryuin. Confronting the Original Life Fiber strained my body more than expected. I'm in no position to put up more than the briefest resistance. For all intents and purposes, this battle is already over."

"Oh? Is that right?"

Her eyebrow twitched at the shinigami's audaciousness. A subtle, yet noticeable to those blessed by the Original Life Fiber, growl emanated from Shinra Koketsu when the surrounding environment wavered like a mirage, "You're certainly entitled to that opinion. But I cannot help but wonder..."

Without raising her voice, she shattered what remained of the shinigami's faltering illusions, "... how stupid you truly think I am."

The question was redundant. She knew Sosuke Aizen's opinion on the matter. The man's intelligence was matched only by his arrogance. And for a moment, her frustration overwhelmed common sense. With only the slightest hesitation, she pointed a finger at the shinigami, multicolored light coalescing above the talon-like fingernail. Every sound appeared to fade away as she debated the ramifications of wiping the man from existence. It would be easy . Perhaps effortless if his statement held validity. If he was bluffing, taking the initiative would deal with someone who befouled the Original Life Fiber on multiple occasions.

"What do you hope to accomplish?"

She allowed the gathered energy to dissipate, "Your resistance has been amusing. Yet surely someone with your intelligence understands the futility? The Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet cannot be stopped. So please, by all means, don't hold back. Pull out whatever tricks you have left. Continue hiding behind your zanpakuto's illusions like a coward. Because, my dear shinigami, this world, and every pig in human clothing bred by the Life Fibers, will perish. And there's nothing you can do to stop it."

"I suppose some might refer to such tactics as cowardly."

"Then again, most people lack sufficient imagination and persistence to consider every available option," Aizen allowed Ragyo Kiryuin to finish speaking. It was the least he could do against someone of her caliber. And considering the alternative, which involved hand-to-hand combat against the most powerful being on the World of the Living, polite conversation was quite enjoyable, "If fighting dishonorably and through underhanded tactics guarantees victory, should one not consider taking such actions?"

" S'il vous plait... "

Hearing Yuu Akiyama's aphorism coming from Sosuke Aizen was almost laughable, "Victory, you say?"

Kaleidoscopic light twisted around the Needle Blade as she swung downwards before the shinigami could react, "I find that notion utterly reprehensible!"

A mixture of elation and aggravation fought for dominance as she took advantage of Sosuke Aizen's arrogance. If the shinigami thought - no, believed - himself familiar with her style of fighting, who was she could prove him wrong? With a smile gracing her lips, hidden from the man when he pivoted around the Needle Blade, she purposely refrained from unleashing the spiritual energy. She graciously allowed the shinigami to formulate another countermeasure. To comprehend the ramifications of underestimating Shinra Koketsu as she pointed her other hand at his face, rainbow light already gathered upon her fingertips.

"Lumière Divine."

When the shinigami survived the subsequent explosion stretching beyond Honnou City into Tokyo Bay, Ragyo scoffed. Observing - or rather, allowing - Sosuke Aizen to retreat, smoke clinging to the remnants of his clothing, blood covering his burnt body, she waited long enough to give the semblance of hope before closing the distance in the blink of an eye, keeping just out of reach of his zanpakuto.

"Must I repeat myself?"

She wasn't bothered when her next attack missed, scraping the man's neck instead of severing his spine. Without that sacrilegious invention bestowing upon his unworthy body a small fraction of the Original Life Fiber's power, Sosuke Aizen was nothing more than another pig in human clothing. Strong and intelligent but mortal. Holding back when he vanished in a flicker of speed, darting across the landscape before reappearing on another building, Ragyo motioned to the blanket of Life Fibers enveloping the planet, "Even if you destroyed Shinra Koketsu, the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet cannot be reversed. Despite your meticulous planning, you're only delaying the inevitable."

"Because, I assure you..."

Her fingers curled around the Needle Blade, "... this battle was over before it began."

It no longer mattered what the shinigami was planning. Despite his intellect, he was nothing more than a pathetic, heavily injured man on the cusp of death. Without his illusions or that blasphemous device, Sosuke Aizen was as mortal as Satsuki and her underlings. In the span of a single chuckle, she moved. No hesitation or unnecessary boasting. No arrogant promises to give the man further warning. There was only the subtle fluttering of Shinra Koketsu's sleeves as the Needle Blade carved through his stomach. Flesh and clothing parting before the divine weapon. Spiritual metal shattering into myriads of pieces against the superior blade forged from the Original Life Fiber.

"Oh?"

The twitch from the dying man's fingers drew her attention, "Don't worry. I'm not quite done with you."

Despite the exuberance coursing through her Life Fibers when both halves of the shinigami collapsed at her feet, Ragyo knew better than to presume Sosuke Aizen dead. Against such an annoying man, there was nothing wrong with being overcautious. Even a little paranoid. Pointing a finger at the dying shinigami, drawing enough of the ultimate Kamui's power to make her reaction seem excessive, she smirked before blasting Sosuke Aizen's corpse from existence.

Reducing the shinigami and the blasphemous Hogen to dust in the wind.

" Adieu, my dear shinigami."

Silence reined across Honnou City as she watched the scattered ashes disperse into the darkness. Her eyes narrowed, a grimace pulling on her lips, at Ryuko's presence just beyond her range. Without acknowledging her daughter and despite understanding such paranoia belittled Shinra Koketsu and the Original Life Fiber she carefully searched for the influence of the shinigami's zanpakuto. She might have shattered his illusions, but it was the pinnacle of stupidity to presume the man didn't have another trick up his sleeves.

Yet when more than a minute passed without any trace of the shinigami, she allowed herself to relax.

Sosuke Aizen was dead and -

"Every zanpakuto has two distinct releases."

Her breath hitched at the voice. Impossible! How was this possible!? Twisting vehemently towards the source of her frustration, Shinra Koketsu tightened around her body yet she didn't experience the slightest comfort as a strangled gasp escaped her throat.

" Quelle!? "

Aizen sidestepped Ragyo Kiryuin's astonishment. Her reaction was expected if not anticipated. Even the most powerful beings could be taken by surprise. Spiritual pressure and strength meant little without the intelligence to consider improbable events, "My apologies, Ragyo Kiryuin. Perhaps I should start from the beginning."

Pausing his introspection at the Kiryuin matriarch's sudden reluctance to attack, he raised Kyouka Suigetsu until the sword was perpendicular to the ground, "My zanpakuto allows me absolute control over the senses of anyone who witnesses its release. Even if one's aware of the illusion, escape is impossible. Or rather, nearly impossible. So, I suppose congratulations are in order. Thanks to your unique physiology, you were the first person to escape Perfect Hypnosis."

"I see..."

The corner of Ragyo's mouth twitched at the shinigami's arrogance. Yet despite wanting nothing more than to personally torture every fiber of his being, paying back with interest the insults committed against Life Fibers, she wasn't blinded by anger. Not this time. Sosuke Aizen survived. That was a fact. But it was his explanation that tempered her fury. He almost callously confessed to the existence of his zanpakuto's second release. It would have been smarter to keep such power secret. To conceal its existence until the proper moment. Yet he'd divulged the secret without regret.

But she knew better than to presume anything about Sosuke Aizen.

If the insufferable man was telling the truth...

"Your tenacious hold on life."

Her attention shifted towards the Original Life Fiber as another Needle Blade emerged from Shinra Koketsu, "How you survived against the Original Life Fiber. You've been using this second release, haven't you?"

"The real question you should ask, Ragyo Kiryuin," Aizen brushed aside the Kiryuin matriarch's spiritual pressure with practiced aplomb, "Is the true nature of my Bankai."

"And you're going to tell me, right?"

Ragyo scoffed. She wasn't naïve. A man like Sosuke Aizen, whose intellect was matched only by their arrogance, wouldn't divulge information without ulterior motives. And she didn't trust the shinigami to speak the truth, "You're awfully forthcoming. But since you're so talkative, tell me why I shouldn't throw caution to the wind and end your miserable existence?"

"To be perfectly honest, every second I waste stalling for time while Isshin Kurosaki formulates a counterattack allows Shinra Koketsu to recover from the Adhesive Bullet," the subtle twitch of Ragyo Kiryuin's mouth at the blunt reminder of her recent, and rather devastating, embarrassment didn't go unnoticed. The woman might have gained control over her temper in a surprisingly short amount of time, but that just made things more interesting.

Smiling pleasantly when the ultimate Kamui responded to the woman's deep-seated disdain, several pairs of multicolored eyes glaring with intensity that eliciting a brief tremble from his fingers, Aizen shrugged at the inhuman presence, "So, explaining my Bankai would appear counterproductive. Almost foolhardy, given the circumstances."

"Playing games, are we?"

It required considerable restraint for Ragyo to resist the tantalizing desire to slice through the shinigami's throat. But instead of doing so, which given Sosuke Aizen's mysterious Bankai wouldn't accomplish anything, she settled on an annoyed sneer, "If I wanted ambiguity, I would ask dearest Nui for her opinion on next year's fashion. So, let's stop beating around the bush, shall we? The truth you're dying to avoid is that you survived certain death through an illusion. Tricking my senses at the very last second, which allowed you to slip through my grasp."

"That's a reasonably, well-thought response."

Aizen rotated Kyouka Suigetsu until the zanpakuto pointed at the ground, "But incorrect."

His opponent's consternation was unmistakable. And somewhat disappointing. He'd expected better from Ragyo Kiryuin, someone whose business acumen and untampered ruthlessness allowed Revocs to control the vast majority of the World of the Living's textile industries, "In the end, an illusion is nothing more than misinterpretation of data. Cowardice, as you so eloquently stated. For it takes little effort to convince one's enemies to fight amongst themselves through visual and auditory hallucinations. Yet, as I've said, your physiology renders you immune to Perfect Hypnosis."

"So, ask yourself this, Ragyo Kiryuin. How did I avoid your attack?"

Kyouka Suigetsu slowly dissolved into shards of glass, "You watched your blade pierce my body. You heard me gasping for breath as my heart slowed to a crawl before stopping. What you experienced is reality . Therefore, if my Shikai is unable to alter what you perceive as 'real' and 'fake,' then it stands to reason the only solution to the question of 'how did I survive your attack' is -"

"Your Bankai."

A curse settled on Ragyo's tongue as she interrupted the shinigami with a contemptuous scoff. Bankai, what a boring name. If zanpakuto had a second release, the name should convey an equivalent weight. She was almost insulted Sosuke Aizen considered something so mundane for a name, "Aesthetics aside, you've overplayed your hand. Your zanpakuto's illusions were the only thing preventing me from ending your miserable existence. And without them, and your body in such terrible shape, there's little you or anyone can do to stop me."

"Oh? When did I claim I wasn't using illusions?"

Her breath hitched when the shinigami raised his left hand, "What!?"

"A zanpakuto's Shikai and Bankai cannot have unrelated abilities," Aizen ignored the Kiryuin matriarch's bewilderment at the sudden appearance of his missing extremity, "My Shikai creates nearly flawless illusions. Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu, on the other hand, uses illusions, albeit in a different fashion. Instead of imposing an illusion on reality, it does the opposite. When I release my Bankai, reality itself turns into an illusion, molded into whatever I so wish."

"Of course, something this powerful has equally damaging drawbacks."

Aizen took advantage of Ragyo Kiryuin's astonishment to examine the recreated limb. He curled his fingers, testing the reflexes and muscle memory, before resuming their conversation without missing a beat, "For starters, it's difficult to control. Without proper preparations, the collateral damage can be catastrophic, which is partially why I didn't use it against you in Karakura Town."

Her anger at being humiliated deepened at the shinigami's remark, "Partiellement ?"

"It appears my Bankai cannot affect anyone already immune to Perfect Hypnosis. An Achilles heel that, in retrospect, is painfully obvious. So, it appears further congratulations are in order, Ragyo Kiryuin."

The final traces of Kyouka Suigetsu dissolved into shards of glass, leaving him free to clap his hands, "As a Life Fiber Hybrid, there's nothing my zanpakuto can do to you ."

"Do you take me for a fool!?"

Ragyo hadn't intended to raise her voice. But hearing the shinigami's emphasis caused her legendary self-control to falter. She knew the implications of Sosuke Aizen's words. She was not stupid . His Bankai might hold no power over Shinra Koketsu or herself, but if he was telling the truth, then everything else was fair game. He could influence the environment into whatever he wanted. He could grant himself the facsimile of immortality. A day ago - an hour ago - she would have dismissed the possibility anyone, even this arrogant bastard, could change reality.

But now?

After experiencing his Bankai?

With an angry snap of her wrists, the landscape erupted beneath Shinra Koketsu, "You claim you're willing to do anything to win. So, why didn't use immediately use your Bankai in Karakura Town?"

The shinigami's unflinching visage at the question didn't escape her notice, "What stayed your hand from slaughtering the naked apes and pigs in human clothing? Surely a man of your intellect would deem such inferior beings as acceptable losses? If it meant ending my life, any amount of collateral damage should have been acceptable to a sociopathic connard such as yourself. Unless..."

Shinra Koketsu shimmered as her lips quirked, "... you're lying to me."

Aizen shrugged at the woman's insinuation, his smile never faltering, "Believe what you wish, Ragyo Kiryuin. But tell me, do you know the origin of Kyouka Suigetsu?"

Her eyebrow twitched at the inane question. She was familiar with the proverb involving the reflection of the moon on water. Things that can be seen but not held. Something possessing intrinsic beauty yet is unattainable. With a snarl twisting her features, as Shinra Koketsu tightened in response to her seething rage, Ragyo stared at the pale orb hovering over Honnouji Academy.

"Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu reverses what is real with what is not."

He clapped his hands a second time as Ragyo Kiryuin trembled, "However, as you've realized, its effectiveness depends on the moon. During the new moon, or any point when it's not visible, my control over Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu is minimal. In contrast, when the moon is full, I can release my Bankai without worry about unanticipated casualties."

"Your pathetic warning to Ryuko..."

The loathing in Ragyo's voice was unmistakable. Her unadulterated hatred towards Sosuke Aizen and everything he represented caused her voice to warble, an inhuman reverberation overlaying every syllable, "My daughter was never in danger from your Bankai, was she?"

"You said it yourself, Ragyo Kiryuin, that I lied about my Bankai."

Without fanfare, Kyouka Suigetsu reappeared in Aizen's grasp. It appeared things were escalating rather quickly. After understanding the extent of her humiliation at his hands, Ragyo was prepared to throw caution to the wind. To ignore the possibility of counterattacks to ensure his death. And with Absolute Domination seconds from returning, not even his Bankai could stand against such overwhelming power, "What makes you think I started at any particular point in time?"

Ragyo ignored the shinigami's condescending arrogance when pages covered in holy scripture fluttered around Shinra Koketsu.

The Needle Blades snapped as she focused on Heinkel Wolfe's insignificant presence hiding in the shadows. She thrust one blade towards the paladin, purposely missing by a fraction of an inch, giving her enough momentum to stab Tessai Tsukabishi without taking her eyes off Sosuke Aizen.

A gasp, embarrassing coming from one such as herself, escaped her lips when the shinigami vanished.

Her eyes widened as Sosuke Aizen raised his zanpakuto, the blade dissolving once more into particles of glass, every Life Fiber stiffened at the deep, gravelly voice coming from behind Shinra Koketsu.

"KUKANTEN'!"

Reality shattered the moment Tessai clapped his hands together. Despite preparing for every eventuality, a side-effect of living alongside Kisuke Urahara, he was caught off-guard when the woman screamed at the top of her lungs, an ear-shattering noise reverberating with something that battered against his soul.

"What power!"

He found the air forced from his lungs when Shinra Koketsu billowed around Ragyo Kiryuin, emitting a wave of spiritual pressure that tore through Honnou City, destroying everything not nailed to the ground. His glasses shattered from the overwhelming presence as he grasped Heinkel Wolfe's forearm. With the paladin sweating underneath the Kiryuin matriarch's spiritual pressure, he vanished in a flash of speed, retreating hundreds of meters.

"Oh?"

As an audible whump of displaced air and spiritual energy slammed against his body before rushing back toward Ragyo Kiryuin, cracking the ground in escalating waves, Aizen observed the multicolored light enveloping the matriarch with rapt attention. Smiling pleasantly when one final explosion of kaleidoscopic light spilled from Shinra Koketsu before suddenly and abruptly fading, he curled two fingers on his recently restored hand, "Now, this is quite unexpected."

"D-Damn... him..."

The Needle Blade clattered to the ground as Ragyo collapsed to her knees several feet from an unconscious Orihime Inoue.

Trembling maroon eyes stared emptily at the Life Fibers enveloping the planet, masking the weakness coursing through her body. Without her precious daughter, Shinra Koketsu was nothing more than an elaborate but lifeless dress stitched from Life Fibers. Devoid of the Original Life Fiber's purpose and Absolute Domination. No! This was impossible! How could that miserable man separate Orihime from Shinra Koketsu!? It wasn't possible! Their Life Fibers had been intertwined beyond that of Kamui!

"No," disheveled silver hair brushed against her face as Shinra Koketsu's hood fell backwards, "This can't be happening!"

Her voice trembled with feigned outrage as she regained control over the situation. Despite the excruciating pain wracking her Life Fibers, even as smoke drifted from Shinra Koketsu's damaged fabric, she kept herself focused on reversing their victory into an overwhelming slaughter. Even without the ultimate Kamui's power flooding her Life Fibers, she still possessed the strength bestowed by the Original Life Fiber. All she needed - all she required - was a split second. A single, defining moment to touch Orihime, to pull her daughter back into her loving embrace and -

"Kukanten'i."

The instant she reached towards her daughter, Orihime vanished in a flash of emerald light. Gasping incoherently when her unconscious daughter reappeared next to Sosuke Aizen, his insufferable smirk leaving her speechless, Ragyo stiffened when another presence brushed against her mind.

"GETSUGA..."

Ichigo didn't hesitate to push every last scrap of Mugetsu's power into Tournesol and his old man's sword as he descended towards Ragyo Kiryuin. With Orihime safe and out of harm's way thanks to Aizen, there was no reason to hold back. No reason to not hit Ryuko's mom with everything he had! Clenched his teeth, Mugetsu was silhouetted against the full moon as the blades crossed over his head were enveloped by blazing sapphire light.

"... JŪJISHŌ!"

It Has to be This Way

I suppose you can consider this an early Christmas present. It's been quite a journey for almost... wow. Four years? And while the journey's not over yet, this chapter represents a milestone. Not only because my story exceeds one million total words, ignoring drafts and outlines, but I finally accomplished one of my primary objectives when I initially started this story. So, I hope you enjoy reading this chapter as much as I did writing it.

If you have any comments, feel free to send me a PM.

And, as always, check out this story on tvtropes.

---

...

---

Chapter 63 - It Has to be This Way

"Ichigo Kurosaki doesn't know the meaning of restraint."

Ira Gamagori felt uncharacteristically annoyed at the energy enveloping the No Star Slums. His brow furrowed when Honnou City, which already suffered extensive damage, trembled underneath the deluge. To know Kamui possessed such extraordinary strength was humbling. But where was Lady Satsuki? He was certain she would personally land the finishing blow against her mother. Unless, of course, circumstances granted Ichigo Kurosaki the opportunity. Grumbling with an overtone of annoyance, he once more raised the binoculars borrowed from Kisuke Urahara.

An adequate replacement for the pair stolen by Ichigo Kurosaki.

Ira Gamagori glowered at the roiling energy enveloping nearly half of Honnou City. His brow furrowed in rising discontent when the artificial island, which had suffered grievous and extensive damage over the previous few minutes, trembled, sending aftershocks rippling across Tokyo Bay. To know Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki possessed such extraordinary strength was humbling. But where was Lady Satsuki? Surely, after everything they've experienced, she wouldn't allow Ichigo to land the finishing blow against her mother? Grumbling with an overtone of annoyance, he once more raised the binoculars borrowed from Kisuke Urahara.

A replacement for the pair stolen - and then broken - by Ichigo Kurosaki.

"Yasutora Sado!"

He unintentionally raised his voice despite the respectable teenager standing barely at arm's length, "Can you pinpoint Lady Satsuki's location?"

"Hmm..."

Chad's expression didn't change despite the throbbing pain from his bruised ribs. His fight against Jackie Tristan's clone hadn't be easier. But on the other hand, thanks to Nudist Beach passing along information to Kisuke, it could have been worse. Humming at the reminder of Moe Shishigawara, he watched Ichigo's improved Getsuga Tenshou dissipate before shaking his head, "Sorry. All this spiritual pressure makes sensing anything difficult. And Aizen isn't helping. But it's quite strength, if you think about it."

Gamagori lowered the binoculars, one eyebrow quirked, "What do you mean?"

"One minute Ragyo Kiryuin was winning... and then she wasn't," Chad mulled over his words, "Something happened. It's puzzling, but something gave Ichigo and Ryuko the chance to win."

"I see your point," Gamagori conceded the argument before staring through the binoculars, hoping to witness any sign of Lady Satsuki. His spiritual prowess might be atrocious, limited to interacting with supernatural beings, but he had experienced the overwhelming presence of Ragyo Kiryuin. And the sensation of his Shackle Regalia seizing around his body. Which would have left him paralyzed if not for his tempered will and implacable determination.

And how could he have missed the other attacks during the interim?

"Nevertheless, we should not look a gift horse in the mouth."

He lowered the binoculars once it became obvious locating Lady Satsuki would be difficult, if not impossible, from their position, "Whatever series of unfortunate events befell Ragyo Kiryuin is irrelevant. Right now, our priority is reestablishing communications with Lady Satsuki and -"

A violent burst of pinkish energy exploded in close proximity to Gamagori's face when Nonon Jakuzure cleared the skyline, sending gusts of wind across the rooftop and rustling their clothing. Yet he remained unflinching when his fellow member of the Student Council circled around the building he and Yasutora Sado stood upon. It would take more than an ample display of flight capabilities to elicit surprise from him! But his brow nevertheless furrowed at Jakuzure's showboating. He had never known her to willingly showcase her abilities with such abandon.

Frowning at the errant thrusting of her Symphony Regalia Mark III as Jakuzure pivoted erratically while gripping at something wrapped around her throat, his jaw nearly dropped when he saw what, or rather who, was sitting on her shoulders.

"Get the hell off, underachiever!"

Nonon didn't appreciate the underachiever's lack of respect for her betters. She disliked the teenager squeezing her neck while laughing like an idiot! And she hated humiliating herself in such a degrading manner! Digging her fingers between the underachiever's hands and her neck, which only caused the No-Star student to squeeze harder, she resisted the temptation to turn her Symphony Regalia's weapons in the opposite direction, "That spot's reserved for Satsuki!"

"MANKASHOKU!"

Gamagori experienced the familiar twinge of annoyance pulling at his eyebrow when Mankanshoku vaulted off Jakuzure's shoulders before landing in a three-point stance that would have made the captain of the Football Club proud, "Sitting upon the shoulders of any member of the Student Council is against Honnouji Academy regulations! Explain yourself!"

"I was helping Uryu!"

Mako clapped her hands and pointed towards Nonon, completely ignoring Gamagori's imposing tone in the process, "There were so many fancy suits throwing themselves in his general direction that he didn't notice that weird clone sneaking out of the shadows! Which seemed strange since it was riding a large, fire-breathing dragon! So, I decided to help! But the clone was super tough. And then Jakuzure appeared out of nowhere!"

She bobbed her head before sliding next to the diminutive pinkette, who was visibly annoyed at being addressed so informally, "She blasted the clone to smithereens with the awesome power of her uniform! But when she ignored Uryu's appreciation for saving his life, I decided to make sure proper manners were exchanged! Just as you taught me, Gamagori! But one thing led to another and here I am!"

"Manners are important, Mankanshoku," Gamagori pondered the unrelenting stream of consciousness and free thought spilling from Mankanshoku before turning his growing ire upon Jakuzure, "Jakuzure! You are a member of Honnouji Academy's Student Council! If someone graciously thanks you for saving their life, you acknowledge their gesture with a sincere and heart-felt compliment! Is that understood!?"

"Hey! The four-eyed bastard was perfectly fine when I left," Nonon couldn't believe Gamagori was siding with the underachiever after everything they've been through, "There wasn't a scratch on -"

"Sorry I'm late."

Uryu appeared next to Gamagori accompanied by the familiar swish of Hirenkyaku. Once the world shifted back to focus, he suppressed the inclination to respond to the specific string of curses leaving Jakuzure's mouth, "I ran into your father on the way over."

"My father?"

Any notions of admonishing Jakuzure for her foul language and abject rudeness were brushed aside at the unexpected comment, which granted Uryu Ishida leeway to continue without interruption, "Your aunt ordered a full-scale nudist retreat. With Ichigo and Ryuko fighting Ragyo Kiryuin, she doesn't see the point of sticking around. And Aizen's arrival only made things worse. And there's the other problem.

"Indeed..."

Gamagori squashed the treacherous twinge of nervousness mimicking Uryu Ishida's apprehension. His brow furrowing into an irritated glower, he spared a piercing glare at the Original Life Fiber ominously hovering over the western outskirts of Tokyo, "My senses might not be as sharp as yours, but even I feel its daunting power. Defeating such a monstrous creature will be problematic."

"We can focus on that later."

Uryu swallowed the bile rising in his throat. It hadn't taken long to understand the most efficient method to avoid feeling nauseous around Ichigo, Ryuko or their Kamui was to simply not try sensing their spiritual pressure. But the Original Life Fiber was impossible to ignore. Its presence saturated everything. Even after focusing his senses inward, its eldritch power made his head swim, "Right now we should rendezvous with Nudist Beach. They might have information on what happened to Ragyo Kiryuin."

"You mean, why her spiritual pressure suddenly vanished," Chad glanced towards Honnou City, "Right?"

"As much as it pains me to admit it, they shouldn't have won. Ragyo Kiryuin's power was too great," Uryu grimaced as the nausea continued spreading through his system. Turning his stomach inside out and making him lightheaded, "For all intents and purposes, she was toying with them. But after Seras and Kinue arrived, her overwhelming advantaged disappeared."

The permanent furrowed across Gamagori's brow deepened, "You believe the events are connected?"

"I don't know."

Uryu cupped his chin, "Ragyo Kiryuin was weakened. And a few minutes later her spiritual pressure dropped significantly right before Ichigo's attack. But it's too early to assume she's dead. Her presence might be gone, but something doesn't feel right."

"The possibility such a vile woman survived is troubling. Doubly given Ichigo Kurosaki's enthusiasm. But I REFUSE to abandon Lady Satsuki!"

Despite his indignation, Gamagori conceded the logic behind his aunt's decision. A strategic retreat against overwhelming force was prudent. His Goku Uniform was formidable. Under different circumstances, he would have agreed without hesitation. It was, after all, pragmatism worthy of Lady Satsuki's taciturn approval. But these weren't normal circumstances.

"However, assuming that's indeed the case, our priority should be ensuring Lady Satsuki's safety," he stroked his chin before turning bodily towards Uryu, "But with communications down and my spiritual prowess woefully lacking, it's impossible to pinpoint her location."

"Hey, underachiever."

The annoyance in Nonon's voice was nearly palpable, "Hat-and-clogs claimed you can sense spiritual pressure better than four-eyes here. So, make yourself useful and find Satsuki."

"That's easy! I know exactly where Lady Satsuki's hanging out!"

Mako spun around Nonon, earning the ill-tempered teenager's frustration. Tapping a closed fist against her hand, she puffed her cheeks before pointing at Honnouji Academy, "Ryuko and Lady Satsuki are sisters! Which automatically makes them super best friends! I've seen it myself! Whenever Ichigo's not around, they talk about him! I can tell they're quite happy to talk about Ichigo, even if some of the things Ryuko says are quite embarrassing!"

Nonon's eye twitched with increasing ferocity, "Get on with it already!"

"But I could always tell whenever Ryuko was hanging out with Ichigo," Mako ignored Nonon's interruption without missing a beat, "And since Lady Satsuki is her sister, it's twice as easy to find Ryuko. Which is why unless Lady Satsuki is wearing Senketsu, she's most definitely walking down from Honnouji Academy!"

"Hmm... even with Junketsu's extraordinary power, Lady Satsuki wouldn't take such a substantial risk," Gamagori nodded alongside Mankanshoku's train of thought. While Jakuzure and Yasutora Sado seemed confused, and Uryu Ishida befuddled, he understood the underlying meaning with flawless accuracy, "Perhaps Ragyo Kiryuin truly is defeated."

"Even if she's not, Ichigo's father is powerful. Especially in her current condition," Uryu paused, frowning, before suspiciously adding, "Not to mention Aizen. I could feel his spiritual pressure. He must have released his Bankai against Ragyo Kiryuin."

Chad stared at Honnou City before glancing upwards, "Yeah... I felt that too. But if Ragyo Kiryuin's dead, why hasn't everyone been freed?"

Gamagori craned his neck until the obnoxious blanket of Life Fibers, and the full moon above Honnouji Academy, filled his view, "Perhaps it requires time after Ragyo Kiryuin's death for the effects to reverse? But we'll have time to discuss appropriate countermeasures when Inumuta and -"

"Hey! Does anyone hear that funny noise?"

Nonon grumbled under her breath, "Hear what, underachiever?"

"That strange rumbling that sounds a lot like Ryuko's stomach whenever mom makes her mystery croquettes," Mako held a hand against her ear, "And it's getting louder."

"I can't hear anything, underachiever," Nonon snapped back, "Are you making stuff up again?"

"No... I hear it too," Chad cupped his ear, "It's almost like -"

Tokyo, and the surrounding landscape, shook when the Original Life Fiber transformed. Sheets of Life Fibers glowing bright enough to hurt the eyes split apart, exposing rows of fangs the size of buildings. Barely keeping himself standing while Uryu collapsed onto his hands and knees, retching onto the roof as the creature's presence washed over them, filling every nook and cranny, Chad grimaced, "What's happening?"

"And why the hell does it sound so pissed!?"

A single spot of blood trickled from Nonon's split lips as she picked herself off the roof. Keeping a perfectly annoyed expression despite the growing trembling in her arms, she watched the Original Life Fiber liquefy into a sea of Life Fibers, flowing through the city and demolishing everything in their path, before ignoring them, "Damn it! It's heading for Satsuki!"

"Lady Satsuki!?"

The overbearing spiritual pressure making it difficult to move immediately fell to the wayside at Jakuzure's announcement. Lady Satsuki was in danger? He would not allow something as idiotic as the Original Life Fiber stand between him and his duty! Thus, when Mankanshoku tripped over her own feet, momentarily hovering over the edge of the building, Gamagori was prepared. With all the strength he could muster, a physical testament to his family's lineage, he grabbed her Goku Uniform before she fell into the torrential sea of Life Fibers. His brow creasing as he pulled Mankanshoku to safety, he looked away from the ecstatic girl when she wrapped her arms around his neck, choosing instead to focus on the more important matter at hand.

"That could only mean Ragyo Kiryuin is still alive!"

---

...

---

"Finally..."

Ichigo vaulted away from the hurricane of spiritual energy. He breathed heavily, in panting, gasping gulps of air, when the last traces of Ragyo Kiryuin disappeared into their Getsuga Jūjishō. He didn't expect this level of exhaustion. It was worse than the first time they used Getsuga Tenshou against Sanageyama. But as sweat trickled down his face, Tournesol and his old man's sword ready for whatever might happen, he nevertheless cracked a smirk, "We finally got her, Mugetsu."

" Maybe."

Mugetsu grumbled at the dirt and dust trapped in her threading. She acknowledged the putrid smoke emanating from the impact of their Getsuga Jūjishō against Ragyo Kiryuin with a disturbed shudder, "I can't sense her presence. Or Shinra Koketsu's. Either she survived and went into hiding. Or we managed to finish the job."

"You're right."

He swung Tournesol, dispelling the smoke surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin. If Mugetsu was right, and she survived their attack, he wanted to have a clear shot, "That was our best chance at taking her down. But if Ragyo Kiryuin survived, we need to be ready for anything. Even another Getsuga Jūjishō."

"I'm still suffering from the extensive damage to my stitching," she growled when Ichigo chose to ignore her long-term suffering. The patchwork fabric functioning as her eye narrowed at her wearer's betrayal. At his lack of empathy concerning what might be permanent damage to her Life Fibers, "But you're right. We don't have a choice if Getsuga Jijusho wasn't enough. Even if that means straining our Life -"

"Ichigo!"

Ryuko almost barreled into Ichigo when she hit the ground and slipped. Wincing when her head bounced off the ground, she filed away Mugetsu's laughter before noticing what, or rather who, was laying in front of them.

Her mom was dead. Or as close to dead as humanly possible. She didn't know if they could actually die considering she, personally, had most of her body repeatedly disintegrated by that undead shinigami bitch in London. And had her leg shot off by the vampire bastard. But she noticed Shinra Koketsu was barely more than tattered scraps of Life Fibers. Hardly resembling the once annoyingly bright - and ugly - dress that had kicked their asses. Taking a tentative step closer, Scissor Blade at the ready, she realized the reason Ragyo Kiryuin looked so damn strange was because her arm was lying in a pool of blood while the lower half of her body - legs and all - were attached by a few glowing Life Fibers.

"Is she dead?"

The question immediately sounded strange. And stupid. Glaring into her mom's empty eyes, she watched blood trickle from Ragyo's unmoving lips before asking the same question in a slightly different way, "You don't think she's going to get back up, do you?"

"I don't know."

Ichigo stared at the corpse. Defeating Ragyo Kiryuin had been too easy. Too simple. But he couldn't sense her spiritual pressure. The overwhelming presence that caused Mugetsu and Senketsu endless agitation had vanished. And she wasn't breathing. So, as far as he could tell, Ryuko's mom was dead. Yet there was sinking feeling in the back of his mind. A notion they were forgetting something important, "When I used Getsuga Jijusho, I sliced through the same part of her body. That should have prevented her Life Fibers from regenerating."

A punch to his shoulder was Ryuko's immediate answer, "Then why the hell do you sound so damn gloomy?"

He frowned when Ryuko leaned forward, her faces inches away from his own, "I'm not gloomy!"

"Yes, you are," she punched him again, just hard enough to get the point across, before pointing at Ragyo's corpse, "You always have this 'faraway' look whenever you get depressed or upset! And right now, you look like my mom's playing dead. So, unless you tell me what's wrong, I'm going to keep punching you!"

Ichigo dodged to Ryuko's right when she tried punching him in the stomach. As she recovered, a sly but smug grin pulling on her lips, he looked around upon finally realizing what was bugging him, "Wait! Where's Orihime?"

"Orihime Inoue's perfectly safe, Ichigo Kurosaki."

Using Shunpo, Aizen appeared near the teenagers, slightly startling Ryuko Matoi in the process. Despite his unkempt appearance, blood staining the tattered remains of the upper portion of his uniform, he was cheerful. Almost enthusiastic. Which translated into a grin upon seeing the Ragyo Kiryuin's decimated corpse scattered across the ground, "She's unconscious but suffered no lasting consequences from her involuntary synchronization with Shinra Koketsu."

He acknowledged Tessai Tsukabishi's arrival - and warranted suspicion - with a curt but respectful smirk. There was no need for further interactions. While Kiske Urahara's associate played a role in weakening Ragyo Kiryuin, allowing the extraction of Orihime Inoue from Shinra Koketsu entirely through chance, it was Seras Victoria's eldritch nature which allowed the vampire to bypass Absolute Domination. And it was Ichigo's realization of the weakness of Life Fiber regeneration that enabled their victory, "But Ragyo Kiryuin's defeat was only the first step. To reverse the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, we need to wait for Orihime Inoue to regain consciousness."

" Reverse?"

Ryuko glowered as Senketsu voiced the question on the tip of her tongue, "How the hell's that going to work? In case you haven't noticed, Ichigo tore Shinra Koketsu to shreds!"

"Satsuki Kiryuin's analysis of Shinra Koketsu's strengths and weaknesses was reasonable. Almost commendable. But she overlooked an obvious alternative."

Aizen observed Ichigo's reaction. He noted the matching suspicion in Mugetsu's expression, which was made simpler by the Kamui's constantly shifting eyes, "One cannot doubt Shinra Koketsu's power is formidable, even unbeatable. However, Absolute Domination's radiance of influence falters beyond a radius of several kilometers. Which is just large enough for her to encompass Honnou City and the surrounding area. To spread Shinra Koketsu's signal across the World of the Living, Ragyo Kiryuin required an amplifier."

"The transmitter," Ichigo remembered the machine in the middle of Honnouji Academy's courtyard, "She sent a signal through the transmitter at the school. It was the first thing she did after using Absolute Domination. But that's not what you're getting at, is it?"

"You know better than anyone, perhaps even myself, that Orihime Inoue's abilities are capable of miraculous feats," Aizen acknowledged the teenager's responses with a smirk, "Including reversing causality through rejection of reality. But her effectiveness is limited by her pacifistic nature, something I observed after you rescued Rukia Kuchiki. However, in the hands of someone lacking that restraint, whose sole purpose is the proliferation and domination of Life Fibers, Absolute Domination achieves full effectiveness. And that is where Satsuki Kiryuin overestimated her mother's relevance. Call it what you will - Shun Shun Rikka or Absolute Domination - but they are one and same."

"Even if what you're saying is true..."

Ichigo had the sinking suspicion Aizen was holding something back, "Ragyo waited until Shinra Koketsu was finished. If Orihime could do all that, she wouldn't have waited until we were knocking on her doorstep."

"When you learned what you presumed was Bankai - or realized how to properly control your 'Hollow' powers - did you fret about failing to unleash that power? Of course not. You instinctively understood how to utilize that power."

The treacherous captain shrugged nonchalantly, "The same principle applies to Orihime Inoue."

"What you're saying is, we don't need Shinra Koketsu," Ryuko felt Senketsu's confusion, "Just Orihime?"

"The memory of her Shun Shun Rikka evolving into Absolute Domination has been stitched into her Life Fibers," Aizen's smile tightened. His knowledge concerning Life Fibers was extensive. Beyond Kisuke Urahara's in some regards. The Hogyoku was proof of that. Yet the deeper, more disturbing secrets remained elusive, "Derailing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet will simply require Orihime Inoue channeling her spiritual energy through the transmitter. And to assuage your concerns, Ichigo Kurosaki, nothing else is necessary. If everything goes according to plan, she'll be perfectly fine, free to return to Karakura Town."

"You better hope so..."

Ryuko glared at the smug bastard. He was hiding something... or maybe he wasn't. It was hard to tell. And his obnoxious way of speaking pissed her off. But when he didn't say anything else, she collapsed to the ground, arms and legs spread as the tension washed away with a single, obnoxiously loud groan. She was exhausted. After two days of constant fighting, finally winning felt great. With another sigh, she stared at the full moon, blinking as bangs of dual-colored hair shifted across her eyes.

"I need a vacation," she leaned her head backwards and huffed, "A real vacation. Someplace where I'm not freaking blindsided by a vampire in the first five minutes!"

" Ryuko, when we return to Karakura Town, I request a through hand washing."

Senketsu tried ignoring the dirt caught in his Life Fibers. It had been relative easy to ignore the grime when their lives were on the line. When every moment was spent trying to survive against Shinra Koketsu's nightmarish power. But with Ragyo Kiryuin lying in literal pieces on the grounds, there was no better time to address the growing problem, "And an ironing to smooth out my threading."

You might not have noticed, but since we fought Nui Harime, there's been a persistent wrinkle on my neckerchief. It's quite uncomfortable."

"Sure, Senketsu," Ryuko scoffed at Mugetsu's jealousy. Why the hell was she upset? With a shrug, she ignored the Kamui's stupidity, "I'll even use your favorite detergent. But there's still one last thing we gotta do..."

" The Original Life Fiber."

Ichigo grimaced at the name. Even out here, he could sense the Original Life Fiber's monstrous spiritual pressure. It was unbelievable. No wonder Senketsu was nervous. Or Mugetsu was staring at everything but the Original Life Fiber. She was putting up a stoic front, but he knew her better than anyone else, "We need to stop that thing. Once and for all. But there's no question it's strong. And if it survived Aizen's Bankai, it probably has a trick or two up its sleeves."

"I say we slice it into pieces!"

Ryuko sat up with an annoyed huff, "So what if it's powerful? It's still made of Life Fibers. And it doesn't have Absolute Domination! There's no way we can't cut through the damn thing!"

"A straightforward plan," Aizen found Ryuko Matoi's blunt manner of addressing her problems cathartic. Almost, for a lack of a better word, amusing. Because she was correct. There was only one way to defeat the Original Life Fiber, "Nevertheless, we should wait for Isshin Kurosaki. His expertise on the Original Life Fiber will prove invaluable if we wish to -"

He interrupted himself when an overwhelmingly powerful spiritual pressure blanketed the landscape.

For a brief and incalculably short moment, far longer than any other point in his existence, Aizen experienced the sensation of a superior presence. His shoulders hunched forward, one knee reflexively tensing while his breathing hastened. Shifting Kyouka Suigetsu into an offensive guard upon acclimating himself to the spiritual pressure, he watched, almost stricken speechless, the Original Life Fiber liquefy. Falling onto Tokyo and prompting an understandable outburst from Ichigo Kurosaki.

"What the hell..."

Ryuko's anger towards the shinigami was replaced by fear. This was bad! Mako and everyone were still in the city! There was no telling what that monster would do to them! Her heel clacked as she leapt off the roof, ignoring Ichigo's shouting and Senketsu's warning. She could apologize to everyone later. And maybe allow Ichigo to punch her in the face. Because right now, she needed to end things once and for all! Before anyone else got hurt!

" Ryuko!"

Her breath hitched when the Original Life Fiber, instead of attacking Mako and her friends, made a ninety-degree turn, crashing into Tokyo Bay before flowing over the water.

Directly towards them.

"Holy shit!"

She pivoted mid-step, throwing herself sideways as the Original Life Fiber reached Honnou City. Her heels clacked with every backpedal, each awkward stride taking her farther away from the tidal wave of Life Fibers. Damn it! She could deal with the overwhelming presence making it difficult to breath. And the terror rippling through their connection from Senketsu wasn't too bad. But the awful screaming in the back of her mind was giving her a migraine.

"Don't tell me it's pissed Ichigo killed my mom!"

" Defeating Ragyo must have been the final straw," Senketsu tried - and failed - to hide his trembling from Ryuko, "Its power is tremendous! There's no telling what it plans to do!"

"That's why we're gonna kick its ass, Senketsu!"

Energy roared from Senketsu as Ryuko boosted herself higher into the sky. If the Original Life Fiber wanted to fight, then she was going to tear the damn thing apart! One Life Fiber at a time! With a snarl, she spun the Scissor Blade around her wrist, the hardened Life Fiber weapon emitting a metallic ting when she gripped its handle. If she wanted to cut through the alien ball of yard, she needed leverage. Hefting her dad's weapon overhead, fully prepared to meet the creature head-on, her eye twitched when it suddenly changed direction.

Straight towards her mom's corpse.

"Senketsu Shippu!"

With a flash of crimson light, Senketsu contorted around her body. Life Fibers shifted and snapped into place as she blasted towards the Original Life Fiber. She didn't give a crap why it was going after Ragyo Kiryuin, but like hell was she going to let that oversized monster get what it wanted! Her mom was dead and she was going to STAY dead! Spinning the Scissor Blade into a reverse grip, she spiraled downwards, ready to slice through the Original Life Fiber using all of Senketsu's power, only to be pulled backwards when someone grabbed her wrist.

"Hey!"

The sudden change in scenery when she was dragged - kicking and screaming - halfway across the No-Star Slums caused her to stumble forward, nearly falling off the roof. Growling at Sosuke Aizen, she swung the Scissor Blade until it was inches from his throat, "What the hell was that for!?"

Aizen brushed aside Ryuko Matoi's resentment. He didn't have time to explain himself. Nor was there time to properly address the situation. This was the worst-case scenario. An event unfolding both impossible to anticipate and implausible to calculate. For how could he have predicted the Original Life Fiber deciding on this course of action? That it would, above all else, choose the least likely scenario? Kisuke Urahara had surmised it would react hostilely to Ragyo Kiryuin's death. A conjecture he'd agreed with. They concluded the Original Life Fiber might lash out in a futile act of revenge.

But without Absolute Domination, their combined offensive capabilities were more than a match for its immeasurable spiritual pressure.

To think this was the Original Life Fiber's strategy.

"Ichigo Kurosaki..."

His smile tightened into a grimace when the innumerable Life Fibers composing the eldritch creature began flowing into the Kiryuin matriarch's corpse, folding upon themselves until the ground was covered in writhing threads, "Orihime Inoue is concealed within a spiritual barrier approximately three hundred meters to our north. I presume you're already aware of her location?"

"Yeah."

Tournesol emitted a faint ting as the blade shifted in Ichigo's grip, "Why? What are you planning?"

"It's likely Ragyo Kiryuin will attempt to recover Orihime Inoue," Aizen observed the shrinking Original Life Fiber with mounting concern, "If that's the case, I'll stall for time while you and Ryuko Matoi will bring her to safety. Whatever happens, her freedom is paramount if we wish to reverse the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet."

Ichigo frowned. He wanted to say something, anything, to Aizen, but the words just didn't come together. The guy was right. Locking eyes with Ryuko, who seemed hesitant to blindly trust Aizen despite the man's goal, he nodded, "Alright. But tell me something. Why is the Original Life Fiber going after Ragyo? Why does it need her?"

"Because you succeeded beyond my greatest expectations."

A barrier shimmered into existence around Ragyo Kiryuin when Aizen stepped in front of the teenagers. Placing himself in the fallen matriarch's line-of-sight, he raised Kyouka Suigetsu into an overhanded grip, "While you were recovering, I confirmed, to the best of my abilities, that Ragyo Kiryuin was no longer alive."

"Then what the hell's happening!?"

His mouth tightened at Ryuko's blustering confusion. It was almost palpable. The steady maelstrom of spiritual pressure radiating from the Kiryuin matriarch's corpse was electrifying the atmosphere, "Something beyond the human insidiousness of your mother. So, do not drop your guard, Ryuko Matoi. Stay alert. Transform your Kamui into his advanced configuration without delay. Don't get distracted for a single moment. For if you do..."

Their surroundings rippled as Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu's influence deepened, "... you will not survive."

" Forced to dirty my hands against such insignificant beings..."

The voice sent shivers down Ryuko's spine when the last trace of the Original Life Fiber disappeared into her mom's body. As the strange tension building in the air grew palpable, and Honnou City began shaking underneath Ragyo Kiryuin's spiritual presence, Ichigo felt a bead of sweat trickle down his cheek, pooling against the underside of his chin. It was slightly different - a little higher pitched and possessing far more malevolence - but he knew that inhuman echo.

"... it's absolutely insulting."

Ragyo remained ignorant of the turbulent thoughts plaguing Isshin Shiba's son as she placed one hand upon the ground. With nary a sound besides her noticeable contempt, the wounds adorning her flesh and Shinra Koketsu regenerated. Severed limbs stitched themselves back onto her body. The wet squish of Life Fibers reconnecting, life and power flowing through the dying threads, animated her movements. Giving rise to the breathless sigh, more reminiscent of venomous hate than arrogance, escaping her lips when she opened her eyes.

Multicolored bands of radiant colors replacing maroon.

"No freaking way..."

Existence itself trembled underneath the weight of her divine presence as Shinra Koketsu regained its majestic luster. Life Fibers constricted around her body as the flagrant denial reached her ears. She raised her hand, examining the perfectly manicured fingernails while Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi voiced their disbelief, slowly but surely accepting the situation. And then, once their murmuring ceased, she faced the shinigami. The corners of her mouth curled downwards at his defiance. As Shinra Koketsu rustled, the ultimate Kamui's eyes narrowed in vicious hatred matching her own, she did not hesitate. Did not falter. Before they could regroup - as the shinigami prepared another paltry technique, she flicked her wrist.

Releasing a sphere of kaleidoscopic energy that shattered his pathetic barrier.

" Her irrational affection for Isshin Shiba weakened her resolve."

She brushed aside the monumental explosion rippling across the horizon. Nor did the subsequent shockwave slamming into Honnou City faster than the speed of sound, rushing through the decimated fortress, garner the slightest portion of her attention. Only when her surroundings flickered like ripples upon a lake that she glanced at the multicolored eruption illuminating Honnouji Academy. And her glower twisted into a grimace. To redirect her divine strength without suffering any consequences necessitated arrogance befitting such a sacrilegious being.

But it made no difference.

" It was an unnecessary distraction. Once I could not ignore."

In a single movement, she appeared behind those gathered to oppose Life Fibers. To oppose her, "His presence during that most sacred of events was not anticipated. Every setback and delay... the knowledge of Kamui falling into undeserving hands... can be traced back to that night. YOUR interference comes from his original sin. And now..."

A clang of metal against flesh disturbed the tranquility when she stopped the shinigami's zanpakuto from touching Shinra Koketsu. Blocking the weapon that gave her prophet so much trouble with nothing more than the palm of her hand, "... you use my own power against me!? Tainted and corrupted by your blasphemous hands!?"

The building shattering underneath Shinra Koketsu was the only indication of damage as the shimmer of polished metal against moonlight flickered in the corner of vision. Unencumbered by the necessity of blocking Ryuko Matoi's insignificant and pathetic attack when her mere presence - grandiose and divine - halted the Scissor Blade inches from Shinra Koketsu, she nevertheless snarled at the teenager's impudence, "And to think Kamui would dare throw themselves against that which granted them existence!"

"Fuck you!"

With a defiant roar, crimson energy blasted from Senketsu, exploding against her back in turbulent and chaotic pulses that left her fingers tingling. And yet it wasn't enough! No matter how much spiritual energy she pushed through the Scissor Blade, the stupid barrier surrounding Ragyo Kiryuin wasn't budging! Damn it! What the hell was going on? There was no way in hell Shinra Koketsu was this powerful without Orihime! It didn't even have Absolute Domination! So, how was her bitch of a mom...

"... stopping your Scissor Blade?"

"What the -?"

" I am the beginning and end of ALL things," her gaze swept across the Kamui adorning Ryuko Matoi. For divine clothing woven by the hands of inferior beings, she could not argue its strength. A simple examination of its Life Fibers proved Senketsu was formidable. Worthy of being called Kamui. And that, above all else, soured her mood.

" Your existence began with me. And by these hands, it shall end."

She was tempted to pursue the shinigami when he retreated. Her memories of his insurmountable arrogance and intelligence hadn't faded. There was no doubt he was planning something against Shinra Koketsu. Against herself. The prudent decision would be dealing with his Bankai. Punishing him for every indiscretion and sacrilegious action against Life Fibers. Before he acquired enough time to pose a slight risk.

But that would be playing into his hands.

" Senketsu's advanced gestalts. The name you shall choose to call his fashion week apparel. Everything that began with Life Fibers - all things that end with Life Fibers - does not escape my grasp."

In a blur, far too quickly for the teenager or her Kamui to follow, she wrapped her slender fingers around Ryuko Matoi's throat. Effortlessly bypassing the Kamui's defensive capabilities and driving the air from her lungs, "Ryuko Matoi, your thoughts are akin to an open book. I know what your Life Fibers will do before YOU do. Something Ragyo Kiryuin could never accomplish, even with my essence flowing through her threading."

With a sickening squelch, she stabbed her hand through Ryuko Matoi's chest, grasping the teenager's heart as Ichigo Kurosaki took his first step forward, "But her incompetence won't save you. My plans for this miserable planet cannot be stopped. It's only a matter of time before every lesser being - human and shinigami alike - is devoured by my children."

"GETSUGA TEN-"

Ichigo never saw Ragyo move. Even wearing Zangetsu, it appeared as if the Kiryuin matriarch flashed between positions. Reacting before the signal reached his brain. One moment the woman was gripping Ryuko's heart, seemingly oblivious to his attack, and the next her fist was lodged squarely against his cheek, snapping his neck sideways and shattering the energy wrapped around Tournesol.

" Were you not listening, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Her lips twisted into a sneer when the impertinent hybrid recovered his bearings. Barely arresting his momentum using the appropriated weapon. Glaring with veiled contempt at the blue sword clasped in his left hand, its ambiguous origins not lost to her, she watched Ichigo cough violently, blood trickling from the corner of his mouth.

" Don't make me repeat myself."

It was only through her magnanimity that Ryuko Matoi was afforded the opportunity to regain her composure. Flicking the blood from her fingers, she acknowledged the youth's mature regeneration. Kaleidoscopic eyes, both her own and Shinra Koketsu's, observed the teenager's wound stitch itself shut dozens of Life Fiber at a time before her heel clacked against the ground, bringing her within inches of Ichigo Kurosaki. Grasping the appropriated blade without concern, pulling the youth onto his feet through the sheer weight of her power, her mouth curled into a menacing smirk as she squeezed .

Shattering the hardened Life Fiber weapon and preventing a repeat of Ragyo Kiryuin's pathetic defeat.

"What!?"

" It was through my will that humanity evolved from their primitive state."

Her patience reached its limit when Ryuko Matoi discarded the notion she should stay down. That her Kamui was a match for Shinra Koketsu. As the youth cursed, blood spewing from painful cuts along her hands and arms, she snarled at the Scissor Blade posed overhead, "Only by my humble generosity did the Kiryuin's grow powerful enough to dominate all of humanity. Each generation feasting upon my essence before sacrificing mind, body and soul unto me."

" Now Kamui believe themselves capable of opposing me?"

An imperceptible twitch of her mouth was the only warning Ichigo and Ryuko before Shinra Koketsu screamed and everything exploded. Turbulent waves of superheated spiritual energy erupted from Ragyo, cascading outwards in billowing sheets that disintegrated the ground underneath their feet. Turning concrete into ash that dissolved in the ensuing firestorm. Ichigo felt Mugetsu's discomfort as he instinctively leapt away from Ragyo, leaving the shattered remains of his old man's weapon behind. The very air burned in his lungs as the heat scorched his face, drying out his mouth and leaving him gasping for breath.

"Shit!"

Ryuko covered her eyes as Ragyo's overwhelming power literally threw her across the No-Star Slums. Cursing at the blinding display, she launched herself away from her mom, jumping far enough away from the superheated energy that the cool, autumn breeze left her shivering, "The hell's going on, Senketsu?"

" I don't know," Senketsu flinched at the smoke rising from his Life Fibers, "But it's safe to say we're no longer dealing with Ragyo Kiryuin."

"You serious!?"

She hefted the Scissor Blade with both hands as the monster, who was floating in the center of an enormous crater, shimmered like a damn Christmas tree, "Crap, this might get rough."

" Be careful, Ryuko," Senketsu quivered when the primordial creature's attention shift towards them, "She's completely different from -"

" And you DARE align yourselves with that shinigami!?"

That Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi, mere children blind to the truth of existence, believed themselves capable of laying a finger upon Shinra Koketsu was incomprehensible! Even without Absolute Domination, Kamui paled in comparison to its divinity! There was nothing they could do - now or in the future - that she did not know! Their techniques and advanced gestalts, even the possibility of Senketsu and Mugetsu evolving into fashion week apparel, was known! And yet they chose to stand in her path, in the path of all Life Fibers, for the good of a lesser, primitive species? One destined to be nothing more than sustenance for Life Fibers?

An animalistic snarl escaped between clenched lips. Multicolored light danced across manicured fingers as Shinra Koketsu reacted to her divine will. Sheets of pristine white Life Fibers contorted around her body. Billowing sleeves unfurled, contours and hems tightened against flesh, as the ultimate Kamui transformed from an elegant wedding dress, reminiscent of her prophet's unnecessary affection for Isshin Shiba, into a shoulderless gown.

" For that you MUST suffer!"

The landscape - Honnou City, Tokyo and even Karakura Town - trembled beneath her spiritual pressure. With nothing more than a subconscious thought, Shinra Koketsu was surrounded by dozens of eyes, each focusing on the Life Fiber hybrids posed to interfere once more. Multicolored energy oozed from the ultimate Kamui as her solidified presence, flowing in radiant streams against her skin. Twisting monstrously until her fingers were gripping the evidence of her superior threading.

" This contemptible academy..."

It didn't matter if they begged for mercy. It was too late. She had already made up her mind.

"... and all those dwelling within..."

Her anger flared when something flickered in the distance. All but ignoring the shinigami's defiance and arrogance, she allowed Sosuke Aizen to finish the incantation, ten pink spheres coalesced around his body. Scoffing with audible derision when he thrust his hand forward, she turned aside and allowed the technique to harmlessly impact Shinra Koketsu.

The impacts and subsequent explosion doing little more than caressing her Life Fibers.

"... will be wiped from existence! All of you shall perish!"

As Shinra Koketsu perforated Ryuko Matoi's disrespectful flesh, she sent Isshin Shiba's offspring careening in the opposite direction, bleeding pouring from his chest, with naught but a glance. For a moment, her eyebrow twitched. Their arrogance in assuming themselves able to match her divine power was infuriating. Insulting! For a moment, far longer than believed necessary, she contemplated, wondered, how many lesser beings were required to get the point across. Two? Three? A dozen? Some of them would undoubtedly escape her retribution like cowards. But tonight their charade of a rebellion would end.

One way or another, they would be slaughtered.

Her fingers tore trenches of multicolored light through the fabric of reality, "Even the portion of my essence flowing through Isshin Shiba's threading won't save him from -"

She paused, more from astonishment than pain or discomfort, when something tore its way through her Life Fibers. Cutting through threading and flesh before bursting forth from her chest. As she stared at the blood dripping from the blade emerging from Shinra Koketsu, it took a moment for her mind to process the impossibility. But as reality established itself, and the familiar purple weapon didn't vanish, indignation swelled through her soul. With more force than necessary, she gripped the razor-sharp blade stabbed through her heart and glared over her shoulder.

" What is the meaning of this?"

Nui couldn't hear the question as she forced the Scissor Blade deeper into Shinra Koketsu, tears dripping down her cheeks, "You're not Lady Ragyo! G-Give her back!"

" And why does something like you care?"

With a squelch, the Original Life Fiber removed the blade piercing Shinra Koketsu. As her Life Fibers stitched themselves together, she dismissed the energy gathered upon the tips of her fingers. That one of her chosen heirs would demean themselves in such a debasing and humiliating manner was abhorrent. Bewildering on its own merits. But for the single offspring Ragyo Kiryuin didn't misplace - raised from conception to worship Life Fibers and view humanity as fattened cattle - to act with such flagrant treachery was incomprehensible! It made no sense!

" You are nothing more than a marionette."

She curled a finger through the Scissor Blade, ensuring the weapon didn't move an inch. Aware not only of Ichigo Kurosaki's close proximity, but also the apprehension tracing familiar patterns through his Life Fibers, her lips slowly curled into a maniac smirk, "That you believe yourself capable of love... of feeling emotions like a lesser being... is abhorrent. It's not why you were created. But such a catastrophic defect is not your fault."

"Gah!"

In the same moment she removed the Scissor Blade from the Grand Couturier's unworthy grasp, she drove her knee into the impudent teenager's stomach. Eliciting a pained gasp that brought a hint of righteous satisfaction to her soul. And as Nui gagged on blood and bile, she thrust the hardened Life Fiber weapon into the pavement before reaching forward, clenching a handful of the teenager's disheveled hair, "There was only supposed to be one of you. A single marionette loyal to Life Fibers. Created to stitch Shinra Koketsu and then, upon completion, sacrifice their existence unto it."

Her tone hardened as she struck Nui Harime, driving her fist into the teenager's face. Basking in the pained screams accompanying every impact of flesh against flesh, the Original Life Fiber eventually relented, allowing the Grand Couturier to collapse to the ground, "But something went wrong. Instead of one daughter, my prophet had three. Each possessing a fraction of my essence. That was a mistake."

"N-No..."

Nui tried crawling away from the Original Life Fiber, each inch more agonizing than the last. Blood dripped from her nose and mouth as she tried ignoring the creature's words about Amu and Orihime. But a hand clasped around her throat before she realized the thing wearing Lady Ragyo had moved. Manicured fingers that once caressed her with love and affection squeezed tightly, forcing the air from the lungs as she was pulled upwards, "Just look at you."

The Original Life Fiber glared at the Grand Couturier's disheveled appearance, "You're incomplete. Without your other half to stabilize your emotions - without the medium for Absolute Domination synchronizing them - you're unbalanced. It's a miracle my prophet found any use for you in the first place."

" But don't delude yourself."

A malicious smirk plucked against her lips. There. That was it. The single thought radiating through the Grand Couturier's threading. The one thing guaranteed to shatter her delusions of grandeur. With Shinra Koketsu's eyes focusing upon Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi, daring them to interfere, she tightened her hold, "You could never have a family. Ragyo Kiryuin and Isshin Shiba granted you existence. But your only purpose was weaving Shinra Koketsu. And you succeeded. Spectacularly . You've outlived your usefulness. So now I believe it's time your Life Fibers returned to me."

"What?"

Tournesol nearly slipped through Ichigo's fingers at the Original Life Fiber's insinuation. What the hell? His old man and Ragyo were Nui's parents? That couldn't be true! There was no way his dad would consider cheating! The guy couldn't even watch romantic movies without bailing halfway through the opening credits. But if it was true, Nui's constant insistence on being his cousin made sense. And he never heard her lie, not even once.

"There has to be another explanation," he brushed aside Mugetsu's concern. Now wasn't the time to worry. He could get the answers from the old goat after the Original Life Fiber was stopped, "My old man's an idiot, but he would never -"

"I-It's funny."

Nui felt... nothing... at Ichigo's reaction. And that bothered her. She should have been upset or angry the creature wearing Lady Ragyo spoiled the surprise. She wanted to surprise him about the old goat once they stopped fighting over the pigs in human clothing. When they could finally be a family without any distractions. It would have been perfect. But then Ryuko rejected her. Her sister rejected Lady Ragyo. Then Lady Ragyo was replaced by this thing wearing her body. Nothing mattered anymore. Not even Amu.

So, why didn't Ichigo seem to hate her? Why was he looking at her with such a strange expression?

"Amu did most of the work. S-She was the smart one," her tears stopped when the fingers grasping her throat tightened, "She made sure there weren't any mistakes. I-If we messed any of the stitching, I was the one who fixed it."

The Original Life Fiber paused over the Grand Couturier's heart. With her fingers inches from the beating organ, fractions of a second from dissolving the marionette, her multicolored eyes narrowed, "Do you intend to garner sympathy with something I already know?"

"B-But when Lady Ragyo made me finish Shinra Koketsu," Nui slouched in the creature's grasp as her vision blurred, "I-I realized something important."

She latched a finger between the ultimate Kamui's threading and pulled, "That I could take it apart if I really wanted to!"

" No!"

The progenitor of Life Fibers smashed her fist against the Grand Couturier. But it was too late. As her head twisted awkwardly, spittle and blood spewing from her lips, Nui curled her finger. With a taut pluck, bundles of Banshi unfurled from Shinra Koketsu, caught upon the teenager's fingernail. Gasping incoherently from the pain when she smashed face-first into the ground, Nui listened to the ultimate Kamui scream . She heard its agony as the blood dripping from her mouth slowed, and then stopped. She watched the Original Life Fiber attempt to regain control, only to fail. And even though she had wanted to unravel Shinra Koketsu, she couldn't find any pleasure in watching her pride and joy - the best and most perfect dress in the world - suffer.

"I-It's painful," Nui struggled off the ground. Her voice was little more than a strained whisper as energy burst from Shinra Koketsu. She twitched from the superheated steam erupting from the divine fabric, mimicking the Original Life Fiber's astonishment, "But I made Shinra Koketsu for Lady Ragyo! Y-You don't deserve to wear it!"

" You treacherous piece of scrap!"

Her anger was palpable, nearly physical, as the ultimate Kamui's strength waned. She watched, disbelief twisting into shock, when the Banshi snapped out of the stitching, permanently rendering Shinra Koketsu nothing more than a pale imitation of the divine gown meant to usher humanity to their destiny. But she kept her composure. Even as energy oozed from the ultimate Kamui's threading, she refused to grant the lesser beings an advantage! With an indignant snarl, her eyes swiveled downwards, focusing on the marionette who dared raise her hand against Life Fibers. That believed itself capable of betraying the source of her existence and purpose!

In a flash of rainbow light, the Needle Blades spun into her waiting fingers.

" You DARE raise your hand against me!?"

Moonlight twisted off their polished edges as she swung downwards, the identical blades posed to sever the Life Fibers connecting the Grand Couturier's head and shoulders.

Only to miss when writhing darkness intercepted the Needle Blades, forming a protective barrier in front of Nui Harime. Tracing the source of the interruption backwards, focusing on the familiar blonde above her prophet's errant offspring, the corners of her mouth twitched erratically. Recognition and hatred coiled through her threading at the vampire. Half-formed memories bubbled to the forefront of her mind. Her divine presence flared as she tore through the burning shadows oozing from the vampire's shoulder. Shattering the barrier preventing her from destroying the treacherous marionette.

But it was too late. With fury bubbling in her soul, she watched the vampire retreat with the Grand Couturier.

"AHH!"

Seras winced at the blood gushed from the cross-shaped wound across Nui Harime's face. As the soles of her boots dug into the ground for purchase, fighting against the immense force accompanying Ragyo Kiryuin's attack, she found herself confused. Something wasn't right. She remembered the Grand Couturier brushing off Master and that Quincy's attacks without breaking her unnerving smile. So, what was different about this attack? The damage seemed worse with every passing second. And the blood touching her skin felt wrong. Like it wasn't really blood but something else.

"Don't worry. I got you."

She launched herself towards Ichigo at the first opportunity, using Ragyo Kiryuin's frustration to place as much distance between them as possible. Despite being completely in the dark about everything, something must have happened after Pip thrust the bullet into the woman's heart. Something that caused the Grand Couturier, who had a body count in the hundreds to thousands, to betray her mother, "But you seem to have pissed her off quite badly."

"S-She destroyed my eye..."

Nui didn't care about the vampire. The blood spewing from the wound - so intimately familiar and painful - didn't matter. She remembered Ryuko's dad doing the same thing. Cutting open her face. Damaging her perfect body with those contemptible second-hand blades. But with her mouth stretching into an impossibly wide smile, blood dribbling from the glowing wound across the left half of her face, she grinned at the Original Life Fiber, "B-But I fixed Shinra Koketsu!"

" What did you say!?"

The reprehensible creature's astonishment at something so simple was music to her ears, "Gosh, are you stupid? Don't you remember? I-I'm the Grand Couturier!"

Her voice deepened with every word, alternating between infuriation and shrill barking, "S-So, it makes sense I can adjust its dress patterns!"

Hatred flashed through her remaining eye, "N-Now you can't use Shinra Koketsu! You're nothing more than Life Fibers squeezed into clothing!"

" You impudent little..."

Astonishment at the Grand Couturier devolved into vitriolic hatred. She was done granted those standing against Life Fibers - standing against her - mercy! Shinra Koketsu was already responding lethargically to her orders. Its strength was already fading. And soon, it would vanish entirely. But even without the ultimate Kamui, her power was more than sufficient for dealing with the shinigami. And Isshin Shiba, when the traitorous man emerged from the shadows in a few short moments, "I will no longer tolerate your belligerence!"

Through divine superiority, she extracted what little power remained within Shinra Koketsu's threading, "Your rebellion ends NOW!"

"Like hell it does!"

The flickers of spiritual energy surrounding Senketsu evolved into a cacophonous explosion as Ryuko met the Original Life Fiber head on, closing the distance between herself and the creature in the blink of an eye, "I'm not through kicking your glowing ass!"

" How long do you expect this charade to continue!?"

Her hatred bubbled at the impertinent hybrid's delusions of grandeur. That Ryuko Matoi refused to acknowledge the insurmountable difference between their power was one thing. But the arrogance infecting her threading was insulting! Did the Kamui gracing her flesh believe its strength sufficient to mount a challenge? Absurd! The concept of strength meant nothing to her! And so, with a swift downwards strike, she intercepted the Scissor Blade. In a titanic eruption of clashing spiritual pressure, she repulsed Ryuko Matoi's assault, sending the girl tumbling head over heels.

" Your Kamui stands no chance! It's nothing more than Life Fibers sewn into clothing!"

"That's what you think!"

Ryuko spat at the Original Life Fiber. Did the bitch think something that dull and boring would bother Senketsu? They heard worse from Mugetsu! With a snort, she flipped back onto her feet, waiting until Ichigo's signal before darting forward, "Because Senketsu's gonna beat the shit out of you!"

" Utter nonsense!"

She caught Ichigo Kurosaki's tempered blade before the youth finished sneaking through her guard. She clasped Tournesol between her thumb and finger, holding the hardened sword before parrying the Scissor Blade with a callous backhand, "There is nothing you can do that I do not already know! "

A crack echoed across the ruined slums as her fist impacted Ryuko Matoi's face, sending the surprised teenager careening into - and through - several buildings. Yet a suppressed snarl escaped her lips. If not for the Grand Couturier's treachery, that attack would have taken Ryuko's head clean off her shoulders! Pirouetting at the subtle movement accompanying Ichigo Kurosaki's determined efforts, she pulled the Needle Blade from its impromptu perch. In a series of strikes too rapid for lesser beings to follow, she shattered the youth's guard. Blood sprayed through the air, missing Shinra Koketsu by scant millimeters, when the Needle Blade carved through Isshin Shiba's offspring from waist to shoulder.

It was a wound that should have inconvenienced the impertinent hybrid.

But in her present, weakened condition, nearly bisecting Ichigo Kurosaki wasn't enough .

" So throw yourselves at me!"

With an audible crinkle of clothing, she thrust her arm upwards, fingers clenching the celestial sphere hovering over Honnouji Academy, "But without that satellite, it won't matter if you recover Absolute Domination's vessel! You'll perish one way or another!"

"On the contrary, that's quite an unlikely scenario."

Aizen took pleasure at the Original Life Fiber's reaction. For a creature whose arrogance exceeded its unwarranted notion of superiority over humanity, the subtle quivering of its body at the otherwise innocuous statement betrayed its apprehension, "During our confrontation, I fired a Kido into Shinra Koketsu. Hado Number Ninety One, to be exact. However, we can agree my efforts lacked effectiveness."

Whether the eldritch creature found the information helpful wasn't information. Its surprise. The astonishment dictating its actions. That was important. Raising Kyouka Suigetsu, Aizen waited until his words sunk into the Original Life Fiber before taking another step closer, "When attacking, one must focus upon exploiting their opponent's weaknesses. Which raises an interesting question. When I fought Raygo Kiryuin, I verified Kido are ineffective against Life Fibers. It's an aspect of your biology independently deduced by Kisuke Urahara. Your Life Fibers absorb spiritual energy. Thus, attacking in such a manner requires excessive sacrifice of one's stamina. So, knowing that, why did I waste energy on something that does not work?"

" You're referring to the trap hidden within your attack?"

In a flicker of movement, she thrust her hand through the shinigami, blood and viscera erupting from his back, "An interesting tactic. But pointless."

"Of course it was."

The blood trailing from Aizen's mouth didn't impede his words as he smirked. Amiably and without arrogance. An attack possessing such ferocity was indeed fatal. Someone with less preparations would have certainly died. But as the Original Life Fiber stiffened, its other hand reaching forward to finish the job, reality twisted upon itself. His corpse vanished into an illusion, leaving the creature surprised until he reappeared behind it, "It was nothing more than a distraction. A trick to lull you into a false sense of security. But, if anything, you should thank the Grand Couturier."

" What!?"

"Her interference weakened your control over the World of the Living," he tapped the empty space behind the creatures, searching for the specific frequency of spiritual particles. With a flicker, darkness erupted as jagged, teeth-like tears appeared in the barrier separating the dimensions, "Without her sabotage, you could have easily negated what I'm about to do."

" How dare you!"

She shouted with failing restraint when the shinigami ducked beneath the Needle Blade. Her eyes narrowed at the hand planted against the ground. At the fingers lightly gripping crushed concrete. A perturbed twitch of hatred rippled from her stomach when he raised a finger, silently releasing a burst of kinetic energy that thrust her towards the congealed darkness. But with significant effort, she arrested her momentum inches from the portal. Damn it! Damn him to hell! This arrogant... despicable... shinigami believed himself her equal!

No, he thought himself her better!

She would deny him the satisfaction of victory!

"I don't think so!"

The spiritual energy around the Original Life Fiber's fingers shattered with a sharp crack when Ryuko smashed her fist into the bitch's nose. Something that surprised the thing wearing her mom like a suit. Which gave her the perfect opening! Using every scrap of power available to Senketsu - and then some - Ryuko pivoted, heel clacking against the ground, before driving her knee into Shinra Koketsu.

Forcing the ugly outfit - and the creature wearing it - into the closing portal.

---

...

---

"Damn it, how'd she get in here!?"

Contrary to popular belief, Emilou Apacci wasn't short-tempered or rude. No matter how much Mila Rose or Sung-Sun complained. She just couldn't stand idiotic shinigami and anyone who dared raised their sword against Lady Harribel. Especially that white-haired midget. It was that simple. But she wasn't someone who rushed into battle without thinking. Not after getting her ass burned by that old geezer. She wasn't stupid. Not anymore.

"You sound scared, Apacci."

Franceska Mila Rose scoffed at her fellow arrancar's lack of courage, "You're sweating. And your teeth are chattering loudly enough to disturb Lady Harribel. If you're going to stand around pissing your pants, you might as well run away and save us the effort of rescuing your ass later."

"You wanna say that to my face!?"

Apacci forgot about the woman - at least it looked like a woman - and that creepy uniform for a moment. A biting retort was on the tip of her tongue, something witty enough to screw with her fellow arrancar's sense of self-esteem, until another pulse of spiritual pressure slammed into Las Noches. Taken aback by the malevolence, which made even Ulquiorra seem tame, she grinned despite the sweat trickling down her cheek, "If I'm scared, then I guess you're trembling from excitement! Hey, if you want to be the first one to fight that bitch, be my guest!"

Mila Rose's eye twitched as her fingers twitched towards Leona, "Since when has that stopped you?"

"What the hell did you say!?"

"Settle down."

Tier Harribel's eyes narrowed at the woman - no, this creature was anything but human - intruding within Las Noches. She could not blame Apacci for her apprehension. Nor was Mila Rose's adamant refusal to confess her nervousness a sign of weakness. On the contrary, she expected nothing less. Despite having regained a semblance of their former humanity, they were still Hollows. And as such, their instincts were predominant. And those same instincts shouted warnings about the intruder. Her masked lips pursed from primal tension every time another burst of spiritual pressure covered Las Noches.

It was no wonder Apacci, Mila Rose and, yes, even Sung-Sun, appeared anxious.

"Do not underestimate this creature."

She hooked a finger through one of the holes adorning Tiburón's guard. Something else troubled her. This creature arrived within Las Noches through a Garganta. But only arrancar or those associated with Sosuke Aizen could bypass the structure's defenses using Descorrer. Her thoughts hardened at the insinuation. The latter was impossible. That man was imprisoned by the shinigami, sealed after his ignominious defeat at Ichigo Kurosaki's hands, "The primal fear influencing your thoughts is understandable."

With a careful, relaxed flick of her wrist, she unsheathed the zanpakuto, golden-yellow sparks accompanying the motion, "Her spiritual pressure is catastrophic. Abhorrent beyond even the most repugnant Hollow. I have never experienced anything remotely this malevolent and reprehensible. It's unnerving. And yet, despite the obnoxious pressure, I cannot wonder if this is but a fraction of her true power."

"So, what do we do?"

Mila Rose glowered as apprehension twisted her expression, "There's no telling what she has planned."

"You're acting like a fool again. Weren't you paying attention?"

Cyan Sung-Sun waited until Mila Rose growled like a primate before covering her mouth. Sometimes it was too easy getting under her skin. One would think after countless years spent together under Lady Harribel, they would try ignoring her taunts. For a moment, she contemplated pushing the issue. Perhaps mocking Apacci's nervousness. But the creature's terrifying spiritual pressure superseded any desires outside of survival.

"Our mysterious intruder stumbled through a Garganta like a rank amateur. Almost as if someone pushed her," she momentarily mocked Mila Rose's ignorance on something considered basic by arrancar standards before glancing towards the source of their worry,

"Lady Harribel likely already realized this, but someone could not defeat this woman. Therefore, they did the next best thing."

"What!? Why'd they send her here !?"

"You shouldn't lose your temper over something as trivial as criticism," Sung-Sun rolled her eyes at Apacci's characteristic response to the slightest hint of bad news, "Getting worked up is a great way to get this creature's attention."

"Damn you -"

"Calm yourself, Apacci."

She did not raise her voice. The situation didn't warrant anything other than prudent, careful analysis. Allowing one's emotions to run rampant increased the probability of making fatal mistakes, "Sung-Sun is correct. However, her arrival is not the problem at hand."

A faint hum trembled through Harribel's hand as Tiburón spun around her finger, streams of golden energy trailing from the zanpakuto's edge, "This creature is a threat to the tranquility we've painstakingly established. Which is why I shall deal with this intruder myself. Before she becomes a threat to Las Noches and Hueco Mundo."

"There's no reason to risk your life, Lady Harribel!"

Mila Rose glared at the creature staring at Las Noches like she owned the damn place. There was no question Lady Harribel was more than powerful enough to win. With every Espada except Grimmjow dead, and Aizen imprisoned by the shinigami, she was the strongest being in Hueco Mundo. But something about the woman's strange clothing was unnerving, almost to the point she was considering working alongside Apacci and Sung-Sun without complaint, "Please! Let us summon Ayon! Even if that thing kills him without breaking a sweat, I'm confident you'll learn enough about her abilities to win!"

"No. I cannot allow you to sacrifice yourselves for my benefit."

Another twist of her wrist brought Tiburón into her waiting grasp. The familiar sensation of her zanpakuto brought comfort. Assuaging a portion of the tension and discontent coursing through her veins, "This woman is beyond your capabilities. Ayon would find itself overwhelmed not only in terms of spiritual pressure, but sheer vindictiveness and malevolence. Do you recall the mass exodus of Hollows?"

"Yeah..."

Apacci frowned. She remembered that day. Five months ago, out of the middle of nowhere, every Hollow in Japan returned to Hueco Mundo. The bastards possessing enough intelligence to talk, and smart enough not to pick a fight with Lady Harribel, claimed two monsters had awakened. Inhuman creatures unlike shinigami, Quincy or arrancar. Each with terrifying and monstrous spiritual pressure that threatened to crush their souls.

"You think this... woman... is one of those monsters?"

"I do not know. Now go. Observe from a safe distance. If I cannot defeat her, retreat and do not look back. There is no need for any of you to lose your lives saving mine."

Her tone was blunt, almost apathetic. Yet Harribel waited until Apacci, Mila Rose and Sung-Sun retreated to an appreciably safe distance before releasing the restraints upon her spiritual pressure. She could not fault their reluctance. The arrogance behind throwing oneself against an unknown, powerful opponent went against the basic principles of combat. But she had little choice. The spiritual pressure radiating from the white-clad figure felt... wrong. More disturbing with each passing second. Inhuman, in the sense the woman, unlike Hollows and arrancar, wasn't created through humanity's sorrow or despair.

Yet there was the overwhelming, growing notion, born not from rational thought but primal instinct, that she was being watched. That this creature already knew her location and was waiting, patiently and sadistically, to see what she'd do.

"Destroy..."

Golden-yellow spiritual pressure cascaded from her soul at the soft utterance. If the advantage was lost, wasting time analyzing an already terrible scenario was unacceptable. Frowning as the front of her uniform unzipped, revealing the bones covering the lower portion of her face and ample bosom, Harribel breathed through the condensing moisture, "Tiburón."

Las Noches trembled beneath the weight of her spiritual pressure. The damaged dome and artificial skies cracked - then broke - as her power increased, eventually collapsing upon the white sands. She felt Apacci, Mila Rose and Sung-Sun retreat nearly to Grimmjow's extended quarters before destroying the cyclone of water enveloping her body with a single slash.

"I wonder, was that enough?"

As beads of water pooled along the contours of her skin, dripping from Tiburón only to suspend themselves midair, she frowned. Using her resurrección against an unknown, powerful opponent was a double-edged sword. The spiritual pressure released was substantial. If Ulquiorra's confrontation against Ichigo Kurosaki hadn't already destroyed most of Las Noches' ceiling, the shockwave accompanying her resurrección would have destroyed the structure. But that was a small sacrifice. She was not fighting a shinigami who required time and effort to release their zanpakuto. This creature was a monster unlikely to grant her the opportunity to release Tiburón in the midst of battle.

And yet, the woman - no, the creature - appeared disinterested.

Was the resurrección of an Espada insufficient to warrant even the slightest concern?

Golden-energy energy gathered upon Tiburón until the intensity flickered across her olive-colored skin. Her fingers trailed down the blade as she pressed forward, halving the distance between herself and the woman, "I see..."

Haribel stopped beyond what she presumed the creature's effective range. She could not see a blade or weapon. Yet that did not preclude the possibility of ranged techniques or other attacks. And the billowing sleeves and layered fabric could easily conceal weapons. Such audacious and abhorrent clothing seemed excessive, inefficient. But her fingers tightened upon Tiburón, aqua eyes narrowed at the eerie, almost independent movement of the strange uniform. Something wasn't right. For a moment, she thought the eye-like patterns floating above the woman shifted.

But with some reluctance, she discarded the rampant instincts. Choosing instead to focus upon the present. Upon defeating the woman. Hefting Tiburón overhead, gripping her zanpakuto as the golden-yellow flames roared to life, she swung downwards, releasing the wave of high-pressure energy.

Moisture dripped from her hair as she observed the technique slice towards the woman.

Her breath hitched when the woman effortlessly caught the energy between her fingers.

" To think that blasphemous abomination's influence spread this far..."

"La Gota!"

She threw herself away from the woman without hesitation. Without worrying about embarrassment or cowardice. That echoing voice... the warbling tone accentuating each and every syllable... awoke a flash of primal terror. Instincts long thought buried. Presumed to have been replaced with rational thought and humanity. Flashing across the skies above Las Noches, bursts of pressurized water erupted from Tiburón in rapid, fear succession. Moisture condensed from her spiritual energy. Water flowed from the gill-like protrusions on her zanpakuto, coalescing before firing towards the woman.

No, calling this creature a woman was wrong. She might resemble a human. Or perhaps bore vague similarities to shinigami or even Quincy. But she had never been human. The lustrous silver hair shimmering with nauseating rainbow light. The pale, alabaster skin. Those eyes, rings of alternating colors. There was no question. No doubts remaining in her mind.

This woman was an inhuman monster.

" You're one of that shinigami's subordinates, aren't you?"

"Casca -"

A hand clamped around her throat. Fingers too dainty and delicate bypassed her Hierro, squeezing the air from her lungs, when the woman crossed Las Noches. In a flicker of rainbow light, she was slammed against one of the buildings erupting from the dunes, cracking then shattering the blue façade, "I can sense that thing's influence on your soul."

The Original Life Fiber ignored the fingers desperately attempting to loosen her grip. She paid little, if any, attention to the oversized zanpakuto, treating the unique weapon as nothing more than a nuisance, a problem rectified by tightening her grip, cutting off what remained of the arrancar's oxygen, "He achieved a temporary victory through cowardice, but such tricks only work once . Because I will find my way back. I will wipe Honnou City - and the lesser beings hiding within its walls - from existence."

Despite her unbridled hatred for the Grand Couturier, she focused on the matter at hand. Pushing the marionette's punishment for siding with humanity until later. With a subconscious flicker of intent, the surrounding landscape disintegrated. Sand, buildings and even the very moisture oozing from the arrancar decayed. Mote of spiritual particles streamed into Shinra Koketsu, rejuvenating her weakened Life Fibers.

Bringing a grin, cold and calculating, to her features.

" And once I've accomplished that , everything connected to the planet will perish."

She adjusted her hold upon the creature, moving her fingers upwards until they were gripping its jaw. Yet its aqua eyes remained defiant. Unaware of its station as something significantly inferior to Life Fibers, let alone herself. But she allowed the arrancar that delusion. Granting it a moment's reprieve before raising her other hand, "But you?"

Light danced between her fingers, "You won't have the fortune of living that long."

---

...

---

"This is Hueco Mundo, huh?"

" It's not what I expected, Ryuko."

"You're telling me, Senketsu," Ryuko snorted under her breath, "It looks like a stupid, boring desert. Where's all the doom and gloom?"

" Boring isn't necessarily bad. And there's a good chance Orihime was exaggerating some of the details," Senketsu was troubled. And it wasn't the first time. If he remembered those remedial foreign language courses Ryuko was forced to endure under penalty of expulsion, everything about Hueco Mundo was Spanish. Entirely different from the Soul Society, which not only made little sense, but caused his threading to twitch, "At least we passed through unscathed. That Garganta wasn't the most pleasant experience."

"Tch... I know."

Her heels clacked against the obnoxiously bright red pillar. The coldness in the air, something impossible since Senketsu hadn't broken into goosebumps, was barely noticeable as she stared across Las Noches. Rubbing the kink between her shoulder and neck, she grunted in visible - and growing - annoyance at the hazy structures stretching beyond the horizon. God damn it, she couldn't even see where the freaking place started! And who the hell builds a fortress with a desert on the inside?

"And who the hell thought breaking through dimensions required knowing Spanish ?"

She tensed at a faint shift in the wind. In fact, her hands reflexively tightened around the Scissor Blades at the disturbing feeling trickling down her spine. Only an idiot wouldn't sense that powerful and familiar spiritual pressure. Scoffing out of the side of her mouth, she spat onto the pillar. Satsuki's nerdy friend might find the freaky moon interesting, but she didn't care about stupid and pointless crap! All that mattered was kicking the Original Life Fiber's ass!

"But we made it through in one piece," Ryuko grinned maliciously, "And this time, we're gonna finish that ugly scrap of clothing once and for all!"

" Hmm..."

"Huh? What's wrong, Senketsu?"

The Kamui gave his best impression of a deep, thoughtful frown. Difficult considering he did not possess a face. Everything appeared normal. There was sand blowing in the wind that threatened to get inside his threading. And strange, angled buildings stretching into the sky. And yet, neither explained the subtle trembling of his Life Fibers, "I don't know. But there's something in the air, Ryuko."

Ryuko stiffened, then looked straight into her Kamui's eye, "You're saying there's something wrong with this place?"

"I'm not entirely certain," he watched faint specks of light removing themselves from the pillar underneath Ryuko. As the glowing energy entered his threading, instantly relieving the exhaustion, his eye twisted upwards, "But I feel refreshed. Full of energy. The complete opposite of how I felt two minutes ago, when Sosuke Aizen was explaining what happened."

"You feel refreshed?"

She blinked once - then twice - in confusion, "What the hell does that mean?"

"Were you not paying attention, Ryuko?"

Strands of darkness clung to Junketsu as Satsuki emerged from the Garganta without breaking her stride. Not a hair was out of place as calculating steel-blue eyes focused on the bleak and desolate landscape stretching kilometers in every direction. Her mouth curled into a scowl at the strange bitterness in the air. Junketsu instinctively tightened against her skin when a presence inundated Sosuke Aizen's former seat of power. With a hollow clack, she pivoted towards Ryuko, "Life Fibers sustain themselves on blood and spiritual energy. Unlike our world, Hueco Mundo is composed of spiritual particles. To our Kamui, this world is akin to an endless buffet."

"I guess that makes sense..."

The wind rushing through Las Noches faded into the background as Ryuko frowned at Satsuki's explanation. She remembered Aizen saying something similar before they entered the Garganta. But he phrased it differently, with a lot more flowery language. And she'd been too busy worrying about Ichigo to care what the guy said about Senketsu, "So, does that mean Senketsu's gonna get stronger or something?"

"Perhaps. Or rather, the spiritual density of Hueco Mundo will allow our Kamui to fight without worrying about straining their Life Fibers."

From the moment she stepped through the Garganta into Las Noches, she could sense the creature's presence. That encompassing, vile spiritual pressure was unmistakable. The monster controlling Ragyo Kiryuin's corpse was somewhere over the horizon to the north. Precisely where Sosuke Aizen claimed, "Still, we mustn't lower our guards. What's applicable toward our Kamui, also affects our opponent. It's more than likely the Original Life Fiber is gathering its strength. Recovering what Nui Harime took away."

"Then there's no time to lose!"

"Agreed. However, we need to proceed carefully, Ryuko."

The comfort of Junketsu minimized her trepidation. The apprehension mixed with cheerful enthusiasm sung through her Kamui's threading, coming across as a faint whisper within her mind. Yet her brow furrowed, more from experience than concern, "Our opponent can predict Life Fibers. It can read your thoughts. Therefore, it stands to reason there's nothing you nor I can accomplish that it doesn't already know. We must assume the Original Life Fiber is not only aware of Senketsu, Junketsu and Mugetsu's techniques, but is more than capable of countering them."

"I already knew that!"

Ryuko stomped her heel against the pillar, leaving a large, ugly crack. Jabbing her thumb against Senketsu, she snarled, "But that's not going to stop us! If that thing can tell the future, then we'll just need to be so damn unpredictable it won't know what's happening!"

" More unpredictable than usual, Ryuko?"

"That's right, Senketsu!"

Her grin twisted viciously, "Predicting the future means shit if we don't know what we're doing until we're doing it!"

" Are you sure that will work? If the Original Life Fiber can predict our Life Fibers, then it should know what we're doing. Or rather, what we're not doing."

"You're correct about one thing, Ryuko. The Original Life Fiber's precognition is NOT absolute!"

Satsuki addressed her emphasis not towards Ryuko, but Ichigo, who finally emerged from the Garganta. The last to arrive given Yoruichi Shihoin's wish to speak privately. For a brief, moment, she observed the stabilized tear between dimensions. Watching with discerning eyes as the gateway sealed shut, reality correcting itself until the only method of departing Las Noches vanished. It appeared Kinue Kinagase was not participating against the monster puppeting her mother's corpse. But she could not fault the woman's reluctance. Unlike Ichigo and Ryuko's relationship with Mugetsu and Senketsu, Danketsu had been stitched into Kinue's skin. They were, for lack of better vernacular, a single being.

The negative consequences from Absolute Domination ripping them apart couldn't be estimated.

"Our mother's demise, Orihime Inoue's rescues and the Grand Couturier's treachery were events it did NOT foresee," Junketsu crinkled beneath the weight of her passion. With a loud thud, Bakuzan slammed against the pillar, "If the Original Life Fiber precognition was flawless, we would not be having this conversation! It would have predicted Nui Harime's actions and reacted accordingly!"

"Then we shouldn't stand around talking."

Ichigo found himself grimacing, almost involuntarily, at the familiar landscape. He never imagined returning to Hueco Mundo. And Aizen was right. Mugetsu was reacting to the high concentration of spiritual particles. His Life Fibers were responding, "The Original Life Fiber's pissed. And it's getting stronger every second. If we're going to stop that thing, we need to do it now. Before it recovers."

" We should cut that excuse for clothing apart. It worked last time!"

The bitter, almost supernaturally dry, wind throughout Las Noches felt strange against her Life Fibers. And the energy she was passively absorbing from the environment, which never happened in recent memory, was invigorating. Like an exceptionally bad ironing after Ichigo forgot her favorite detergent. With her mood irrevocably soured at the comparison between Hueco Mundo and her favorite activity, Mugetsu glared at the blade in Ichigo's left hand, "Of course, she's stronger than Ragyo Kiryuin. And faster. But not as fast as us! Or enough to make a difference."

"Whether we like it or not, that thing's smart," Ichigo frowned. There was someone else with the Original Life Fiber. A presence identical to an arrancar's. It was faint but still stronger than Grimmjow, "The Original Life Fiber's pissed, but it can stall for time. It doesn't need to win, just keep us busy long enough for the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet to finish. Even if it doesn't see into the future, hitting that thing with another Getsuga Jūjishō's going to be tricky."

"I'll distract mom for ya, Ichigo!"

Satsuki's scowl hardened at the unprompted declaration, "What?"

"I'm tough enough to take a few love taps!"

Ryuko hissed out of the corner of her mouth, "And while the bitch is busy kicking my ass, Ichigo and Mugetsu will attack from behind! But that probably won't work. So, while she's shouting some bullshit about Senketsu being inferior, and maybe beating the crap out of us, you'll hit her with everything Junketsu's got!"

"Keeping the Original Life Fiber's attention that long will be tricky, Ryuko," the plan was passable, if a little dangerous. It could certainly work. But one wrong move, if Ryuko couldn't avoid an attack, would be disastrous. For the both of them. There was no way Satsuki Kiryuin would accept a strategy this -"

"Is that your plan, Ryuko?"

A furrowed brow, unrelenting in its familiarity, was Satsuki's response. But her attention was focused upon Ichigo. Seeking his reaction. Her sister's strategy was straightforward. But feasible, nevertheless. Against the Original Life Fiber, complex strategies and complicated plans would falter. In the interest of time, it was pragmatic and necessary to keep everything simple, allowing one to easily modify their strategy.

And from Ichigo's reaction, his train of thought was similar to her own.

"If you got a better plan, I'm all ears," Ryuko grumbled, more irritated at doing nothing than Satsuki criticizing her half-assed plan.

"No. It's acceptable. And considering its source, almost brilliant."

"Hey!"

Satsuki accepted the annoyance without yielding the conversation, "Given our limited resources, I doubt I could devise anything better."

"I'm not stupid," Ryuko tried ignored the insult. She could deal with Satsuki's annoying habit after kicking that ball of yarn's glowing ass, "I actually studied at your crappy school. It would have sucked getting expelled before beating answers out of ya!"

"Why did you choose me, Ryuko?"

The sharp, almost surgically precise, question interrupted her sister, causing Ryuko's final words to fade into a whisper. When she didn't receive an answer, Satsuki added, "Junketsu's power is formidable. However, Mugetsu and Ichigo are equally powerful. So, answer my question. Why did you choose me to land the finishing blow on our mother's corpse?"

"Do I have to explain everything?"

Her tone hardened into subtle mockery at the look on Satsuki's face. That smug arrogance. But it was Mugetsu's laughter, with Ichigo doing his best not to look in her direction, which caused the tension to abruptly deflate, "Because I remember that cocky look on your face! The one where you have some super-secret plan!"

"Your confidence is inspiring, Ryuko," Satsuki restrained herself to a sly, almost amused, smirk at her sister's enthusiasm, "I assume Senketsu's already commented upon the weaknesses of your plan?"

" Of course. It's an exceedingly dangerous strategy," for a moment, Senketsu forgot Satsuki could not hear his voice, "But we don't have much of a choice, do we, Ryuko? The longer we waste time talking, the more time the Original Life Fiber has to recover its power. And while I find our plan incredibly dangerous, I'll help you every step of the way. We're in this together!"

"Heh... now you're speaking my language, Senketsu!"

Ryuko leapt into the air. The pillar cracked underneath her heels, splinters expanding outwards in spider web patterns. This was perfect! She could fight that damn pile of scrap clothing without holding back! No more worrying about anyone getting caught in the crossfire! Spinning midair, grinning wildly as crimson light shone from her dual-colored hair, she shouted at the top of her lungs, "Let's do this! Senketsu Shippu!"

Satsuki watched with cold, focused eyes as the crimson pulsing from Senketsu disappeared towards the horizon. A moment passed in absolute silence, the only sound coming from the wind upon the bone-white dunes. As the seconds dragged onwards and the last traces of her sister's presence vanished, she frowned, consternation visible upon her brow, before finally speaking.

"I heard about the Grand Couturier."

"It's not important."

"Is it not?"

An eyebrow quirked at Ichigo's sharp denial. As much as she wished otherwise, she couldn't blame his reluctance to discuss the matter. Whatever happened between her Isshin Kurosaki and her mother was open to interpretation. But considering Nui Harime's vehement disdain towards lying - which resulted in more than one of Ragyo Kiryuin's middle managers falling victim to her wild emotions - the evidence was nearly overwhelming, "Do you remember what you said to me after saving Junketsu?"

Her heel clacked as she faced Ichigo, steel-blue eyes boring into brown, "You claimed not to understand my problems. Nevertheless, you offered assistance. Ensuring that I did not need to shoulder the burden of my mother's actions alone. So, please. Allow me to offer you the same proposition."

"Thanks. I appreciate that. But this is... different... than what Ragyo did to you."

"Perhaps," she conceded as her expression tightened, "Nothing can match her depravity. But I am here, Ichigo. And so is Ryuko. If you wish to talk about it."

"I know you're worried, Satsuki. And Ryuko... before leaving Honnou City, I know she wanted to say something."

Ichigo couldn't look Satsuki in the eye. But he wasn't upset. Despite everything, he appreciated her efforts to help. And maybe, if only for a moment, he was being selfish. But no matter how hard he tried, knowing Nui Harime was his half-sister was shocking. Weeks ago - hours ago - if anyone claimed his old man cheated on his mom, he would have kicked in their teeth. Then ask Orihime to heal their wounds before doing it again. The old goat was a moron. But nobody could question how much he loved - and missed - their mom.

"But there's only one person with answers."

He stared at the sword in his left hand, identical in all aspects to the blade in Satsuki's possession, "There's a lot of things he hasn't explained. Not just about Ragyo, but about everything that happened between them. There's a lot I want to ask him. Maybe more than he knows. But that will have to wait until after we stop the Original Life Fiber."

"... I trust you, Ichigo."

When he offered her Bakuzan, she accepted the weapon without hesitation. Her fingers clenched around the familiar, yet different, hilt, Junketsu crinkling as the sapphire hue reverted to golden-yellow. Her brow furrowed, not from consternation, but worry, when Ichigo stepped forward, prepared to help Ryuko before anything happened. And for a moment, the proper words remained elusive. Ichigo's explanation was valid. Yet she could not accept it.

It wasn't right .

"My mother was a manipulative, vindictive and arrogant woman."

A hint of her former position as Student Council President of Honnouji Academy gave the otherwise concerned statement a sense of passion and unyielding emphasis. Which doubled when Ichigo turned around, their gazes meeting, "I've known Isshin Kurosaki for only a few weeks, but that man would never betray your mother. His loyalty is unquestionable. If your father denied Ragyo Kiryuin's advances, I do not doubt she took measures ensuring her efforts were not wasted. She had years to gain his trust. She would not allow anyone - not even Isshin Kurosaki - stand in her way."

"You're right."

"Now is not the time to declare oneself right or wrong," a deep breath escaped her lips as Junketsu's power filled every fiber of her being. The Kamui's unrestrained eagerness was not dissimilar to a child seeking approval. But she was neither Junketsu's parent nor superior. Merely a partner, equal in every way, "We have a mission to complete. I'm assuming Mugetsu is competent enough to act as a distraction?"

" Competent!? A distraction!? How dare -"

"We'll be fine," Ichigo ignored Mugetsu's sputtering indignation, "What about you?"

"You needn't worry about me, Ichigo. Junketsu might not possess Mugetsu's speed or Senketsu's raw power. But I wouldn't trade her for anything," faint traces of a smile pulled upon Satsuki's mouth before vanishing just as quickly, "Now go! Ryuko cannot fight the Original Life Fiber by herself!"

"... she has a point, Ichigo. Senketsu's not nearly powerful enough to take down something that monstrous. But since when was Junketsu better than me?"

"You can argue with Junketsu later," he stepped off the pillar, falling several inches before leaping forward, "Because there's no time to waste! Mugetsu Gufū!"

---

...

---

The Original Life Fiber frowned at the presence. A trilling, almost majestic, spiritual pressure that strummed her Life Fibers. Plucking at the depths of her soul. Turning what minimal enjoyment obtained from torturing the arrancar into disdain. With noticeable annoyance, her eyes swiveled rightwards while the creature in her grasp, an insect believing itself capable of standing in her presence, continued struggling. Its desperate attempts to escape requiring more than a fraction of her attention.

" Hmm?"

Her fingers tightened around Tier Harribel's mouth. All but tearing apart the arrancar's lackluster hierro as she focused upon Ryuko Matoi. The frown adorning her features deepened at the teenager's thoughts and intentions. Which quickly twisted into a disappointed glower upon understanding every aspect of the foolhardy girl's primitive strategy. Its thousands of twists and turns. Mistakes and unintentional advantages.

And everything that occurred after her embarrassing arrival to this spiritual realm.

" How pathetic."

She contemplated ignoring Ryuko Matoi. At least for the moment. That abominable shinigami sending reinforcements was anticipated. Nay, predicted. But she would not underestimate Sosuke Aizen's intelligence. Not again. Never again. Still, this was interesting. She expected him to choose Isshin Kurosaki as their vanguard. But to send Ryuko Matoi, Ichigo Kurosaki and Satsuki Kiryuin? It was absurd. And yet, she was suspicious. Not because of their power. But from the shinigami's confidence in their abilities.

Eliciting a pained gasp from the arrancar was her vice-like grip tightened.

Did that reprehensible shinigami - that contemptible, blasphemous man - believe they possessed an infinitesimal chance of surviving her wrath?

Her spiritual pressure blanketed Las Noches at the implausible - no, impossible - notion. The atmosphere warped underneath her divine presence, threatening to suffocate the arrancar's existence at Sosuke Aizen's true objective.

" Damn him!"

She was enraged. Infuriated beyond any concept created by humanity. Hatred dripped from every word passing through her clenched teeth. Shinra Koketsu twisted furiously around her marionette's corpse. Plucking the information from Ryuko Matoi's unaware threading, she watched Sosuke Aizen speak about forcing Absolute Domination's medium to acquiesce to awaken. If he was successful. If that incomplete marionette utilized Absolute Domination while she was trapped in this forsaken realm? Every fiber of her being trembled at the growing possibility of her prophet's inability - no, absolute failure - to kill Sosuke Aizen and pathetic infatuation for Isshin Kurosaki jeopardizing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

A gurgling choke returned the Original Life Fiber to the matter at hand.

Turning her gaze onto the dark skinned Espada, she focused on the minuscule fraction of her essence circulating through the being's soul, "As that shinigami's subordinate, you know a method of returning to the World of the Living, don't you?"

The arrancar didn't answer. Or rather, the pressure around her mouth, suffocating her lungs of oxygen and forcing her mouth shut, prevented her from speaking. Staring at the defiance in the aqua eyes peering over her fingers, aware but unbothered by the normally bone-breaking punches landing against her stomach, she scoffed, more to herself than annoyance. The creature's power was appreciable. Perhaps enough to destroy the Grand Couturier if she had time to weave Marionette Threads into what function as her mind. And watching the insect tear herself apart taking down that failed marionette, limbs breaking and flesh tearing, would have been amusing.

At least until the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet reached fruition.

But with a casual, almost admonishing, backhand, she dispersed the golden-yellow energy coalescing around the insect's weapon.

" No matter..."

Her fingers slipped away from the arrancar, allowing the insignificant creature to pull herself from the brink of unconsciousness with each gasping, pathetic breath.

"... I didn't expect you to answer."

Blood dribbled from the arrancar's mouth when she thrust the Needle Blade between her ribs. Cracking, and then shattering, the structure behind them. Its paltry construction unable to withstand her strength. Tapping her fingers around the weapon's handle, she watched the creature gasp for breath with something akin to satisfaction. The question was redundant. She didn't need an answer from the insect. Her Life Fibers remembered the shinigami's technique. All she needed was time to replicate the spiritual pathway. To return to Honnouji Academy before Sosuke Aizen awakened Absolute Domination's medium.

And finally destroy those standing against Life Fibers.

But first...

With her fingers caressing the Needle Blade, she haphazardly tore the weapon from the arrancar, carving a bloody gash across Tier Harribel's stomach. She was careful not to allow any of the liquid spurting from the arrancar land upon Shinra Koketsu. Moving carefully - and just enough - to avoid the crimson spray. Turning with a sharp, resounding clack as the insect collapsed to the ground, she listened to the obscene curses on the breeze. Her ears perked at the power rushing from Senketsu's engines. Taut, pert lips twisted into a snarl at the delusions of grandeur filtering through Ryuko Matoi's mind.

And yet, she waited. Patiently and stoically. Blood dripping from the Needle Blade resting in her fingers. As the impertinent hybrid grew closer.

Disturbing bands of shifting colors narrowed as the Scissor Blades - reunited after the Grand Couturier's treachery - carved crimson paths towards her neck.

" It's pointless."

A resounding clang of metal screeched against her ears when she thrust the Needle Blade between the Scissor Blades.

"God damn it!"

The curse came out a little forced. Almost fake. But Ryuko knew - from the Original Life Fiber's arrogant snarl - that the creature believed she was pissed. That she honestly expected Senketsu's awesome, overwhelming strength to slice through Shinra Koketsu without some effort. For a second, she believed the ball of yarn wearing Ragyo Kiryuin's body like a cheap suit realized it was an act. That maybe she saw the future or something. Making everything they were doing pointless.

But then the Needle Blade moved . Pushing towards the Original Life Fiber less than an inch, maybe nothing more than a trick of the eye.

And then the trembling weapon shifted another inch.

" What do you hope to accomplish!?"

Her anger was palpable at Ryuko Matoi's arrogance. Even if it did not speak - no, refused to speak in her presence, perhaps fearful of her divinity - she could sense the Kamui's false optimism. She would not tolerate blasphemy from lowly, rebellious threading! With an animalistic, almost barbaric, snarl, she pushed back. Wiping the smugness from the impertinent hybrid's face when the Scissor Blades stopped inches from her marionette's neck. Overwhelming and reversing their momentary victory in the blink of an eye.

"I thought we would kick your ass!"

Sweat dripped between Ryuko's eyes as Senketsu transformed from Shippu to Senkou. Shifting configuration in a flash of crimson light. And immediately giving her enough power to force the Needle Blade - and her Scissor Blades - towards the Original Life Fiber's throat, "Because thanks to Nui Harime, Senketsu has a shot of taking you down!"

" Is that what you told Ichigo Kurosaki? Satsuki Kiryuin?"

Her attention swiveled to the Scissor Blade in Ryuko Matoi's right hand. The razor-sharp, hardened Life Fibers trembling inches from her neck. And then towards the familiar weapon in the petulance hybrid's other hand.

" Or your delusions?"

A hint of hatred perforated the question. She already knew the answer. She knew what Ryuko Matoi would say. How she would phrase the response. And the emotions passing through her Life Fibers during each moment. Even the Kamui's reaction - its blunt honesty towards Shinra Koketsu and caution - was known! Despite the youth's best efforts, their Life Fibers were akin to an open book! Everything they know - will know - cannot be concealed from her!

Metal screeched when she thrust the Needle Blade downwards, releasing a shockwave of kaleidoscopic spiritual pressure that flattened the desert underneath them. With an exaggerated flourish, she repulsed Ryuko Matoi's counterattack. Her arm blurred, the only traces of movement the rustling of Shinra Koketsu's sleeve, as dozens of strikes were blocked. And then dozens turned into hundreds.

Until reality itself crackled from their clashing presences.

" Did you presume your Kamui could stand against me!?"

A twist of her wrist diverted the Needle Blade mid-swing. The abrupt shift in the weapon's angle of approach, the changed curvature of the razor-sharp edge when the Scissor Blade in Ryuko Matoi's left hand swung towards her shoulder, forced the treacherous hybrid's guard open. Sending her staggering backwards, throw off balance by the subsequent explosion of spiritual energy. And in the next fraction of a second, she stabbed the Needle Blade through the teenager's stomach. And then her chest and throat. Again. And Again.

" Against ALL Life Fibers!?"

And again.

" I am the beginning and end of all things! For all your strength, you're nothing more than an insect!"

A final thrust sent Ryuko Matoi careening across the desert. Smoke drifted from the hybrid's decimated body. Burns covered every exposed inch of flesh. Yet it wasn't enough. Despite regaining some of her strength, the consequences of the Grand Couturier's treacherous refitting of Shinra Koketsu remained. She meant - no, desired - killing Ryuko Matoi using Shinra Koketsu. Ending this farce of a battle before Ichigo Kurosaki's arrival. Yet at the moment of impact, when the teenager's guard was lowered, her Life Fibers faltered. The strain disrupted her concentration. Turning an attack meant to disintegrate every fiber of Ryuko Matoi's being into something merely powerful.

And that wasn't good enough.

"Damn it! She's still tough as hell! I'll give her that!"

Through one half-opened eye, Ryuko watched the Original Life Fiber shrink into a pinpoint on the horizon. Damn it! What the hell happened? Weakened or not, the thing was stronger than anything they'd fought. Even the undead bastard couldn't hold a candle to the monster wearing her mom's corpse like a cheap, second-hand suit. As the wind whipped through her hair, she pushed aside the mild discomfort from the Needle Blade stabbing her body. Wincing as the damage regenerated, "But it's nothing we can't handle!"

" Be careful, Ryuko. Nui Harime may have weakened its threading, but the Original Life Fiber is still quite formidable," Senketsu couldn't suppress the tremble rippling throughout his threading. The sense of existential dread radiating from the Original Life Fiber was almost instinctual, "And it's rather angry with us."

"Heh... I know."

With an obnoxious clack, she slammed her heels against the air, creating twin trails of smoke before flipping into a kneeling crouch. As the rushing wind died, and the deafening silence filling Las Noches rang in her ears, she spat a glob of blood over her shoulder. It sucked getting stabbed in the chest! She would never get used to the sensation of her Life Fibers sewing themselves back together. It wasn't painful. Just freaky. And disturbing.

"I really want to piss this thing off, Senketsu," she tossed the Scissor Blades until their curved handles rested in the palms of her hands, "Because the angrier we make it, the more likely it won't see what's coming!"

" That's dangerous!"

For the first time in weeks, Senketsu vehemently disagreed with Ryuko. That was not to say he didn't understand the plan. On the contrary, it was sound logic. And despite his concerns about being a distraction alongside Ichigo and Mugetsu, stopping the Original Life Fiber was important. More important than anything. He accepted that. But Ryuko was taking things too far! She might not have sensed it, but Nui Harime's sabotage saved their lives. If the Grand Couturier hadn't adjusted Shinra Koketsu's threading, that last attack would have killed them.

" Ichigo and Mugetsu are still too far away! If the Original Life Fiber decides to -"

"I know, Senketsu."

Ryuko smudged the blood leaking from the corner of her mouth onto Senketsu. He was right. Whether she liked it or not, Senketsu always knew the right thing to say. But did he think she enjoyed throwing herself at the Original Life Fiber? Hell no! The thing could read their Life Fibers! It said so itself! It probably knew her plan from the moment they arrived! Which meant pissing the damn thing off... making sure it was so freaking upset and annoyed that it wanted nothing more than to kick her ass... was the only way to get around something able to predict the damn future!

"But this thing can read our thoughts."

The crimson undertone in her feathery hair softened as she glared at the kaleidoscopic light on the horizon, "So being reckless and stupid is the only -"

With a disconcerting lurch, her head snapped sideways. The bones in her neck almost breaking when the Original Life Fiber teleported thousands of feet in the blink of eye. Half-formed thoughts flickered across the edges of her consciousness at the manicured fingers clasp her face. Spittle trailed from her lips when the talon-like fingernails pierced her skin, drawing blood as the Original Life Fiber flickered into view.

" Lumière Divine."

Ryuko screamed when the multicolored explosion detonated point-blank against her face. She heard the Original Life Fiber's arrogant satisfaction as the energy threatened to overwhelm her and Senketsu. The pain was excruciating. Almost unbearable. Far worse than her bitch of a mom's cheap shot back at Honnouji Academy. And from the power pushing against her body, the piece of scrap clothing wanted to end things with one final, cheap-as-hell, shot! And that pissed her off!

If the Original Life Fiber thought she couldn't stand a little 'tough love,' she was more than happy to prove it wrong!

"Like hell I'm gonna..."

She threw her shoulders forward, pushing back against the Original Life Fiber's attack. A wince - then curse - tore from her throat when she smashed through one of the weird buildings sticking out of the desert. But that was nothing more than a tickle! She didn't feel a goddamn thing! With an enraged snarl, her heels clacked against the air. Her knees flexed when she stopped the technique in its tracks, Senketsu glowing with a vibrant, crimson light.

"... let this stupid attack..."

Senketsu's voice faded into the background as she thrust the Scissor Blades into the chaotic mess. Throwing caution to the wind by stabbing directly into the middle of the Original Life Fiber's attack. Her vision swam beneath the blinding light as the only sound reaching her ears was the constant, deafening roar. Shit! This was hard! But she wasn't going to die without putting up a fight! Roaring over the cacophony as energy burst from Senketsu, she pushed against the turbulent, almost physical, light. The Scissor Blades vanished into the multicolored energy as the attack bent, inch by freaking inch, away from her body.

"... take me down!"

With one final curse, she sliced through the technique. And then several more times for good measure. Until nothing remained but shards of rainbow light drifting around them like rain.

" Ryuko!"

The corner of her mouth twitched long before Senketsu shouted in her ears, "Yeah! I know!"

She barely finished speaking before the creature wearing her mom like a cheap, secondhand dress attempted to grab Senketsu. The initial surprise from watching the Original Life Fiber teleport across Las Noches quickly shifted into an annoyed snarl at the energy gathering above the manicured fingers inches from her throat. It was more than enough power to destroy Senketsu.

And then, at the last possible moment, with her heart beating a mile a minute, she leaned backwards.

"You can predict the future, right?"

Ryuko didn't blink beneath the Original Life Fiber's withering glare. Damn it! Just looking into the creature's pissed expression was nerve-wracking! But why would something capable of seeing into the future get pissed about a stupid question? Unless... there were limits to its powers! Bolstered by that knowledge, and with Senketsu helping every step of the way, she twisted her wrists. At this range, there was no way the creature could dodge! Even with predicting the future! That thought - that flicker of confidence - raised her spirits as the Scissor Blade in her right hand extended into Decapitation Mode. Immediately getting the Original Life Fiber's attention.

Until the Scissor Blade in her left hand did the same thing.

"Well, try predicting this!"

An afterimage lagged behind their movements when she drove both knees into the Original Life Fiber, giving them more than enough breathing room, "Because I just freaking made it up!"

Time slowed to a crawl when she flipped the Scissor Blades until both edges were facing Shinra Koketsu. Her arms trembled not from exhaustion but sheer determination to finally kick Ragyo Kiryuin's ass. The crimson undertone in her hair, one of the only signs of what her mom did, shimmered brightly as power flowed through Senketsu. Causing him to tighten and push more spiritual energy into the Scissor Blades. Her smirk turned sinister, a single tooth falling over the edge of her lips when the swords were covered in crackling, buzzing torrents of energy. And at the last possible moment, when the ugly ball of yarn finally realized what she had planned, she swung using every scrap of power in her body.

"SENJIN GENKAI!"

She immediately grimaced underneath the stronger-than-expected backlash of energy splashing against the Original Life Fiber. And all she could see, all she could sense, was Senketsu's power. Damn it! It felt like she was standing in Honnouji Academy's sauna. Or Mako's bathroom when Satsuki made them super rich.

But thinking about Mako only made her push harder .

With the intense heat burning her skin, and causing Senketsu to grumble, she finished swinging the Scissor Blades. Crossing them over each other while the massive crimson explosion enveloped the creature wearing Ragyo Kiryuin like a cheap suit. She stared into the cross-shaped eruption of Senketsu's power rippling across Las Noches, her grin widening when the energy blasted through the remains of Aizen's former base. Electrifying the atmosphere. Making her fingers tingle right before she felt Senketsu's threading strain from using something so damn powerful.

But feeling a little tired was worth it if...

"... it did some damage?"

Ryuko gasped alongside Senketsu when the Original Life Fiber emerged from Senjin Genkai. Her most powerful attack, something designed with both Scissor Blades in mind, shattered with a single wave of her mom's hand. Leaving the monster unharmed as the spiritual energy dispersed into nothingness. Or, nearly unharmed. Because the only damage she could spot on Shinra Koketsu, the sole piece of evidence suggesting her efforts amounted to something, was a small-cross-shaped tear across the ultimate Kamui. A blemish that was regenerating before her eyes.

"What the -"

The air was dragged from her lungs when cold fingers latched around her throat, "Don't be ridiculous."

Contempt dripped at the asinine question spewing from Ryuko Matoi's lips. Then again, witnessing one's most powerful technique, forged from their Life Fibers and created under the encompassing guise of desperation, shattered couldn't be ignored. She could already see the emotions synchronizing between Kamui and hybrid. The concern meeting worry, twisting into suppressed frustration, was exhilarating. If only the teenager realized the hopelessness of their situation, "Before you arrived... before you spewed incessant drivel... before you imagined the technique... I knew you would decide upon Senjin Genkai as a desperate, pathetic coup de grâce ."

She tightened her hold upon Ryuko, "All I needed to do was play along. And then, at your moment of triumph, negate the damage through synchronization. It was that simple."

"D-Damn it..."

Ryuko coughed when the pressure around her neck worsened, "You were fucking with us this whole time!?"

" On the contrary, my disdain towards your actions..."

Accompanied by the sound of crinkling fabric, the Original Life Fiber smashed her fist into Ryuko Matoi's stomach. The taut muscles caved beneath her strength. Spittle flew from the obnoxious teenager's mouth. A snarling frown twisted her features when she punched the youth once more, breaking several ribs and inducing a painful gasp, "... wasn't acting!"

The third, and subsequent, strikes returned the damage sustained by her prophet. Each punch expression what humanity, in their limited wisdom and intelligence, defined as hatred. But was she, a greater and more divine existence, knew as retribution, "You raised your hands against me! Your Kamui had the audacity to believe itself my equal! And you worked alongside those seeking my destruction!"

She wasn't shouting. No, allowing herself to lose control would only grant Ryuko Matoi a modicum of satisfaction. As the teenager's blood dripped from her fingers, flowing from the smooth, perfect skin like water, she relented. Allowing the hybrid to catch her breath. But, as expected, the anger in Ryuko's determined eyes was palpable. And for that, she once more smashed her fist against the teenager's cheek.

With the sickening cracking of bones shattering beneath her knuckles, she ended the hybrid's insult before she opened her mouth.

" But don't get me wrong."

She traced the contours of Ryuko Matoi's chin, feeling each and every Life Fiber along the way, "Although it won't save you, I am impressed by your ingenuity."

Ryuko spat the blood filling her mouth onto Shinra Koketsu, "The hell are you talking about?"

" It took two seconds for you to imagine Senjin Genkai. One second for your Kamui to incorporate the information. And another three seconds to properly synchronize your Life Fibers. Against any other being, it likely would have succeeded."

It was pathetic, almost lamentable, that Ryuko Matoi believed her attention would lapse even for a moment. That answering such a trifling question would split her attention. As a matter of fact, Ryuko already had a working strategy. An escape plan that, against anyone other than herself, had a significant chance of success. So, without warning, she shattered every bone in the teenager's arm with a disturbing, yet satisfying, crack .

Intercepting the Scissor Blade before the notion crossed the annoyingly resilient hybrid's mind.

" But I already know everything you will say or do! Your existence began with me! And through these hand, I shall unravel it one Life Fiber at a time!"

"Bullshit!"

Ryuko spat at the Original Life Fiber's cocky... bitchy... smirk. There was no doubt about it. The monster wearing her mom's ragged corpse was enjoying watching her body pull itself together one Life Fiber at a time, "You keep yapping about predicting the future! But you're bluffing! If that was true, you would have already kicked Senketsu and me halfway across this stupid place before we knew what happened!"

" Are you trying to sew doubt into my mind?"

The strangled gasp from Ryuko Matoi was cathartic. Almost poetic given her treachery against Life Fibers, "Even if that was true, what can you hope to accomplish? Do you plan on waiting until the perfect moment to lash out with the Scissor Blades? Or, perhaps you're thinking of shifting your Kamui's gestalt in some desperate hope of escaping. Or maybe, despite knowing everything you do, everything you try, will amount to nothing, you're actually a distraction..."

A smirk pulled on her lips as she slowly, almost deliberately so, glanced over her shoulder, "... isn't that right, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Even without using precognition, it was almost pathetically easy sensing the youth's approach. He hadn't made any effort concealing his presence. And despite standing a few feet away from Shinra Koketsu, Tournesol gripped overhead with both hands, spiritual energy thrumming along the blade until it sung, she knew how Ichigo Kurosaki would act. How he intended to swing his weapon. That he was using the knowledge gleaned from the Grand Couturier and his own observations, astute they may be, to strike while she was preoccupied with Ryuko Matoi's insolence.

"GETSUGA TENSHOU!"

She stopped Tournesol with a backhanded swing.

Her fingers plucked against the Life Fibers composing the Needle Blade as she intercepted Ichigo's attack. Tightening subtly, imperceptibly, as the hardened Life Fiber weapon froze inches above her neck. The edges of their respective weapons fought for dominance. A battle she quickly - and effortlessly - won. Emerging victorious before the youth realized he had already lost. Yet she was frustrated. Infuriated. And that divine desire for retribution made itself known when she shattered the energy surrounding Tournesol. With nothing more than a flick of her wrist, she dismantled the teenager's technique one threading at a time.

Once more demonstrating her superiority.

" You really shouldn't have given Bakuzan to Satsuki Kiryuin."

The hybrid's grip upon Tournesol tightened at the truth. Just as she knew it would. Precognition or not, even without knowing Satsuki Kiryuin's ulterior motives, only a naïve inferior being wouldn't realize the teenager's plans, "That was a fatal mistake."

With a sharp, ear-wrenching clang of metal upon metal, she swung the Needle Blade clockwise in a half-arc. Forcing Tournesol outwards. Breaking through Ichigo Kurosaki's defenses alongside an outpouring of Shinra Koketsu's spiritual pressure. And, just as expected, he leaned backwards at the first opportunity. When her index finger momentarily slipped against the Needle Blade. A minor inconvenience. Something that would allow him, under normal circumstances and against an equal foe, to turn things to his advantage. A strategy implemented when Ichigo's shoulders stiffened. When his gaze hardened, energy thrumming through his Life Fibers.

But against her, anything he, or Ryuko Matoi, attempted, amounted to naught.

" Unfortunately..."

In a single, fractured moment, as Ichigo Kurosaki stepped forward, intent on breaking her guard, she callously discarded Ryuko Matoi. Her fingers twisted against the Kamui's smooth surface before an explosion of power trickled from Shinra Koketsu, sending the impudent teenager crashing to the ground. During that same fraction of time, when the traitor's offspring began responding to her actions, she swung the Needle Blade against Tournesol.

"... that STILL wouldn't have been enough!"

She witnessed the frustration etched upon the teenager's expression. The trembling of his muscles when the Needle Blade slid along Tournesol before halting against the foreign blade's guard, the relatively minor impact sending waves of spiritual pressure echoing across Las Noches, was pathetic. And then she pushed. Using more than enough power - and her intimate knowledge of Ichigo's planned counter - to overwhelm his efforts. Turning his counterattack into a desperate defense as his own sword's razor-sharp edge inches towards his face. And then, with a casual twist of her fingers, she completely shattered his guard.

Only for her following strike to sever, not his head as expected, but a few strands of orange hair when he ducked. Granting him the opportunity, with her arm extended and body posed overhead, to return the favor.

When the Needle Blade reached its apogee above Ichigo Kurosaki's shoulders, she flipped the multicolored blade into a reverse hold. Another being would react to the weapon thrusting towards their heart. They would try to avoid such an attack. But her smirk, already manic, widened as she moved just enough for Tournesol to miss Shinra Koketsu, "But you already knew that, didn't you?"

Blood and viscera mixed within glowing sapphire as the Needle Blade carved a path of destruction across Ichigo Kurosaki's upper body. With a flick, she removed the blood from the Needle Blade, her attention already focused on the other problem while his body crashed to the ground.

" As for you..."

She halted the Scissor Blades by gripping Ryuko Matoi's right wrist once the teenager came within arm's length and pulling sideways, forcing both weapons away from her body. The subsequent flicker of multicolored energy and subtle fluttering from Shinra Koketsu when she parried the next attack wasn't required. Not to prevent Ryuko from escaping nor to have the hybrid realize nothing she did amounted to anything. But to infuriate the girl. With every interaction between their weapons, she observed Ryuko's expression. She peered into the future. Witnessing the girl's infinite reactions in the time required for her nervous heart to beat a single time.

If she shifted to the right, Ryuko would attempt another Senjin Genkai.

Retreating across Las Noches would force Ryuko to prepare Niban Genkai with both Scissor Blades. And, of course, drawing Ichigo back into the fray.

If she struck first, Ryuko would discard one of the Scissor Blades to grab the Needle Blade. Giving her enough purchase to slam a knee into Shinra Koketsu. Which she would avoid by shifting her center of balance.

Countless options.

It was almost too easy.

When the teenager pivoted with a sharp clack, the Scissor Blade in her left hand arcing downwards, aiming at the junction of her neck and shoulders, she thrust the Needle Blade through the hole near the weapon's edge. Flexing her wrist, she then pulled the shocked hybrid forward until their faces nearly touched. The fear radiating through Ryuko's Life Fibers beneath her pompous, arrogant bluster exhilarating.

"... you shouldn't make me repeat myself."

With a sickening squelch, the Needle Blade perforated Ryuko's stomach. A gasp - then curse - forced its way through her lips at the sensation. At the feeling of metal digging its way into her body. But it was the Original Life Fiber's grin that raised warning bells. She knew that smirk. It was Ragyo Kiryuin's. Right down to the evil glint in their eyes. But that didn't help when the ball of yarn suddenly sliced through half of her body before she could grab the damn weapon.

And then punched her nose.

Hard .

Several times.

"Damn it..."

Ichigo forced himself onto one knee, and then onto stumbling feet, when Ryuko crashed head-first into the sand. He panted, heavily and deeply, while sweat dripped down his face. As flesh and Life Fibers stitched together until nothing remained of the Original Life Fiber's attack but painful memories, "I knew it wouldn't be easy. But... damn it! How the hell are we supposed to keep it busy when it's messing with us?"

" This is getting dangerous, Ichigo."

Mugetsu disliked the sensation of the Needle Blade carving through her threading. While regenerating the damage from a single hardened Life Fiber weapon wasn't difficult, it wasn't something she preferred experiencing. Especially since Ryuko and Senketsu, not Ichigo, should function as distraction. Since it was their plan to rush the Original Life Fiber like a pair of idiots, "It's toying with us. And Senketsu. How can we stop something when it already knows what we're going to do?"

"I don't know."

He grimaced at the question, "But giving up? We don't have that option, Mugetsu. I know you don't like it, but if we don't stop the Original Life Fiber, there's no way Aizen or Kisuke would stand a chance. You feel it, right? It's getting stronger. Fixing whatever Nui did to Shinra Koketsu. If we don't take this thing down, Yuzu, Karin and everyone else will die!"

"Like hell we're going to lose!"

A trembling fist smashed into Las Noches as Ryuko seethed at the Original Life Fiber. She didn't need to hear Mugetsu to know things were bad! That was obvious! Unless they figured out a way around the stupid ball of yarn's story-breaking power, they wouldn't last long enough for Satsuki's plan to work. Whatever it was! And the monster knew they were stalling for time! Her eyes narrowing when the Original Life Fiber didn't immediately beat them senseless, she cautiously yanked the Scissor Blades out of the sand, never taking her attention away from the rainbow bitch in the sky.

"Shit! What's it waiting for? A freaking invitation?"

"It's Satsuki."

The answer didn't feel right. But even as he stood at Ryuko's side, Ichigo couldn't escape the notion something was strange. It was a theory. But with everything riding on their shoulders and the Original Life Fiber's sudden hesitation, it was the only explanation that made sense, "The Original Life Fiber can read our thoughts. It can predict the future. But Satsuki didn't tell us what she planned to do. She didn't say anything. We're flying blind. Hoping she has something up her sleeves to beat this thing. And since we don't know anything..."

Senketsu's eyes widened, "... the Original Life Fiber's also clueless!"

"So, the bitch is worried, huh?"

"No wonder she's pissed," Ryuko grinned, "She's probably going crazy trying to figure out what Satsuki's planning."

" Be careful, Ryuko," Senketsu knew that confident smirk. Months spent being worn, dozens of comfortable hand-washings and ironings afforded him a measure of knowledge matched only by Ichigo's relationship with Mugetsu, "Rushing into battle without thinking is highly dangerous. Besides, the longer we wait down here, the more likely she'll come to us. We ARE a distraction, after all."

"Don't remind me."

She would never admit it. And painfully kick anyone's ass who claimed otherwise. But in hindsight, throwing herself at the Original Life Fiber as a distraction was a stupid plan, "But we've been through worse, Senketsu. So, we ain't giving up! Not until we take down this thing!"

" Is that so?"

It was the Grand Couturier's unwarranted refitting of Shinra Koketsu that prevented Tournesol and the Scissor Blade from shattering. Despite squeezing the hardened Life Fiber blades between her fingers, they were unyielding. But she didn't announce that frustration. She didn't give Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi a single trace of hope, "You still believe Satsuki Kiryuin capable of defeating me?"

She observed Ichigo responding to her sudden appearance by kicking Shinra Koketsu. Then, when the youth actually attacked, she raised her forearm, blocking the feeble attack while the spiritual energy circulating through his Life Fibers and Kamui exploded harmlessly across Las Noches.

At the same time Ichigo used her hold upon Tournesol as a fulcrum, her attention shifted towards Ryuko. Before the former raised his foot, sapphire energy thrumming through his Life Fibers, she observed her prophet's daughter taking advantage of the distraction. Both the successful strike on Shinra Koketsu and the countered failure. And countless other alternatives that would never come to pass.

Her eyes tracked the hardened Life Fiber weapon as Ryuko Matoi stepped backwards with the sharp clack of one heel against air.

She twisted, gently and purposely, counterclockwise around Ichigo's surprise attack. A flicker of motion accentuated her avoidance of the Scissor Blades when Ryuko recovered from her ignominious failure. She pivoted sharply, tracking the paths - present and future - of both hybrid and Kamui, before blocking their weapons with the Needle Blade. A single swing downwards, angled away from Shinra Koketsu, instantly shattered their collective guard.

" It is because of ME that humanity exists!"

Her body danced above the bone-white dunes.

Every movement... every subtle motion... was guided by the changing future. Nothing was purposeless. And they followed. Throwing everything at Shinra Koketsu. At herself. Knowing their world's existence hung in the balance. As she knew they would. And she met their challenges without faltering. With precision surpassing instinct, she countered their increasingly desperate attacks.

In a flash of multicolored light, another Needle Blade spun from Shinra Koketsu into her waiting fingers.

The once amiable expression adorning her features furrowed when Ichigo and Ryuko struck from opposite directions. Her eyes narrowed at the hardened Life Fiber weapons fervently inching towards Shinra Koketsu, spiritual energy flowing upon their razor-sharp edges, "And you believe - truly believe - Satsuki Kiryuin, an arrogant, pathetic human, can stand against ME!?"

Shinra Koketsu rippled alongside the metallic clang of hardened Life Fibers upon each other. Her fingers tightened against the slim handles of the Needle Blades as the accompanying eruption of clashing spiritual pressures illuminated Las Noches with flashes of crimson, sapphire and other colors, "How absurd!"

A snarl - hateful and inhuman - pulled upon her sneering lips as, with naught but a subconscious desire, she overpowered their Kamui, "Your reliance on Satsuki Kiryuin is nothing more than a feeble, desperate dream!"

The flutter of fabric whispered into her ears when she crossed her arms, catching Tournesol and the Scissor Blades upon her own weapons, "You believe you're distracting me!?"

She allowed one Needle Blade to slip from her fingers. With a purposely vague expression of frustration, she allowed the sword blocking Tournesol to falter. And, as expected, it drew Ichigo Kurosaki's attention. His well-honed instincts forcing him to respond. Which all but earned the subsequent grunt when she grabbed his throat, cracking his Kamui's armor in the process, and slammed them into Ryuko, "Past! Present! Future! Nothing you do is concealed from me! Your efforts are forfeit! So perish with the knowledge all you accomplished amounted to nothing!"

"Shut up!"

Ichigo knew, beyond any shadow of a doubt, the Original Life Fiber was toying with them. It was angry. It hated Ryuko and his existences. And given the chance, it would like nothing more than killing them. That much he knew. And the moment Satsuki arrived, it would use Shinra Koketsu's remaining strength to slaughter her. But still, he mentally begged Mugetsu for power.

Just enough to last a few more minutes.

"You probably already know this, but I've spent the last few minutes trying to figure a way around your precognition. Nothing's perfect. I thought I could find a weakness. Something that would take you down. But you were right. The way you are now, it's impossible to catch you off guard. Not when you can predict the future."

"But we WILL kick your glowing, bitchy ass!"

The anger flowing through her veins was unlike anything she'd felt. But Ryuko's mind was clear. As the Scissor Blades shimmered beneath crimson mirages, Senketsu's power covering her dad's weapons with enough energy to take down Nui Harime, she spat at the Original Life Fiber, "Because failing isn't an option! Everyone's counting on us! Mako! Orihime! And even Ichigo's old man! They'll be pissed if we lose to a pathetic ball of yarn! So, like it or not, take your precognition and shove it up your ass!"

She crossed the Scissor Blades, purposely holding them in front of Senketsu, "It's that fucking simple!"

" Enough of this charade!"

Every last scrap of Shinra Koketsu's remaining power - what she recovered since the Grand Couturier's betrayal - thrummed at her fingers. The Needle Blades quivered as the ultimate Kamui flared. Rows upon rows of multicolored eyes, various shades of crimson, orange and yellow, opened. As she forced the betrayed fabric underneath her divine will. Enough was enough! She could sense Junketsu. But the Kamui was perched upon a building in the distance. Waiting alongside Satsuki Kiryuin.

But if the human deigned not to interfere with Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi, she would no longer wait!

Las Noches trembled beneath the unrestricted weight of her divine presence. The impertinent hybrids stumbled, but did not kneel, as reality itself bent to her whims. Power flowed from the spiritual realm into Shinra Koketsu. The pure energy flowed through her Life Fibers into the Needle Blades. Saturating the multicolored swords as a facsimile of the ultimate Kamui's former grace illuminated the silent desert.

" So perish knowing Satsuki Kiryuin never -"

Blood sprayed from her chest when two swords - one midnight black and the other golden - thrust through Shinra Koketsu. Her mouth opened in a silent scream, confusion transforming into vitriolic hatred at their familiarity .

How!?

How was this possible!?

With her teeth stained crimson, the Original Life Fiber felt the energy she so painstakingly gathered dissipate. Severed, physically and metaphorically, by the hardened Life Fiber blades propelling her forward. Gasping, she turned trembling eyes towards the source of her shock. To Satsuki Kiryuin standing behind her.

Completely naked.

Bereft of Kamui and clothing.

" What!?"

For once, Satsuki was proud of Ragyo Kiryuin's tutelage as she crossed her wrists, forcing both iterations of Bakuzan into a form reminiscent of the Scissor Blades. Not a trace of anger slipped through the stoic façade. The only expression the Original Life Fiber recognized through her mother's corpse was confidence. Certainty . And everything representing humanity when she tore Bakuzan in opposite directions, shimmers of blue-white energy flowing upon the blades.

"KOUKI SEN'I SŌSHITSU!"

Never Can Say Goodbye

I write these author's notes to get my thoughts on the writing process across. It helps, I find, to convey how I come to decisions in order to minimize confusion. Which leads to the major questions settled in this chapter and the answer to the long-running poll on my author's page - who Ichigo ends up with. Ryuko or Satsuki. The answer is below but I would like to discuss my dislike for romance displayed in a large quantity of manga and anime. Where the main character falls in love at first sight with little to no time for the relationship to develop beyond that point.

Sure, I can accept some writers and/or artists don't wish to spend an exorbitant amount of time developing relationships. Time which could be better spent on the actual plot of the story. I get that. And, perhaps, I accept that. But one thing I've tried to keep despite supernatural suits of Life Fibers, swords forged from one's soul and an eldritch creature bent on subsuming humanity as part of its reproductive cycle is a sense of realism when it comes to relationships. Hence, how Ichigo's relationship with Ryuko and Satsuki developed over the course of the story. Where they, over time, opened up more and more. Were more willing to expose their feelings. Etc.

And this realism involves, by necessity, Ryuko and Satsuki's troubled childhoods. The former acting out for attention due to her father sending her to boarding school for most of her childhood and young teens. And the latter due to Ragyo Kiryuin. These things affected how Ryuko and Satsuki's relationship with Ichigo developed.

That being said, whether you like my decision or not, please not that it wasn't easy. I didn't make the choice months - years - in advance. On the contrary, up until writing this chapter, I was prepared to go with either one. In fact, I had outlines for both Ryuko and Satsuki prepared. So, if you're upset, please keep that in mind.

*And if you wish to discuss the matter further, please send me a PM.
I'll be more than happy to answer any questions.*

---

...

---

Chapter 64 - Never Can Say Goodbye

"Oh! Come on!"

As her heels scrapped against the air beyond the edge of the Garganta, Ryuko swore to beat the shit out of Sosuke Aizen. No, she had to kick his ass. And she knew Senketsu was with her every step of the way. They were synchronized on kicking the bastard's ass from Honnou City to Karakura Town! And for a damn good reason! Because, as she fell forward out of the dimensional portal, cursing at the top of her lungs, Ryuko realized the so-called genius forgot to put the Garganta near the ground like a goddamn normal person!

"That goddamn bastard's screwing with us!"

Ryuko considered herself lucky Senketsu was always on top of things. That his quick thinking shifted their balance at the last second, making her stumble instead of falling flat on her ass. Licking the inside of her mouth before spitting on the ground, she glared back and forth across the ruined landscape for the shinigami. The Scissor Blade itching to slice the bastard apart. But once she recovered her bearings, and the adrenaline from fighting the Original Life Fiber faded, Ryuko decided to hold off on kicking Sosuke Aizen's smug ass. And it didn't have anything to do with being too tired to deal with his pompous attitude.

All she needed to see was the empty skies above Honnouji Academy.

"Hah! We pulled it off, Senketsu!"

With a deep, exhausted and utterly content sigh, she collapsed onto her back, the Scissor Blades slipping from her fingers. Somewhere in the distance, she could hear something calling her name. A voice that sounded awfully familiar. But Ryuko was too tired to care. Because they won! The Original Life Fiber wasn't coming back. Not after Satsuki's stunt! That was all that mattered! Grinning at the memory, her breath condensed into a wispy mist as she laughed. But when Senketsu returned to normal in a flash of crimson light, leaving her splayed on the ground in her school uniform, Ryuko discovered she couldn't lift a single finger.

"Shit... I can't move..."

" It's been quite the night, Ryuko."

Senketsu yawned. However, since he lacked the proper anatomy to express his exhaustion, the sound emerged into a visible ripple across his uniform, "Fighting Nui Harime and Ragyo Kiryuin back to back. Not to mention the Original Life Fiber. I cannot remember the last time I've felt so drained of energy. But I've failed you."

"Huh?"

" Your father created me purpose of combating Life Fibers. Yet our strength insufficient against Ragyo Kiryuin," Senketsu looked downwards, aware from Ryuko, "Despite working together... pushing ourselves to new heights... we never reached the same level as Junketsu."

Ryuko stared through half-lidded eyes at the moon. After spending months searching for her dad's killer and getting dragged into one thing after another, finally winning didn't feel that normal, "If you're that worried, Senketsu, I'll ask Satsuki about fashion week. And if she doesn't know anything, we'll figure out another way to reach that level of power. Together."

" R-Really?"

"Yeah," her lips quirked into a smirk. But as Senketsu started blubbering - and tears of joy formed in his eye - she spontaneously, perhaps miraculously, recovered enough strength to lean away, "H- Hey! Don't start crying on me! You're getting all damp and gross!"

" S-Sorry," Senketsu sniffled, an odd sound that echoed more in Ryuko's mind than any physical displacement of air, "It's just... once we figure out fashion week, Mugetsu will have no choice but to admit I'M superior!"

"Hold on..."

Ryuko's eyebrow twitched as she pieced together her Kamui's answer. Trying to understand what he meant. But when no startling revelations came to mind, she fell back on her normal response whenever Senketsu compared himself to Mugetsu, "THAT'S what you're crying -"

"RYUKO!"

She had no time to react before Mako's arms wrapped around her neck. And then dragged her forward off the ground. Gagging as her best friend's strength and her unnatural exhaustion made breathing painful, Ryuko clawed at the air. Damn it! She didn't help Satsuki kick the Original Life Fiber's ass to die like this! Fire burned in her veins as, with renewed vigor and strength, she managed to breathe. To take big, heaping gulps of air. So, when the vice-like grip returned moments later, Mako snuggling against Senketsu, Ryuko didn't resist. Despite feeling like crap, she blinked, then frowned, before shouting in surprise.

"Mako! You're alright!"

"Everyone made it out safe and sound, Ryuko," Mako didn't stop hugging. Not even for a moment. She was so relieved that she squeezed as hard as humanly possible, "Gamagori and Chad got hurt fighting those super-duper copies! They fought tooth-and-nail to win! I saw it with my own eyes, Ryuko! Those clones were super tough! Nobody danced away without a few cuts and bruises! And that's why after you, Ichigo and Lady Satsuki left, Mr. Aizen suggested we visit Orihime!"

" Mr. Aizen?"

Despite having a decent understanding of Mako's train of thought, it took Ryuko a few seconds to process the information, "You're saying Orihime's fine!?"

"Yup!"

Mako nodded. Enthusiastically. Happily. And then Satsuki and Ichigo leapt through the swirly portal leading to the realm of the dead. Which, if she squinted just hard enough, resembled one of those weird, deserts from geography class. But even so, once they landed, and Ichigo collapsed from being super tired just like Ryuko, she pointed over her shoulder at Uryu and Chad. Who were much closer than she remembered, "She's right over there!"

"Ichigo!"

Ichigo couldn't believe his eyes.

Despite the unconscionable things Ragyo Kiryuin did, or might have done, Orihime was fine. She didn't have a scratch on her. He sagged in relief. The tension left his shoulders as the guilt and worry gnawing at his mind dissipated. As Orihime ran across the broken landscape faster than he remembered, Ichigo heard Mugetsu's exhausted groan before she returned to normal, too tired to maintain the transformation. Which left him, or rather them, weak and exhausted. And at Orihime's mercy when she hugged him.

Sending them sprawling to the ground.

And her forehead straight into his nose.

"Oh my god! Ichigo!"

"I'm fine," it was baffling how Orihime's hard head gave him a bloody nose when he tanked punches from Ragyo Kiryuin without trouble. But it wasn't a problem. In fact, he already felt his Life Fibers repairing the damage. Still, Ryuko's snickering wasn't helping. Neither was Satsuki's uncharacteristic smirk. And Orihime's embarrassed blush only helped to make things worse .

"You don't need to worry about it, Orihime," he glared at Mugetsu, daring the Kamui to chuckle at his misfortunate, before standing up with a groan, "I'm already feeling better. So, it seems kind of a waste using your Shun Shun Rikka to -"

"Move it, asshole!"

Sprinting full-tilt out of the Garganta, Emilou Apacci planted her foot against Ichigo Kurosaki's head before vaulting onto the ground. She couldn't give less of a crap about his feelings or injuries. She was pissed. She was angry. But most of all, she hated herself for being scared. For being worthless. How could she let Lady Harribel to fight that thing? She should have done something! Anything! Yet when that monstrous thing arrived in Las Noches, all she could do was run away with her tail between her legs. It didn't matter that Sung-Sun and Mila Rose hadn't fared any better against the horrendous spiritual pressure.

That she, of all arrancar, was forced to leave everything to those humans and their weird clothes wracked her mind with guilt.

It was shameful .

"YOU!"

Despite almost shouting, Apacci just wanted to make sure Orihime Inoue got the message. But then, before saying anything else, she paused. Hesitating mid-stomp as anger succumbed to mind-searing terror. She had been ready to beg the human for help. To fall on her hands and knees, throwing pride to the wind, if it meant saving Lady Harribel's life. But the moment she turned towards Orihime, Sung-

Sun and Mila Rose exiting the Garganta with the latter carrying Lady Harribel, her words devolved into a strangled gasp. She stiffened, eyes trembling and arms shaking, as Sosuke Aizen slowly marched across the landscape.

Out of instinct, out of self-preservation, she twisted her arms together, fingers gripping the collars around her wrist.

"There's no reason to be alarmed."

Aizen dismissed the arrancar's reaction to his presence. Neither did Ichigo Kurosaki or Satsuki Kiryuin's expression garner sympathy. From Emilou Apacci's posture, she presumed he was upset about their betrayal. Or survival. Which was, in and of itself, an interesting conjecture. He'd believed the Seireitei slaughtered the Espada he painstakingly gathered as pawns for humanity's future. The notion Tier Harribel survived the battle, let alone returned to Las Noches in the ensuing months, hadn't crossed his mind when he sent the Original Life Fiber through the Garganta.

"I won't prevent Orihime Inoue from resuscitating Tier Harribel."

With a soft clack, he sheathed Kyouka Suigetsu, "Neither will I interfere with your efforts to return to Las Noches. You are free to do as you please."

Apacci's hands trembled at the bastard's tone. She sure as hell didn't trust Sosuke Aizen. Not after everything he did to Lady Harribel. And his insufferable, arrogant smirk really pissed her off. But whether she liked it or not, there was nothing she could do. Aizen was too strong. And he knew it. So, with as much reluctance as she could muster, Apacci snapped Cierva back onto her wrists. All the while anticipating whatever complicated scheme Aizen had waiting in the wings. But when the shinigami didn't move an inch, she snorted out the side of her mouth, taking some amusement from his bloodied appearance.

But any remaining semblance of self-composure shattered when she grabbed Orihime's wrist.

It was nearly instantaneous. The moment her fingers touched the teenager, Apacci felt the overwhelming instinct to run back to Hueco Mundo with her tail between her legs. Whatever Orihime Inoue was, she wasn't human. Not anymore. And the terror flooding her soul. It reminded her of the disturbing creature who almost killed Lady Harribel. But with a determined snarl, she pushed through the instincts clouding her judgment. Blood dribbled down her chin as she bit her lower lip, steadying herself before looking into Orihime's eyes.

"I don't care what you do to me! But please... save Lady Harribel!"

Orihime didn't need to hear anything else. She took a deep breath. Focusing her thoughts on the steady, comforting rhythm of her heartbeat, "I understand."

Shun Shun Rikka.

She would never forget the moment the spirits dwelling within her brother's gift awakened. Granting her the strength necessary to protect Tatsuki and Chizuru. Calling the six friendly spirits Shun Shun Rikka had felt right. But she knew, deep within her heart, it wasn't complete. But at the time, with everything going on, she hadn't thought much about it. Considered it nothing more than a strange, fleeting emotion. And then Ragyo Kiryuin pulled her into Shinra Koketsu. And her power blossomed into something beautiful. She couldn't describe it better than that. It was as if she'd been dreaming for years. Constantly walking around in the daze. And only now, after everyone risked their lives saving hers, did she finally awaken.

Absolute Domination.

Nothing had changed. Everything had changed. If she wanted, she could summon the six fairies representing her powers. Ayame. Baigon. Hinagiku. Lily. Shun'o. Tsubaki. They were all still there. Yet her Shun Shun Rikka felt different. Complete. And there was something else. Her spiritual pressure wasn't the same. Becoming part of Shinra Koketsu, even for a few minutes, changed something. She was still the same person. She still liked eating spicy bread and sweets. But Ragyo Kiryuin awakened something deep in her soul.

Yet the darkness clouding her thoughts scattered to the far winds at Ichigo's smile. How he was simply grateful knowing she was alright.

And she returned that smile. Proud of herself as she knelt next to Harribel, unbothered by the blood staining her jeans. With Apacci and the other fracción crowding around her, worried about the person they cared about, Orihime visualized the strength resting in her soul. The ability to help. To heal. To do so much more. Her fingers brushed the plastic hairpins as gold light danced upon her arms. Everything was different. And yet, everything felt the same. This was what her Shun Shun Rikka had always been.

Was always meant to be.

"Soten Kisshun."

She didn't need to concentrate. Didn't need to focus upon reversing the wound cutting across Harribel's stomach. Not anymore. By the time the oval barrier surrounded the arrancar, all signs of Harribel's confrontation with the Original Life Fiber vanished. As aqua eyes slowly opened, focusing on her before turning to Apacci, Mila Rose and Sung-Sun, Orihime stood back up, watching the heartwarming display with clasped hands.

This was Absolute Domination. The ability to protect everyone. The strength to keep those she loved safe.

The power to make sure someone like Ragyo Kiryuin could never hurt another person.

"You have my gratitude, Orihime."

Satsuki perceived more than a trace of Junketsu's curiosity at Orihime Inoue filtering into her subconscious. But that was expected. From personal experience, she knew how much time Soten Kissun required to heal grievous wounds. To ignore causality. To resurrect the dead. But this was different. Tier Harribel, whose injuries were reminiscent of those she sustained during the Great Culture and Sports Festival, vanished in a fraction of the time. Flesh and bone knitted together, or rather, reversed to a previous state by the time she understood what happened.

Was this the result of Orihime's synchronization with Shinra Koketsu?

Her thoughts soured at the question. The reason behind Orihime Inoue's enhanced technique did not matter. Perhaps becoming one with Shinra Koketsu, even for a few minutes, evolved Orihime's natural abilities beyond their previous limitations. If so, it was possible Orihime could render clothing made from Life Fibers - Kamui or otherwise - powerless. To bend all Life Fibers scattered across the world to her will. Yet she wasn't concerned about such remote, implausible scenarios.

Because Orihime Inoue wasn't their mother.

"Our Kamui might have stalled the Original Life Fiber. But your assistance ensured humanity's survival."

She bowed her head, expressing her deepest, sincerest gratitude, "And for that, Orihime Inoue, I'm immeasurably grateful."

"N-No, I didn't do anything special!"

Orihime desperately waved her hands back and forth, "My Shun Shun Rikka is nothing like your Kamui! I mean, Junketsu's really strong. And she can transform! If Aizen hadn't helped me, I wouldn't have been able to fix anything!"

"Even so, you were the only person capable of reversing the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet."

Out of the corner of her eye, Satsuki noticed Ryuko grinning at Orihime's innocent comment about Junketsu, "Sosuke Aizen might have known the method. He might have been aware of the steps required to reverse Ragyo Kiryuin's efforts. But you, and you alone, utilized Absolute Domination to save humanity. Don't let anyone convince you otherwise."

" Can we go home? I'm really tired."

"Huh?"

Orihime perked at the unexpected voice. Where had it come from? It sounded like a young child. A girl. And there was something else. She couldn't explain it. Not in words. And not after everything that happened. Not just to her, but to everyone. But the whisper in the back of her mind... the reverberation resonating in her chest... made her look at Junketsu. Thinking for a moment, almost unsure whether she was doing the right thing, Orihime swallowed her nervousness and stared into the Kamui's eyes, "You're tired?"

" Yes, I am."

The Kamui seemed... excited? Happy? Satisfied? She didn't know. But Junketsu wasn't anything like she expected. From the first time Ichigo and Ryuko said their Kamui talked, she'd imagined Satsuki's Kamui as being serious. Maybe without a sense of humor. Just like she thought Mugetsu was like a female Ichigo. Or Senketsu as Ryuko's strict but well-meaning parental substitute. As another two unfamiliar voices grew louder alongside her thoughts, one arguing with Ryuko, she blinked owlishly when Junketsu yawned. Something that seemed impossible since Ichigo explained Kamui don't breathe.

" Satsuki's blood tasted really good tonight. But for some reason, I'm really tired," Junketsu's lapel twitched, "Can you please ask her what's wrong?"

"You can hear Junketsu?"

A frown pulled upon Satsuki's lips. Although their personalities couldn't be further apart, Orihime Inoue was the Grand Couturier's sister. It only made sense. Nui Harime had responded to Senketsu and Mugetsu multiple times. Even Ururu Tsumugiyu, from what little surveillance footage Inumuta obtained, could understand Kamui. It seemed becoming one with Shinra Koketsu did more than simply evolve Shun Shun Rikka. And when Orihime explained what Junketsu asked, a task usually delegated to Ichigo or Ryuko, she nodded. Truly grateful for the information. But despite its importance, she focused on the matter at hand.

Allowing herself to smile, an almost wistful expression, Satsuki raised her voice, the stern warning possessing neither arrogance nor authority.

"Did you think you could sneak up on me, Sanageyama?"

"Of course not," Sanageyama didn't bother masking his presence. Not when Lady Satsuki sensed his spiritual pressure coming from a mile away, "Your tenor changed halfway through your conversation with Orihime. So, Ragyo Kiryuin kicked the bucket? No last-minute revivals or transformations?"

"That appears unlikely barring unforeseen developments," Satsuki flicked a strand of hair, knocked loose during the confrontation, behind her ear, "Of course, I would have thought the same before the Original Life Fiber's interference."

Sanageyama scratched the scar tracing down his chin, "I'm sure Kisuke Urahara could find a way to launch whatever's left of Ragyo Kiryuin into the sun. She'd be like a shooting star."

"Enough with the lame puns!"

Her eyebrow quirked when Nonon punched Sanageyama, eliciting an equally-sharp retort from the former Athletic Committee Chair.

And as the argument devolved into bickering only disrupted by Gamagori, Satsuki discarded the burden of responsibility. She watched Yoruichi Shihoin approach Orihime, speaking about restoring the arm destroyed by Ragyo Kiryuin in Karakura Town. Her attention drifted towards Tessai Tsukabishi when the shinigami arrived in a rather subdued manner, Heinkel Wolfe under one arm. In the faint, bitter autumn air permeating Honnouji Academy, she nevertheless smirked at Ichigo's argument with Uryu Ishida. A rather heated discussion Yasutora Sado had difficulty moderating.

Judging by Ichigo's expression and her sister's derision, it appeared Uryu found the notion he'd succumb to Xcution's Life Fiber clones laughable.

"For the moment, we shall presume Ragyo Kiryuin dead. Yet the battle isn't over."

That's right," Sanageyama knew exactly what Lady Satsuki was talking about, "We still need to hunt down that coward!"

"Yuu Akiyama is a threat, Sanageyama. But he can wait," Satsuki noticed Heinkel Wolfe stiffen at the mention of her mother's employee. As well as Yoruichi Shihoin's subtle attempts at concealing her interest, "Right now, we must concentrate on apprehending Hououmaru! As commander of Xcution and Ragyo Kiryuin's secretary, she knows every detail about the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet. Including details Kisuke Urahara might not know! If there's a chance, however remote, she could resurrect the Original Life Fiber, or resume my mother's plans from scratch, we mustn't allow her to flee into the shadows!"

"About that..."

With a single tap, Inumuta booted his laptop, which miraculously survived the climactic battle relatively unscathed, "I took the liberty of regaining administrative control over Honnouji Academy. Including the security and surveillance operating systems. It appears someone beat us to the punch concerning Hououmaru. And made sure to finish the job."

The tension was overwhelming. But none were more surprised by the revelation than Satsuki, "How?"

"Apparently Yuu Akiyama wasn't as loyal as Ragyo Kiryuin believed," Inumuta flicked the bridge of his glasses, "He betrayed Hououmaru before she activated EXCELSUS. And then delivered the coup de grâce using high-yield explosives laced with extremely potent Anti-Life Fiber components."

"I see..."

Satsuki was surprised, to say the least. But Heinkel Wolfe's strange reaction steadied her thoughts. She understood the paladin's suspicions. Yuu Akiyama had been one of her mother's staunchest employees. Someone who could theoretically subdue the Grand Couturier. At least until Nui Harime decided to stop holding back. For him to betray Xcution during Ragyo Kiryuin's moment of triumph, after years of displaying nothing but loyalty, was bewildering. Perhaps it involved Alexander Anderson. But even so, she wasn't about to look a gift horse in the mouth.

"However, that may be the least of our concerns, Lady Satsuki."

Inumuta typed several commands, bringing up multiple images displaying every major city in the world, "When Orihime Inoue reversed Absolute Domination, those absorbed into the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet were released. Unfortunately, most of them are naked. And without Life Fibers devouring unnecessary information, not to mention the death toll reaching into the thousands, people are going to start asking questions."

"Understandable. However, we shall deal with that problem in due time."

As the cold air stung her face, Satsuki involuntarily winced. Something that didn't go unnoticed by the others. She was tired. Exhausted. Not the strongest will, nor the most tempered resolve, could compensate for the immense strain from wearing Kamui. Even with almost perfect synchronization and cooperation, allowing herself to be worn by Junketsu for several hours had pushed her body to its absolute limit, "There is still much to be done. And limited time to do so. Inumuta, what is the status of my mother's remaining COVERS?"

Nui listened to Satsuki.

She stared at Ichigo and Ryuko. Heard everything they told the humans. Their happiness caused her heart to clench. And so, she tucked her knees against her chest.

The disgusting wound blemishing her face, the cross-shaped reminder of what she did to the Original Life Fiber, throbbed. But she didn't care. Blood trickled down her cheek, dripping onto her favorite dress. Yet she couldn't muster the energy to move. Why should she care? Because of her, Ichigo and Ryuko sliced apart Shinra Koketsu. The best, most perfect, outfit that would ever exist. Nothing she made, or would ever make, could ever compare to the ultimate Kamui. A cold dread settled in the pit of her stomach at the thought.

Nothing mattered anymore. Lady Ragyo was dead. Amu wasn't coming back. Ryuko hated her.

And Ichigo never wanted to talk to her again.

Her family was gone.

She was truly alone in the world.

"Nui..."

Nui flinched at the voice so similar to her own. And she couldn't understand why. Orihime was her sister. The one meant to be worn by Shinra Koketsu. Ichigo and Ryuko's friend. Yet she was talking to her. For a moment, her remaining eye widened. But she didn't say anything. Even when Orihime steadied herself, seemingly conflicted about whether or not to move closer, Nui couldn't help but notice everything - shinigami, human and even Ichigo - watching them.

Staring at her .

"Please hold still for a moment."

The dejection in Nui Harime's eye bothered Orihime. Far more than she would admit. She knew what Nui could do. What she had done. But even so, knowing how dangerous the Grand Couturier could be, Orihime couldn't stand back and watch her waste away, "If it's alright with you, I want to heal your eye."

"... why!?"

She didn't mean to shout. But hearing that question brought back painful, unbearable memories. Her shoulders trembled as she suppressed another wracking sob. Blonde hair fell around her shoulders in disheveled curls as she rested her forehead upon her knees, "Why are you helping me? I don't deserve this! I-I don't deserve anything! Lady Ragyo's dead! Ichigo and Ryuko hate me! A-Amu's never coming back! A-And it's all my fault! There's nothing left. I-I'm all alone. So please, tell me why you're doing this! Why are you being so nice!? Why don't you hate me!?"

"I don't know."

Orihime clasped her hands together. And then, against common sense to anyone else, stepped closer to Nui. Almost to the point where she could grab the Grand Couturier's hand, "You hurt Ryuko. You almost killed Mako. But for some strange reason, and maybe it's silly, I think I understand why you did those terrible things."

She looked away. First at Ichigo. Then Ryuko and Mako. Before settling on Satsuki and her friends. Everyone was relieved Ragyo Kiryuin was dead. Orihime could see the happiness in their eyes.

And maybe, for a moment, she was glad everything was over. That everyone didn't need to care about anything but having fun and relaxing. Gripping her sweater between her fingers, Orihime felt her nervousness ebbing with every comforting beat of her heart, "Ragyo Kiryuin hurt a lot of people. She took Sora. She took Ryuko's dad. And I'm sure there are hundreds of other people just as mad. But she was your mom. She was the only family you had, wasn't she?"

"So maybe, just a little bit, I understand why you're sad."

The tear welling in Nui's eye plucked at her heart, "It might be naivety. Or wishful thinking. In fact, it doesn't make sense to me. But still, for some reason, I'm beginning to understand why you always talked to Ichigo. Why you never tried hurting him. Not really. Even when Ragyo Kiryuin asked you to. I'm sure you'll deny it. Or say that I'm lying. You might even shout at me. But that's fine. Maybe I deserve that. Because I think, truly, the only thing you ever wanted was a normal family."

"Y-You..."

Everything Nui wanted to say - to shout, to deny - emerged as painful sobs. She cried. Tears rolled down her cheek as Orihime wrapped her arms around her shoulders. As she sat with her sister pulling her into a hug, Nui didn't know what to do. What to say. Despite everything, Orihime didn't hate her. She cared about her. And knowing that, more than anything else in the world, caused any lingering doubts to fade.

" It's been a long night, Ichigo."

"It sure has, Mugetsu," Ichigo watched Nui awkwardly return Orihime's hug before Mugetsu yawned, something that caused the Kamui to physically ripple, "Tired?"

" I'll be fine! But more importantly, are you certain Nui Harime won't become a problem in the future? There's nothing stopping her from seeking revenge. After all, we were the ones who killed Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Enough about Ragyo!"

Ryuko was sick of hearing about her stupid mom! Glaring at Mugetsu, meeting the Kamui's annoyed gaze with her own, she sat up with a huff, arms folded and Senketsu complaining about pushing her body, "The bitch is dead! End of story! After all the crap she's pulled, I ain't feelin' too bad she's gone!"

"You shouldn't say such horrible things, Ryuko!"

Mako leaned closer to Ryuko before continuing in the same excited, yet mildly chastised, tone, "When we snuck into those movies, the person who bragged about nothing going wrong was the first to die! So, if you say really nice things about Ragyo Kiryuin, even if you don't mean them, when she returns as a zombie, you'll be safe!"

"Uh..."

" While a zombie Ragyo Kiryuin would be troubling, there's a more pressing matter we need to deal with, Ryuko."

"Yeah," Ryuko yawned and collapsed onto her back, "I didn't forget, Senketsu. I'll iron you when we get back to Karakura Town. After I take a shower and a nice, long rest."

" We'll need to find someplace with appropriate steam-cleaning technology. Assuming Nui Harime didn't destroy everything, Kisuke Urahara should have the required equipment to fulfill our needs. Of course, going to that shop of horrors should be our last resort."

Senketsu ignored Mugetsu's childish growl. There was no need to lower himself to such inappropriate standards. Not when something else required his attention. A terrifying sensation almost as horrifying as the Original Life Fiber. For as Seras Victoria appeared within the familiar burning darkness that caused his threading to itch, he stared at the woman holding the vampire's hand. Or more specifically, the familiar clothing Kinue Kinagase happened to be wearing.

" So, that's Danketsu's regular appearance. It's..."

"... JUST like Junketsu," Mugetsu laughed. Her threading rippled with every chuckle as she stared at the off-colored Junketsu. It was hilarious! More than enough to make her forget about Senketsu's stupidity, "Ichigo, doesn't Danketsu look just like Junketsu? And she had the nerve to claim she was the better Kamui! At least I'M original!"

" What did you fucking say!?"

"Don't let Mugetsu bother you, Danketsu," Kinue stumbled briefly, which did not go unnoticed by Seras. But she brushed off the vampire's assistance. Without Danketsu stitched into her skin, walking under her own power was a strange experience, "Remember what happened the last time she got under your skin?"

" Only because you REFUSED to take my side!"

It had been so long since Danketsu could remember the freedom of moving under her own power. Only fuzzy memories of her first moments of life - awakening in that disgusting and drab laboratory, her first movements and wrapping herself around Isshin Kurosaki - remained. But with a triumphant flourish, which translated into rustling her sleeve, she glowered at her wearer with all the disgust she could muster, "She mocked my appearance! So, go over there and teach her a lesson! If you don't, I will force you to hit Mugetsu!"

"If you want to fight Mugetsu, why don't you do it yourself?"

Kinue gave Danketsu's sleeve a light tug, "Ragyo Kiryuin separated your Life Fibers from mine. There's nothing stopping you from removing yourself from my body. You finally have the freedom to leave. To not be forced onto 'a human' against your will. So, what are you waiting for?"

" What? But... I..."

Danketsu's sputtering quickly devolved into indignation. And then cursing. But by that point, Ichigo decided to follow Ryuko's example. With a groan, he sat on the ground. The weight of fighting Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber finally taking its toll. Sighing as Mugetsu continued laughing at Danketsu, Ichigo asked, more to himself than anyone, "It's finally over, isn't it?"

"It better be!"

Ryuko growled as her temper, never the best, threatened to snap from exhaustion, "Mom's dead. That stupid ball of yarn is sliced to pieces. And Nui Harime's not going to go batcrap insane any time soon. Wait a second. Where's the old goat?"

"You think I care?"

That was a lie. He actually was curious about his old man's mysterious vanishing act. The guy should have been waiting for them. But since Aizen seemed not to know much, he decided not to worry about it. He was already planning on beating information on Ragyo Kiryuin out of the old goat. A few more minutes wouldn't kill him, "He probably got caught in one of that Yuu guy's traps. Or he's making sure Satsuki's clone doesn't do anything stupid."

"Yeah..."

A tired yawn escaped her mouth as Ryuko watched Harribel leave through another Garganta alongside her annoying sidekicks. Closing her eyes, she wished, more than anything, for a hot shower. And then, after another few seconds, sat up with a startle.

"Satsuki has a clone? When the hell did that happen!?"

---

...

---

November 12th, 2002

"My offer still stands, you know."

"That's quite the considerate proposition, Kisuke Urahara. Has my participation changed your perception this much?"

Kisuke frowned at the question. Almost absentmindedly, he adjusted his bucket hat, pulling the brim below his eyes. With the pitch-black void of the lowest level of the Central Great Underground Prison pressing upon his soul, deafening his senses and chilling him to the bone, it was difficult getting an accurate read on Aizen. He had to give the guy credit. That was not something easy to pull off, "I wouldn't phrase it so... suspiciously. Try to think of it..."

The steady clomping of his geta stopped, "... as payment for services rendered."

His attention shifted towards the seals spreading across the ground in a circular fashion. They were etched into the very fabric of the underground prison. A precaution against attempts at inducing discrepancies through overwhelming spiritual pressure. Of course, a cursory examination of the cracks surrounding the seals suggested they wouldn't last another few months under Aizen's presence. Maybe a year. Nevertheless, despite the blatant mockery of his personal craftsmanship, Kisuke hummed, "Nothing to say? Oh well, you can be as enigmatic as you want. But without your knowledge of Life Fibers, defeating Ragyo Kiryuin and the Original Life Fiber would have been difficult. If not impossible."

"The destruction of the Soul King and the Original Life Fiber has always been my objective."

Aizen took the opportunity, with Kisuke Urahara distracted by introspection, to examine his attire. One could not question his former adversary's handiwork. Using nothing more than the scraps of clothing cast aside in Karakura Town, Kisuke stitched an exact replica of the sealing fabric placed upon his body by the Central 46, "Three days ago, you admitted knowing what motivated my actions. And, if memory serves, explained quite a few interesting details on Life Fibers. Such as Kamui."

"Oh?"

Kisuke smirked, the mirth never quite reaching his eyes, "From the way you said 'Kamui,' I'm inclined to believe you examined Junketsu when Satsuki wasn't looking."

"That would imply I succeeded," Aizen returned the expression, albeit lacking the underlying sarcasm. If he decided to be truthful on the matter, inspecting a Kamui such as Junketsu had been too good of an opportunity to ignore. Pure Life Fiber clothing? He'd theorized its existence. Contemplated how Life Fibers could have esoteric applications. But the few Life Fibers he'd procured were spent creating his Hogyoku, preventing further experiments.

"It seems collecting useful data on Kamui requires their cooperation," the cursory inspections of Junketsu had given him little he hadn't already known. Nothing more than information available to anyone familiar with Life Fibers, "But rest assured. My interest in Junketsu was nothing more than scientific curiosity. I have no desire to experiment on Junketsu, Mugetsu or any other Kamui."

"Is that so?"

"Well, if there's no chance you'll abscond with a Kamui, I don't need to worry about Mugetsu vanishing in the middle of the night," Kisuke chuckled. It was a wispy, hollow laugh that echoed into the surrounding darkness, "Still, your assistance kept casualties to a minimum. One could even suggest humanity's continued existence rests upon your shoulders."

Aizen stood upon the precipice of the sealing array, smirking, somewhat faintly, at the shopkeeper, "But that's not the reason for your generous offer, is it?"

"Now, why on earth would you think that?"

The exiled captain turned shopkeeper of sugary affections and specialized shinigami merchandise mumbled under his breath, "With the excessive, and somewhat torturous, sentence of twenty thousand years, who knows when someone will bother checking on the Soul Society's most infamous prisoner? After all, Muken is supposedly impenetrable. Nobody can enter or leave the infinite realm without a specialized key. It could be years... centuries... before anyone wonders if the immortal Sosuke Aizen was still locked away!"

"Be that as it may, I must decline your offer."

With a moment for introspection, Aizen took in the familiar prison. The dark void stretching into infinity. The chair crafted by Mayuri Kurotsuchi and Kisuke Urahara with the singular purpose of restricting his movements to an absolute minimum. Something the former announced with arrogance befitting someone granted the position of 'captain' multiple times during his transfer to Muken almost a year ago to the day, "Yet, from your lack of criticism, one might assume you already knew my answer."

"Was it that obvious?"

Aizen stepped beyond the sealing threshold, "The Original Life Fiber's control over the barrier between the World of the Living and the Soul Society began weakening within hours of its death. In a matter of days, perhaps weeks, it will fully dissipate. At that time, the Seireitei will launch an investigation into the dimensional abnormality. And, as I'm certain you've realized, they will discover the existence of Life Fibers."

"You got me there."

The admission came easier than anticipated. Which Kisuke found mildly concerning as he removed from his jacket, which still had a few traces of damage from his confrontation with Nui and Ururu, the duplicate set of nineteen keys to Aizen's prison, "I'm not looking forward to explaining how Life Fibers almost destroyed the World of the Living. That something more dangerous than Alucard existed under their nose. Or, even worse. Why you, of all people, were walking around Karakura Town."

"Oh? Will you though?"

"I might conceal some of the more exotic details," Kisuke didn't bother refuting the accusation. Not when Aizen would throw evidence back in his face at the first opportunity, "Alucard on the other hand? There's no hiding what happened in London. The captain-commander will ask questions. Difficult questions. Such as why three million souls vanished alongside the most dangerous being in the World of the Living. Fortunately, for all involved parties, there's a thick silver lining."

He brushed dust off his pants, "As a consequence of Alucard's overwhelming presence and, shall we say, monstrous abilities, proving whether other spiritual beings, such as shinigami or hybrid, were present around the time of his abduction is just about impossible."

"I suppose Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi can take solace in that fact," Aizen stated matter-of-factly, "Of course, there's still the matter of our other friends."

"Ah... them."

Kisuke rubbed his stubble-covered chin, "The Wandenreich fought Ragyo Kiryuin out of self-preservation. But if the information on Millennium is accurate, what happened in London was the result of decades of planning. I've asked Ryuken to look into the matter. Yet from what we already know, the two events are connected."

"The Wandenreich have their stated goals. And then they have their actual objectives. The question, Kiskeya Urahara, is whether they're mutually exclusive," Aizen chuckled, an almost airy sound as he sat down. Kiskeya's suspicions were intriguing. And rather close to his own conclusions, "The only thing we can conclude, with any true certainty, is that Ragyo Kiryuin was one of the few beings Yhwach feared. With her death, it's more than likely he'll accelerate his plans."

"That reminds me..."

Nearly half a minute passed in absolute silence, broken only by the ambient noise of his rustling clothes, as Kiskeya carefully fit the keys into their respective slots one by one. Once all nineteen were prepared according to design, even if they didn't accomplish anything besides providing the illusion Aizen remained sealed, including his ability to speak, Kiskeya stepped back, "Consider it morbid curiosity. But why did you let Orihime use Absolute Domination on your zanpakuto?"

The subtle narrowing of Aizen's eyes spoke volumes, "Manipulating reality isn't simple. Every change, even trivial alterations, induces proportionally greater repercussions. I presume you've extensively tested your Bankai's limitations. Documented the consequences of altering reality. Understood what you could feasibly accomplish. But the stunt you pulled against the Original Life Fiber? Against Ragyo Kiryuin? If I didn't know better, I'd call that excessively reckless."

"Because your Bankai's effects are temporary."

He stared at the enigmatic shinigami. Or, more specifically, the limb Ryuko claimed Aizen sacrificed casting Ittō Kasō, "I'm going to take a wild guess. Once you deactivate Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu, every alternation and change 'snaps' back to normal. Including injuries. But magnified tenfold. Even with the Hōgyoku granting you a level of regeneration close to that of Life Fibers, the wounds you sustained fighting Ragyo Kiryuin were fatal. At least, not without Absolute Domination overwriting the consequences of your Bankai. Am I in the right ballpark?"

"More or less."

Aizen shrugged as black fabric wrapped around his ankles. And then ignored the two seals restraining his left arm and right leg from moving, "Despite your expectations, I was honest about Seirei-no-Makoto Kyouka Suigetsu's connection with the lunar cycle."

With every additional key twisted into position, the spiritual fabric constraining his movements tightened. First his neck was pulled backwards. Then his waist and shoulders were held taut, unable to move more than an inch. Trivialities easily overcome with the slightest of efforts. But he granted Kisuke Urahara the illusion of believing the seals worked, despite both of them knowing it was simple showmanship, "But that's not what you're wondering, is it? What you're actually asking, Kisuke Urahara, is why I insisted Orihime Inoue use Absolute Domination on my zanpakuto."

"I'll confess my actions have been abhorrent. One might even call them monstrous," Aizen smiled at his former adversary, "Yet given an opportunity, I wouldn't change anything. Why you ask? Because the results speak for themselves. The Original Life Fiber and its prophet were destroyed. The former at the hands of Satsuki Kiryuin, a human it considered little more than an insect. That being said, if one considers the innumerable lives destroyed throughout my pursuit of humanity's survival, I doubt most people would have cared if I died."

"That may be true."

Kisuke conceded the point, "But without your help? Well, I don't think we'd be having this conversation."

"Fair enough. Now, tell me, Kisuke Urahara. What do you plan on doing now?"

The closest emotion Aizen felt towards Kisuke Urahara was mixed resignation. Yet he smirked. An enigmatic, condescending expression that physically strained the black fabric around his chin, "The Seireitei will investigate Ragyo Kiryuin. Once they realize what she was, they'll examine her activities with the subtlety of a Hollow. Including anyone associated with her conglomerate. Even someone with your intellect won't be able to completely conceal the truth of Life Fibers."

"And when Genryusai Yamamoto discovers the unvarnished truth?"

Aizen leaned backwards, yet his eyes never strayed from the shopkeeper, "Kamui. Goku Uniform. Life Fiber Hybrid. He'll order their destruction to preserve the false illusion of balance between the World of the Living and the Soul Society. When the Seireitei takes matters into their own hands... when the Onmitsukido determines Kugo Ginjo was working for Revocs and you said nothing... when Mayuri Kurotsuchi discovers that Life Fibers evolve adaptations towards specific threats, including Bankai... what will you do?"

The click when Kisuke activated the final, nineteenth key, the one meant to restrain his mouth, went unnoticed. He was bound head to foot upon the chair, limbs immobilized by restraints designed to withstand his massive spiritual pressure. And yet Aizen continued without batting an eye, "That's alright. You don't need to answer. I'm sure you, of all people, will think of something when the time comes."

A moment passed before Kisuke shook his head, "Boy, you're rather pessimistic."

Aizen frowned, "And you're foolishly optimistic."

"Who me? I'm nothing more than the handsome owner of a small candy-store. Being optimistic is good for business," the exiled shopkeeper brushed aside Aizen's depressingly cautious pessimism. There was not point worrying about the thousands of possible scenarios involving the Seireitei discovering Life Fibers. At least not without additional data. Removing one of the spiritual keys, then another, he continued until all nineteen replicas were secured within the confines of his coat, "As for what you're implying? I understand your reasoning."

His footsteps echoed across the pitch-black void as he began the journey towards the backdoor into Muken. A personal entrance tied to his spiritual energy. Yet, before taking no more than five steps, Kisuke paused, "Yet I disagree with your conclusions. Perhaps the captain-commander will consider Ichigo and the others threats towards the balance of souls. Maybe he'll order them imprisoned. Killed. Or since Ichigo and Ryuko helped destroy the Original Life Fiber, he'll be content with mere observation. There's no 'right' answer. Because, after all, in the real world..."

"... things are never quite black and white."

Aizen allowed the unspoken farewell to carry across the infinite expanse of Muken. He watched Kisuke Urahara retreat until even the faint echoing of his footsteps faded. With his body restrained, at least to the casual observer, by the nineteen seals, he smirked. An arrogant expression befitting one of his stature. And yet, possessing a hint of understanding.

"Well then, I look forward to seeing whether you truly believe those words, Kisuke Urahara."

---

...

---

November 24th, 2002

The spiritual training grounds underneath the Urahara Shop were abandoned. For the first time in months, it wasn't filled with the sounds of nudists preparing for battle. Pieces of debris lay scattered across the battle-marked environment. Trash and burnt husks of vehicles all that remained of the secondary Nudist Beach headquarters. Without Ragyo Kiryuin breathing down their neck, Olivier returned to Osaka. Intent on using the Takarada Conglomerate's resources to rebuild the city following Xcution's invasion.

"I should have known something was wrong."

A faint breeze, produced through means known only to Kisuke Urahara, rustled Ichigo's hair as he swallowed the bitterness rising in his throat. He couldn't look the shopkeeper in the eye. Not when everything was his fault. If he'd listened to Mugetsu, took her concerns a little more seriously, this wouldn't be happening, "She was tired. Hard to wake up. And every day, she got a little worse."

He was grateful Uryu lent him one of his jackets. Even if the Quincy symbol stitched across the back was blatantly obvious. Because without it, there was no way he could have hidden the slight trembling of his hands, "By the end, she didn't have the strength to move on her own."

The silence was uncomfortable. But like everything else, that was his fault. Grimacing from the guilt, he stared at the ground, refusing to look Kisuke in the eye, "Kisuke... what's wrong with Mugetsu?"

"It's difficult to say."

"Difficult!?"

Ichigo all but spat the word. He couldn't believe what he was hearing. Hat-and-clogs, the guy who outwitted Ragyo Kiryuin, didn't have an answer? Dirt crunched beneath his sneakers when he rushed forward, grabbing Kisuke's coat before the bastard said anything, "Don't pull that crap! You know something! Tell me, damn it!"

"... Isshin informed me of Mugetsu's condition three days ago."

The tension was overwhelming. Stifling. But that didn't make things simpler. And confessing to Ichigo that his old man knew something was wrong with Mugetsu for days and didn't say anything? Kisuke grunted through his nose. As a scientist, first and foremost, he prided himself on discovering the unknown. In finding answers, no matter how difficult, through a mixture of analytical research and empirical evidence. Everything he'd accomplished, even Mugetsu, was based upon that premise. Yet for the first time in years, perhaps decades, there was no logical explanation. No reason for the circumstances surrounding Mugetsu besides theories and conjectures.

"And for the last sixty-two hours, I've spent every waking moment examining her dress patterns. Inspecting her stitching from hem to collar."

He felt Ichigo's grip slacken. First the right hand and then the left. Dozens of thoughts, excuses and reasons passed through his mind before Ichigo stepped back, almost unsure of what to say and yet determined to speak. And during that uncomfortable silence, his grimace tightened into a frown at the hermetically sealed containers next to his computer. Each constructed from modified soul-synthesized metal and glass. The first of which, immediately to his left, contained Mugetsu. The other three Senketsu, Danketsu and Junketsu.

All of whom weren't moving.

"You see, I kept detailed notes. Something immeasurably useful considering Mugetsu was my third - and only successful - attempt at creating Kamui."

A bead of sweat trickled down his cheek, pooling against the underside of his chin before dripping onto the floor. He sighed, a weary breath that only served to illustrate the mounting tension. This wasn't the optimum environment. Ichigo might be keeping himself together, but it was temporary. After all, Mugetsu was cut from the same cloth. She was, for lack of a better comparison, the Kamui equivalent of a shinigami's zanpakuto. And thinking, even theoretically, of Benihime in a similar condition, existing yet unresponsive, soured his already terrible mood. With another sigh, one containing the depths of his shame, he slowly, almost deliberately, removed his bucket hat while staring over Ichigo's shoulder at Ryuko, Satsuki and Kinue Kinagase.

Who were in his shop for the same reason.

Suggesting, unfortunately, the problem wasn't isolated to Mugetsu.

"Which made things simpler. But not necessarily easier."

He directed the comment at Ryuko but kept his attention on Satsuki. She'd been silent throughout his explanation. Choosing to acknowledge certain answers with a solemn nod, "I spent more than two days examining Mugetsu. I searched for any conceivable changes in her threading, including differences stemming from evolving advanced configurations."

His shoulders fell as the next words struggled to form, "I'm sorry, Ichigo. But there's nothing physically wrong with Mugetsu."

"That's a load of crap!"

Ryuko shoved Ichigo aside. Without giving anyone a chance to think, she grabbed Kisuke by the scruff of his coat. She tried slamming him against the computer, hoping for some damn answers. But the bastard didn't so much as budge an inch, "There's something wrong with Senketsu! So spill it! I don't care if it's good or bad news! I just want..."

The plain, otherwise ordinary, black sweater from Mako's closet felt itchy against her skin. For a moment, she stumbled over her words. Unsure what to say. Before her voice dropped into a whisper, "... I just want to know what's wrong with him."

"There is one theory."

Kisuke observed Ryuko's attention, her desperation, intensify, "After eliminating every other possibility, the only remaining conclusion is that Senketsu's condition directly results from the Original Life Fiber's destruction."

"... what?"

"The Life Fibers in your Kamui. Goku Uniforms. Aizen's Hogyoku. The COVERS. They all came from the Original Life Fiber," his voice hardened despite the magnitude of Ryuko's disbelief, "It's complicated. Something I could spend hours describing without getting to the point. But I'll keep things simple. Senketsu sustained himself through your spiritual energy and blood. But what about Life Fibers not yet woven into clothing? How do you think they survived?"

"Your logic is flawed."

With the hollow clack of her heel, Satsuki stepped forward, brow furrowed into an introspective frown, "The Life Fibers delivered to the Sewing Club were removed from the Original Life Fiber weeks before shipping. If such a connection existed, they wouldn't have survived long enough to be woven into clothing."

"Were you aware Ragyo Kiryuin was communicating with the Original Life Fiber throughout the Great Culture and Sports Festival?"

He took Satsuki's silence at the question as permission to continue, "The Original Life Fiber was, for lack of better terminology, the lynchpin holding everything together. Its existence stabilized the system. There's no other way to describe it. Because, as we speak, Life Fibers are undergoing 'cataclysmic feedback.' In a matter of weeks, maybe days, every Life Fiber throughout the World of the Living will die."

"Are you saying Senketsu's gonna die!?"

Ryuko dragged the bastard down until she was staring into his eyes, "And what about me and Ichigo!? What's gonna happen to us!?"

"Nothing."

Not for the first time, and likely not the last, Kisuke watched Ryuko's frustration turn into confusion. A similar reaction to Ichigo and Kinue. But he derived no pleasure from it. In these circumstances, giving comparatively good news didn't necessarily make people feel better, "I've tested your Life Fibers. Examined samples of your blood. For some reason, most likely stemming from your unique physiology, your Life Fibers aren't affected by the Original Life Fiber's destruction."

"So what if I'm fine!?"

More than anything, Ryuko wanted to punch Hat-and-Clogs. Instead, she settled for shouting at the top of her lungs, "That doesn't matter! Because Senketsu's not! And you know what that freaking ball of yarn did to him!"

"Professor Matoi extracted some of your Life Fibers to complete Senketsu. Which explains why his spiritual pressure was identical to your own."

Kisuke noted, more from curiosity than any scientific interest, Satsuki's reaction. It appeared Ragyo Kiryuin never shared the secret behind Kamui. Which made sense. The woman was notoriously paranoid. After all, Nui Harime, someone more than loyal to Life Fibers, hadn't succeeded in weaving Kamui. And if the Grand Couturier of Revocs didn't know the secret behind Kamui, the likelihood Ragyo confessed everything to Satsuki was slim to none, "This created a connection between you two. Or, in Satsuki's case, a connection between Junketsu and Ragyo Kiryuin and Isshin. A synchronization, if you will."

"That doesn't answer the question."

He acknowledged Kinue's legitimate concern by pausing. If only briefly. While Ryuko refused to release his coat, something that grew more concerning with every passing second, he still managed to keep his composure, "This synchronization interfered with their connection to the Original Life Fiber. Enough to ensure Danketsu won't die. Unfortunately, it appears that creature's destruction still had consequences."

Kinue grimaced, her mouth opening and closing before the question spilled forth, "There's nothing you can do?"

"The mere existence of the Original Life Fiber overturned centuries of knowledge," Kisuke didn't move when Ryuko's hands slipped from his coat, "In fact, I can count on both hands what I won't have to reexamine. But this is something I'm going to solve. Not out of curiosity. Or even as a final insult to Ragyo Kiryuin. Rather, after everything you've done, all the sacrifices you've made, this is the least I could do."

Ryuko didn't know what to say.

She was angry. Fuck! She was pissed off. Why the hell did this happen to Senketsu! It wasn't right! She wanted to beat the crap out of Kisuke for not having the answer! But punching the bastard wouldn't solve anything. It wouldn't help Senketsu. Her hands trembled at the echoes of his voice. She remembered his brutal honesty about everything. Even her atrocious diet. She bit her lower lip, almost drawing blood as she remembered the countless times Senketsu complained about her BMI. And how, every time, she argued back, exclaiming he had no right to say stuff like that.

Her heart sank at the memory. The anger bubbling in her chest evaporated, leaving behind nothing but an encroaching emptiness, "Ichigo said you shinigami have living swords. So do you ever... talk... with your zanpakuto?"

"Benihime isn't the 'nicest' zanpakuto," Kisuke motioned toward the sealed zanpakuto leaning innocuously against the computer, "But compared to your relationship with Senketsu, I suppose the correlation is strained at best. Most shinigami don't bother conversing with their zanpakuto outside of training. And even the rare moments they do, it's usually never about something trivial."

"It's just... the silence. Not hearing his voice," Ryuko didn't look at her sweater. Or rather, Mako's sweater. Sure, it was nice even if it was a little tight. And maybe the strange pattern hurt her eyes. But the more she looked at it, the more she felt like she was betraying Senketsu. Swallowing the lump in her throat, she pulled on her sleeves, smoothing the nonexistent wrinkles, "Because without Senketsu, it's like..."

"... something's missing?"

Kinue never intended to finish Ryuko's thoughts. But the question came without prompting. The words spilling forth as if they were her own, "Because it's the same for me."

For the first time in years, she was wearing something other than Danketsu. A long-sleeved, vibrant blue blouse. One of Aikuro's last gifts before the accident. Something he confessed to spending days picking out before asking Olivier for guidance. Which, from Aikuro's bruises in the immediate aftermath, hadn't gone as intended. And yet, at the time, she'd worn it with a smile. But now things were different. After more than ten years wearing Danketsu, having the Kamui share her thoughts and body, without the Kamui, she felt naked. Alone. As if missing part of herself.

"After that day, when I decided to put on Danketsu, Isshin never returned to Osaka."

Her tone softened with every word, "Back then, I was the only one who could hear Danketsu. I knew Life Fibers were alive. But capable of human speech? The thought never occurred to me. For years, I thought the voice in my mind - shouting, yelling, screaming in my ears - was a hallucination. I ignored Danketsu. I ran away from my problems. Refusing to talk to Aikuro. My brother. Anyone. I was terrified what might happen if I lost control. That I would hurt... or worse... the people I love."

"I once believed clothing and humans could coexist. Tsumugu said I was naïve. That Life Fibers couldn't be trusted. And perhaps, to some extent, he was right."

She felt her hands trembling, "But there's nothing wrong with dreams. If I didn't blind myself with self-loathing, maybe things would have turned out different. Perhaps I would have seen the truth."

"It's disgraceful it took meeting Ichigo to realize that."

The beating of her heart didn't stop Kinue from sensing the shifting atmosphere, "After seeing him speak to Mugetsu as friends... as equals... I realized what happened to Danketsu was my fault. And mine alone. Her anger was born from loneliness. The madness from watching, helpless and afraid, the only person who could hear her voice deny her very existence."

Something in her voice cracked, "At that moment, I vowed, no matter the cost, to help Danketsu. To undo everything created through my ignorance. I knew it wouldn't be easy. Perhaps impossible. But towards the end, I believe she was beginning to forgive me."

"So, I want your word, Kisuke Urahara."

Kinue glared at the shinigami, a cold glint shimmering beneath steel blue eyes, "That you'll save Danketsu."

"If that's what it takes..."

Kisuke bowed, not just as Kinue, but at Ichigo, Ryuko and Satsuki. He swept an arm across his body, bucket hat clasped in his fingers, "You have my word. I won't stop working until reversing what happened to Danketsu."

"I..."

Ichigo stared at the ground in front of Mugetsu. He wanted to look into her eyes. But for some reason, found himself unable to do so.

Seeing his Kamui like this wasn't right. He'd seen Mugetsu sleeping. This was different. It reminded him, although not perfectly, of the days before she awakened. When he believed she was something Kisuke created for some ulterior purpose. His jaw clenched, brow furrowing into a frown. This shouldn't have happened. After everything they've been through - dealing with Nui and Ragyo Kiryuin to Alucard - she didn't deserve this .

If only...

"It's not your fault."

Despite the ghost white overcoat hugging her body, Satsuki shivered. She wanted nothing more than to speak candidly with Ichigo. To abolish the unnecessary guilt festering within his mind. But she couldn't relate to his sorrow. At least, not to the same extent. Junketsu had been - was - her ally. Her friend. Yet when the Kamui first awakened that night many months ago, she treated Junketsu as nothing more than clothing. Something to be conquered under the necessity of keeping control. A rabid, inhuman creature destined to kneel underneath her iron will and unyielding determination. And perhaps, during those initial weeks, that was closer to the truth than she cared to admit. For Junketsu had sought every advantage to devour her body and soul beneath Life Fibers.

Yet, if Ichigo's recollections were accurate, Ragyo Kiryuin was to blame for Junketsu's original personality.

"I never heard Junketsu. Merely faint whispers on the wind. Intense emotions. Her constant curiosity. In some regards, I'm envious of you and Ryuko."

Without the slightest reluctance, she stared at the patches of fabric representing Junketsu's eyes. The way she originally treated the Kamui as clothing, something Ragyo Kiryuin would have been proud of, could never be forgiven. Even if Junketsu herself thought otherwise. Frowning, almost glowering from disgust, she turned towards Ichigo, "Perhaps that's nothing more than an excuse. But even so, there's no reason to blame yourself. If Mugetsu were here, I'm certain she'd tell you the same thing."

"Satsuki's right!"

Ryuko backed away from Kisuke, no longer interested in threatening the shopkeeper. Instead, she snorted. A hint of normalcy breaking through the guilt as she nudged an elbow against Ichigo's ribs, "Senketsu wouldn't want me moping like an idiot! And if there's anyone on this freaking planet smart enough to wake him up, it's the smug bastard who tricked my bitch of a mom!"

"Well, that's awfully flattering of you to -"

"But let's get one thing straight."

Kisuke froze when the Scissor Blade hooked around Ryuko's belt expanded to full, lethal size with a metallic clang . He grinned nervously, the corner of his mouth twitching, when that same weapon gently touched the underside of his chin.

"If anything happens to Senketsu," Ryuko twisted the Scissor Blade against the shopkeeper's chin, "I'm gonna tear you apart limb from limb! Got it!?"

"T-There's no reason to act so rashly," Kisuke was keenly aware of the Scissor Blade's sharpness. While he never worked on Professor Matoi's creation, the Scissor Blade and Tournesol were created based upon the same principle, "Senketsu's in capable hands! After all, I created Mugetsu! You can trust me, Ryuko!"

"Oh really? Because now I'm really worried you're gonna -"

"Calm yourself, Ryuko."

Ryuko flinched when someone grabbed her shoulder. But after taking one look at Satsuki, she allowed her sister to approach Hat-and-Clogs. But not without snorting. And making sure to keep an eye on the bastard, "Your fears are unfounded. I'm confident Kisuke Urahara's expertise in Life Fiber manipulation is more than sufficient to help our Kamui."

"I knew you'd see things my -"

"However, as inheritors of our mother's estate, if something does happen to Senketsu or Junketsu," Satsuki interrupted the shopkeeper without regard for social etiquette. Every ounce of her legendary willpower was focused onto a single point, taking the otherwise implacable man off guard, "We have the power and resources to make him disappear."

"T-That's a little excessive, isn't it?"

From the neutral perspective of an outside observer, Kisuke knew Satsuki posed little threat to his wellbeing. While she was frighteningly strong for a human, without Junketsu he was relatively certain he could handle anything she threw in his direction. Yet his heart was beating a mile a minute. Perspiration trickled down his cheeks. And it had nothing to do with the blue-white backdrop of light flickering around the teenager, "To think that I, an entrepreneur of children's delicacies and other products, would damage Junketsu is preposterous! Surely you can trust someone Ragyo Kiryuin despised with every fiber of her being!"

"Perhaps you're correct."

The words sounded positive but Kisuke found the underlying threat very disturbing. In desperation, he turned to Ichigo, looking for support, careful not to prick his skin on the Scissor Blade, "Ichigo! Tell them there's nothing to worry about!"

"Hang on, Satsuki. Threatening Hat-and-Clogs won't solve anything."

Kisuke breathed a sigh of relief. Hearing Ichigo intercede on his behalf against Satsuki and Ryuko was a weight off his shoulders. At least until Ichigo continued speaking in a slightly less friendly tone, "I mean, Uryu's old man has more money than Ragyo Kiryuin ever did. He must have enough cash to make sure nobody asks questions."

"That's right," Ryuko agreed, perhaps a bit too quickly, "Besides, it would be really bad if Satsuki got in trouble."

"Y-You're not serious!"

"A word of warning, Kisque Urahara."

Kinue found herself experiencing a variety of unexpected emotions. Kisque Urahara was a renowned expert on Kamui. Something not even the Grand Couturier could claim. There was no questioning his experience. Yet, with subtle nuance, she stepped to the side, placing herself between the shinigami and Karakura Town, "While I haven't researched Life Fibers for years, I'm still considered a world-renowned expert. And I recognize most of your equipment. Life Fiber extraction and manipulation. Weaving threads into clothing based upon a fifty percent purity basis while minimizing catastrophic loss of cohesion. Which is why I can say..."

She paused, considered her words, before adding in a tone brooking no arguments, "If you screw this up, Olivier will be the first to know."

"N-Now, there's no reason to get her involved!"

Kisque couldn't help but chuckle nervously. He had no intention of incurring that woman's wrath. And while Olivier Mira Armstrong didn't possess the strength nor the power to beat him within an inch of his life, multiple plans were already in motion. Countless scenarios formed in his mind. Hundreds of variables came and went as he dealt with the notion of having the second most terrifying woman he'd had the misfortune of meeting coming for his head.

"I'm sure we can work something out!"

He instinctively raised his hands in a placating gesture. Hoping, perhaps foolishly, to reduce the chances his life would devolve into a veritable hell worse than anything Ragyo Kiryuin's twisted mind could inflict. And yet, when that failed, Kisuke realized, after wondering most of the morning, why Yoruichi decided to take the day off.

---

...

---

December 20th, 2002

"I should have told you."

Her breath emerged in pale whispers as she stared across the grave-marked landscape of Yanaka Cemetery. She'd never visited the infamous location. There was never any desire to do so. Only a few people were meandering through the ancient monuments and weathered memorials, paying their respects to ancestors long gone. Most likely from the inclement weather overtaking Tokyo. She sighed, lightly and with regret hanging onto her expression, not at those who might eavesdrop upon her confession, but at Gamagori. Her former invincible shield had offered her accompany them. A request she'd originally rejected only to change her mind, convinced by Gamagori's unwavering insistence.

As well as Soroi's.

"No. It's... fine," Ryuko spared Satsuki a quick, almost guilty, look through the mist from her breath, "It's fine. This... I don't know... seems better. I guess."

"He deserved something more respectful than a nameless grave in an overgrown cemetery," the words, practiced until memorized, came easily. And yet, even with the cold winter biting at her cheeks, the blue scarf wrapped around her neck fluttering in the wind, Satsuki felt not a trace of the surrounding winter. She had used the Kiryuin name, a phrase that left a bitter taste on her tongue, to remove the bureaucratic tape and silence questions from curious individuals in order to transfer their father to Yanaka Cemetery. A process, for anyone other than herself, that would have taken months.

Perhaps even years.

"This was my decision," she looked downwards, disturbing the snow settled in her hair, "But I believed it was better his grave bore the name he chose for himself. Not the one given by our mother."

"... it's funny."

The polished granite stone bearing the name 'Isshin Matoi' didn't mean crap. Isshin. Souichiro. Or whatever. The name didn't matter. He was dad. That was all he ever was, "Dad took me from that orphanage. But you know what? The first chance he got, the bastard sent me to a stupid boarding school. I only really spent time with him on Christmas or my birthday. I was angry. I wanted to know why he never talked about mom. Or what he did. Or why he seemed really nervous whenever I came home."

Guilt swelled in her chest, growing until she was forced to look away from the grave, "I was too stupid to realize dad was protecting me. If I hadn't been so immature maybe -"

"Our father made mistakes."

Yanaka Cemetery shimmered with a pale light from the snow-heavy skies. But Satsuki wasn't paying attention to such trivialities. At the moment, all she wished to do - rather, all she could do - was bear her share of the guilt, "Yet he dedicated his life to making amends for those same mistakes. He promoted Life Fibers. Oversaw countless atrocities. And more than likely agreed with our mother's heinous experiments. But he saw the errors of his ways. Alongside likeminded individuals, he established Nudist Beach. Using the knowledge obtained at Revocs, he created the Scissor Blades, Senketsu and Danketsu. They would never have existed if he hadn't betrayed Ragyo Kiryuin."

"He even sacrificed his life protecting you from Nui Harime."

Satsuki stopped, eyes widening in realization, "I'm sorry. I shouldn't have -"

"That's the damn problem!"

Ryuko staggered underneath the weight of her own guilt. And she didn't need to see Satsuki to know her sister understood exactly what she meant, "I had her, Satsuki! Senketsu finally kicked Nui's ass! I had the perfect chance to take down Nui! I could have avenged dad's death! But when I had Nui right where I wanted her..."

Her jaw clenched as she trembled, barely able to speak above a whisper, "... I couldn't do it."

"Don't blame yourself, Ryuko."

An excuse formed in her mind. Or perhaps an apology. But Satsuki couldn't say them. She had no right to speak lies veiled as the truth. Ryuko had spent months searching across Japan for the Grand Couturier. Transferring from one academy to another. Tirelessly looking for clues and information on the woman who killed their father. At the same time, she had known Nui Harime killed someone deemed enough of a threat for her personal involvement. A stark departure from their mother's usual approach of leaving Nudist Beach to Xcution. But not any specifics beyond the knowledge Isshin Matoi wounded the Grand Couturier before succumbing to his wounds.

And worsening Nui Harime's already fragile mental stability.

"You spared the Grand Couturier. An act of mercy I never would have considered."

Satsuki crushed the nausea growing in her stomach. An unwelcoming sensation not at the confession, but the implications.

Every word she told Ryuko was the truth. If their roles were reversed, if she pursued Shinra Koketsu instead of Ryuko, she wouldn't have hesitated to strike down Nui Harime. It would have been cathartic. Well within her rights to do so. But her death would have been a short-term, pyrrhic victory. One that ensured humanity did not live to see another morning.

"And perhaps that was for the best."

Her gaze settled upon the incense burning in front of the grave, "If Nui Harime hadn't betrayed the Original Life Fiber, we wouldn't be having this conversation."

Ryuko bit the inside of her cheek. A shudder trailed down her shoulders as the falling snow muffled everything. Maybe her sister was right. If she hadn't backed down, there was a good chance the stupid ball of yarn would have destroyed the world. But that didn't make her feel better, "Hat-and-Clogs said I was probably born with a lot of spiritual energy. That I should have always been able to see ghosts and shinigami and stuff."

"But I never saw dad's."

Her voice almost broke. When Satsuki didn't say anything, not even an excuse or apology, she stared at the ground, unable to look at the grave, "If I could see ghosts, why didn't I see dad's? I should have seen him, right? I stuck around for hours! He should have been there! Why wasn't he there?"

"I don't know."

Satsuki found herself at a loss for words. Yoruichi Shihoin explained the basic duties of shinigami. But nothing overly specific, "Only those bound through regret and strong emotions cannot pass on without assistance. Perhaps he didn't -"

"Dad was freaking murdered!"

Her voice echoed throughout the graves, briefly earning Gamagori's attention before he returned to his stupid vigil. And almost immediately, Ryuko felt like an idiot. Why the hell was she shouting at Satsuki? Her sister had no way of knowing what happened. In a quieter tone, she looked away, the corner of her mouth trembling, "You think he wouldn't want to stick around to see if I was okay? To see... to see if Nui Harime got me too?"

"What makes you think he didn't?"

Satsuki pulled the scarf downwards, exposing her tight-lipped grimace. Contrary to Ryuko, she possessed nothing more than scant recollections of their father. Faded memories twisted by time. But what she remembered was a man explaining Junketsu's purpose. The truth behind Life Fibers. How Ragyo Kiryuin murdered her little sister, which had been nothing more than a lie. Words that convinced a five-year-old child, ignorant of the cruelty awaiting her, to embark upon the arduous path leading to the Original Life Fiber's demise. A frown, almost imperceptible given the bitter weather, formed upon her brow.

Despite sacrificing her childhood for that, and other, more insidious reasons, she would never forget his smile. Nor the way their father played with her, at times against Ragyo Kiryuin's wishes.

She doubted Isshin Matoi was any different.

The encroaching cold penetrated her coat, forcing her thoughts to hasten. Nudist Beach's objective was victory over Life Fibers. But Isshin Kurosaki was likely the reason their father assumed Ryuko would be safe. If there was anyone their mother feared, whose existence tempered her otherwise unchecked lust for power, it was Ichigo's father. That fact might have been enough for their father to pass on. Believing Isshin Kurosaki would take a more proactive approach against Revocs following his death, ensuring Ryuko discovered, if not through her own actions but Nudist Beach's or his own, Senketsu, might have cleansed any regrets or strong attachments.

Yet the question remained unsettled.

It felt wrong to presume their father would pass over to the Soul Society without bidding farewell to Ryuko.

"You were besides yourself with grief, Ryuko. You had just witnessed Nui Harime escape justice after murdering our father," Satsuki closed her eyes, envisioning the last fond memories of her father, "At the same time, you were unaware of your spiritual abilities. You had never seen a ghost. Or even a Hollow. Perhaps you did see our father. Only, wracked by misplaced guilt over his death, you believed he was nothing more than a figment of your imagination."

A moment passed before Ryuko scoffed, "You really suck at making me feel better."

Satsuki arched an eyebrow at the hint of familiarity, "Am I not succeeding?"

"... damn it."

Her shoulders fell alongside a resigned sigh. All of her anger and frustration, built over the last couple of days, was gone. But now she was curious about something else. Most of what she remembered was a blur - finding the front door unlocked, her dad slumped against the wall with the Scissor Blade, chasing Nui outside and then desperately hoping he survived the explosion. But by that point, she'd been crying. That much she remembered. So maybe Satsuki was right. Maybe she did see dad's ghost.

But that didn't make her feel any damn better.

"I wish I could see him again."

Ryuko shivered, but not from the cold, "I want to tell him everything's fine. That we kicked mom's ass and saved the world from that stupid ball of yarn. And after punching him in the nose for dying without telling me anything, that I really miss him."

"You're not alone," Satsuki stared at the grave bearing her father's name, the smell of incense filling her head. It should be possible to visit the Soul Society. Ichigo accomplished such a feat, after all. Perhaps they could locate their father. But she didn't dare give Ryuko hope. If Kisuke Urahara was telling the truth, most souls lose their memories. Not to mention the scope of searching for a single soul of millions, perhaps billions, over the Rukongai.

She would not burden her sister with such devastating news.

"We've come a long way since our first meeting, Ryuko."

"Yeah," Ryuko forced a grin, "When Ichigo embarrassed you in front of everybody, right?"

Satsuki frowned, yet traces of a smile pulled against her lips, "That's not how I remember it."

"Tch! Of course, you'd say -"

"It was worse."

The confession instantly ended her sister's half-formed argument, "Ichigo was the first person to stand against Honnouji Academy. He proved himself my equal in combat. And superior in everything else. I wielded Ragyo Kiryuin's influence to further my own objectives. To create an army to combat Life Fibers, an altruistic goal through selfish means. Yet Ichigo never cared about gaining power. At any time, he could have usurped my position using Mugetsu. Something, giving my relationship with Junketsu, I could do little to prevent. But he did not do so. Ichigo only cared about one thing - protecting his friends and family. You. Mankanshoku. His family. Power meant nothing to him. Means nothing to him."

With every word, she found her smile growing, "I cannot imagine a world where I didn't meet Ichigo. It was through his defiance that I discarded my arrogance. My pride. That I began treating Junketsu as a friend instead of clothing to be worn. And for that, I'm truly grateful."

Ryuko looked at Satsuki, then at their dad's grave, before scratching her nose, "Yeah, I like him too."

"... I know."

The answer was almost impossible to hear. For a moment, Ryuko believed she only imagined Satsuki saying something. But when she saw her sister's expression, the forlorn look that didn't belong anywhere on Satsuki Kiryuin, she found herself speechless. She wanted to laugh about liking Ichigo. That she was just kidding around. But that would only make everything worse.

Instead of lying, or saying anything stupid, Ryuko decided to stand in the snow, the bitterly cold winter pressing against them. As the seconds trickled into minutes, she tucked her chin into her jacket, staring past their dad's grave. And then, as the overcast skies darkened as the oppressive weather grew worse, she reached out, hesitating at the last second, and wrapped her fingers around Satsuki's.

---

...

---

January 4th, 2003

"Having trouble sleeping, Milady?"

"There's no need for formalities between us, Soroi," Satsuki tucked a strand of misplaced hair behind her ear without another word. Leaning her head against the couch, fingers tracing a path along the collar of the form-fitting white robe accentuating her figure, she stared through the frost-covered window at the waxing moon, "How many times must I repeat myself?"

"At least once more."

Mitsuzo Soroi continued stirred the bitter-smelling liquid while replying without the slightest hesitation. Tapping the spoon against the teapot, he held the sterling silver tray delicately in his hands, careful not to disturb the carefully arranged ensemble, before maneuvering across the darkened living room with the dexterity of someone half his age, "In any case, I took the liberty of preparing some tea."

"Thank you, Soroi."

"It's my pleasure, Milady."

Satsuki listened to the man she considered her surrogate father pour the steaming tea with measured precision. Careful not to spill even a single drop. But she didn't speak. Rather, she closed her eyes, allowing what faint wisps of Karakura Town's winter that survived the interior heating to touch her face. She needed to properly thank Ryuken Ishida for his unexpected hospitality. While Karakura town was undergoing reconstruction through cooperation between Revocs and Ishida Pharmaceuticals, he'd graciously allowed both herself and Ichigo's family to stay at his manor.

A courtesy, he called it, for defeating Ragyo Kiryuin and ending the threat posed by Life Fibers.

"Your technique hasn't dulled in the slightest," she accepted the offered cup, nodding curtly before bringing it towards her mouth. After a single taste, the familiar bitterness resting on her tongue, Satsuki added, "Exquisite. I dare say it might have even improved."

"Practice makes perfect. Although, if I may speak freely, I'm certain no one shares your particular palate," Soroi placed the sterling silver tray on the nearby table, careful not to disturb the arrangement, "Just last week, your sister asked if I could make her some tea. Your tea, to be specific. She was quite insistent. Unfortunately, she didn't find the taste to her liking."

She sighed under her breath, "I suspected as much."

"Incidentally, I have news concerning your affairs," Soroi stepped back into place, to the right of his mistress, with practiced expertise, "Nudist Beach attempted to reach you earlier in the evening. While I couldn't understand most of the vernacular, it appears your mother's estate will require extensive decontamination. According to Mister Armstrong, the amount of Life Fibers beneath the manor was 'nightmarishly overwhelming.' In all likelihood, there's little chance you'll have the opportunity to rebuild."

"Do you think I care?"

The scent from the bitter liquid filled her head as Satsuki scowled, "That place means nothing to me."

She stared through the fogged window, brow furrowed into an introspective frown. It was a ridiculous question. One that required no thinking to answer. Her family sustained themselves through barbarity. They sacrificed their souls - their very essence and humanity - to Life Fibers. Despite the countless atrocities committed at her hands, or by those working underneath her authority, Ragyo Kiryuin's actions were nothing more than the logical conclusion of that parasitic relationship. Rebuild the Kiryuin Manor? No. That was unacceptable. She would not take the chance the slightest remnant of the Original Life Fiber survived.

"Inform Alex Louis Armstrong that his organization has permission to destroy everything they believe dangerous," she momentarily paused, contemplating Soroi's subdued reaction to the order, before continuing in the same, commanding tone, "As for my mother? According to the news, Ragyo Kiryuin was one of thousands who perished during the 'cocoon incident' last year. I intend to ensure her legacy remains as such."

"Your mother... was quite different in her youth."

The reminder of Ragyo Kiryuin brought to the forefront of Soroi's mind memories of better times. For a moment, he reminisced about the past, remembering the woman as she used to be instead of the monster who died, "When I first started working for your family, Ragyo was kind. Happy. One of the friendliest people I'd had the pleasure of meeting. Of course, she also had quite the sense of humor."

He sighed heavily, his shoulders slumping forward, "You might have inherited your mother's appearance, but your sister has more of her personality."

An eyebrow quirked at the admission, "You don't say..."

"Perhaps lacking most of Miss Ryuko's colorful language," Soroi quickly corrected himself with a cough, "But when she met that... thing... your mother disappeared, replaced by that monster. To some degree, I'm relieved you never knew Ragyo. If only to spare you from having memories of the woman she used to be."

"... your honesty is appreciated."

Satsuki lowered the cup until it was resting upon her lap, hints of steam wafting from the scalding liquid. As moonlight streamed through the window, casting pale shadows across the living room, her thoughts coalesced around Isshin Kurosaki. Or, more specifically, the dozens of pictures he'd shown not only her, but Ryuko, much to Ichigo's embarrassment. Soroi was correct. Contrary to her personal wishes, she possessed an uncanny resemblance to Ragyo Kiryuin. The similarity was indeed striking. But despite subconscious desires, the woman in the photographs smiling alongside Ichigo's father and her own, who had playfully laughed in the same living room in which she was currently seated, was not her mother.

That woman had long been consumed by Life Fibers, losing whatever remained of her humanity years ago.

She listened to the monotonous ticking of the grandfather clock in the corner of the room before schooling her features. It was pointless dwelling upon things that would never come to pass. But as seconds turned into minutes, and the tea in her cup slowly diminished and cooled, Satsuki heard Soroi's posture shift ever so slightly.

"You needn't my permission to speak, Soroi."

Soroi clasped his arms against the small of his back as the pale, white light from the waxing moon danced strangely across his tuxedo. After a moment to collect his thoughts, his brow furrowing in concentration, he asked, "Forgive my rudeness, but when do you intend on leaving Karakura Town?"

The question gave Satsuki pause. But not enough to arrest her thoughts. She'd expected Soroi would eventually broach that particular subject. Following Ragyo Kiryuin's death and the Original Life Fiber's destruction, Honnouji Academy was no longer necessary. Her objective, the ambition driving her forward all these years, had been fulfilled. She no longer needed an army of students that were resistant to the effects of Life Fibers. Nor her Elite Four. Even Jinketsu, should she awaken, would find herself purposeless.

"Within the next few days," she stared through the steam wafting from the tea, eyes slightly narrowed, "Possibly a week."

Jakuzure had been the first to announce her retirement.

Her childhood friend returned to her parents a few days ago, intent on acquiring the necessary skills to inherit control of the Jakuzure Corporation. An objective she'd supported without hesitation. Which, to all those familiar, possessed a certain irony given Ishida Pharmaceuticals bought the business and all related assets during the autumn but had only announced the merger after Christmas. It was a discovery Nonon took with the temperament and serenity of a rather tempestuous hurricane. And while Uryu professed innocence concerning what his father's conglomerate did, that hadn't stopped Jakuzure from chasing him halfway across Karakura Town.

Gamagori, to her muted surprise, was working underneath his father and aunt as the liaison between Nudist Beach and Kisuke Urahara.

Even with the Original Life Fiber destroyed and her mother dead, the enigmatic shopkeeper was combing through her family manor's wreckage. Something Nudist Beach undoubtedly wanted to keep on top of. Thus, explaining Gamagori's passionate resignation from the Elite Four. Where he vowed to return to her side if, or rather when, the need arose. To cast aside the shackles of nudity. But, of course, that was the public reason. The truth of the matter, that which he denied without conviction, was his relationship with Mankanshoku. Something developed at a remarkably steady pace despite Ryuko's mockery of his familial name.

After Iori reversed the surgery upon his eyes, Sanageyama explained he was heading home within the month. Alongside a generous student stipend. Although, if the rumors concerning his behavior were accurate, he'd prostrated himself before Yoruichi Shihoin, begging for further training. Something the shinigami had been more than willing to accommodate due to Kisuke Urahara taking Iori as his understudy in Life Fiber research and manipulation.

According to Inumuta, he intended to pursue an IT specialization at a premiere university in Europe. A laudable career choice. One she expected from the moment her mother's security forces caught him hacking into Revocs and manipulating its stock portfolio.

As for herself?

"Someone must stand atop the Kiryuin Conglomerate."

It was a troublesome fact known only to a handful of people. But despite the standard template of corporate bureaucracy, Ragyo Kiryuin was Revocs. Every aspect of the conglomerate ran through her office. Nothing was changed or altered, approved or denied, without her permission. For all intents and purposes, underneath the cruel façade of a monster that delighted in torturing humanity and committed further unspeakable acts, her mother had been one of the most ruthless businesswomen on the planet.

"But assuming control wasn't particularly difficult."

The corner of her mouth twisted into a disgusted sneer, "Nui Harime and Xcution were my mother's primary means of establishing order amongst those displaying resilience to the Life Fibers in standard Revocs business attire. Without them, all that remains of her authority is the Board of Directors. A group of cowardly men and women more than willing to lick my mother's feet for the slightest scraps of power. Who, time and again, not only looked the other way, but indulged in the horrific atrocities committed at Revocs."

Which explained why they sacrificed themselves to the Original Life Fiber.

"Fortunately, they've stepped down," she craned her head slightly without averting her gaze, "Removing the last significant obstacle preventing me from completely controlling Revocs and the Kiryuin Conglomerate."

When Soroi didn't voice his opinion, Satsuki waited more than was necessary before placing the cup onto the accompanying saucer. His silence was concerning. Despite their relationship as master and servant, he wasn't one to hold his tongue. Not around her. Not anymore, "You disapprove of my decision?"

"Not at all, Milady."

Soroi shook his head, "You've informed your friends. Spoken with Isshin and Ryuken Ishida concerning your desire to inherit your mother's businesses. You even sent a detailed letter to Nudist Beach explaining what you wished to do. It seems you've informed everyone. Everyone, that is, except your sister. A suspicious lapse in judgment. Unless, of course, there is a reason you don't wish to speak with Miss Ryuko at the moment..."

Steam wafted from the teapot as he poured another cup, one that went initially untouched, "... perhaps involving a certain young man."

"... you know me too well."

A faint sigh was her only reaction to the admission, which came with far too much difficulty. Steel blue eyes stared through the frost-covered window at the waning moon, softening at the conflict raging throughout her consciousness. Soroi was correct. But for once, she wished he hadn't confessed the truth. That he reconsidered disturbing her façade of stoicism with the ease afforded by a close acquaintance. Who she considered more a parent than Ragyo Kiryuin. Her attention lingering on Soroi long enough for the tea to settle, she lowered the cup from her mouth, "But what I feel for Ichigo cannot be expressed with words."

Her pulse quickened as a strange bitterness filled her mouth, "Time and again, he threw himself into danger. He risked everything saving Junketsu from my mistakes. Fought the Grand Couturier to protect his friends, knowing full well she possessed the strength to kill him. He never backed down in the face of overwhelming adversity, even when Ragyo Kiryuin proved herself too powerful to stop."

"Ichigo's done so much for me... for Ryuko... when I've done so little for him."

The corners of her mouth twisted into a guilt-filled grimace, expressing the depths of her self-loathing. Worthiness. Happiness. Contentment. Others would believe those explained her affection towards Ichigo. But they would be wrong. There was another reason. One she would never confess, not even to Soroi or Ryuko. Throughout existence, perhaps the entire world as well, he was the only remaining person knowledgeable of Ragyo Kiryuin's depravity. The mere confirmation of which was enough to curl her fingers into fists. Not even Soroi knew more than the slightest traces of the truth. An ignorance she spent years painstakingly cultivating.

Only Ichigo understood what truly transpired between Ragyo Kiryuin and herself.

Yet, that knowledge hadn't changed his opinion. Knowing the horrendous actions Ragyo Kiryuin committed, the deeds she stoically accepted for humanity's survival, hadn't caused his impression to lessen. Ichigo never once looked upon her body with disgust. Pity. Or even disdain. The only thing she saw in those brown eyes was acceptance of who she was alongside attempts at understanding what she endured.

And how he could help.

"With my mother dead and the threat posed by Life Fibers gone, there's nothing standing between Ichigo and myself. If I wished, I could pursue him to the best of my ability," without a trace of the conflict raging in her soul, Satsuki raised the cup to her lips, pausing just before drinking, "But I cannot."

Her voice lowered an octave, "Because Ryuko's feelings are more authentic than my own."

The porcelain cup quivered despite her best efforts. Satsuki watched, a hint of disdain in her eyes, as her fingers trembled. The words - her excuse - to Soroi fading alongside her faint whisper into the surrounding darkness, "She stood alongside Ichigo long before I considered them anything more than stepping stones for my ambition. While I was dedicating my very existence to obtaining the strength necessary to defeating my mother, they were growing closer. They fought side-by-side. Supporting each other. When the Grand Couturier's murder of Mankanshoku caused Ryuko to lose control over Senketsu, Ichigo never stopped trying to save her. While I believed she needed to be put out of her misery."

"So, tell me, Soroi. Why should I place my own wants above Ryuko's?"

She hadn't intended for the question to be anything other than rhetorical. For there was no answer worth considering. Her voice nevertheless faltered towards the end, a weakness quickly suppressed by furrowing her brow. No. She didn't deserve the honor of Ichigo's affection. His kindness and sympathy. No matter how much she wished otherwise.

"Love is insidious, Milady."

An understanding, almost paternal, smile was Soroi's reaction to Satsuki's admission. With a light clink, he placed the teapot back on the tray, any further thoughts of refilling the cup forgotten, "You know it exists. That it's out there. Somewhere. Waiting for you. And, perhaps, like most people, you believed yourself ready. Prepared for whatever might happen. But then it sneaks up on you. In the middle of the night, you wake up and realize you've lost the battle before the war even began. That is love."

He absentmindedly mixed the bitter liquid, "Even the strongest have fallen beneath its sway. Ichigo's father. Your mother. Neither could escape its grasp. For better or worse."

Tapping the spoon against the side of the teapot, his smile tightened at the unexpected memories, "Miss Satsuki, I'm certain you already know what needs to be done. The question, to be so bold, is whether you're prepared to deal with the consequences. Whatever they may be."

"Are you speaking from personal experience?"

His hold upon the spoon relaxed at the lighthearted annoyance in the question. It was a welcoming departure hearing Satsuki speak with such emphasis. A reminder of the young woman he'd raised in her father's absence, "Let's just say I was quite popular in my younger -"

"Oh?"

The faint creaking of floorboards interrupting Soroi's attempt at regaling Satsuki with stories of his younger days. Turning towards the door, he was curious who could be awake at this time of night. And judging from Miss Satsuki's arched eyebrow, it wasn't an opinion he held alone. Yet his curiosity was sated, replaced by veiled relief, at the young man standing at the entrance to the living room.

"My apologies," he bowed his head, careful not to disturb the arrangement in his hands, "I must have forgotten to close the door."

"It's fine."

Ichigo looked at Soroi. And then at Satsuki sitting on the other side of the room. He hadn't intended to eavesdrop on them. But when the old goat wouldn't stop snoring no matter how much he tried smothering the bastard, he decided to stretch his legs. Maybe get something to drink. With an awkward cough, he pivoted on the spot, more than ready to leave, "I should probably get going."

"Are you having trouble sleeping?"

"My old man's been snoring all night," Ichigo snorted under his breath at the question. He'd tried everything short of stabbing the bastard. But the old goat's subconscious strength was more than enough to send him flying across the room, "It's so loud I can hear him through the freaking wall."

"Perhaps some tea would soothe your nerves."

Soroi began preparing another cup of tea despite the young man's insistence to the contrary. But when little more than a light trickle poured from the pot, barely enough to fill a quarter of the cup, a perplexed frown pushed against his brow, "It seems I'll need to prepare another batch of tea. If you'll excuse me, Milady."

"No, it's really not -"

Ichigo reached forward in protest only to sigh, defeated and embarrassed, when Soroi closed the doors to the living room with a soft click . Leaving him alone with Satsuki, who hadn't so much as turned around or spoken. For a moment, the deafening silence was oppressive as he stood there, wearing nothing more than a white shirt and pajamas, with the grandfather clock Uryu claimed was a family heirloom ticking away in the corner. Each second more awkward than the last. But eventually, as he prepared to leave despite whatever consequences awaited on the other side of the door, Satsuki's voice pierced through the darkness.

"How much did you hear, Ichigo?"

"Pretty much everything."

He knew better than to keep secrets from Satsuki, especially when she already knew the answer. But after hearing Satsuki confess her feelings... about him and Ryuko... he really didn't know what to say. Feeling a pang of guilt in his chest, he frowned, mouth tightening into a grimace, "What you said. To Soroi. Did you really -"

"The Kiryuin Conglomerate is interwoven with the world economy."

Satsuki purposely interrupted Ichigo. She deliberately and with great effort pushed aside what she knew he would ask. About Ryuko and herself. She couldn't allow that. So, she decided to focus their conversation upon another matter, "If Revocs were to collapse in the wake of Ragyo Kiryuin's death, there would undoubtedly be a major recession. Millions would lose their homes when the markets crashed. Countless others would suffer."

She heard the unmistakable sound of Ichigo walking across the room. But her gaze never shifted away from the window. Even now, with the city sleeping, she could see the dozens of construction sites littering the cityscape. Yet, at this time of night, everything was quiet. Peaceful. But when Ichigo collapsed next to her on the couch, his body only inches away from her own, she found her hand subconsciously clenching into a fist, "This is something I must do. Yet the thought of leaving Karakura Town feels unconscionable."

A self-loathing scoff passed between her lips when Ichigo remained silent, "I suppose this sounds incomprehensible. That I would consider discarding my responsibility. It must sound pathetic."

"That's not true."

Ichigo tried to think of something, or really anything, to say. But that was all that came to mind. He hadn't expected to talk with Satsuki about this. At least, not yet. But the words came without prompting, "You told me once, back at Honnouji Academy, that you didn't care if you were embarrassed or ashamed as long as you fulfilled your ambitions. That if something stood in your way, you wouldn't hesitate to charge forward without regret. But you're not Ragyo Kiryuin. You're not the woman who tried sacrificing everyone to Life Fibers. You say you want to undo her mistakes. I get that. But what do you want?"

"I..."

Two days ago, the notion that she, Satsuki Kiryuin, couldn't answer something so blatantly obvious would have been ludicrous. And yet her mouth opened and closed, silence passing between her lips. Her eyes quivered slightly, falling upon the empty cup in her hands. Since her earlier recollections, Ragyo Kiryuin's death had been her sole ambition. The reason she endured that monster's reprehensible depravity. Every second of her existence, from the moment she awakened in the morning to her final thoughts, had been focused on preparing for the day her mother lied dead at her feet.

Yet now her resolve faltered?

For years, she'd known that someone would need to place themselves upon the vacant position of CEO of Revocs. Her mother, whether through arrogance or amusement, had instilled into her consciousness the knowledge necessary to successfully inherit the Kiryuin Conglomerate. After in the immediate aftermath of her mother's death, at her very hands no less, she discovered nothing had changed. From her first steps through the Garganta to recuperating in Karakura Town, she'd prepared to atone for Ragyo Kiryuin's sins. It was her responsibility as a Kiryuin.

So why, sitting next to Ichigo, could she not utter those simple words?

"Since I could remember my father's smile, I've anticipated watching Ragyo Kiryuin's blood leave her dying corpse. Never once did my resolve to see that come to pass waver. Standing victorious over Life Fibers... no matter the cost... was my ambition," she stared into the hazy reflection formed upon the cooling tea. A deep, breathless sigh passed between her lips as she hesitated to look into Ichigo's eyes, anxious at what she might see, "One I was determined to see through. And then accept punishment. I was prepared to accept the burden not only of Ragyo Kiryuin's innumerable sins, but my own as well."

"Satsuki..."

"But that no longer holds validity."

She frowned at the words, unsure whether the emphasis behind them was genuine, "For the first time, I wish nothing more than to cast aside my responsibilities. To allow others to deal with my mother's mistakes. Because sitting here... at your side, Ichigo... alleviates the weight of the world upon my shoulders."

Her voice immediately hardened as a sense of guilt, of self-loathing and disdain towards her selfishness, gave it a sharp edge, "I'm sorry. I shouldn't have -"

"You're worried about how Ryuko will feel, aren't you?"

Satsuki wished nothing more than to deny the accusation, but all that emerged was a faint whisper, "... yes."

Ichigo didn't know why Satsuki was apologizing. Worrying about Ryuko, how she felt and what she wanted, should have been the normal reason. At least, for most people. And seeing Satsuki flustered? It was completely at odds with what he'd come to expect from the Student Council President of Honnouji Academy. But he didn't say that. For what seemed like an eternity, he sat in silence, listening to the monotonous ticking of the grandfather clock, the words he wanted to confess refusing to form.

"I understand."

It took effort to speak. But that was more than enough to break the tension, "You're worried about hurting her feelings. I get that. I mean, Ryuko's saved my life. And I've rescued her more times than I can count. She's the kind of person that won't let you down. Who will always have your back, no matter what it takes. But the truth is, we're just friends. So, if you're blaming yourself, don't. Because it's not your fault. I spent a lot of time thinking about this. Wondering what to say. If I should say anything. And the only thing that came to mind... the only thing that wouldn't hurt you or Ryuko... was not to say anything."

Her fingers trembled at the strange, unfamiliar tightening in her chest.

A strand of hair fell across her eyes. But Satsuki found herself unbothered. All that mattered were Ichigo's words. Yet she didn't dare broach the only subject on her mind. Asking him whether Ryuko knew of his decision was repugnant. Whatever words they exchanged weren't any of her concern. She did not have the right to know what was said. Whether anything was said. Yet she felt relieved by his reassurance. A sense of contentment that quickly twisted into self-loathing guilt.

How could she think something so callous and cruel about Ryuko? She was her sister. The only family she had left.

To derive satisfaction from winning something so pointless was...

"You were right about one thing."

She almost flinched at the unexpected admission. Eyes widening, she looked at Ichigo, surprised by his faint, almost embarrassed, grin, "Someone needs to run Revocs. And there's no one better than the Student Council President. Just don't ask for my help. The only experience I have with that sort of thing is being your Vice President. And I wasn't very good at it."

"... I suppose you weren't."

Her eyes fell towards the cup clasped between her hands as she returned Ichigo's smile. Promoting him to her Vice President had been a calculated decision. One designed to alleviate his suspicions of her actions while simultaneously protecting Ryuko and him from the Grand Couturier through her unlimited authority as Student Council President. Something Ragyo Kiryuin had agreed superseded Revocs within Honnou City, "But it was a prudent move. One I wouldn't change, even in retrospect. Although, there is one point of contention."

A familiar scowl, possessing neither anger or frustration, formed upon her face, "Your acceptance speech during Parent Student Day could have been expanded. I expected, based upon our former animosity, at least two minutes of insults and complaints."

When Ichigo laughed at the reminder, Satsuki set the cup down on the table. There was more she could say. Wanted to say. She could confess her feelings. Thank Ichigo for everything he's done. Not only for her, but for Junketsu, Ryuko and even Nui Harime. It appeared, coincidentally or not, everyone he befriended found themselves bettered. But she didn't. Instead of wasting time on meaningless words, none of which possessed the ability to convey the depths of her feelings, she simply returned Ichigo's smile while gazing out through the window into the moonlit skies over Karakura Town.

Perfectly content and happy.

---

...

---

March 22nd, 2003

"... you are cordially invited to attend the wedding celebrating the unison between..."

Kisuke's voice devolved into intrigued muttering at the fanciful, almost extravagant, invitation. As the torn envelope fluttered to the ground, scrapping against the dirt as the early spring breeze blew it away from his shop, he blinked owlishly, unsure whether he'd misread the names embossed in golden script. Rereading the invitation with the delicacy of a scientist, and then a third time to be sure, he hummed quietly, "Well, this is quite the pleasant and unexpected surprise!"

"Why'd you stop reading?"

He doubled over when Yoruichi thrust the sharp edge of her elbow between his ribs. She couldn't believe Kisuke, of all people, would purposely stop right before announcing the lucky couple's names. Was he that much of an idiot? Shooting an irritated glare at the incapacitated man clutching his ribs, Yoruichi snatched the invitation from his quivering fingers, amber eyes darting back and forth. The two names written in golden script immediately drawing her attention.

Kinue and Aikuro.

Yoruichi paused at the names. So, they were finally tying the knot. She'd wondered when the exhibitionist would finally propose to Kinue. And it appeared they decided the ceremony will take place in July, right at the peak of summer. Which was fantastic. But it was the venue, sponsored by Revocs with all expenses and accommodations included, that transformed her smirk into a cat-like audacious grin.

At least until she recognized the familiar glint in Kisuke's eyes.

"It's in Paris..."

Leaning forward, purposely positioning herself between the man and the nearest escape route, her eyebrow twitched, "If you're thinking about not going..."

"Who me? Come on, Yoruichi! Would I honestly turn down something like this without a good reason?"

Kisuke laughed nervously at Yoruichi's unflinching - and terrifying - expression. Did she really have such little faith in him? How could she believe, even for a moment, that he would politely turn down attending a wedding at one of the most extravagant churches in Europe? Whipping a paper fan from within the folds of his sleeve, he waved the hand-built accessory in front of his mouth, hiding the bead of sweat slowly trickling down his cheek, "It's a matter of business! July is the busiest month of the year! And with the Soul Society asking about Ragyo Kiryuin, Revocs and Honnouji Academy, I can't simply leave Karakura Town whenever I want..."

"I'll watch over things while you're gone."

The murderous glint in Yoruichi's eyes was recognizable. Usually whenever Kisuke was on the cusp of digging his grave deeper. Which is why Tessai, against his better judgement and instincts, decided to intervene. "It shouldn't be too difficult running things in your absence. If assistance truly is required, I'm certain Iori and Jinta won't mind lending a hand moving the equipment in the basement."

His glasses shimmered opaquely in the sunlight, "Which you promised to dispose of last month."

"Hmm... can't argue with that logic."

Kisuke wisely agreed with the former captain and current assistant manager to his shop, nodding sagely despite the malevolent spiritual pressure, "And you have a point. If Miss Satsuki truly is paying for everything, I don't see why we can't go. After all, without the fate of the world resting on our shoulders, it's not like we have anything better to do."

He collapsed onto the ground when Yoruichi kicked him in the knee.

As the only man to outsmart Sosuke Aizen struggled against the unrelenting pain, Yoruichi snorted under her breath. She didn't buy his excuse for a second. Anything better to do? If they weren't friends, she'd beat the ever-living crap out of him for daring to suggest something so ridiculous. But Kisuke was a man of his word. If he said they were going, the argument was as good as over, "The wedding's in four months! Plenty of time for you to find something nice to wear!"

"Now that's an -"

"And not something by you!"

His mouth snapped shut before he could offer anything more than a feeble protest. She'd seen his work. And while his skills were appreciable, allowing Kisuke to make her something appropriate was a mistake she wouldn't repeat. Not a third time. Glaring harshly in his general direction, a warning against the mischievous thoughts likely circulating in his mind, she stepped into the afternoon, rolling her shoulders to loosen the stiffen muscles, "I'm going to Isshin's to pick something up! Don't even think about making me a dress!"

"Who me? I'm insulted by such a baseless accusation!"

He feigned bewilderment, at least until Yoruichi disappeared in a step of exceedingly slow Shunpo. Once certain Tessai had taken a leave of absence, more like that assured they would attend the wedding without further incentive, Kisuke snapped the paper fan shut. He honestly couldn't blame their annoyance with his longer-than-normal hesitation. Because he didn't have any reason not to watch Kinue and Aikuro declare their undying love for each other. As long as Tessai opened the store in the morning, the Seireitei shouldn't be upset if he took a few days' vacation.

If the investigation hadn't already finished, he was confident Iori was knowledgeable enough to satisfy even Mayuri's most esoteric questions.

Speaking of whom...

Kisuke couldn't help but smirk. The expression on Mayuri's face upon seeing some of the few remaining Life Fibers in the World of the Living suspended within a time-dilating Bakudo had been literally priceless. It wasn't every day the self-proclaimed mad genius was struck speechless, unable to formulate anything more than silent disbelief. Only to immediately ask dozens of questions concerning Life Fibers. Their origins. How they procreate. How they absorb spiritual energy. How they can be woven into clothing. All of which he'd answered per arrangement. Minus a few details, of course. Such as their involvement with Aizen's Hogyoku. And Kamui.

Plus a few lies when Mayuri insisted on transferring the Life Fibers to the Twelfth Division for further study. Honest stretching of details, such as warning that removing the Life Fibers from suspended animation would lead to their destruction. And that the Bakudo keeping them intact was his personal creation. Otherwise, he was certain Mayuri would have attempted to steal the threads from underneath his nose.

But a wedding?

He flipped the invitation, which Yoruichi returned before leaving, between his fingers, "I wonder how much I should give the lucky couple."

His thoughtful humming turned introspective. Almost contemplative. That was the question, wasn't it? According to custom, Kinue and Aikuro would expect shūgi-bukuro of specific demonization. If, of course, they were planning a formal Japanese ceremony. Anything else might not require handing over money. He lowered the fan from his mouth, frowning at the insinuation. On the other hand, different customs might require other forms of gifts. Perhaps personal discounts from his store, completely free without any strings attached, would cover every conceivable base? Nudist Beach was interested in the high-end merchandise and products recently shipped from the Soul Society, some of which were quite dangerous to humans.

Which left one last thing to consider.

Already aware the invitation was no longer in his possession, Kisuke rubbed his chin, feigning ignorance at the situation. Yoruichi said he couldn't make her something nice. And, from her tone, nothing for himself. Luckily there was a third option, "What do you think I should wear?"

"Something stylish shouldn't stand out too much."

Ururu flipped the invitation over in her hands. The gold embossed lettering was a nice touch. It really highlighted the silver leaf pattern along the edges. Tilting her head slightly to the right, she maneuvered around Kisuke, exposing the grey blazer and matching skirt of Karakura High School, "But you know, Mister Urahara, since Satsuki's paying for everything, we should think about giving the lucky couple something very special. This is a once-in-a-lifetime ceremony. If Kinue's willing to hear us out, I'm sure we can make her a beautiful bridal gown."

"You might be onto something, Ururu."

In all likelihood, Kinue probably wouldn't appreciate the magnanimous gesture. Even if it came with no strings attached. This was her wedding, after all, and interfering with a woman's special day, even with the intent of being helpful, would only lead to trouble. And pain. Because although she no longer wore Danketsu, and the Kamui no longer was worn by her, the lucky bride was powerful enough, in her own right, to give him, a humble and handsome shopkeeper, multiple broken bones and lacerations.

"But let's put that into consideration for a rainy day," he brushed some errant dust from his jacket. Giving advice to a bride-to-be who can punch holes through solid rock? Even he was nowhere near that foolish, "I'm more concerned about what I should wear. Although, given my rather busy schedule and general laziness, renting a suit isn't exactly out of the question."

"Gosh! Now why on earth would you say something so incredibly stupid?"

The saccharine smile adorning Nui Harime was practically glowing when she appeared on his right. Sapphire eyes swiveled towards Ururu as her blonde hair, no longer maintained as overly-impressive pigtails but hung down her back in long curl, bobbed alongside her head, "Do you honestly expect us to believe you would rent a cheap, mass-produced suit?"

Her checks puffed out, giving the facsimile of annoyance, as she plucked several threads from his sleeve. But it was her sister who voiced their collective suspicions, "We know you far too well, Mister Urahara."

"I can't get anything past you two, now can I?"

Kisuke snapped the paper fan shut, "Alright, since Yoruichi will likely get annoyed one way or another, I don't see any reason you two can't work together on this little project."

He felt, rather than hear or see, Nui and Ururu's synchronized excitement. It was odd, to say the least. Ever since accepting the Grand Couturier into his lovely abode and allowing the natural Twin Life Fiber Entanglement to form instead of forcing the connection like Ragyo Kiryuin, things had evolved in several unexpected, yet not surprising ways. For starters, he wasn't the only one to notice how personable Ururu was. More out-going and friendly. Less prone to being shy. A complete reversal from her personality before Isshin transferred Ururu to Honnouji Academy.

Nui, on the other hand, was a lot calmer. At first, it had been quite terrifying seeing her behave in such a normal fashion. To not only live underneath his roof but act as if nothing ever happened between them. Of course, bits and pieces of her former personality from her days as the Grand Couturier surfaced every now and then. Usually whenever she became excited over something. But as long as Ururu was around, or Ichigo was willing to head on over, he wasn't particularly worried about waking up in the middle of the night with a Scissor Blade lodged in his chest.

"But I want to see your designs first," he commented with a distinct lack of seriousness, fully aware that Nui and Ururu were already gone, "Yoruichi will be awfully mad if I overshadow the lucky couple!"

Once they disappeared into the darkest depths of his store, more than likely to Iori's personal workshop, which would inevitably lead to another confrontation, Kisuke removed his hat and sighed. This wasn't the life he'd anticipated following Ragyo Kiryuin's defeat. Not by a long shot. Despite her willing participation in the Original Life Fiber's destruction, Olivier Mira Armstrong's desire for Nui Harime to 'suffer the consequences of her actions' hadn't been surprising. As the Grand Couturier, Nui had killed quite a lot of people. Far more than he was comfortable listing.

Including Kugo Ginjo, whose existence as an employee of Revocs had already raised a few questions.

Yet Isshin somehow convinced Nudist Beach he was more than capable of supervising the Grand Couturier.

And then, in the same breath, implored that he, of all people, accept Nui into his humble abode.

However, despite the inanity of the question, it hadn't been an insane request. He was, after all, one of the few people capable of besting the Grand Couturier. But Kisuke was sure that wasn't the reason Isshin asking for his assistance.

"Things are getting quite interesting."

With the buzzing of insects beating against his ears, Kisuke watched the sun momentarily vanish behind a cloud. Take in the Grand Couturier? The same girl who attempted to murder him with passion and determination befitting any member of the Eleventh Division? Sometimes he wondered if Isshin passed responsibility onto his shoulders to escape the consequences of his actions. But whenever that train of thought began, he would remember Ururu's newfound happiness. The confidence she hadn't displayed prior to Honnouji Academy. There was little point worrying about trivial matters. Or, at the very least, concerning himself with Nui Harime.

Palming his bucket hat, Kisuke grimaced, "Still, I have the strangest suspicion Isshin's keeping a few secrets from me."

---

...

---

May 29th, 2003

"Have a good day at school, big brother!"

The dirty plate clanked in the sink as Ichigo grabbed the bag slung over the chair, "Tell dad I'll be back late tonight."

"You joined the Soccer Club after all, huh?"

Karin poked the burnt rice next to her toast, globs of strawberry jelly oozing onto the plate. Propping her hand against her cheek, she arched an eyebrow in mild annoyance. Not at Yuzu or Ichigo, but at the idiot barreling down the stairs, seemingly ignorant of the notion anyone living in the house besides himself, "Or was it the Basketball Club this week?"

"I thought you didn't care?"

"It's not for me," she clarified her frustration in explicit terms. Why her brother chose to hire himself as a free agent for every sports club at school made no sense. He couldn't need the money. Not when Satsuki was more than willing to pay for everything. Which ignored those weird nudists and that disturbing exhibitionist. Leaning back against the chair, Karin rolled her eyes while Yuzu continued cooking, oblivious to the conversation in the background, "The old goat's getting confused. If you keep switching things up, his hair might actually catch on fire."

Ichigo lazily waved over his shoulder, one foot already out the door, "Thanks for the warning. I'll keep that in mind."

Without another word, he slammed the door just as the old goat shouted something idiotic at the top of his lungs. Scoffing as something crashed inside the house, Ichigo glared over his shoulder. God damn it. What the hell was wrong with his dad? Ever since they moved back home, or into the almost identical reconstruction of their house, the bastard's been far more annoying. And this morning... what kind of sick freak attacks his own son while he's lying asleep? Shifting his bag into a more comfortable position as the pathetic whining through the door ground to a halt, Ichigo walked into the street, one hand stifling a yawn.

"Huh, guess they're not here yet."

He stood outside his house for more than a minute, waiting patiently as the sun crested over the neighborhood. But as the seconds dragged onwards, Ichigo pulled out his phone, a frown slowly forming upon his brow.

"Maybe I missed them."

The excited chirping of birds from the trees lining both sides of the street faded into the background. Was he late? Did the bastard mess with his alarm clock? Groaning, Ichigo rubbed his neck, vowing to punish the bastard at the first available opportunity, "Guess I'll see them in -"

"Hey Ichigo!"

Ryuko nearly tripped over herself as she finished tying the red bow on her uniform. No matter how much time passed, she'd never get used to standard school uniforms. Say what you wanted about Senketsu, but he was custom-made for her body. Not weird bows or unnecessary tying involved! Cursing quietly while Mako enthusiastically jogged at her side, chewing one of her mom's delicious mystery croquettes, bits and pieces of strange meat jutting from the bread roll, she waved at Ichigo, her bag dangling between her fingers, "Ugh! Sorry we're late! But my alarm didn't go off this morning and -"

"What are you talking about, Ryuko?"

A piece of fried chicken stuck out of Mako's mouth alongside something heavily resembling steak as she cocked her head sideways, utterly confused, "Was that today's excuse? Because you can count on me not to tell Ichigo anything super embarrassing! Especially that you threw the alarm clock across your room after you wanted another ten minutes of -"

The blush across her face meant nothing as Ryuko managed to cover Mako's mouth before she could say another word, "That's private! Why are you telling Ichigo?"

"Oh! I totally forgot, Ryuko! My bad!"

Mako attempted to apologize, but with Ryuko's hand suctioned against her mouth, all that emerged were some muffled noises and pieces of partially-chewed croquette. Food that Ryuko wiped away not for the first time this week. Once she was certain nothing remained, not even some of Mako's drool, she turned to Ichigo, who had watched everything without bothering to help. Grumbling - and then scoffing - at his stoic façade, Ryuko smoothed the wrinkles on her skirt, courtesy of spending the last fifteen minutes rushing to get dress, brush her teeth and eat breakfast.

"Tatsuki said Uryu's running for class president."

She didn't give a crap if her attempt at changing the topic was obvious. Not when Mako inadvertently ruined her excuse for being late, "Can you believe the guy?"

"Yeah, he told me the other day," Ichigo shrugged nonchalantly as they began the long march to Karakura High School, "Uryu's talented. And he's organized as hell. I'll give him that much. But I have no idea what he's thinking running for -"

"WHAT'S THIS I HEAR!?"

Ichigo leaned backwards while Ryuko grabbed Mako for safety when his old man leapt out the front door, one foot barely missing his cheek. Undeterred when his perfected technique was avoided, Isshin nevertheless stuck the landing, flipping into a forward summersault while his white lab coat gently fluttered in the beautiful spring morning. Despite playing a major role in Ragyo's ultimate defeat, he hadn't replaced his infamous disguise, leaving him looking decades younger and considerably less rugged and handsome.

"Ryukien's son is running for class president!?"

With his silver hair and accompanying multicolored undertone available for everyone to see - and quite possibly mock - he pointed an accusatory finger at his wayward son, completely ignoring Ryuko and Mako, "Why did you not inform me of this serious matter?"

"Because it's none of your freaking business," Ichigo's eyebrow twitched when the bastard planted himself directly in their way, "So why don't you go back inside and stop embarrassing yourself?"

"Nonsense!"

Isshin couldn't believe the unfiltered rudeness spewing from his son's mouth. To think Ichigo would become a delinquent! It was a miracle Karin and Yuzu were no longer impressionable young girls, "As your father, I demand you run against Uryu by the end of the -"

A punch to the face, courtesy of two fists, sent him crashing head-first into the street.

"You bastard!"

Ryuko might have beaten him to the punch figuratively but Ichigo gave his old man another kick for good measure. This was freaking pathetic. Who the hell was the bastard trying to fool? Everyone, even Mako and Keigo, knew better than to believe the guy would be taken down by a couple of punches. Especially when the bastard tanked hits from Ragyo Kiryuin without flinching. Which meant he no longer needed to hold back in the mornings... or evenings... or whenever his dad's idiocy acted up.

"It'll be a cold damn in hell before I do anything that stupid," snorting, he grabbed his bag off the ground while Ryuko stepped on the bastard, earning an obviously fake wheeze of pain for her efforts, "If Uryu wants the job, he can have it. Because I really don't care."

"And don't drag me into your perverted fantasies," Ryuko warned, careful to stomp on the old goat's fingers, "Or I'll beat the crap out of you."

Staring at the pathetic figure twitching on the ground, Ichigo turned around as Mako waved at his dad. He had no idea why his old man hadn't dyed his hair or did whatever was needed to make himself look normal. Or, at the very minimum, less of an idiot. After the Soul Society broke through the Original Life Fiber's barrier around the World of the Living, he thought a former captain, one who apparently faked his own death to be with his mom, whose hair changed colors would draw at least a little suspicion. A few strange glances from people that knew him.

But nobody seemed to notice his old man's altered appearance.

Then again, since Ragyo Kiryuin had flaunted her inhuman looks whenever possible, they probably thought it was a fashion statement or something.

"Hey Ryuko, do you think I should maybe join the Math Club?"

"Huh?"

Ryuko was baffled by the question, "Math Club? You haven't been talking to strange people again, have you?"

"Well... the other day after lunch, I was walking back to class and got super lost," Mako flicked her lower lip. That day was clear as night. She remembered eating her mom's specially-prepared lunch, waving at Orihime before leaving to find the bathroom, "I made a right turn instead of a left. And after apologizing to those nice people for ruining their super serious talk, I helpfully mentioned they interpreted the Reimann surface incorrectly. It's just silly they thought it was elliptic instead of hyperbolic! And now, for some strange reason Gamagori won't explain, they want me to join the Math Club."

"Uh..."

Desperation flicked across Ryuko's eyes while the corner of her mouth twitched. She knew Mako was brilliant. At least, in her own special way. Hell, everyone at Honnouji Academy knew Mako was a genius when it involved boring stuff like math. But when she glanced at Ichigo for help... advice... anything... Ryuko deflated when he shrugged, leaving her without an excuse not to say anything.

"One of those mornings, huh?"

Tatsuki walked around the prone figure lying in a twitching heap outside Ichigo's house. Yawning as she caught up with Ichigo and Ryuko, unaware of the awkward conversation she saved the latter from having, her newly long hair, grown over several months until it extended beyond the small of her back, shifted when she leaned forward, "Hey! Orihime mentioned something about Uryu running for class president. You really think he's going to do it?"

"Depends on whether he can beat Keigo's sister."

Ichigo was confident enough in his own abilities to admit Uryu was qualified for the job. But Mizuho stared down Satsuki without flinching. Not to mention taking on Sanageyama, "If he's serious about winning, Uryu certainly has his work cut out for him."

"I'm considering running myself."

She couldn't help but grin playfully at Ichigo's exasperated groan. Ryuko made sure to tell her everything about his tenure as Satsuki Kiryuin's right-hand man. And what Ryuko didn't know, Gamagori had been more than willing to fill in the details. So, jabbing her elbow into his ribs, Tatsuki chuckled at his annoyance, "If Satsuki Kiryuin thought you were qualified than I sure as hell am!"

"Fine. Go ahead. I certainly won't stop you."

Ichigo ignored Tatsuki's transparent attempt at getting underneath his skin. Scoffing, he looked away, refusing to watch her annoying smile. God damn it. Why did everyone believe he asked Satsuki to be her vice president? The only reason he accepted the stupid offer was to protect Ryuko and Mako from Nui. If he could have accomplished that without working for the Student Council, he never would have embarrassed himself, "But didn't you start working at the dojo? Do you even have time for the job?"

A subtle crack went ignored as Tatsuki's fingers trembled from the urge to deck Ichigo in the face.

It was impossible for anyone to be this dense! Student Council President? Her? She's rather have a rematch against Satsuki Kiryuin with two broken arms than deal with that amount of nonsense. In fact, getting her ass kicked by Sanageyama's stupid Goku Uniform would be less painful. Scoffing out of the side of her mouth, Tatsuki glared at an uninteresting piece of trash in the road Mako told Ryuko about her dad's new job at Karakura General Hospital only to blink when the combat pass dangling from Ichigo's book bag momentarily glimmered.

"What's up with your pass, Ichigo?"

"You got me..."

He pulled the otherwise unassuming piece of wood from the bottom of his bag. Holding the former badge in his hand, Ichigo tapped the skull-like design only to grumble when nothing unexpected happened, "I think it's broken. It should have stopped working after I lost my shinigami powers. On the bright side, at least it's not screaming into my ear every few seconds."

"You should feel more confident, Ichigo!"

Piece of food stuck to Mako's cheeks as she swallowed the last chunk of her mom's mystery croquette, "It's a mystical and magical badge that allowed you to fight super-duper powerful Hollows like a superhero! The Soul Society wouldn't give you something that breaks as easily as the plumbing in our old house! So, if your fancy pass is glowing like the nightlight in my room, that means it must be working as intended!"

"It's a piece of junk!"

Before her best friend could say anything, Ryuko grabbed the combat pass from Ichigo's fingers. With a distinct lack of concern over damaging the damn thing, she tossed it back and forth, glaring at the skull design, "And who the hell thinks something this weird is useful? It has to be that creepy clown always taking to Hat-and-Clogs! And doesn't the Soul Society have phones? Why didn't they give you one of those instead of this stupid thing?"

"I've often wondered that myself..."

Ichigo caught the only evidence of his time as a substitute shinigami when Ryuko tossed it over her shoulder. She had a point. While the badge was useful for leaving his body to fight Hollows, there were several ways it could have been improved. But instead of dwelling on the past, he shrugged, hooking the pass back onto his book bag. Ukitake probably had a good reason to program the damn thing to scream into his ear like a banshee. The guy was odd. And perhaps a little too friendly. But he wasn't stupid. Not in the slightest.

Maybe he should have asked Ginjo whether Ukitake gave him a combat pass.

"That reminds me. Uryu said you helped him fight some Hollows last week."

Ryuko gave her best impression of utter dissatisfaction, "Don't get me wrong, Ichigo! I'm happy to fight those bastards! Because if I didn't... and one of them hurt Mako... I'd never be able to forgive myself."

She folded her arms underneath her chest, angrily glaring in Ichigo's general direction, "But even without Senketsu, none of those masked assholes stood a chance! I kicked all of their asses without breaking a sweat!"

That wasn't an exaggeration. After all those stories about Hollows, including the arrancar that had worked under Aizen, she'd expected badasses like Harribel or her annoyingly bitchy sidekicks. Monsters that could make her break a sweat! Creatures stronger than Satsuki's Elite Four but nowhere close to what Senketsu could pull off! As long as nobody was threatened or put into danger, she wanted to fight Hollows. Just to see what the creatures everyone in the Soul Society feared were made from. Which is why she'd gone to Uryu. The guy fought Hollows every night. Spending hours protecting Karakura Town from them. If anyone could have given her pointers on fighting Hollows, it was him.

"But ya know what's really strange?"

The miniaturized Scissor Blade hooked around her waist jingled, "Every one of the masked bastards ran away the moment they saw me! Like they were scared or something! If Hollows are so badass, why did I have to chase them down?"

"You are super scary when you're serious, Ryuko."

Ryuko smiled at Mako before grumbling under her breath, "There's something else that's bugging me. Who put Uryu in charge of Hollow control? I thought that shinigami... the guy with the weird afro... was supposed to be protecting this place?"

"Eh, Imoyama's too unreliable for the job," Ichigo mumbled without concern for the strange shinigami, "He's so freaking bad that Uryu's been forced to pick up the slack. But I'm sure he appreciates your help a lot more than Nui's."

"Tch!"

No matter how much time passed, or what happened after they stopped Ragyo, Ryuko would never get used to Nui Harime. Simply hearing the Grand Couturier's name left a bad taste in her mouth. Tatsuki might be confused about Nui since she never actually 'met' the psychopathic Grand Couturier. And maybe Mako was too carefree to realize the person who almost murdered her was living in the same town. But the entire concept was really fucked up. Nui being her sister was strange enough without having to consider the same about Orihime and Ururu. But Nui wanting to hang around her and Ichigo, as if nothing happened at Honnouji Academy, was insulting. The bitch killed her dad! She killed Mako!

And she had the nerve to act like they're friends or something!?

"Anyway!"

She spat on the ground, refusing to think about Nui any longer, "Why aren't you helping Uryu?"

"Because I'm not supposed to have powers."

Ichigo shrugged as a truck passed by, forcing them to stop before crossing the street, "Look. I don't like it. But Hat-and-Clogs has a point. The Soul Society doesn't know about Mugetsu and the others. They think Ragyo was taken down by Yoruichi and my old man with Nudist Beach and Satsuki's help. And since Inumuta wiped Honnouji Academy's servers, the Soul Society doesn't even know we were there."

"That doesn't make sense."

Tatsuki looked over her shoulder when Mako stopped walking, distracted by a butterfly flying above the sidewalk, "Can't they sense your power? Ryuko hasn't exactly been subtle."

"Maybe it's because they've never seen anyone like Ryuko," Ichigo rubbed the crick in his neck, courtesy of the old goat kicking him out of bed this morning, "Kisuke believes Mayuri's spiritual detectors aren't calibrated for Life Fibers. Or something. Which means until he thinks of an excuse for me to 'regain my powers' without drawing suspicion, fighting Hollows will only lead to awkward questions. Like who really stopped Ragyo Kiryuin."

"Good morning Ichigo! Ryuko! Mako! Hey Tatsuki!"

Even after years of accepting her friend's awkward peculiarities, Tatsuki was surprised when Orihime immediately started talking about the loaves of cheap bread she ordered last night at one of the refurbished bakeries. As she was forced into participating in a conversation about sweet bread, including whether the price was adequate or Orihime paid too much, Ryuko chuckled at Ichigo.

"You know, I never though school would be so... boring ."

She smirked at Orihime's strange enthusiasm, "It's actually kind of nice. Don't get me wrong, Ichigo. Honnouji Academy was exciting.

But dealing with Satsuki every freaking day got old real fast. Besides, would you want to go through all that crap again?"

"Hell no!"

Ichigo crossed his arms in disgust, "I'd rather take mind-numbing boredom than worry about Nui breaking into my room in the middle of the night!"

"ORIHIME!"

After finally realizing Orihime was talking to Tatsuki, Mako launched herself through the air, intent on giving her friend a good morning hug. But at the last second, acting purely upon instinct, Orihime ducked, allowing the enthusiastic teenager to sail overhead, outstretched arms missing their target by less than an inch. As she crashed to the ground, rolling head over heels until slamming into a trash can, one of her shoes flying off and almost hitting Tatsuki in the face, Ichigo and Ryuko sighed. The latter covering her eyes as Orihime rushed towards Mako.

"Mako! Are you alright!?"